How to use this book

The main part of this book is devoted to 12 themed chapters, broken down into five 15-minute daily lessons, the last of which is a revision lesson. So, in just 12 weeks you will have completed the course. A concluding reference section contains a menu guide, an English-to-Chinese dictionary, and a guide to Chinese characters.

Warm up

Each day starts with a warm up that encourages you to recall vocabulary or phrases you have learned previously. The time in brackets indicates the amount of time you are expected to spend on each exercise.

Useful phrases

Selected phrases relevant to the topic help you speak and understand.

Cultural/Conversational tip

These panels provide additional insights into life in China and language usage.

122

WEEK 12

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Say "your husband" and "your wife." (pp.12-13)
How do you say "lunch" and "dinner" in Chinese? (pp.20-21)
Say "Sorry, I'm busy that day." (pp.32-33)

SHÈJIÀO Socializing

As a business guest, it's more common to be invited to a restaurant than to someone's home. This is partly practical—people often have long commutes. But if you're staying for longer, you may be invited for a meal or a party.

2 Useful phrases (3 minutes)

Learn these phrases and then test yourself.

您想来参加晚宴吗?
nín xiǎng lái cānjiā wǎnyǎn ma

Would you like to come for dinner?

星期三怎么样?
xīngqī sān zěnmeyàng

What about Wednesday?

下次吧。 xià yí cì ba

Perhaps another time.

Cultural tip When visiting a Chinese home, remember to remove your shoes at the door. Take a gift for the host or hostess. Flowers, a bottle of wine, or a present from your home country will be greatly appreciated.

3 In conversation (6 minutes)

您想来参加星期二的晚餐吗?
nín xiǎng lái cānjiā xīngqī'èr de wǎnyǎn ma

对不起,我星期二很忙。
duìbuqǐ, wǒ xīngqī'èr hěn máng

Sorry, I'm busy on Tuesday.

星期四怎么样?
xīngqī sì zěnmeyàng

What about Thursday?

How to use the flap

The book's cover flaps allow you to conceal the Chinese so that you can test whether you have remembered correctly.

Revision pages

A recap of selected elements of previous lessons helps to reinforce your knowledge.

Instructions

Each exercise is numbered and introduced with instructions. In some cases, more information is given about the language point being covered.

Read it

These panels explain how the Chinese script works, show useful signs, and give tips for deciphering Chinese characters.

Read it

Chinese takes basic concepts and combines them to make different meanings, e.g.
飞机 fēijī plane (flying 飞 fēi + machine 机 jī);
火车 huǒchē train (fire 火 huǒ + vehicle 车 chē).

Text styles

Chinese script and pinyin pronunciation are included, as well as the English translation.

In conversation

Illustrated dialogues reflecting how vocabulary and phrases are used in everyday situations appear throughout the book.

DICTIONARY English to Chinese

This dictionary contains the vocabulary from 15 Minute Chinese, together with many other high frequency words. You can also find additional terms for food and drink in the Menu Guide (pp.128-137).

In Chinese, the plural of nouns is normally the same as the singular. Chinese descriptive words, or adjectives, may have different endings depending on how they are used and are also often preceded by hěn (very). Verbs have no tenses and don't generally change according to who or what is the subject; but there are some characters that can be added to indicate a particular time or mood—see p.112.

Pinyin pronunciation guide

The Chinese taught in this book is Mandarin Chinese, the main language of the People's Republic of China (PRC). The pronunciation is written in pinyin, the official romanization system used in PRC schools. Most pinyin spellings reflect the nearest equivalent sound in English, but some letters sound different:

a pinyin x is pronounced like sh as in “ship”

a pinyin c is pronounced like ts as in “sits”

a pinyin z is pronounced like ds as in “kids”

a pinyin q is pronounced like ch as in “chin” a pinyin zh is pronounced like j as in “just” a pinyin ü is a u pronounced with rounded lips, like “few” in English or “über” in German Mandarin Chinese has four “tones”, which affect the way a word is pronounced. Each syllable is pronounced with one of four tones: high, rising, falling-rising, and falling. These tones can be written as accents on the pinyin pronunciation, but you need to listen to and mimic native speakers to master them. Use the 15 Minute Mandarin Chinese audio CDs to practise your pronunciation, and the written pinyin as a memory aid.

How to use the audio app

All the numbered exercises in each lesson, apart from the Warm-ups at the beginning and the Say it exercises at the end, have recorded audio, available via a free app. The app also includes a function to record yourself and listen to yourself alongside native speakers.

To start using the audio with the book, first download the DK 15 Minute Language Course app on your smartphone or tablet from the App Store or Google Play. Open the app and type in the book's ISBN (see page 1) to add it to your Library. As soon as the ISBN is recognized, the audio will download.

There are two ways in which you can use the audio. The first is to read through your 15-minute lessons using the book only, and then go back and work with the audio and the book together, repeating the text in the gaps provided and then recording yourself. Or you can combine the book and the audio right from the beginning, pausing the app to read the instructions on the page as you need to. Try to say the words aloud, and practice enunciating properly. Detailed instructions on how to use the app are available from the menu bar in the app.

Remember that repetition is vital to language learning. The more often you listen to a conversation or repeat an oral exercise, the more the language will sink in.

1 Getting started

The list of weeks will open when the audio has been downloaded. From here you can tap into each week's lessons.

When all the lessons in a week have been completed, the week button will be filled with color and show a check mark, so you can track your progress.

Menu, Help/How to Use, Your Library

2 Lessons week by week

Each numbered exercise in a lesson is listed in the app as it appears in the book. Tap on an exercise to start.

A check mark indicates when an exercise has been completed.

3 Audio for exercises

Tap the play button to hear instructions, then the exercise. You can pause the audio at any point, and return to it.

You can tap any part of the exercise to play the audio from that point.

4 Record yourself

When you are in the Your recordings screen, you can record yourself reading the words or participating in the conversations with native speakers, then listen back (and rerecord if desired).

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

The warm-up panel appears at the beginning of each topic. Use it to reinforce what you have already learned and to prepare yourself for moving ahead with the new subject.

NĪHǎO Hello

Chinese gǒngshǒu is famous: cupping one hand in the other in front of the chest, which is often accompanied with nodding or a slight bow. Traditionally, there would not be any contact in the form of a handshake or kisses, although this is changing with the increasing Western influence.

你好。 nīhǎo
Hello!

2 Words to remember (6 minutes)

Say these expressions aloud. Hide the text on the left with the cover flap and try to remember the Chinese for each. Check your answers.

早上好。 Good morning.
zǎoshàng hǎo

晚上好。 Good evening.
wǎnshàng hǎo

我的名字是... My name is...
wǒde míngzì shì...

很高兴认识你。 Pleased to meet you.
hěn gāoxìng rènshi nǐ

再见。 Goodbye.
zàijiàn

晚安。 Good night.
wǎn'ān

明天见。 See you tomorrow.
míngtiān jiàn

3 In conversation: formal (3 minutes)

你好，我的名字是韩红。
nīhǎo, wǒde míngzì shì hánhóng

Hello. My name is Han Hong.

你好，我的名字是罗伯特·巴克尔
nīhǎo, wǒde míngzì shì luóbótè-bākèěr

Hello. My name is Robert Barker.

很高兴认识你。
hěn gāoxìng rènshi nǐ

Pleased to meet you.

4 Put into practice (2 minutes)

Join in this conversation. Read the Chinese beside the pictures on the left and then follow the instructions to make your reply. Test yourself by concealing the answers with the cover flap.

晚上好。晚上好。
wǎnshàng hǎo wǎnshàng hǎo
Good evening.

Say: Good evening.

我的名字是严俊盟。很高兴认识你。
wǒde míngzì shì yánjùnméng hěn gāoxìng rènshi nǐ
My name is Yan Junmeng.

Say: Pleased to meet you.

Conversational tip

The Chinese usually introduce themselves using either just the family name—e.g. Han—or the family name followed by the given name—Han Hong. But they are used to hearing Western names the other way: Robert Barker. It's not common to ask someone their name directly, so listen carefully to the introductions.

When talking to or about others in an informal situation, xiǎo or lǎo is often added in front of their family name, depending on whether they are perceived to be younger or older than you. For example, if Han Hong appears younger or more junior, you'd call her/him xiǎo hán; if older or more senior, lǎo hán is used to show respect.

5 In conversation: informal (3 minutes)

明天见。
míngtiān jiàn

See you tomorrow.

好，明天见。
hǎo, míngtiān jiàn

Yes, see you tomorrow.

再见。 zàijiàn

Goodbye.

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Say "hello" and "goodbye" in Chinese. (pp.8-9)

Now say "My name is...." (pp.8-9)

Say "Pleased to meet you." (pp.8-9)

WŌDE JIĀTÍNG

My family

Chinese has two sets of vocabulary for many family members, depending on whether you are talking about your own or someone else's. This lesson focuses on speaking about your own family. There's often no need for a separate word meaning my: bàba means my father, gēge my big brother, etc.

2 Match and repeat (5 minutes)

Look at the numbered family members in this scene and match them with the vocabulary list at the side. Read the Chinese words aloud. Now, hide the list with the cover flap and test yourself.

- ① 奶奶
nǎinai
- ② 爷爷
yéye
- ③ 爸爸
bàba
- ④ 妈妈
māma
- ⑤ 儿子
érzi
- ⑥ 女儿
nǚ'ér

⑥ my daughter

④ my mother

⑤ my son

Conversational tip Chinese distinguishes between little and big sister or brother. You will find all the relevant words in section 4. The phrase xiōngdì jiěmèi (siblings) is used to refer to your brothers and sisters as a group: wǒ yǒu sì gè xiōngdì jiěmèi (I have four siblings).

3 Words to remember: numbers (4 minutes)

Memorize these words and then test yourself using the cover flap.

The Chinese use a system of “classifiers” to count specific things. These vary with the nature of what is being counted. The numbers opposite use the near-universal classifier 个 gè. You can use this classifier when talking about your family, but it’s useful to recognize another classifier 人 rén used for people. (Note the alternative character 二 èr used for the number “two.”)

一人	yī rén	1 person
二人	èr rén	2 people
三人	sān rén	3 people
四人	sì rén	4 people
五人	wǔ rén	5 people

my husband

我们是夫妻。 wǒmen shì fūqī
We're married.
("We're husband and wife.")

Look at these words and say them aloud. Hide the text on the right with the cover flap and try to remember the Chinese. Check your answers and repeat, if necessary. Then practice the phrases below.

my big sister/ 姐姐 / 妹妹
my little sister jiějie/mèimei

my big brother/ 哥哥 / 弟弟
my little brother gēge/didi

my siblings 兄弟姐妹
xiōngdì jiěmèi

This is my wife. 这是我的妻子。
zhè shì wǒde qīzi

I have four children. 我有四个孩子。
wǒ yǒu sìgè hái zi

I have three daughters. 我有三个女儿。
wǒ yǒu sāngè nǚ'ér

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Say the Chinese for as many members of (your own) family as you can. (pp.10-11)

Say "I have two sons." (pp.10-11)

NǐDE JIĀTÍNG

Your relatives

Chinese pronouns are straightforward: I or me is wǒ, you is nǐ (or the more formal nín), and he/she or him/her is tā. The plural equivalents are made by adding -men: we wǒmen, you (plural) nǐmen, they tāmen; and the possessives by adding -de: my/mine wǒ-de, your/yours nǐ-de, their/theirs tāmen-de, etc.

2 Words to remember (5 minutes)

Here are the more respectful terms used to refer to someone else's family, or sometimes to your own in more formal situations.

母亲 mother
mǔqīn

父亲 father
fùqīn

儿子 son
érzi

女儿 daughter
nǚ'ér

妻子 wife
qīzi

丈夫 husband
zhàngfu

孩子 children
háizi

兄弟姐妹 siblings
xiōngdì jiěmèi

这是你的母亲吗?
zhè shì nǐde mǔqīn ma
Is this your mother?

3 In conversation (4 minutes)

这是你的丈夫吗?
zhè shì nǐde zhàngfu ma
Is this your husband?

是的。这是我的父亲。
shìde. zhè shì wǒde fùqīn
That's right. And this is my father.

你有孩子吗?
nǐ yǒu háizi ma
Do you have any children?

Conversational tip Forming a question in Chinese is straightforward. Generally, you add the question marker ma (吗) to the end of a sentence: nà shì nǐ-de érzi (That's your son); nà shì nǐ-de érzi ma? (Is that your son?). In very informal spoken Chinese, the question marker is sometimes even dropped: nà shì nǐ-de érzi?

4 Useful phrases (3 minutes)

Read these phrases aloud several times and try to memorize them. Conceal the Chinese with the cover flap and test yourself.

Do you have any siblings? (formal) 您有兄弟姐妹吗?
nín yǒu xiōngdì jiěmèi ma

Do you have any siblings? (informal) 你有兄弟姐妹吗?
nǐ yǒu xiōngdì jiěmèi ma

Is this your father? 这是你爸爸吗?
zhè shì nǐ bàba ma

Is that your son? (formal) 那是您的儿子吗?
nà shì nín de érzi ma

This is Han Hong's daughter. 这是韩红的女儿。
zhè shì hánhóng de nǚ'ér

Is that your little sister? (informal) 那是你的妹妹吗?
nà shì nǐ de mèimei ma

没有。但我有一个妹妹。
méi yǒu. dàn wǒ yǒu yīgè mèimei

No, but I have a little sister.

5 Say it (2 minutes)

Is this your wife?

Is that your little brother?

Do you have a son? (informal)

This is Han Hong's mother.

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Say “See you tomorrow.”
(pp.8-9)

Say “We’re married”
(pp.10-11) and
“Is this your wife?”
(pp.12-13)

SHÌ/YǒU

To be/to have

The most common verb in Chinese is shì, meaning is, are, or am. The i is pronounced only slightly, often making the word sound more like shuh. shì does not change with the subject (I, he, we, etc.): wǒ shì luóbótè (I’m Robert), tā shì yīshēng (He/she is a doctor), wǒ-men shì zhōngguó rén (We’re Chinese).

2 Useful phrases with shì (2 minutes)

Notice that nationalities are expressed by using the name of the country followed by 人 rén (person/people): zhōngguó rén Chinese (literally “China land person/people”), měiguó rén American (“America land person/people”).

我是中国人。 I’m Chinese.
wǒ shì zhōngguó rén

现在是10点钟。 It’s ten o’clock.
xiànzài shì shí diǎnzhōng

你是医生吗? Are you a doctor?
nǐ shì yīshēng ma

韩红是学生。 Han Hong is a student.
hánhóng shì xuéshēng

Read it

It’s not as difficult to begin deciphering the Chinese script as it may appear. 15 Minute Mandarin Chinese shows “simplified” characters as used in mainland China. These characters consist of a number of strokes ranging from one to more than twenty (一, 二, 三, 四; one, two, three, four, etc.), similar to how an English word is made up of a number of letters. Some basic concepts are represented by a single character—e.g. 我 wǒ (I/me), 人 rén (person)—and these are the common characters you can learn to recognize first. Many other concepts are represented by a combination of characters, e.g. 英国人 yīng-guó rén (ying-land person, i.e. English). You’ll find more details on pp.152-59.

我是英国人。
wǒ shì yīngguó rén
I’m English.

3 Useful phrases: talking about what you have (5 minutes)

An informal and straightforward way to talk about possession is to use the expression 有 yǒu, meaning have or has. Learn these phrases and then test yourself by concealing the answers with the cover flap.

你有名片吗?
nǐ yǒu míngpiàn ma
Do you have a business card?

I have three children. 我有三个孩子。

I have a little sister. 我有一个妹妹。
wǒ yǒu yí gè mèi mei

Do you have any children? 你有孩子吗?
nǐ yǒu hái zi ma

4 Negatives (3 minutes)

There are two principal ways to make a negative sentence in Chinese: by using the negative markers 不 bú or 没 méi in front of a verb. bú is often used with shì, and méi with yǒu.

We're not American. 我们不是美国人。
wǒ men bú shì měi guó rén

I don't have a car. 我没有车。
wǒ méi yǒu chē

5 Put into practice (4 minutes)

ZÀI CĀNGUǎN

In the restaurant

There are different types of places to eat in China. You can find snacks or a light meal at street stalls. A fànguǎn serves traditional Chinese food. Department stores often have relaxed cāntīng (canteens) on the upper floors, open until about 10 p.m. and serving both international and Chinese dishes.

CÀIYÁO

Dishes

A typical meal in China consists of rice and a soup, together with a variety of fish, meat, and vegetable dishes. The meal is served with pickles and other condiments, such as raw scallions and chili sauce, depending on the region. Alcohol is consumed before the rice or noodles are served.

Cultural tip Taocan (set menus) are popular, particularly at lunchtime. These consist of a soup, rice, pickles, and other dishes—all presented on a tray. gàijiāofàn (rice with toppings) are a simpler alternative.

QǐNGQIÚ

Requests

You’ve learned two common phrases that are used for asking for something: qǐng gěi wǒ... (I’d like...) and qǐng gěi wǒ men... (We’d like...). Alternatively, you can say what you want followed by hǎo ma (please): wǒ yào... hǎo ma (I want..., please). You can use this phrase in almost any situation.

2 Basic requests (6 minutes)

Here are some phrases for making basic requests in Chinese using qǐng gěi wǒ/gěi wǒ men... and wǒ yào... hǎo ma. Learn these phrases and then test yourself by using the cover flap.

我要一个蛋糕，好吗？ I want a cake, please.
wǒ yào yīgè dàn gāo, hǎo ma

我要一个叉子，好吗？ I want a fork, please.
wǒ yào yīgè chā zi, hǎo ma

我要一点糖果，好吗？ I want some sweets, please.
wǒ yào yī diǎn táng guǒ, hǎo ma

给我加满，好吗？ Fill it up, please.
gěi wǒ jiā mǎn, hǎo ma (“A full tank, please.”)

请给我接王先生的电话。
qǐng gěi wǒ jiē wáng xiān shēng de diàn huà
I’d like to speak to Mr. Wang.

Read it Some Chinese characters are simple and resemble the item they describe, such as the character for people: 人 (rén). The PRC simplified the characters, although traditional versions are still used in some of the Chinese-speaking areas. The sign on the left is simplified characters, which say tíngzhǐ yíngyè, meaning business stopped, or closed.

3 Polite requests (4 minutes)

In a business situation, you may want to appear ultra-polite by using the polite version of you—nín instead of nǐ—especially if talking to someone senior. Learn these phrases and then test yourself.

Would you please help me? 请您帮帮我，好吗？
qǐng nín bāngbang wǒ, hǎo ma

Could I have your signature here, please? 请您在这里签名，好吗？
qǐng nín zài zhèlǐ qiānmíng, hǎo ma

SHÍJIĀN HÉ SHÙZÌ

Time and numbers

When telling time in Chinese, the hour comes first—for example, yīdiǎn (one o’clock), jiǔdiǎn (nine o’clock), etc., followed by the minutes: wǔfēn (five minutes), shífēn (ten minutes). bàn is “a half” (30 minutes), yīkè “a quarter” (15 minutes), and sānkè “three-quarters” (45 minutes).

2 Words to remember: time (4 minutes)

Memorize how to tell time in Chinese.

1点 yīdiǎn	one o’clock
1点5分 yīdiǎn wǔfēn	five past one
1点一刻 yīdiǎn yīkè	quarter past one
1点20分 yīdiǎn èrshífēn	twenty past one
1点半 yīdiǎn bàn	half past one
1点三刻 yīdiǎn sānkè	quarter to two (“one and three-quarters”)
2点差10分 liǎngdiǎn chà shífēn	ten to two

我有一个12点的预订。 I have a reservation for twelve o’clock.
wǒ yǒu yīgè shí’èr diǎn de yùdìng

4 Words to remember: higher numbers (6 minutes)

Chinese numbers are very logical. To count above 10, the individual numbers are simply added together. So 11 is shíyī ("ten-one"), 15 is shíwǔ ("ten-five"), etc. Be careful, though, to put the numbers the right way around: wǔshí is 50 ("five-ten"), qīshí is 70 ("seven-ten"). Units are added directly after the tens: 68 is liùshí bā; 25 is èrshí wǔ, etc.

Pay special attention to the number 10,000, which is wàn or yīwàn. A million is yībǎiwàn ("one hundred-ten thousands").

Dǎ DIÀNHUÀ On the telephone

The Chinese usually answer the telephone with wéi (hello), although sometimes nǐhǎo can also be used. You should not use wéi for face-to-face greetings. If you are planning to make a lot of calls while in China, the most cost-effective option is to buy a Chinese SIM card or a cell phone with a top-up SIM, available from a cell phone carrier service center.

ZÀI HUǒCHĒ ZHÀN

At the train station

Each type of train service in China has a unique reference. This consists of an English letter followed by a number, which indicates the route and class. Generally, services beginning with Z are the fastest, nonstop trains, while K or T indicates express long-distance trains, stopping only at major stations.

Cultural tip You can normally buy your train tickets in advance from your hotel by paying a small handling fee. If this service is not available at your hotel, you can visit a travel agency or the station to buy tickets. You will need to pay in cash at the station. There are a few places where you can buy tickets from a machine.

QÙ/CHÉNG

To go/to take

qù (to go) and chéng (to take) are essential verbs you will need as you find your way around. Chinese verbs do not change according to the subject or tense as they do in English (I go, you went, etc.). A verb generally appears immediately after the subject, or “doer,” of the action.

2 Qù/chéng: to go/to take (6 minutes)

Read these phrases aloud several times and try to memorize them. Conceal the Chinese with the cover flap and test yourself.

你去哪儿? Where are you going?
nǐ qù nǎr (informal)

您要去哪儿? Where are you going?
nín yào qù nǎr (formal)

我去火车站。 I'm going to the station.
wǒ qù huǒchēzhàn

我乘地铁上班。 I take the subway wǒ chéng dìtiě shàngbān to work.

我乘出租车上班。
wǒ chéng chūzūchē I take a taxi to work.
shàngbān

我要乘公共汽车去。 I want to go by bus.
wǒ yào chéng
gōnggòngqìchē qù

今天我去长城。
jīntiān wǒ qù chángchéng
Today I'm going to the Great Wall.

Cultural tip Taxis in China have signs clearly marked in both Chinese characters and English. Most of the major cities have ample taxis cruising the main streets, and they are usually easy to hail. Otherwise, the hotel can order one. Fares are very reasonable by Western standards. Tipping is not customary, as it isn't in most service situations in China.

3 Past and future (6 minutes)

The character 了 le or 过 guò immediately after a verb shows it is in the past: qù le or qù guò (went/have been to). There is no special form for the future; the verb is used with a time indicator, e.g. míngtiān (tomorrow).

I took a taxi. 我乘了出租车。
wǒ chéng le chūzūchē

I went to the Great Wall. 我去了长城。
wǒ qù le chángchéng

Tomorrow, I'll take the subway to work. 明天我乘地铁上班。
míngtiān wǒ chéng dìtiě shàngbān

Tomorrow, I'll take the bus to work. 明天我乘公共汽车上班。
míngtiān wǒ chéng gōnggòng qìchē shàngbān

4 Put into practice (2 minutes)

Cover the text on the right and complete the dialogue in Chinese.

你去哪儿? 我去火车站。

On the road

There's a growing number of cars in Chinese cities and on the expressways. The road systems are expanding fast. Renting a car is not as unusual or difficult as it once was, although issues with licenses and the crowded and unfamiliar roads make it preferable to also hire a driver.

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Ask "Do you go to the museum?" (pp.42-43)

What are "station" and "ticket" in Chinese? (pp.38-39)

ZÀI CHÉNGSHÌ NÈI Around town

To talk about features or facilities, you can use the word yǒu. Earlier, we learned that yǒu means have/has, but it can also mean there is/are. The opposite is méi yǒu. Notice the word order in Chinese: dàqiáo fùjìn yǒu yóuyǒngchí = bridge/near to/there is/swimming pool (There's a swimming pool near the bridge).

ZÀI JÌCHǎNG

At the airport

International flights arrive at most major cities, and there is an extensive network of internal flights operating from every provincial capital. Although the airport environment is largely universal, it is sometimes useful to be able to understand key words and phrases in Chinese.

2 Words to remember (4 minutes)

Familiarize yourself with these words and test yourself using the flap.

办理登机手续 bànlǐ dēngjī shǒuxù	check-in
出发 chūfā	departures
到达 dàodá	arrivals
海关 hǎiguān	customs
边防检查 biānfáng jiǎnchá	passport control
候机楼 hòujīlóu	terminal
登机口 dēngjīkǒu	gate
航班 hángbān	flight
飞机 fēijī	plane

哪个登机口去香港?
nǎ gè dēngjīkǒu qù xiānggǎng
Which gate is it for Hong Kong?

3 Useful phrases (3 minutes)

Learn these phrases and then test yourself using the cover flap.

去伦敦的飞机准点吗?

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

How do you say
“My son has a car”?
(pp.14-15)

What is the Chinese for “room,” “bed,” and
“pillow”? (pp.60-61)

XÍNGRÓNGCÍ

Adjectives

Basic adjectives (descriptive words) are quite straightforward in Chinese: car(s) is qìchē; small car(s) is xiǎo qìchē. A simple way to describe things is to use the word hěn, which carries the meaning of very: zhè qìchē hěn xiǎo “This car is (very) small,” shān hěn gāo “The mountains are (very) high.”

2 Words to remember (7 minutes)

There are no plurals in Chinese. So “the mountain is (very) high” and “the mountains are (very) high” would both be shān hěn gāo.

大 dà big, large

小 xiǎo small

高 gāo high, tall

低 dī low

热 rè hot

冷 lěng cold

安静 ānjìng quiet

吵闹 chǎonào noisy

硬 yìng hard

软 ruǎn soft

美 měi beautiful

宝塔很古老。
bǎotǎ hěn gǔlǎo
The pagoda is (very) old.

树很美。
shù hěn měi
The trees are (very) beautiful.

Read it The first two adjectives above—大 dà, big, and 小 xiǎo, small—are among the easiest Chinese characters to recognize. They originate from representations of a person holding arms out wide (big) and pointing down by the side (small). These characters combine with others; for example, 小鼠 xiǎoshǔ means mouse (small rat), 大衣 dàyī means coat (big jacket).

zhè qìchē hěn xiǎo

This bed is very hard. 这床很硬。
zhè chuáng hěn yìng

4 Put into practice (3 minutes)

Join in this conversation. Cover up the text on the right and complete the dialogue in Chinese. Check and repeat if necessary.

房间在这里。景色很美。
fángjiān zài zhèlǐ jǐngsè hěn měi

Bǎihuò SHĀNGDIÀN

Department store

Department stores are sometimes referred to as bǎihuòdàlóu (big building department stores) since they tend to be landmark buildings in city centers, selling everything from clothes to musical instruments. The concept is changing as shopping malls have mushroomed in many Chinese cities.

2 Match and repeat (5 minutes)

Cultural tip

Department stores are a good place to look for gifts to take home and often have a folk art section (gōngyìpǐnlèi). Here you can buy traditional souvenirs, from sandalwood fans to embroideries and vases. Most of the large stores will also be able to accept credit cards—something you can't rely on in smaller shops.

Cultural tip China has different systems of sizes. Often clothes sizes are given in a combination of height (in meters) and chest size, or by using the general size indicators (XL, L, M, S, XS, etc.). Even allowing for conversion of sizes, Chinese clothes—and especially shoes—tend to be smaller than their Western equivalents.

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Say the months of the year in Chinese.
(pp.28-29)

Ask “Is there a museum nearby?” (pp.48-49) and “How much is that?” (pp.18-19)

JIĀ Lǐ Home

In the bigger Chinese cities, space is limited and most urban Chinese traditionally live in apartments (gōngyù). More recently, however, affluent suburbs have sprung up on the outskirts, accommodating successful entrepreneurs and business owners in large houses and Western-style estates.

Cultural tip Features of buildings in China vary depending on the area, the climate, and the building materials available. In the north, heating is important, whereas in central and southern provinces, air-conditioning is a must. One almost universal feature is the presence of mosquito nets on doors (shāmén) and windows (shāchuāng).

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

What's the Chinese for "table" (pp.20-21), "desk" (pp.80-81), "bed" (pp.60-61), and "curtains"? (pp.60-61)

How do you say "This car is small"? (pp.64-65)

WŪ NÈI Inside the home

The Chinese often end their sentences with short "markers" that don't really change the meaning but carry different nuances. For example, the yo marker can imply and even or to be sure and ne can mean something like isn't that so? You'll see examples of these in the conversation below.

What's the Chinese for "day" and "month"? (pp.28-29)

Say "Where's the florist?" (pp.68-69) and "Is there a garden?" (pp.98-99)

HUĀYUÁN

The garden

Chinese gardens, often with water features and plants like pine trees and bamboos, can be seen in public places such as parks, pagodas, and hotels. Space constraints mean that many Chinese homes don't have their own gardens, but houseplants and flower arrangements are popular.

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Say "My name is John."
(pp.8-9)

Say "I like the pond."
(pp.102-03)

What's "fish" in Chinese?
(pp.22-23)

DÒNGWÙ Animals

The Chinese tend to keep small dogs, such as Pekingese, and sometimes cats in the house as pets. Birds and fish are also very popular. Keeping pets is generally becoming more popular, although official licenses are required, which can be expensive.

zhè gǒu bù yǎo rén

这是你家的猫吗?
zhè shì nǐ jiā de māo ma
Is this your cat?

Cultural tip Some buildings and big houses will keep larger dogs outside as guard dogs. These are known for their toughness and are treated as “yard” dogs rather than as pets. Look out for the Beware of the dog (xiǎoxīn yǒu gǒu) sign.

小心有狗
Beware of the Dog

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Say the days of the week in Chinese. (pp.28-29)

How do you say “cleaner”? (pp.110-11)

Say “It’s 9:30,” “10:45,” and “12:00.” (pp.30-31)

LÁI

To come

Chinese verbs generally do not change with the subject (I, you, he, she, we, they). Sometimes, however, these verbs need to be followed by time-indicating characters. Below, you will see some of these changes for the verb 来 lái (to come).

2 Useful phrases (6 minutes)

Say the different forms of lái (to come) aloud. Use the cover flap to test yourself and, when you are confident, practice the sample sentences below.

来 lái	to come (infinitive)
来了 lái le	come/coming (present)
不来了 bù lái le	not come/coming (present negative)
来过 lái guò	came (past)
没来过 méi lái guò	didn't come (past negative)
来吧 lái ba	Please come! (invitation)
公共汽车来了。 gōnggòngqìchē lái le	The bus is coming.
木匠9点钟来过。 mùjiàng jiǔ diǎnzhōng lái guò	The carpenter came at nine o'clock.
清洁工今天没来过。 qīngjiégōng jīntiān méi lái guò	The cleaner didn't come today.
我明天来。 wǒ míngtiān lái	I'll come tomorrow.

他们乘火车来。
tāmen chéng huǒchē lái
They're coming by train.

Conversational tip

Beware of English phrases using “come” that translate differently in Chinese. For example, the Chinese equivalent of I come from Canada would be wǒ shì jiānádà rén, which translates literally as I am Canada person.

3 Invitations (4 minutes)

You can use lái (come) for invitations. There are different expressions, depending on the level of formality.

请来参加我的生日晚会吧。 qǐng lái cānjiā wǒde shēngrì wǎnhuì ba

Please come to my birthday party.

星期一您能不能来

On Friday, can you come to join our seminar?
(formal)

来参加我的晚宴吧!
lái cānjiā wǒde wǎnyàn ba

Come to my dinner party!
(informal)

4 Put into practice (4 minutes)

Join in this conversation. Read the Chinese on the left and follow the instructions to make your reply. Then test yourself by concealing the answers with the cover flap.

喂, 你好。

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

What's the Chinese for "tall" and "short"? (pp.64-65)

Say "The room is big" and "The bed is small." (pp.64-65)

JǐNGCHÁ Yǔ FÀNZUÌ

Police and crime

Chinese police cars have the two characters 公安 gōng'ān (public security) or 交警 jiāojǐng (traffic police) displayed. Note that the terms nánrén (man) and nǚrén (woman) in section 4 are not very polite, as they refer to criminal suspects. More polite equivalents would be nánshì and nǚshì.

2 Words to remember: crime (4 minutes)

Familiarize yourself with these words.

4 Words to remember: appearance (5 minutes)

Learn these words and then test yourself using the cover flap.

那男人棕色头发，戴眼镜。
nà nánrén zōngsè tóufa, dàiǎnjìng
The man had brown hair and glasses.

那女人很高，长头发。
nà nǚrén hěn gāo, cháng tóufa
The woman was tall and had long hair.

man/men	男人 nánrén
woman/women	女人 nǚrén
tall	高 gāo
short	矮 ǎi
young	青年 qīngnián
middle-aged	中年 zhōngnián
fat	胖 pàng
thin	瘦 shòu
with a beard	有落腮胡子 yǒu luòsāihúzi
with a mustache	有小胡子 yǒu xiǎohúzi
wearing glasses	戴眼镜 dàiǎnjìng

Read it The Chinese for police is written with two characters: 警察 (jǐngchá). Changing the last of these characters to 官 (guān) will produce police officer: 警官 (jǐngguān); and adding the character 局 (jú) will produce the word for police station: 警察局 (jǐngchájú).

5 Put into practice (2 minutes)

Practice these phrases. Then use the cover flap to hide the text on the right and follow the instructions to make your reply in Chinese.

他长得什么样? 那男人很矮。
tā zhǎngde shénme yàng nà nánrén hěn ǎi
Can you describe him?

Say: The man was short.

头发呢? 棕色头发，有落腮胡子。

SHÈJIÀO

Socializing

As a business guest, it's more common to be invited to a restaurant than to someone's home. This is partly practical—people often have long commutes. But if you're staying for longer, you may be invited for a meal or a party.

东道主 dōngdàozhǔ
host

2 Useful phrases (3 minutes)

Learn these phrases and then test yourself.

Reinforce and progress

Regular practice is the key to maintaining and advancing your language skills. In this section, you will find a variety of suggestions for reinforcing and extending your knowledge of Chinese. Many involve returning to exercises in the book and using the dictionary to extend their scope. Go back through the lessons in a different order, mix and match activities to make up your own 15-minute daily program, or focus on topics that are of particular relevance to your current needs.

1 Warm-up (1 minute)

Ask "How much is that?" (pp.18-19)

What are "breakfast," "lunch," and "dinner?" (pp.20-21)

What are "three," "four," "five," and "six?" (pp.10-11)

Keep warmed up

Revisit the Warm-up boxes to remind yourself of keywords and phrases. Make sure you work your way through all of them on a regular basis.

2 I'd like... (3 minutes)

Say "I'd like" the following in Chinese:

Review and repeat again

Work through a Review and Repeat lesson as a way of reinforcing words and phrases presented in the course. Return to the main lesson for any topic on which you are no longer confident.

3 In conversation: taxi (2 minutes)

Carry on conversing

Reread the In Conversation panels.

Say both parts of the conversation, paying attention to the pronunciation. Where possible, try incorporating new words from the dictionary.

请带我去故宫, 好吗。
qǐng dài wǒ qù gùgōng, hǎo ma

I'd like to go to the Forbidden City, please.

Practice phrases

Return to the Useful Phrases and Put into Practice exercises. Test yourself using the cover flap. When you are confident, devise your own versions of the phrases, using new words from the dictionary.

Match, repeat, and extend

Remind yourself of words related to specific topics by returning to the Match and Repeat and Words to Remember exercises. Test yourself using the cover flap. Discover new words in that area by referring to the dictionary and menu guide.

6 Say it (2 minutes)

What kind of flower is this?
I like the pagoda.
Is there a pond?

Using other resources

In addition to working with this book, try the following language extension ideas:

Visit China, if you can, and try out your new skills with native speakers. Otherwise, find out if there is a Mandarin-speaking community near you. There may be shops, cafés, restaurants, and clubs. Try to visit some of these and use your Chinese to order food and drinks and strike up conversations. Most native speakers will be happy to speak Chinese to you.

Join a language class or club. There are usually evening and day classes available at a variety of different levels. Or you could start a club yourself if you have friends who are also interested in working on their Chinese.

Practice your new knowledge of the Chinese characters (see pp.152-57). Look at the back of food packages and other products. You will often find a Chinese list of ingredients or components. See if you can spot some familiar characters in the Chinese list and then compare to the English equivalent.

Look at the titles and advertisements of Chinese magazines and comics. The pictures will help you to decipher the script. Look for familiar words and characters, even if you can't make out the whole text.

Use the internet to find websites for learning languages, some of which offer free online help.

DICTIONARY

English to Chinese

This dictionary contains the vocabulary from 15 Minute Chinese, together with many other high-frequency words. You can also find additional terms for food and drink in the Menu Guide (pp.128-37).

In Chinese, the plural of nouns is normally the same as the singular. Chinese descriptive words, or adjectives, may have different endings depending on how they are used and are also often preceded by hěn (very). Verbs have no tenses and don't generally change according to who or what is the subject; but there are some characters that can be added to indicate a particular time or mood—see p.112.

THE CHINESE WRITING SYSTEM

Introduction

Chinese characters evolved from pictograms. These crude drawings originally resembled the object or idea they referred to (for example, an animal or a natural feature). In this way, Chinese writing developed as a series of ideograms, or characters, and not as an alphabet. But over time the characters became more complex. In modern Chinese, a few characters still bear a discernable likeness to the object they refer to, but most have changed beyond recognition.

Unlike an alphabet, Chinese characters do not carry an immediate clue as to their pronunciation—you can't look at one as a beginner and know (or even guess) how to say it. Each character needs to be learned individually. This may at first seem like a daunting task, and no one would pretend it is a fast process. On the other hand, when you understand how the Chinese language combines basic concepts to produce more complex ideas, you will see that even a few basic characters can take you a long way.

The purpose of this section is to show how you can start to decipher the characters, beginning with the simplest and most common. Writing the characters is another skill, and one for which you will need a specialty book showing the order and direction of the strokes making up each character.

Traditional and simplified characters

During the 1950s and 1960s, the People's Republic of China (mainland China) developed a simplified set of Chinese characters in an effort to promote literacy among the general population. The number of strokes in many characters was reduced and the shape simplified.

The simplified set of characters is used today in the PRC, although some other Chinese-speaking regions, notably Taiwan, still use the traditional set. 15 Minute Mandarin Chinese uses simplified characters, as this is the most useful set for beginners to learn.

Basic concepts

Some basic concepts and natural features are represented by a single character, and the simplest of these are the easiest characters to recognize at first.

Numbers

The basic Chinese characters representing numbers are easily recognized. The characters for the numbers one to five also show the significance of the number and order of the strokes (see Read it box, p.14).

一	yī (one)	六	liù (six)
二	èr (two)	七	qī (seven)
三	sān (three)	八	bā (eight)
四	sì (four)	九	jiǔ (nine)
五	wǔ (five)	十	shí (ten)

Once you can recognize and say these characters, you can combine them to produce higher numbers:

十一	shíyī (eleven—"ten one")
十二	shí'èr (twelve—"ten two")
十九	shíjiǔ (nineteen—"ten nine")
八十	bāshí (eighty—"eight ten")
四十	sìshí (forty—"four ten")
六十五	liùshíwǔ (sixty-five—"six ten five")

Add one more character and you can recognize all the months of the year:

三月	sānyuè (March—"three month")
七月	qīyuè (July—"seven month")
十一月	shíyīyuè (November—"eleven month")

And another one to tell time:

四点	sìdiǎn (four o'clock—"four point")
八点	bādiǎn (eight o'clock—"eight point")
十二点	shí'èr diǎn (twelve o'clock—"twelve point")

The same principle works with the days of the week and other numerical concepts. So with just 12 characters, you can already recognize dozens of words.

Natural features

Some of the first pictograms to develop were probably those representing natural features (e.g. river, mountain, horse, etc.). They are still among the simplest and most memorable characters, sometimes retaining a resemblance to the original concept (see mountain, tree, and person, for example).

山	shān (mountain)	水	shuǐ (water)
树	shù (tree)	土	tǔ (soil)
羊	yáng (sheep)	马	mǎ (horse)
人	rén (person)	鱼	yú (fish)

Basic grammatical words

Some characters representing basic grammatical concepts recur frequently:

我	wǒ (I)	你	nǐ (you)
他	tā (he)	她	tā (she)
是	shì (am/are/is)	的	de (of/belonging to)
们	men (plural indicator)

If you learn to recognize these seven basic characters, the literal nature of Chinese means that you will be able to recognize a vocabulary equivalent to over three times as many English words (I, you, he, she, we, they, my, your, his, her, our, their, mine, yours, ours, theirs, me, him, I'm, you're, we're, she's, etc.), for example:

我们	wǒmen (we)	他们	tāmen (they)
我的	wǒde (my)	你的	nǐde (your)
我们的	wǒmen de (our)

Other common characters

There are other commonly recurring Chinese characters that will open the door to entire vocabulary sets for you, for example:

大	dà (big)	小	xiǎo (small)
车	chē (vehicle)	机	jī (machine)
店	diàn (store)	好	hǎo (good/well)
晚	wǎn (late/evening)	早	zǎo (early/morning)
餐	cān (meal)	很	hěn (very)

You can often find these characters in combination with others. Here are a few examples from 15 Minute Mandarin Chinese:

早餐	zǎocān (breakfast—"early meal")
晚餐	wǎncān (dinner—"late meal")
餐馆	cānguǎn (restaurant- "meal place")
你好	nǐhǎo (hello—"you well")
很好	hěnhǎo (very good)
早上好	zǎoshàng hǎo (good morning—"early time good")
晚上好	wǎnshàng hǎo (good evening—"late time good")
出租车	chūzūchē (taxi—"hire vehicle")
火车	huǒchē (train—"fire vehicle")
车票	chēpiào (ticket—"vehicle fare")
小胡子	xiǎohúzi (mustache—"small beard")
小路	xiǎolù (path—"small road")
小吃	xiǎochī (snacks—"small eat")
大学	dàxué (college—"big school")
鞋店	xiédiàn (shoe store)

书店

shūdiàn (bookstore)

飞机

fēijī (plane—"flying machine")

复印机

fùyìnjī (photocopier—"photocopy machine")

Summary

Understanding the principle of how the Chinese script works will enable you to break down a string of characters representing a word or phrase. It will help you identify familiar and unfamiliar characters. For example, look at the following sentence from the first conversation in 15 Minute Mandarin Chinese:

你好, 我的名字是韩红。

(Hello. My name's Han Hong.)

Because you are now familiar with some basic characters, you can identify the characters that mean "hello," "my," and "is." You can also deduce the characters for name (名字 míngzì) and Han Hong (韩红). More importantly, you will understand better the structure of the Chinese sentence (literally "you well. I-belonging to name is Han Hong").

Look back over other words and phrases in 15 Minute Mandarin Chinese and do your own detective work. You will realize that every word and phrase does not have to be learned in isolation. The common characters with their shared sounds and meanings will help you build your Chinese vocabulary.

USEFUL SIGNS

Here are some useful signs you may see around you in China. Try to apply the principle of breaking down the combinations into their component characters to help you recognize them. You will also find common road signs on pp.44-45.
