

EYEWITNESS TRAVEL GUIDES

CHINA

TEMPLES  MOUNTAINS

ARCHITECTURE FESTIVALS

RESTAURANTS

TOURS

HOTELS

MARKETS

THE GUIDES THAT SHOW YOU WHAT OTHERS ONLY TELL YOU

CHINA

Never has a travel guide been so easy to use – just turn to the area of your choice

AREA COLOR CODES

-  BEIJING
PAGES 78–119
-  HEBEL, TIANJIN & SHANXI
PAGES 120–139
-  SHANDONG & HENAN
PAGES 140–159
-  SHAANXI
PAGES 160–171
-  SHANGHAI
PAGES 182–201
-  JIANGSU & ANHUI
PAGES 202–237
-  ZHEJIANG & JIANGXI
PAGES 238–257
-  HUNAN & HUBEI
PAGES 258–273
-  FUJIAN
PAGES 284–293
-  GUANGDONG & HAINAN
PAGES 294–305
-  HONG KONG & MACAU
PAGES 306–337
-  SICHUAN & CHONGQING
PAGES 348–371
-  YUNNAN
PAGES 372–395
-  GUIZHOU & GUANGXI
PAGES 396–425
-  LIAONING, JILIN & HEILONGJIANG
PAGES 436–455
-  INNER MONGOLIA & NINGXIA
PAGES 466–477
-  GANSU & QINGHAI
PAGES 478–501
-  XINJIANG
PAGES 502–515
-  TIBET
PAGES 526–547

$30.00 USA

$40.00 CANADA

China Region By Region

TIBET
Pages 516-547

XINJIANG
Pages 502-515

GANSU & QINGHAI
Pages 478-501

INNER MONGOLIA
& NINGXIA
Pages 466-477

JIANGSU & ANHUI
Pages 202-237

SHANGHAI
Pages 182-201

ZHEJIANG & JIANGXI
Pages 238-257

HUNAN & HUBEI
Pages 258-273

GUIZHOU & GUANGXI
Pages 396-425

SICHUAN &
CHONGQING
Pages 348-371

YUNNAN
Pages 372-395

HONG KONG
& MACAU
Pages 306-337

LIAONING, JILIN,
& HEILONGJIANG
Pages 436-455

BEIJING
Pages 78-119

HEBEI, TIANJIN,
& SHANXI
Pages 120-139

SHANDONG &
HENAN
Pages 140-159

SHAANXI
Pages 160-171

FUJIAN
Pages 284-293

GUANGDONG & HAINAN
Pages 294-305

EYEWITNESS TRAVEL GUIDES

CHINA

EYEWITNESS TRAVEL GUIDES

CHINA

LONDON, NEW YORK,
MELBOURNE, MUNICH AND DELHI

www.dk.com

PROJECT EDITORS Hugh Thompson, Kathryn Lane
PROJECT ART EDITOR Gadi Farfour
EDITOR Vandana Mohindra
DESIGNERS Mathew Kurien, Maite Lantaron, Pallavi Narain, Rebecca Milner
PICTURE RESEARCHER Ellen Root
RESEARCH ASSISTANT Monica Yue Hua Ma
MAP CO-ORDINATORS Uma Bhattacharya, Casper Morris
DTP DESIGNER Jason Little

MAIN CONTRIBUTORS

Donald Bedford, Deh-Ta Hsiung, Christopher Knowles, David Leffman, Simon Lewis,
Peter Neville-Hadley, Andrew Stone

CONSULTANTS

Christopher Knowles, Peter Neville-Hadley

PHOTOGRAPHERS

Demetrio Carrasco, Ian Cumming, Eddie Gerald, Nigel Hicks, Colin Sinclair, Chris Stowers, Linda Whitwham

ILLUSTRATORS

Stephen Conlin, Gary Cross, Richard Draper, Kevin Goold, Paul Guest, Claire Littlejohn, John Mullany, Chris Orr,
Arun Pottirayil

Reproduced by Colourscan, Singapore
Printed and bound by Toppan Printing Co., Hong Kong, PRC

First American Edition, 2005

01 02 03 04 05 06 07 08 09 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1
Published in the United States by DK Publishing, Inc.
375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014

Copyright © 2005 Dorling Kindersley Limited, London
A Penguin Company

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. NO PART OF THIS PUBLICATION MAY BE REPRODUCED, STORED IN A RETRIEVAL SYSTEM, OR TRANSMITTED IN ANY FORM OR BY ANY MEANS, ELECTRONIC, MECHANICAL, PHOTOCOPYING, RECORDING OR OTHERWISE, WITHOUT THE PRIOR WRITTEN PERMISSION OF THE COPYRIGHT OWNER.

ISSN 1542-1554
ISBN 0-7566-0919-4

The information in this

Dorling Kindersley Travel Guide is checked regularly.

Every effort has been made to ensure that this book is as up-to-date as possible at the time of going to press. Some details, however, such as telephone numbers, opening hours, prices, gallery hanging arrangements and travel information are liable to change. The publishers cannot accept responsibility for any consequences arising from the use of this book, nor for any material on third party websites, and cannot guarantee that any website address in this book will be a suitable source of travel information. We value the views and suggestions of our readers very highly. Please write to:

The Publisher, DK Eyewitness Travel Guides,
Dorling Kindersley, 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, Great Britain.

The external boundaries of China as shown in this book are neither correct nor authentic.

Confucius (551-479 BC), the great philosopher and sage

CONTENTS

INTRODUCING CHINA

PUTTING CHINA
ON THE MAP 10

A PORTRAIT OF
CHINA 14

CHINA THROUGH
THE YEAR 44

THE HISTORY OF CHINA
50

BEIJING & THE NORTH

INTRODUCING BEIJING
& THE NORTH 70

BEIJING 78

HEBEI, TIANJIN, &
SHANXI 120

SHANDONG & HENAN
140

SHAANXI 160

CENTRAL CHINA

INTRODUCING CENTRAL
CHINA 174

SHANGHAI 182

JIANGSU & ANHUI 202

ZHEJIANG & JIANGXI
238

HUNAN & HUBEI 258

THE SOUTH

INTRODUCING THE
SOUTH 276

FUJIAN 284

GUANGDONG &
HAINAN 294

HONG KONG & MACAU
306

Pailou, a decorative gate, leading to Gao Miao in Zhongwei, Ningxia

THE SOUTHWEST

INTRODUCING THE
SOUTHWEST 340

SICHUAN &
CHONGQING 348

YUNNAN 372

GUIZHOU & GUANGXI
396

THE NORTHEAST

INTRODUCING THE
NORTHEAST 428

LIAONING, JILIN, &
HEILONGJIANG 436

Dramatic karst hills in the town of Guilin, Guangxi

INNER MONGOLIA & THE SILK ROADS

INTRODUCING INNER MONGOLIA & THE SILK
ROADS 458

INNER MONGOLIA &
NINGXIA 466

GANSU & QINGHAI 478

XINJIANG 502

TIBET

INTRODUCING TIBET 518

TIBET 526

TRAVELERS' NEEDS

WHERE TO STAY 550

WHERE TO EAT 574

SHOPS & MARKETS 598

ENTERTAINMENT 602

SPORTS & SPECIALIST
HOLIDAYS 604

SURVIVAL GUIDE

PRACTICAL
INFORMATION 610

TRAVEL INFORMATION 624

GENERAL INDEX 634

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS 662

GLOSSARY 666

PHRASE BOOK 668

Fengxian Si, the largest of the Buddhist Longmen Caves, Henan

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

THIS DORLING KINDERSLEY travel guide helps you to get the most from your visit to China, providing expert recommendations as well as detailed practical information. The opening chapter Introducing China maps the country and sets it in its historical and cultural context. Each of the seven regional sections is divided into area chapters that cover from one to three provinces each. Here you will find descriptions of the most important sights with maps, pictures, and illustrations. Hotel and restaurant recommendations can be found in Travelers' Needs. The Survival Guide contains practical information on everything from transport to personal safety.

1 At a Glance
A map-based feature introduces each of the seven regional sections, giving an illustrated overview of the area. The map indicates major cities and sights.

Getting Around gives a brief description of long-distance transport in the region.

The South at a Glance
 Discover the province of Fujian, Guangdong, Hainan Island as well as Macao and Hong Kong, the South in China's most southerly region, mostly because of the wetness of the rain forest. The province of Hainan is a tropical island, the site rarely features on the foreign itinerary. There is much to enjoy here, and West Coast airports connect to the historic north of Guangdong, Hainan, Xiamen along the coast of Guangdong and Fujian, and the tropical beaches of Hainan.

GETTING AROUND
 The South of China is a big, diverse region with a wide range of transport options. The main international airports are in Guangzhou, Hong Kong, and Macao. There are also many domestic airports, and a network of high-speed rail lines connects the major cities. The South of China is a big, diverse region with a wide range of transport options. The main international airports are in Guangzhou, Hong Kong, and Macao. There are also many domestic airports, and a network of high-speed rail lines connects the major cities.

Locator maps show the color-coded chapter divisions within the section.

Beijing Opera
 Over 200 years, some hundreds of local troupes across China, Beijing Opera blossomed in the Qing Dynasty. It found the Emperor Qianlong (1736-95), one of the world's most ardent patrons of the arts, as its patron. He ordered that the four major troupes to Beijing should merge their art forms to create a new unified style.

Beijing Opera
 Usually starting out with a dramatic musical theme, the plot can be complex. The story is usually of a historical event, or a legend. The plot is usually of a historical event, or a legend. The plot is usually of a historical event, or a legend.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
 Despite the intense musical nature of Beijing Opera, the Chinese say that they go to 'hear' the music in it. The accompaniment of the musical instruments is an essential part of the performance. The instruments used are the Peking Opera Drum, the Peking Opera Banhu, and the Peking Opera Sheng.

2 Regional Feature
Each regional introduction highlights aspects of the area's culture, history, geography, and cuisine. Fascinating features are sprinkled throughout the area chapters as well.

3 Chapter Introduction
Each chapter is coded a different color. For easy reference, all sights in the area are numbered and plotted on a map. The black bullet numbers also indicate the order in which the sights are covered in the chapter.

A map shows cities, passenger rail routes, and all major roads.

HEBEI, TIANJIN & SHANXI
 With a rich 2000-year history, Hebei, Tianjin and Shanxi are the cradle of Chinese civilization. It is one of the most important agricultural, industrial, and commercial bases in China. Hebei is a major transportation hub, with Tianjin and Beijing as its main cities. Shanxi is a major coal and steel base, with Taiyuan as its main city.

SHANGHAI AT A GLANCE
 Shanghai is a major financial and commercial center in China. It is one of the most important cities in the country. The city is a major transportation hub, with Pudong and Puxi as its main areas. The city is a major transportation hub, with Pudong and Puxi as its main areas.

Shenyang

China's six ancient capitals and the largest city in the northeast, Shenyang has the fortune of having had 9 dynasties in its history. At the heart of the province's 10 major industries are the city's steel and machine-making industries. Shenyang was the base of the province's 10 major industries during the Ming and Qing dynasties (1368-1644). The city was the center of the Qing Empire, which was founded in Manchuria in 1644 and ruled the China's vast northern provinces in the 17th century.

Imperial Palace
The Imperial Palace in Shenyang was built in 1625 by the Qing Dynasty. It was the largest palace complex in the world at the time. The palace was destroyed in 1911 and the site was used as a military camp. The palace was rebuilt in 1982 and is now a museum. It is a fine example of traditional Chinese architecture.

Shenyang Park
Shenyang Park is a large park in the center of the city. It was founded in 1911 and is now a popular place for recreation. The park has a large lake and many beautiful buildings. It is a great place to visit if you are in Shenyang.

Forbidden City

For almost nine centuries, the Forbidden City has been the seat of power in China. It was built in 1420 and is the largest palace complex in the world. The palace was destroyed in 1911 and the site was used as a military camp. The palace was rebuilt in 1982 and is now a museum. It is a fine example of traditional Chinese architecture.

Summer Palace
The Summer Palace is a large park in the northwest of Beijing. It was built in 1750 and is now a popular place for recreation. The park has a large lake and many beautiful buildings. It is a great place to visit if you are in Beijing.

Great Wall
The Great Wall of China is a long wall that was built over many centuries. It was built to protect the Chinese from invasions. The wall is now a UNESCO World Heritage Site and is a popular tourist attraction.

4 Town Map

Within each chapter, important towns and cities are described in detail, and numerous sights recommended. A Visitors' Checklist gives practical information and a handy map locates the main sights and transport hubs.

Visitors' Checklist provides the address, opening times, transport information, and more.

Forbidden City

For almost nine centuries, the Forbidden City has been the seat of power in China. It was built in 1420 and is the largest palace complex in the world. The palace was destroyed in 1911 and the site was used as a military camp. The palace was rebuilt in 1982 and is now a museum. It is a fine example of traditional Chinese architecture.

Summer Palace
The Summer Palace is a large park in the northwest of Beijing. It was built in 1750 and is now a popular place for recreation. The park has a large lake and many beautiful buildings. It is a great place to visit if you are in Beijing.

Great Wall
The Great Wall of China is a long wall that was built over many centuries. It was built to protect the Chinese from invasions. The wall is now a UNESCO World Heritage Site and is a popular tourist attraction.

A sight list corresponds to the bullets on the map.

5 Major Sights

Historic buildings are intricately illustrated; museums have color-coded floor plans to help locate the best exhibits; and natural parks have maps with walking routes.

Stars indicate the features that no visitor should miss.

Exploring Beijing

Beijing is a city of many sights. This map shows the locations of the most important sights in the city. The sights are listed in alphabetical order and are marked with stars to indicate which ones are the most important. The map also shows the locations of the major parks and the Great Wall of China.

Summer Palace
The Summer Palace is a large park in the northwest of Beijing. It was built in 1750 and is now a popular place for recreation. The park has a large lake and many beautiful buildings. It is a great place to visit if you are in Beijing.

Great Wall
The Great Wall of China is a long wall that was built over many centuries. It was built to protect the Chinese from invasions. The wall is now a UNESCO World Heritage Site and is a popular tourist attraction.

6 Major City Map

Beijing, Hong Kong, and Shanghai each have their own chapters with introductory maps – sights are plotted with numbered bullets. Hong Kong and Beijing have detailed Street Finder maps as well.

Bulleted sights are listed in alphabetical order.

7 Detailed Information

Along with practical information, each sight is described and written in Chinese characters. The entries appear in the same order as the numbering on the map at the beginning of the chapter.

Nanjing Road

Nanjing Road is a major street in Shanghai. It is a busy street with many shops and buildings. It is a great place to visit if you are in Shanghai.

Shanghai Museum

The Shanghai Museum is a large museum in the center of Shanghai. It has many interesting exhibits and is a great place to visit if you are in Shanghai.

People's Park & Square

People's Park and Square is a large park and square in Shanghai. It is a popular place for recreation and is a great place to visit if you are in Shanghai.

The One Bookstore

The One Bookstore is a large bookstore in Shanghai. It has many interesting books and is a great place to visit if you are in Shanghai.

INTRODUCING CHINA

PUTTING CHINA ON THE MAP 10-13
A PORTRAIT OF CHINA 14-43
CHINA THROUGH THE YEAR 44-49
THE HISTORY OF CHINA 50-67

Putting China on the Map

STRETCHING over 50 degrees of latitude and covering 3.7 million sq miles (9.6 million sq km) of land, the People's Republic of China is one of the largest countries in the world with over 20 per cent of the planet's population. It is bordered by 14 countries and has a 12,400-mile (20,000-km) long Pacific coastline. The capital, Beijing, with over 14 million inhabitants, is an autonomous (self-governing) municipality.

KEY

-  International airport
-  National highway
-  Major road
-  Railroad
-  International border
-  Provincial border
-  Disputed border

OLIA

Putting China on the Map

THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA is a vast part of the Asian continent with extremes of landscape. About 65 per cent of its terrain is high ground and sparsely inhabited – the southwestern plateau includes the world's highest peak (Mount Everest at 29,029 ft/8,848 m). China also has the world's second-lowest area – 505 ft (154 m) below sea level – at the Turpan Depression. Rivers all run down to the low-lying eastern area, which is densely populated and intensively farmed. The Yangzi River, at 3,915 miles (6,380 km), is the third-longest river in the world.

A PORTRAIT OF CHINA

TWENTY YEARS after the late Deng Xiaoping's "reform and opening" policy allowed foreign travelers back into China, the country remains largely as mysterious and undiscovered as it was in the 19th century, when gunboat diplomacy by foreign superpowers forced the last tottering dynasty to open up the country to foreign trade and exploration.

Drawn by this air of mystery, the number of visitors coming to China has been rising rapidly. The World Tourism Organization predicts that by 2020 China will become the world's most popular tourist destination. Not one visitor will fail to be impressed by the splendor of China's greatest sights.

The Great Wall has been completely rebuilt in parts in modern times, but its dizzying loops across the horizon still leave most visitors lost for words. The Forbidden City, at the heart of Beijing, draws crowds that make its original majesty hard to imagine, but the labyrinth of side passages still leaves the more inquisitive visitor spellbound. And, although images of Xi'an's Terracotta Warriors are familiar from coffee table books, nothing can prepare the visitor for coming face to face with an army of thousands.

A rural worker

China may not be quite the rapidly modernizing economic success of investment fable, but nor is it the medieval backwater of travelers' tales – the truth lies somewhere in between. Not far from the excitement and wealth of the shiny, high-rise cities, water buffalo pull the plow, and donkey carts are still a popular form of transport. For the visitor, making a foray into the countryside will rarely fail to yield a lively village market or a distressed pagoda on a hill.

Shanghai's high-rise skyline, a symbol of China's booming prosperity

The dizzying, hill hugging loops of the Great Wall of China

MODERN CHINA

China's vast population, despite famines and civil wars, has grown from 400 million to approximately 1.3 billion in less than a century. This increase has driven a boom in consumerism, most evident in the cities where advertising hoardings for coffee, computers, and the latest fashions line streets of shops selling fast food, phones, and face-lifts.

Shanghai is said to represent the new entrepreneurial China, and visitors will immediately notice the billboards, the towers, and the forest of cranes, but may fail to see that many construction projects have been halted while incomplete, and that many completed projects are largely unoccupied. Anyway Shanghai is only one city: 70% of the Chinese people work in agriculture, and the majority of commercial enterprises are still in state ownership or have state majority shareholdings.

There has been obvious, rapid economic development – luxury hotels, convenient public transport, and excellent restaurants. However, these welcome refinements have been tempered for the visitor by the destruction of traditional housing for the construction of highways soon choked with traffic. And yet for some people this new commercialism has provided the disposable income to fund a return to traditional hobbies and pastimes.

Today, former occupants of crumbling courtyard houses may find themselves exiled to unfinished towers in the suburbs, but in the spaces between the blocks, they've revived the tradition of walking their snuffling Pekinese. Song-birds flutter and call from delicate bamboo cages while their owners sit and chat. On bridges over ring roads, old men gather to fly colorful kites – now made from supermarket shopping bags.

Traditional courtyard housing in Lijiang, southwest China

GROWING TOO FAST?

As population growth drives a consumer boom, China's energy needs are fast outstripping its capacity and a major expansion of its network of coal-fired generating stations is planned. But China is already the planet's second biggest polluter after the US – in many cities the atmosphere is furry enough to stroke.

With few opportunities for work in the countryside, tens of millions are moving to the cities in search of a better life. Living in poor conditions and often left unpaid after building the new towers, they send whatever they can to families back home. Others staff the restaurants and run a million small businesses from shoe-shining to knife-sharpening. If your taxi driver doesn't know where he's going, it's often because he hasn't been in town long.

Those better off in the city blame the migrants for the rise in urban crime (although most countries would envy China's crime figures), but complain when the services they provide vanish at Chinese New Year due to the workers returning home for the holiday.

European architecture on the Bund, Shanghai

POLITICS

The end of the 20th century has seen communist regimes toppled across Europe, but the present government has made it all too clear that there will be no political change in China in the foreseeable future. Politics, although almost invisible to visitors, still enters every aspect of life, including the training of tour guides to provide cultural and historical information that supports the view of China the Party wishes to promote.

Like many other peoples, the Chinese are sunk in political apathy, believing that as individuals they can make little difference. Dissatisfaction is widespread, but it focuses on practical matters, such as personal experience of official corruption, and not on larger criticism of the Party's stranglehold on power.

The Hong Kong rush hour – much the same as in any international metropolis

FAMILY LIFE

Eight out of ten of the parents of the current generation of twenty-year-olds had their spouses chosen and approved by their work unit, but today's urban youth experiment early, live together outside marriage (until recently still illegal), and try a few partners before settling down.

Divorce, unheard of until the end of the last century, is now common. Extra-marital affairs are so ubiquitous that the government has been thinking about introducing legislation that will make them illegal.

Attitudes to children, too, are changing. There are hints that the one-child policy, long breached by anyone with connections or cash, may be relaxed a little. And there are signs that many members of the urban middle class, although still a tiny percentage of the total population, wish to enjoy the treats they can now afford rather than have children. While 20 years ago it was considered fortunate to own a bicycle, now aspiring, young urbanites can work towards owning a car.

Minority mother and child

Traditional modes of transport in Beijing

UNIFIED BY LANGUAGE

The whole nation may have felt proud when Yang Liwei became the country's first astronaut in 2003, heralding China's entry to the exclusive club of space nations.

The government likes to use such occasions to promote Han unity – "Han" is the name the Chinese majority use for themselves, as opposed to the 50 or so officially recognized minorities within China's borders (see pp24–25). There's been a tendency to treat these minorities as unpredictable pets, and their mostly colorful costumes and traditional festivals have been put at the forefront of tourism promotion in recent years. It may not be ideal but it is a great improvement on the forced assimilation of past times.

Almost everyone is educated in Mandarin (Putonghua), the official language of China, but there are five completely different regional versions, and a strong sense of local culture and tradition goes with them.

Popstars performing an outdoor concert in Beijing

The Chinese people's common love of food also helps differentiate them, with preferences for spicy, vinegary, sweet, and other flavors being distributed geographically. Visitors to Sichuan and Yunnan will find the locals rightly proud of their uniquely fiery cuisine, while those visiting Guangdong and Guangxi will be astonished at the subtlety and delicacy of Cantonese food.

CULTURE AND RELIGION

While traditional opera is now largely confined to shows for foreign tourists, modern art, films, and popular music have all flourished. Not all of it is good by any means but art galleries now feature on tourist itineraries, resident students crowd bars to hear Chinese punk bands, and millions around the world flock to see big-budget martial arts epics.

Religion and superstition are making a small come-back which the government regards warily – it fears organizations of any kind not directly under its control. Many people are still struggling to cope with the end of government-organized everything, and for some the structure of organized religion provides a substitute. There may be many more opportunities to start businesses and make money, and all kinds of employment that simply didn't exist before Deng Xiaoping's reform policy kick-started the economy, but jobs no longer come with housing, healthcare, or any guarantees they'll last.

A space nation – China's first astronaut Yang Liwei

But the Chinese are used to turbulence, and are incredibly stoic about it. Their attitude to visitors varies from the studied indifference of the smart metropolitans, to the close interest in foreign wallets of the tourist touts, via frank (even uncomfortable) curiosity, and the casual warmth and generosity of everyday folk.

China's modern consumer society – a smart shopping mall in Xidan Lu, Beijing

Landscape and Wildlife - West

Forest butterfly

THE WEST OF CHINA is made up of a high, arid mountain plateau and, further north, a harsh, dry desert. These areas are not suited to agriculture and therefore sparsely populated by humans – only specialist animals that have adapted to the conditions survive here. At the eastern edge of the Tibetan plateau lie the mountains and wooded hills of central and west China, home to pockets of bamboo forest – the habitat of one of China's most famous and unique animals, the giant panda. Watered by rivers of melted snow from Tibet, the forests are also home to a great number of other animals, trees, and especially beautiful flowers (see pp344–5).

KEY

- ① Tibetan High Plateau
- ② Mountains of Central & West
- ③ Deserts of North & Northwest
- ④ Bamboo Forest

TIBETAN HIGH PLATEAU

The vast, rocky Qinghai-Tibet Plateau lies between the Kunlun Mountains in the north, the Karakoram in the west and the Himalayas to the south. The average altitude is about 15,994 ft (4,875 m), making it the highest plateau in the world.

The Blue poppy is one of the most famous Himalayan flowers. About 15 species of this genus (Meconopsis) grow in Yunnan and Tibet, and are used in traditional medicine.

The Himalayan blue sheep (Pseudois nayaur) is well adapted to the high crags of western China, where it is found mainly in Tibet, Sichuan, and Yunnan.

Snow leopards (Panthera (Uncia) uncia) have thick fur to protect them. Though protected, they are still poached for their valuable pelts.

MOUNTAINS OF CENTRAL & WEST CHINA

The central ranges have large areas of natural forest habitats, and are major wildlife refuges. Covering over 20,000 sq miles (52,000 sq km), they are home to many species, including the endangered golden monkey.

Rhesus macaques (Macaca mulatta) are common in Chinese forests. Though able to fend for themselves, they are used to people, and can be a nuisance begging for food.

Chinese fir (Cunninghamia lanceolata) is a common conifer, found typically in mixed needle-leaved-broadleaved forests in high sub-tropical sites.

The silver pheasant (Lophura nycthemera) is one of China's most beautiful birds. It is common in evergreen forests and bamboo thickets in southern and eastern areas.

THE STEPS OF CHINA

Running west to east, China's landscape is said to form a series of three steps. The first is the Tibetan Plateau, most of it over 13,000 ft (4,000 m). This spans a third of the width of China's territory. Next at between 5,000 ft (1,500 m) and 10,000 ft (3,000 m) come the mountains of Sichuan and central China. These ranges show great changes in vegetation over relatively short distances, in some places changing from high altitude frozen desert to near tropical forest. Lastly come the fertile lowlands running from 5,000 ft (1,500 m) down to the coast. It is easy to see how China's rivers starting on the Tibetan Plateau become so powerful on their course east to the coast.

DESERTS OF NORTH & NORTHWEST

Deserts cover about 20% of China's landmass – mainly in the northwest. This is a challenging environment and plants and animals adapted to the deserts are few: reptiles and small rodents such as jerboas predominate.

Only about 600 of the two-bumped Bactrian camel (Camelus bactrianus) survive in the deserts of China.

Wormwoods (Artemisia spp.) are typical low shrubs of dry steppe communities and can tolerate periodic droughts and even salty soils.

The deserts of northern China, close to Mongolia, are the habitat of the rare goitered gazelle (Gazella subgutturosa); despite its rarity it is still targeted by trophy hunters.

BAMBOO FOREST

China has some 500 species of bamboo covering about 3% of the total forest area. They are found in 18 provinces and are not only a vital habitat for wildlife, but with their almost indestructible culms (stems), are also a valuable resource.

Tall forests of muso bamboo

(Phyllostachys pubescens) are managed to provide a sustainable crop of culms, which local people use in many ways (see p411).

Golden pheasant (Chrysolophus pictus) is native to scrubby hillsides and forests in central southern China, from 2,625–8,200 ft (800–2,500 m).

The giant panda (Ailuropoda melanoleuca), symbol of conservation, is slowly increasing in forest reserves in central and western China.

Landscape & Wildlife - East

Sacred Lotus

CHINA HAS THE MOST DIVERSE flora and fauna of any country in the temperate zone, with around 30,000 plant species, 500 mammal species, and 1,200 bird species. Although much of lowland China has been intensively cultivated for centuries, there still remains vast areas of important wild habitat including 29 million acres (12 million hectares) of lakes, and 31 million acres (13 million hectares) of marsh, bog, and coastal saltmarsh. The rugged nature of northeast China's borderlands has prevented the loss of its forest to agriculture, and, despite heavy logging, it is the largest area of forest in China. The accessibility of the steppe, however, has seen much of it lost to agriculture.

KEY

- ⑤ Steppe Grasslands
- ⑥ Forests of Northeast China
- ⑦ Fertile Lowlands
- ⑧ Wetlands & Coasts
- ⑨ Jungle

STEPPE GRASSLAND

The specialized grasses and drought resistant herbs of the steppe are an important source of food to the nomadic herders. In addition, their roots hold together the topsoil helping prevent erosion and desertification. Heavy cultivation in recent years has led to sandstorms in Beijing.

The steppe cat (Felis libyca) is common in the shrubby steppe habitats of the Tian Shan mountains of the northwest. It feeds mainly on small mammals, birds, and reptiles.

The great bustard (Otis tarda) is, at up to 33 lb (15 kg), the heaviest flying bird. It nests in the open, on hummocks of dry grass.

The saiga antelope (Saiga tatarica) is one of the strangest steppe creatures. Its large nose filters dust and beats the air it breathes.

FORESTS OF NORTHEAST CHINA

Forests here consist mainly of coniferous trees. Along with the evergreen fir, spruce, and pine, the deciduous larch is also common. To the south of these forest regions are mixed temperate broadleaf forests with oaks and birch prominent.

Asiatic black bears (Ursus thibetanus) are found in many regions – even as far south as Hainan. In colder areas they hibernate in winter.

The false acacia (Robinia pseudoacacia), though native to eastern North America, has been extensively planted in China.

The beautiful azure-winged magpie (Cyanopica cyana) is a sociable species, moving in noisy flocks through the trees of forests and parks.

UNDER THREAT

Pollution of the air, soil, and waterways, is threatening many of China's delicate environments, special animals, and plants, especially when faced with large building projects like the Three Gorges Dam. In addition, the use of rare animals in medicinal "remedies" means that many species face extinction from poaching. However, the Chinese government is now paying some attention to conservation and reports that the giant panda, great crested ibis, and Chinese alligator are all increasing in numbers thanks to the protection of their habitat and improved ecosystems. Nevertheless there is still a long way to go.

JUNGLE

Tropical forests occur in the deep south of China – mainly on the island of Hainan, and also the basins of Yunnan. Many forests are secondary, or have been replaced through felling and grazing by a kind of savanna or by plantations, especially of rubber.

FERTILE LOWLANDS

Intensively cultivated and denuded of natural vegetation, the huge lowland flood-plains of major rivers, notably the Yellow and Yangzi, are a seemingly endless patchwork of fields. Grain crops, dominated by rice, are broken up by ponds with fish, ducks, and frogs.

WETLANDS AND COASTS

Wetlands are some of the country's most diverse ecosystems, being prime habitats for rare or endemic plants and animals. The lakes and flooded river valleys are also vital staging posts for migrating birds, such as waterfowl and species of endangered crane.

Rice fields or paddies occupy much of the fertile lowlands and hillsides in central and southern China.

The long-tailed shrike (Lanius schach), often seen watching from a roadside wire or pole, is common in eastern and southern China.

Water Buffalo (Bubalus arnee) are beasts of burden and used for plowing. They are at home in the muddy wet paddy fields of the south.

The water arum (Calla palustris) grows around marshes and bogs in the northeast at altitudes of up to 3,600 ft (1,100m).

The mandarin duck (Aix galericulata) looks exotic and is a tree-hole nester, found mainly along wooded streams in the northeast.

Hawksbill turtles (Eretmochelys imbricata) still breed on a few beaches along the southern tropical coast but are at risk from humans.

China's Peoples

THERE ARE ABOUT 55 different ethnic minorities in China, each with their own distinctive customs, costumes and, in many cases, languages. Though rich in culture, and varied, together they make up only about seven percent of the population, with the main group, known as Han Chinese, accounting for the rest. Modernization of society and intermarriage are inevitably leading to a dilution of these differences, but many groups remain proud of their heritage and retain their traditional beliefs and customs. Many have beautiful styles of dress (especially the women), and these costumes and cultures have become a major attraction to visitors, who bring trade to communities.

Over 1 million Kazakh Muslims live in the north of Xinjiang Province. Renowned for their horsemanship, the Kazakhs center their lives around their precious horses and farming.

There are around 8 million Uighur, a Muslim people with a language close to Turkish. They inhabit Xinjiang Province in China's far northwest.

NORTHWEST

A variety of mostly Islamic people inhabit this area dominated by desert, semi-desert, and mountains. The Uighur are the dominant minority and have their own Autonomous Region. Other groups include the Hui, Kazakhs, Kirghiz, Uzbeks, Tajiks, and Tatars.

Naxi of Lijiang have strong traditions and are guardians of an ancient script.

Bai people live mainly in Sichuan, Yunnan, Guizhou, and Hunan, and number some 1.6 million. Their capital is Dali (Yunnan). Although traditionally farmers and fishermen, their colorful costumes attract a lot of tourism.

SOUTHWEST

The Tibetan plateau is home to more than 4.5 million Tibetans. With around 20 different minorities the southwest of China has the most ethnic diversity. The Yi, the largest group in this region (6.6 million), live in Sichuan, Yunnan, and Guizhou.

The Dai and Hani of Xishuangbanna in southern Yunnan in the tropical south are mainly Buddhist farmers, and have a deep respect for the natural world.

NORTHEAST

As well as the Mongolians, there are a few small groups of minorities in the northeast. These include about a few thousand Daur as well as the Oroqen, Hezhen and Ewenki. There are also around 2 million Koreans (Chaoxian) while the largest group are the Manchu, with about 9.8 million.

The Oroqen is one of China's smallest minority, with a population of about 7,000. They live mainly in Inner Mongolia and in Heilongjiang Province. They live in conical bouses with birch bark or skin roofs, supported by poles (see p455).

The Muslim Hui have their own so-called Autonomous Region of Ningxia but have established communities in cities across China.

CENTRAL & EAST

The 630,000 She live mainly in Fujian and Zhejiang Provinces. They are farmers, with a strong artistic tradition using bamboo. Another small group, the Gaoshan (about 400,000) are from Taiwan, but many have settled on the eastern mainland, notably in Fujian Province.

The Tujia of Hunan, Hubei and Sichuan have a history stretching back over 2,000 years. There are about 5.7 million Tujia.

SOUTH

The largest minority in China is the Zhuang (15.5 million), who live mainly in their Autonomous Region of Guangxi, famous for the dramatic dragon-back rice terraces of Longsheng. They have linguistic and cultural links with the Dai who are ethnically related to Thai peoples. Renowned for their crafts and colorful festivals (see pp406-9), the Miao (7.4 million) inhabit many areas in the southern provinces.

The 1.1 million Li who inhabit the tropical island of Hainan are best known for their traditional weaving skills, producing colorful woven articles.

There are 2.1 million Yao people.

Language and Script

THE CHINESE SCRIPT CAN BE TRACED back to the oracle bones of the Shang dynasty (16th–11th centuries BC) that were inscribed with symbols representing words and used for divination. Despite changes brought about by different writing materials, Chinese characters have remained remarkably consistent. It is said that to read a newspaper takes knowledge of at least 3,000 characters but an educated person would be expected to know over 5,000. Since 1913 the official spoken language has been Putonghua (Mandarin) but there are many very different regional dialects. Although people from different parts of China may not be able to understand each other, they can use a shared written script.

Cang Jie, minister of the legendary Yellow Emperor, was supposedly inspired to invent the Chinese script one morning after seeing bird and animal tracks in the snow.

A BEAUTIFUL SCRIPT

Writing was elevated to an art form considered on a par with painting as a visual aesthetic (see pp38–9). As the process changed from inscribing bone, brass or stone to using a brush on silk and paper, a more fluid writing style became possible.

Seal, in red cinnabar
– this may be a name seal, or inscribed with other characters.

Oracle bones display China's first examples of seal script. Questions were inscribed on the bones which were then burnt – the way cracks divided the inscriptions was deemed significant.

Bamboo slats were used from around the 5th century BC.

These were tied together to make the earliest type of books. Used for administrative and philosophical texts, the script runs from top to bottom.

Writing materials were silk, stone or paper, which was first invented around the 2nd century BC.

Cursive script (cao shu) has strokes that run into each other. Fluid and dynamic, it allows for great expressiveness.

Diamond Sutra (AD 868) is the world's first block-printed book to bear a date. Printing was probably invented about a century earlier. Movable block printing was developed in the 11th century but had less social impact than in Europe because of the thousands of symbols required.

CHINESE CHARACTERS

May be composed of pictographic, ideographic and phonetic elements. The radical (or root), an element that appears on the left or at the top of a character, usually gives a clue as to sense. Here, in the character for "good," pronounced "hao," the radical combines with another meaning element "child." The concept, therefore, is that "woman" plus "child" equals "good."

"Woman"

The Chinese Character for "Good"

"Child"

Combining element for "child," is here an ideographic (meaning) element. The combining element may alternatively be phonetic, giving a clue for pronunciation of the character.

The radical for "woman" appears in characters with "female" associations, such as "milk," "wife," and "sister."

Pinyin is a Romanization system that was introduced in 1956. While pinyin will never replace the character forms, it is an easier method for children to start learning the language and useful for input to computers.

STYLES OF CALLIGRAPHY

Zhuanshu, or seal script, was developed during the Zhou era and used for engraved inscriptions.

Lishu, or clerical script, probably evolved during the Han era and was used for stone inscriptions.

Kaishu or regular script, developed from Lishu after the Han era, is the basis of modern type.

Cao shu or cursive script, literally grass script, has strokes that are reduced to abstract curves or dots.

Xingshu, or running script, has strokes that run together, and is a semi-cursive script.

Simplified script was introduced in 1956 to make it easier for peasants to learn to read.

Chinese typewriters were very difficult to use. The typist had to find each character in a tray of thousands. Computers have made typing Simplified script much easier – the user types in the pinyin and gets a sub-menu of several possible characters.

Chinese Literature

DATING BACK TO the sixth century BC, the earliest Chinese texts were primarily philosophic, such as the Confucian Analects and Daoist Daode Jing. History as a literary genre was not established until the Han period (206 BC–AD 220) with Sima Qian's Historical Records: thereafter each dynasty wrote a history of the preceding one. As for the novel, a fully fledged Chinese example did not appear until the Ming period (1368–1644) and was developed during the Qing dynasty until it was eventually stifled by Communism. Since the 1980s Chinese authors have been allowed greater freedom of expression, although, in 2000, news of exiled writer Gao Xingjian's Nobel Prize for Literature was suppressed.

Confucius, author of the Analects, and his disciples

CLASSICS

Post-Qin dynasty, once Confucianism had become the state orthodoxy, five early works were canonized as the Five Classics: the Book of Changes, Book of Documents, Book of Songs, Spring and Autumn Annals and Book of Ritual. These books were established as the basis for Chinese education.

Scholar class or literati achieved the status of government official through success in the civil service examinations, based on detailed knowledge of the Classics and accomplishment in writing.

TANG POETS

With early beginnings in the Book of Songs and Elegies of Chu, Chinese poetry reached its height more than twelve hundred years later in the Tang period (618–907). The two greatest Tang poets are considered to be Du Fu and Li Bai. Others include the Buddhist Wang Wei, also 8th-century, and slightly later Bai Juyi (772–846).

Du Fu (AD c. 712–770) wrote of suffering in war, as well as of family life. His keynote is compassion, considered a Confucian virtue. His poems display enormous erudition.

Li Bai AD c. 701–761 was a more ebullient figure. A prolific poet, his favorite subjects were moon gazing and carousing. The theme of freedom from constraint is a Daoist one.

Baoyu prefers to flirt with the women rather than obey his father and study hard to advance his career.

EPIC NOVELS

In the Ming era, the novel developed from folk tales and myths into classics such as Journey to the West, Romance of the Three Kingdoms and The Water Margin – a tale of the heroic fight against corruption. Later, the Qing novels used a more elevated language and subtle characterization, culminating in the romantic novel, Dream of the Red Chamber. These novels contain many characters that reoccur in other cultural contexts from Beijing Opera to popular television serials and films.

Guandi, God of War, derives from Guan Yu, a general of the state of Shu, portrayed in Romance of the Three Kingdoms. This novel was based on historical figures from the Three Kingdoms Era (AD 220–80). A symbol for justice, honesty, and integrity, his figurines are found in temples throughout China.

Journey to the West is a comic fantasy based on the pilgrimage to India of the Buddhist monk Xuanzang (see p487). The late Ming novel centers on Monkey, one of the monk's companions who represents carefree genius, bravery, and loyalty.

DREAM OF THE RED CHAMBER

Perhaps the greatest Chinese novel, this portrays the decline of an aristocratic Qing household. Infused with a Daoist sense of transcendence, it focuses on the life and loves of the idle Baoyu and twelve perceptively drawn female characters.

20TH CENTURY

In the early 20th century, fiction writers and playwrights addressed social issues in a new realist style. However Communism demanded revolutionary themes. After the persecution of writers during the Cultural Revolution (see pp64–5), experimental forms and styles gradually emerged. However, the books of Chinese authors may still be banned if they are openly critical of the government or are “spiritual pollutants”; nevertheless pirated versions are often widely available.

Mo Yan is a post-Cultural Revolution fiction writer. Best known for his novel Red Sorghum (1986), made into a major film, he writes in a rich style, often graphic, fantastic, and violent.

Lu Xun, early 20th-century writer of short stories and novellas, is known as the father of modern Chinese literature. His realist, satirical style is indebted to such writers as Dickens. He is renowned for his humorous depiction of Ab Q, an illiterate but enthusiastic peasant, done down by the forces of convention.

Religion and Philosophy

TRADITIONALLY, THE THREE STRANDS in Chinese religion and philosophy are Confucianism, Daoism, and Buddhism. An eclectic approach to religion allows the three to co-exist, often within a single temple. Confucianism, the first to gain real influence, can be seen as a manifestation of the public, socially responsible self. Daoism represents a personal and wilder side; its emphasis on the relativity of things contrasts with Confucian concern for approved roles. Buddhism, a foreign import, is spiritual and other-worldly, offering an alternative to Chinese pragmatism. During the Cultural Revolution religion was outlawed as contrary to Communist ideas. Today, people are largely able to express their beliefs.

Laozi, Buddha, and Confucius

CONFUCIANISM

Originated by Confucius (551–479 BC) and developed by later thinkers, Confucianism advocates a structured society in which people are bound to each other by the moral ties of the five familial relationships: parent-child, ruler-subject, brother-brother, husband-wife, and friend-friend. In Imperial China, Confucianism was the philosophy of the elite scholar-gentleman class. For much of the Communist era, it was reviled as a reactionary philosophy linked to the former ruling aristocracy.

Filial piety, or xiao, another Confucian precept, consists of obedience to and reverence for one's parents, and by extension respect for other family members and one's ruler.

The paying of respects to one's ancestors is based on filial piety and runs throughout Chinese culture. During the Qing Ming festival, in April, Chinese traditionally clean and upkeep their ancestors' tombs.

Confucius (see p143) was a thinker and teacher whose philosophy of family obligations and good government is based on the principles of ren (benevolence) and yi (righteousness). He died unknown, his disciples spreading his teachings.

The birth of Confucius is celebrated in the philosopher's home town of Qufu (see pp142–3) in late September. His once politically powerful family, who bear the surname Kong, still live there.

Scholars collated the Confucian Classics including the Lunyu (Analects), a series of Confucius's sayings, well after his death. The Classics were the basis of education until 1912.

DAOISM

Strongly linked with early folk beliefs, Daoism incorporates the traditional concepts of an ordered universe, yin and yang, and directed energy, qi (see pp32–3). Over time, Daoism developed into a complex religion with an extensive pantheon. Daoist philosophy encourages following one's intuition; of following the grain of the universe by living in accordance with the Dao.

Laozi, the founder of Daoism, is a shadowy figure, who may have lived in the 6th century BC. The Daode Jing, which introduces the idea of Dao or the Way that permeates reality, is attributed to him.

Han Xiangzi, one of the Eight Immortals, a popular group of Daoist adepts, is believed to have fallen from a sacred peach tree, which bestowed eternal life. He is usually shown playing a flute.

Daoist alchemists aimed to find an elixir for eternal life, winning influence with emperors. Daoist influenced scientific development, and alchemists accidentally discovered gunpowder in AD 600.

In "Peach Blossom Spring" by Daoist poet Tao Qian, a fisherman chances upon a lost idyllic world and encounters Immortals. Daoist reverence for nature led to the creation of numerous paradises.

BUDDHISM

In China the Mahayana school of Buddhism, which promises salvation to anyone who seeks it, is followed (see p487 and pp522–3). Enlightened ones, bodhisattvas, remain in this world to help enlighten others. Through deeds and devotion believers gain merit and maintain their connections with the bodhisattvas, bringing them closer to nirvana.

The Laughing Buddha, or Milefo, is an adaptation of the Maitreya, the Future Buddha. His large belly and laughing face are signs of abundance and he is worshiped in the hopes of a happy, affluent life.

The Guardian King of the South (left) is coiled by a snake; the King of the North holds a parasol. Kings of the four directions guard the entrance to many temples protecting the main deity from evil influences.

Luohans or arhats are the Buddha's disciples and often appear in temples in groups of 18. Their holiness is thought to enable them to achieve extinction (nirvana) on death.

A Buddhist supplicant burns sticks of incense in aid of prayer. Buddhist temples throb with spiritual energy, as worshippers pray and make offerings to gain merit.

The Power of Qi

THE CHINESE PHILOSOPHICAL notion of a cosmic qi or breath that permeates the universe dates from the Shang and Zhou periods. Qi is regarded as having created the cosmos and the Earth, and given rise to the complementary opposing negative and positive forces of yin and yang. Every physical change that occurs in the world is seen as a product of the working of qi. In the Daoist Daode Jing, qi is synonymous with Dao ("the Way"). The qi character (right) represents a bowl of rice with steam, where the rice's power or qi is manifested, rising above. The concept of qi runs through all areas of Chinese thought: it is a guiding principle in both traditional science and the arts.

Chinese character for qi, resembling a steaming bowl of rice

HARNESSING Qi

Qi informs multiple practical and applied fields. When Chinese medicine became formalized during the 2nd century BC, for example, qi was established as its central concept. It was seen as the vital substance of living things, circulating in the body through a network of channels or meridians (see p232).

Acupressure and acupuncture rely on the idea of qi circulating in the body. A person may suffer from inadequate or excessive qi, and the aim is to release or dampen the qi as appropriate.

The sun trigram is very yin. Its attributes are devotion and reception and it is connected to the element of earth.

Qigong, a practice entailing deep-breathing exercises, is based on the concept of qi. Daoists traditionally associated lengthening the breath with lengthening life. Today, qigong is used to enhance well-being.

Martial arts emphasize the cultivation of qi. Through concentration, practitioners, such as monks of the Shaolin Monastery, perform extraordinary feats of fitness and endurance.

A feng shui practitioner sets up a bagua chart and other instruments to trace the flow of qi within an office building. Feng shui is popular in Hong Kong, where it is less frowned on as a superstitious practice.

FENG SHUI

Chinese geomancy, or feng shui ("wind and water"), is based on ideas of qi. Feng shui posits that the appropriate layout of a building or room, for example the position of doorways, affects the flow of qi and hence the inhabitants' general well-being.

The Ming Tombs (see pp104–5), constructed for the Ming emperors, were sited and built in accordance with feng shui. Evil influences from the north were supposedly ward off by the Jundu Shan mountain range.

The HSBC building on Hong Kong's Statue Square (see p310) is thought to enjoy outstanding feng shui, with barbor views and a large atrium allowing the free flow of qi.

The qian trigram, the trigram in which yang qi is strongest, consists of three unbroken lines.

The yin-yang symbol, represents the interdependency of yin (negative) and yang (positive).

YIJING

The Chinese classic, the Yijing (I Ching), or Book of Changes, has been consulted as a divination guide book for thousands of years. In it the bagua are combined into 64 hexagrams of six yin or yang lines each. The hexagrams represent even more complex states of qi than the bagua.

Confucius, in his later years, became very interested in the Yijing, and wrote numerous annotations to the text. Here he randomly divides yarrow sticks to create hexagrams and consults the Yijing to determine their meaning.

BAGUA CHART

Eight bagua, or trigrams, ranged around a yin-yang symbol make up the basic bagua chart, an attempt to codify the working of qi. Each trigram consists of three lines – yin (broken) or yang (unbroken). Together they make up all possible permutations of such sets of lines and describe potential movement between different qi states.

Divination sticks are often consulted nowadays to divine the future. Outside temples in Hong Kong, worshippers can be seen scattering the sticks on the ground. A practiced diviner reads the pattern by picking out bagua shapes.

Architecture

Tiled imperial dragon

FOR OVER TWO THOUSAND YEARS, the Chinese have used the same architectural model for both imperial and religious buildings. This has three elements: a platform, post-and-beam timber frames, and non-loadbearing walls. Standard features of building complexes include a front gate, four-sided enclosures or courtyards, and a series of halls in a linear formation running north. Most Chinese buildings were built of wood, but because wooden buildings tend to catch fire, only a few structures remain; the earliest date from the Tang period.

Aerial view of the Forbidden City, showing the traditional linear layout

HALL

IN EVERY CONTEXT, the Chinese hall or tang follows the same pattern: a platform of rammed earth or stone, and timber columns arranged in a grid. The front of the hall always has an odd number of bays. Between the columns and beams are brackets (dougong), cantilevers that support the structure, allowing the eaves to overhang. The timber is brightly painted, the roof aesthetically curved, and tiled or thatched.

Gate of Heavenly Purity (see pp86–7)
An archetypal Chinese hall, the central doorway and uneven number of bays emphasize the processional element.

Base gives monumentality

Bay, or space between columns

Standard Hall

Buildings in China conformed to a set of rules about proportions. This uniform architecture created a sense of identity – useful in a large and disparate country.

STORIED BUILDING (Lou) AND STORIED PAVILION (Ge)

MULTI-STORY BUILDINGS IN CHINA predate pagodas and varied from two-storied private homes to huge seven- or more story towers built to enjoy the scenery. Storied pavilions were used for storage and had doors and windows only at the front.

Both types of buildings kept the standard elements of base, columns and hanging walls.

Storied Pavilion

These were used for storing important items – libraries of Buddhist sutras or colossal statues like at Puning Si, Chengde (see pp124–5).

Characteristic "flying eave"

Storied Building

The construction of tall buildings like the Yellow Crane Tower in Wuhan (see p266) relied heavily on the dougong bracket.

Symmetrical façade

PAGODA

BASED ON THE INDIAN STUPA, the Chinese pagoda, or ta, was developed in the first century AD along with the arrival of Buddhism. Multi-storied pagodas appeared in Buddhist temple complexes (although later they often stood on their own) and were often intended to house a religious statue. They were built of brick, stone, or wood (see p165).

ORNAMENTAL ARCHWAY

THE PAILOU, or paifang, is a memorial or decorative archway. Made of wood, brick or stone, and sometimes with glazed tiles, it often bears an edifying inscription. Pailou were erected at crossroads, temples, bridges, government offices, parks, and tombs.

Ornamental, multi-sectioned roof

Inscription typically four characters

CITY WALLS

EARLY DEFENSIVE WALLS, like other early architectural forms, were made of earth – either pounded hard by pestles or moistened to make a clay and pressed around reed frames. Later walls were often built using brick. City walls were traditionally square, with the main gate to the south. The Chinese for “city (cheng) also means “wall.”

Easy to defend with a bow

Gate tower, often a two-story lou

City wall and gate

The towers on top of walls can vary from small buildings to palatial multi-story structures.

Pingyao City Wall

Made of rammed earth and brick, rising 33 ft (10 m) high, the ramparts and watchtowers were an effective defense. The current structure, part of which has recently collapsed, is Ming.

ARCHITECTURAL DETAILS

IT IS INTERESTING TO INTERPRET the architectural detail on Chinese buildings. The use of yellow tiles, for example, was reserved for the emperor. The Nine-Dragon Screen, which occurs in the Forbidden City and elsewhere, is also imperial since the dragon symbolizes the yang, or male principle, and by extension the emperor.

Chiwen

Able to douse flames with water, the Chiwen often appears at the end of a roof ridge (see p87) as a protection against fire.

Dougong

A bracket (dougong), transmits the load from roof to column. A traditionally complex, nailfree, and ornamental construction method.

Chinese Inventions

Pocket compass

PRINTED BOOKS, PORCELAIN, silk, umbrellas and kites are just a few of the everyday objects that originated in China and are used today throughout the world. Remarkably, the Chinese developed the technology to produce fine porcelain over 1,000 before Europe. Philosophy played a part in two of the most famous Chinese discoveries. Seeking the elixir of life, Daoist alchemists stumbled upon gunpowder, while the magnetic compass was developed from an instrument used for geomancy and feng shui.

Cast iron: made by lowering the ore's melting point with phosphorus before beating it in very hot blast furnaces that had been developed over hundreds of years of firing pottery.

The decimal system developed alongside the writing system and led to mathematical advances.

The first paper was made from mulberry bark, bamboo, hemp, linen, and silk.

The crossbow had better range, penetration, and accuracy than the standard bow.

Wheelbarrow: used in agriculture, industry, and by the military. Like the plow, it vastly increased the efficiency of manual workers.

2000	1800	1600	1400	1200	1000	800	600	400	200
BC									BC
2000	1800	1600	1400	1200	1000	800	600	400	200

High-fired stoneware: first produced in the Shang dynasty, at the same time as the early glazes that added strength color, and waterproofing.

Kuan or moldboard plow: increased the efficiency of farmers. A cast-iron blade could cut through and plow previously unplowable land.

GREAT LEAPS FORWARD

Early advances in technology spawned an agricultural revolution in China. Iron-bladed plows increased the amount of land that could be farmed and multiplied its productivity, enabling a larger population to be sustained. Paper, paper money, and printing were key to the efficient administration of a vast populous, centrally controlled state. Increased manpower, organization, and technology advanced industrial production in mining and porcelain factories, for example, as well as boosting China's military might.

Magnetic compass: used for geomancy, the first compasses consisted of a loadstone spoon and bronze plate. Later examples would help Chinese sailors make huge voyages on trading trips.

Porcelain: ceramic technology reached a new peak in the 6th century with the discovery of “true” porcelain; hard, white and translucent, it rings to the touch. Production methods would stay a closely guarded secret, keeping its value for export (see p254).

Stirrup: this increased the efficiency of horses as tools for communication, transportation, and warfare.

Printing: woodblock printing was used to spread Buddhist teachings, and was well-developed by the time of the Diamond Sutra (see p26). In 1041–8, Bi Sheng carved individual characters on pieces of clay, inventing movable block type.

PRINTING

The discovery of movable type did not really impact upon Chinese society, and most printers continued to carve the individual characters into a block. In Europe 400 years later, however, the discovery of movable type revolutionized society. This is because it is much easier to handle the 26 or so different blocks in a Roman alphabet than the around 3,000 or more characters needed for a Chinese newspaper – not even allowing for duplicates. Woodblock carving therefore required far fewer resources.

200	400	600	800	1000	1200	1400	1600	1800	2000
-----	-----	-----	-----	------	------	------	------	------	------

AD

AD

200	400	600	800	1000	1200	1400	1600	1800	2000
-----	-----	-----	-----	------	------	------	------	------	------

Paper money: developed by merchants as certificates of exchange. Lighter than coins, bills were soon adopted by the government.

Gun powder: first discovered by necromancers. It was originally used for fireworks and mining and not for warfare until the 8th century.

Seismometer: invented by Chang Heng. It identified the direction of an earthquake when a ball fell from one of the dragons into a frog's mouth.

Cargo ship: designed with compartments, and equipped with fore-and-aft lugsails and stern-post rudders, these multi-masted ships were larger and technically superior to their European counterparts.

The abacus: invented during the Yuan dynasty. Because it is able to perform complex calculations, it is often referred to as the first computer and is still used in China today.

Traditional Arts

Funerary bronze bell

THE EARLIEST CHINESE artifacts were found in royal tombs. These include bronzes, ceramics, and jades from the Shang and Zhou period, as well as terracotta warriors from the Qin period. Of the many rich art forms that subsequently developed in China, painting and pottery are perhaps the most important, and have reached the highest aesthetic level. Other significant art forms include sculpture, notably the Buddhist sculpture of Western China. There are also many distinctive and popular forms of Chinese decorative art.

Buddhist sculpture in the Gandharan style (see p133)

Ritual bronze tripod from an early royal tomb, decorated with a mythical animal design known as a taotie.

Wet and dry ink used to give the detail of the trees.

Textured strokes give the rocks depth.

POTTERY

Since inventing porcelain, China developed a huge range of potting, decorating, and glazing techniques that were imitated from Europe to Japan. Chinese ceramics led the world in aesthetic taste and technique up until the demise of the Qing dynasty.

Tang earthenware tomb figure representing a fierce warrior, with typical rough sancai (three-color) drip glaze. This was a lead-based glaze, fired at a low temperature.

Song celadon bowl, with incised floral design. Celadon was the European name given to the refined gray-green glaze of this type of stoneware and porcelain.

Ming vase in the blue-and-white style known and imitated internationally. The technique involves underglaze painting in cobalt blue before the pot is fired.

Qing famille-rose vase, a delicate porcelain in a distinctive palette. The name comes from the use of bright pink enamel.

Bird-and-flower painting (including the depiction of fruit and insect) reveals the Chinese Daoist interest in observing the natural world. Despite the lightness of subject, the paintings have an intense, quasi-scientific depth.

CHINESE PAINTING

Considered the highest traditional art form, Chinese painting is executed on silk or paper using a brush and inks or watercolors. Landscape painting, associated with the scholar class, reached a highpoint in the Northern Song and Yuan periods. Huang Gongwang (see below), a master of the Yuan, was admired for his simple calligraphic style.

Religious Painting first appeared along the Silk Road with the arrival of Buddhism from India. The Chinese soon developed an individual style.

Ink wash is used for the hills in the distance.

Bamboo painting was a genre of the scholar class. Bamboo symbolised the scholar-gentleman who would bend but not break in the face of adversity.

TRADITIONAL CRAFTS

As well as the traditional high art forms of painting and pottery, China has a wealth of beautiful decorative arts. Delicate carvings in lacquer, ivory and jade are popular, as are colorful cloisonné items, decorated inksticks (or cakes), snuff bottles and fans.

Snuff bottles were produced in large numbers during the Qing period. Made of glass, jade, mother-of-pearl or semi-precious stones, they were delicately carved or painted on the inside in exquisite detail.

Lacquer carving is distinctive for its deep red color and floral designs, and is often used on boxes.

Cloisonné is a style of enameling. Individual metal cloisons, usually made of copper, are soldered together and inlaid with different colored enamels. The object is then fired and polished.

Modern Arts

THE BIRTH OF MODERN ART in China at the start of the 20th century coincided with greater contact with the West. Experiments with new materials and styles in the visual arts, Western-style music, “spoken drama” (buaju), cinema, and modern literary forms such as free verse all took root at this time. However, after 1949, this creativity was stifled by Soviet-influenced Socialist Realism. During the Cultural Revolution many artists were even persecuted on the grounds that their works were “reactionary.” Since the 1980s and 1990s, however, there has been some liberalization in the arts and new, exciting forms have developed.

Oriental Pearl TV Tower, Pudong, Shanghai is the epitome of China's high-rise architecture boom since the early 1990s.

This example of performance art is by Cang Xin, a Beijing-based conceptual artist, active since the mid-1990s. The title of this piece, Unification of Heaven and Man, alludes to classical Chinese philosophical concepts.

Shaven-headed man

MODERN ART

This painting, Series 2 No. 2, is by Fang Lijun, leader of the Cynical Realism school which came about as a reaction to the demise of the pro-democracy movement in 1989. Rejecting idealism, these artists make fun of the problems of life in China.

Sculpture entitled Torso, by Zhan Wang, a Shanghai-based conceptual artist. Zhan uses reflective steel sheets to give the illusion of solidity.

Orchestral and chamber music has been popular in China since the early 20th century. Today, there are many schools specializing in Western-style music, and several high-quality ensembles and artists on the world scene.

CHINESE CINEMA

From early classics such as Street Angel (1937), made in the (then) foreign enclave of Shanghai, Chinese cinema has scaled new heights of international success, with the work of such acclaimed directors as Zhang Yimou.

Farewell My Concubine (1993), directed by Chen Kaige, a Post-Cultural Revolution filmmaker, who evoked new moral uncertainties, is set in the world of traditional Chinese opera.

The Hong Kong film industry followed its own path and became primarily famous for its action movies. Renowned martial arts star Jackie Chan, seen above in an early acting and directorial debut, Fearless Hyena, made many films and successfully crossed over from Hong Kong to Hollywood.

Background is a hazy blue, making it appear dream-like

Wei Wei is the bestselling pop star in China today. Rock music only took off in the 1980s: Cui Jian, the "granddad" of Chinese rock still performs but is seen as a rebel by the authorities. Hong Kong's less controversial Cantopop singers, in contrast, have had more freedom.

Anonymous figures seem threatening

Main figure is yelling or yawning – is he angry or just bored?

Ballet in contemporary China mixes traditional Chinese and Western influences. Here, the ballet version of Zhang Yimou's film Raise the Red Lantern is performed by members of the National Ballet.

Modern theater provides an expression of Chinese life in the 21st century. Here, a scene from Toilet (2004), a black comedy, is performed by the National Theater company in Beijing. The play broke taboos with its frank portrayal of urban life and treatment of homosexuality.

Festivals

AN IMPORTANT PART of Chinese culture and tradition, festivals are generally happy and colorful affairs that reaffirm ancient beliefs and customs. The biggest and most important festival is Spring Festival, or Chinese New Year. This brings families together for several days: the home is cleaned and everyone dresses up in new clothes; decorations are put up and gifts exchanged; and finally there is always time for a lively and noisy carnival climaxing in a brilliant display of pyrotechnics. Nearly all the festival elements and rituals are geared towards bringing good luck and prosperity. In business, all debts should be settled by Chinese New Year. Overall, the festivities last about 15 days but the whole country closes down for only four.

Hongbao

These decorative red envelopes symbolize luck and wealth and bring about bob as they contain money – they are typically given to children on New Year's Eve.

Lion Dance

Performed at New Year and other festivals. Usually two people are required to play the lion. The dance demands more martial arts skills than the Dragon Dance, also performed on these occasions.

Fireworks exploding over Hong Kong's Victoria Harbour

Firecrackers

Strings of firecrackers are set off at New Year making the streets noisy and, potentially, dangerous places. Beijing tried to ban these in the center of the city supposedly driving people out to the suburbs for noisy fun.

Drummers

At the Spring Festival, processions of dancers and drummers march over the New Year period up until the Lantern Festival. Like the firecrackers, the noise of the drumming is supposed to keep the evil spirits away.

A type of mooncake

(sticky rice pyramids wrapped in bamboo leaves) are served at the Dragon Boat Festival. The Mid-Autumn Festival, which falls on a full moon, brings mooncakes. Made to a thousand recipes with savory or sweet fillings, the cake symbolizes the moon.

FESTIVAL FOOD

Each festival has its special food: jiaozi (boiled dumplings) are usually eaten for New Year especially in the North of China; yuanxiao (glutinous rice balls) feature during the Lantern Festival and can be made with a sweet or savory filling; and zongzi

Rice pyramids or zongzi

Traditional papercut of an astrological chart

CHINESE ASTROLOGY

Each year is associated with one of twelve animal signs, which repeat in a cycle. At New Year people talk of welcoming, for example, the "Year of the Dog." In Chinese astrology, people born under a specific animal sign are supposed to have some of the characteristics attributed to the animal.

Rooster 2005 and then 2017 has 5 virtues: refinement, courage, assertiveness, benevolence, and reliability.

Dog 2006, considered lucky in Chinese mythology.

Pig 2007, associated with fertility and virility.

Rat 2008, welcomed as a clever protector and bringer of wealth.

Ox 2009, Laozi, the Daoist philosopher, is often shown sitting on an ox.

Tiger 2010, in China he is deemed the king of the animals.

Rabbit 2011, associated with longevity and believed to live in the moon.

Dragon 2012, symbol of China, the emperor, and the positive Yang element (see pp32-3).

Snake 2013, an ancient ancestor, Fuxi, was thought to be half-human and half-snake.

Horse 2014, symbol of freedom.

Sheep 2015, signifying peace and creativity.

Monkey 2016, associated with fun and genius, as in the story of the Monkey King.

SPECTACULAR FIREWORKS

New Year would not be complete without fireworks. Some major cities put on impressive all-night displays. Fireworks were originally intended to ward off evil spirits, or perhaps wake up the dragon who would create rain in the coming year and guarantee a good harvest.

Colorful lanterns

Coinciding with the full moon, the Lantern Festival marks the end of the two-week New Year period. Lanterns may bear auspicious characters or be in animal shapes.

Tangerines

A New Year symbol of luck, tangerines are put on display at home – along with fresh flowers. The word for "tangerine" sounds like "luck" in Chinese while flowers signify a new beginning.

Duilian

These red scrolls at either side of the doorway bear Spring Couplets in classical Chinese expressing good wishes for the family in the coming year.

CHINA THROUGH THE YEAR

THE TRADITIONAL Chinese festivals are tied to the lunar calendar, which has 29.5 days a month, and this means the solar dates change every year. Festivals associated with Communism – National Day and Labor Day, for example – are usually fixed to the Western calendar. Religious festivals, kept alive in Hong Kong, Tibet, and other areas of the Chinese-speaking world, are gradually making a comeback in the

A red lantern – lucky symbol

People's Republic of China (PRC), and outlying areas such as Inner Mongolia have their own distinctive festivals. Some celebrations of foreign origin such as Christmas are also observed. Before the important New Year Festival, there are weeks of preparation. Most offices and shops are closed for three days, but many tend to take a week-long break at this time. As most Chinese return to their family home, travel is very difficult.

Colorful parade celebrating Chinese New Year

SPRING (FEB–APR)

THIS IS THE TIME of year when Chinese people try to settle old debts and make time to meet with friends and family members. The arrival of peach blossom is a signal of rejuvenation and the Spring Festival celebrates the start of the ancient cycle of plowing and sowing.

1ST LUNAR MONTH

Spring Festival (Chun Jie)

The main festival – Chinese New Year (see pp42–3). Gifts and red envelopes filled with money are exchanged and new shoes and clothes worn.

Lantern Festival (Feb–Mar)

Coinciding with a full moon, this festival marks the end of the fifteen-day New Year period. A great many lanterns bearing auspicious characters or in animal shapes can be seen. Yuanxiao (sticky rice balls) are eaten.

2ND LUNAR MONTH

Tibetan New Year Tibetan New Year is marked by the eating of “barley crumb”

A highly elaborate Tibetan butter sculpture food and an exchange of Tashi Delek blessings. It is followed by Monlam, the great prayer festival later in the month, and the butter lamp festival.

Hong Kong Arts Festival

(Feb/Mar) A major international arts festival as well as the premier arts event in Hong Kong. A mix of overseas and local artists provide music, theater, dance, popular entertainment, film and exhibition programs over three or four weeks.

International Women's

Day (Mar 8) Women have a half or even a whole day's holiday, while men continue to work.

3RD LUNAR MONTH

Tree-planting Day (Apr 1)

Promoted since the late 1970s by the reformist government, but not an official holiday, this is part of a greening campaign.

Weifang International Kite

Festival (Apr) Flying kites is part of Qingming celebrations. Over 1,000 contestants compete at this festival in Shandong.

Water Sprinkling Festival

(mid-Apr) Exclusive to the Dai people (Xishuangbanna, Yunnan, see p383). Marks the Dai lunar New Year, and involves blessing others by sprinkling or splashing them with water, which represents the quelling of the flames of a mythical tyrant demon.

Qing Ming Festival, sweeping or tending the ancestors' graves

Qing Ming Festival (Apr)

Festival for sweeping the graves and honoring the dead. Food is left on the grave and families often take a picnic with them.

Hainan Coconut Festival

(Apr) Only set up since 1992 and a showcase for the local coconut harvest.

Third Moon Fair (Apr) Dali area. This festival is exclusive to the Buddhist Bai minority in Yunnan. Events include fairs, horse-racing, singing, and dancing.

Tin Hau Festival (Apr-May)

Celebrated in Hong Kong and coastal areas such as Fujian, the birthday of the Heavenly Queen or Mazu (see p149), who looks after those at sea, is important for fishermen and sailors.

SUMMER (MAY-JUL)

ONCE THE SUMMER arrives, festivals are often held outdoors. May sees the start of the traveling season as many people go on trips around the country to see family and friends.

4TH LUNAR MONTH

International Labor Day

(May 1) A week-long holiday around May Day during which travel can be difficult.

Youth Day (May 4)

Commemorates the student movements of 1919, which sparked the evolution of modern China.

Buddha's Birthday An important religious festival in Tibet but not officially observed in the PRC, though Buddhists may now do so privately. The festival has a higher profile in Hong Kong, where it is also known as the Festival of the Ten Thousand Buddhas. Buddhists pray for the washing away of sin and the attainment of wisdom and peace.

"Meet in Beijing" Festival

(May) International music and arts festival, including opera, dance, instrumental and vocal concerts.

5TH LUNAR MONTH

Children's Day (Jun 1)

Cinemas and other places of entertainment are free to children, who are also showered with presents.

Dragon Boat Festival (or Fifth Moon Festival) (Jun)

commemorates the patriotic poet Qu Yuan who drowned himself. Originally religious but now just fun. Teams of rowers compete in long, decorated boats. Rice cakes (zongzi) are eaten. Hong Kong has several very colorful events, one with international teams.

Shanghai International

Film Festival (Jun)

First held in October 1993, this is the only accredited A Category international film festival in mainland China.

Dragon Boat Festival – colorful, lively, and exciting to watch

Nadaam Fair, Mongolian sports festival and fair

6TH LUNAR MONTH

Founding of Chinese Communist Party (Jul 1)

A day to mark the event that took place in 1921 in Shanghai.

AUTUMN (AUG–OCT)

THE WEATHER MAY still be warm in the sub-tropical south, but in the high uplands and central areas it is cooling down. As the leaves turn golden, this is a popular time of the year to travel to festivals.

7TH LUNAR MONTH

Army Day (Aug 1) Marks the first Communist uprising against the Nationalists in 1927. The theme is unity between the army and the people.

Lovers' Festival (Aug) A romantic day, this celebrates the story of the earthly cowherd and celestial weaving girl who were separated by the gods but who are annually reunited in the heavens by a bridge of magpies on the seventh day of the seventh moon. It is also known as Seven Sisters Festival.

Shoton (Yoghurt festival) (Aug/Sep) Tibetan festival of opera. Takes its name from the yoghurt served by pilgrims to the monks.

Nadaam Fair (Aug) (Inner Mongolia) Held in Hohhot, Bayanbulak and elsewhere, Inner Mongolia. Horse-racing, wrestling and archery. Women wear their traditional dress. It's also a trading fair.

Nakchu Horse Race

Festival (Tibet) (Aug) The most important folk festival in Tibet. This takes place in Nakchu. Over a thousand herdsmen then compete in the traditional Tibetan sports of archery horse-racing, and general horsemanship.

Zhongyuan (Hungry Ghost Festival)

Similar to Halloween, a traditional festival combining elements of ancestor worship and Buddhism, suppressed under Communism. Considered an inauspicious time to move house or marry.

Qingdao International Beer Festival (Aug) Held in the eastern port city of Qingdao, Shandong, home of Tsingtao Beer, brewed from the spring waters of nearby Lao Shan (see p146).

8TH LUNAR MONTH

Teachers' Day (Sep 1) Not an established holiday, but it began in the 1980s in response to the anti-intellectualism of the Cultural Revolution.

Mid-Autumn Festival or Zhong Qiu (Sep) Harvest or moon festival when moon cakes are eaten throughout the country and family reunions take place (see p43).

Shaolin International Martial Arts Festival (Sep)

Annual event since 1991 in the city of Zhengzhou.

Confucius' Birthday (Sep 28)

Gradually regaining popularity in the PRC, after vilification of the sage (born in 551BC) under the Communist regime. The day is celebrated at the Confucian temples in Qufu, Beijing and elsewhere.

International Fashion Festival (mid-Sep) Dalian. Two weeks of fashion shows by Asian designers, with a spectacular opening parade.

Mid-Autumn festival dragon

Qingdao International Beer Festival dancers

National day, well-drilled troops on the march

9TH LUNAR MONTH

National Day (Oct 1) A great rush of holiday-making takes place during this week-long break. Parades celebrate the founding of the PRC in 1949.

Double-ninth (Chongyang Festival) (Oct) Double nine signifies double yang (in the yin-yang duality), connected with male assertiveness and strength. Traditionally, people do symbolic things like climb to high places, carry a sprig of dogwood, and drink chrysanthemum wine to drive away evil spirits at this festival, though it's not observed everywhere.

WINTER (NOV–JAN)

THIS SEASON BRINGS a drop in temperatures and relief from the humidity in the south, while central and northern regions usually experience bitter winters. The main traveling season is over but everyone enjoys the lengthy preparations for the Chinese New Year at home.

10TH LUNAR MONTH

Zhuang Song Festival (Nov) The Zhuang minority in Guangxi have their own distinctive folk-song and dance tradition. Since 1999 an International Folk Song and Arts Festival has been held in Nanning.

11TH LUNAR MONTH

Winter Solstice Chinese astronomers identified this day as early as the Han period. Historically, it has been an important festival, though less so now. In the north, people often eat dumpling soup or dumplings on this day to keep them warm. In the south, people may eat red-bean and sticky rice to drive away evil spirits.

Christmas Day (Dec 25)

Although only a tiny number of the population is Christian, the commercial side of this celebration has taken off with Christmas trees and Shengdan Laoren, a Chinese version of Father Christmas, seen as a popular image. It's a public holiday in Hong Kong.

12TH LUNAR MONTH

Corban Festival (Dec/Jan) Celebrated in Xinjiang, Ningxia, and among Hui people across China, this is a Muslim festival remembering Abraham's last-minute reprieve to sacrifice a goat instead of his son. Animals are slaughtered for a feast, with singing and dancing.

New Year's Day (Jan 1) Overshadowed by the massive Chinese New Year celebrations that take place later in January or February, but it is still a recognized public holiday.

PUBLIC HOLIDAYS

New Year's Day (Jan 1)
Chinese New Year or Spring Festival Jan 28–30 (2006); February 8–10 (2007)

International Labor Day (May 1–3)

National Day (Oct 1–3)

Weekend Shifting

The weekends (Sat, Sun) before and after the May and October holidays are often shifted from year to year toward the 3-day block to allow for a continuous run of 7 days' holiday. To add to the confusion for visitors, the exact days of the holiday are usually not finalized until shortly beforehand. You may wish to avoid traveling during this period because many facilities are closed and domestic travel can be very difficult. It is best to try and confirm the exact dates with a travel agent beforehand.

The Climate of China

WITH MANY DIFFERENT CLIMATE ZONES across its vast landmass, China experiences all extremes of weather ranging from the hot, wet summers and warm winters of the sub-tropical southwestern coast and high temperatures of the Turpan Depression to the cool summers and long, dry winters of its mountainous regions. Rainfall is sparse in the arid northern uplands and the near-Siberian northeast but plentiful in the humid south and east.

The top of Hua Shan, Shaanxi

KEY

- Hot wet summer, warm dry winter
- Warm summer, cool winter
- Hot wet summer, cool dry winter
- Hot wet summer, cool misty winter
- Cool dry summer, cold windy winter
- Hot wet summer, cold dry winter
- Warm summer, cold dry winter
- Hot dry summer, long cold dry and windy winter

Average monthly maximum temperature

Average monthly minimum temperature

Freezing point

Average daily hours of sunshine

Average monthly rainfall

THE HISTORY OF CHINA

CHINA BOASTS one of the longest single unified civilizations in the world. Its history is characterized by dramatic shifts in power between rival factions, periods of peace and prosperity when foreign ideas were assimilated and absorbed, the disintegration of empire through corruption and political subterfuge, and the cyclical rise of ambitious leaders to found each new empire.

FIRST SETTLERS

From around 8000 BC, settlements of populations based on a primitive agricultural economy began to emerge in the eastern coastal regions and along the rich river deltas of the Yellow River, the Yangzi, and the Wei. These civilizations focused on hunting, gathering, and fishing, and the cultivation of millet in the north and rice in the south. Each civilization is notable for its own distinct style of pottery, such as the bold earthenware of the Yangshao (5000–3000 BC) and the black ceramics of the Longshan (3000–1700 BC).

Yangshao pottery amphora

Elaborate bronze food and wine vessels were used both for banqueting and for making ancestral offerings. Inscriptions on oracle bones provide the first evidence of writing dating from around 1300 BC.

In 1066 BC, the Zhou seized power, establishing their western capital at present-day Xi'an. The Western Zhou initially sustained many of the traditions of the Shang, but later reorganized the political system, and replaced the use of oracle bones with inscriptions on bronze and, later, writing on silk and strips of bamboo.

The Eastern Zhou (771–221 BC) is divided into the Spring and Autumn period (771–475 BC) and the Warring States period (475–221 BC). The Eastern Zhou period was dominated by political conflict and social unrest, as rival factions jockeyed for power. It also saw economic expansion and development as the use of iron revolutionized agriculture. It was in this climate of unrest that the philosophical ideologies of Confucianism, Daoism, and Legalism emerged.

BRONZE AGE CHINA AND THE FIRST KINGDOMS

The first dynasty in China was founded by the Shang around 1600 BC. The Shang lived in large, complex societies and were the first to mass-produce cast bronze. Power centered on the ruling elite who acted as shamans of a sort, communicating with their ancestors and gods through diviners.

TIMELINE

8000–6500 BC Neolithic period	5000–3000 BC Yangshao culture based around the Wei river	2200–1600 BC Existence of semi-mythical first dynasty, the Xia	1300 BC First writing on oracle bones	c. 551–479 BC Life of Confucius	475–221 BC Eastern Zhou: Warring States
8000 BC	6000 BC	4000 BC	2000 BC	1000 BC	500 BC
6500–5000 BC Earliest settlements in northern China		1600–1050 BC Foundation of Shang dynasty		771–476 BC Eastern Zhou: Spring and Autumn period
Bronze food vessel, Shang		1066–771 BC Power seized by Zhou		513 BC First mention of iron casting

Dynasty Timeline

CHINA WAS RULED by a succession of dynasties, broken by periods of fragmentation and civil war. The emperor's authority was divinely assigned through a mandate of heaven and was thus unlimited. Leaders of succeeding dynasties claimed that the previous leadership had displeased the gods and had therefore had its heavenly mandate withdrawn.

SHANG DYNASTY

1600–1050 BC

The Shang dynasty marked the emergence of Bronze Age China and palace culture. A semi-divine king acted as a shaman and communicated with the gods.

Bronze tripod food vessel, Shang

WESTERN HAN

206 BC–AD 9

Gaodi	206–195 BC
Huidi	195–188 BC
Lu Hou	188–180 BC
Wendi	180–157 BC
Jingdi	157–141 BC
Wudi	141–87 BC
Zhaodi	87–74 BC
Xuandi	74–49 BC
Yuandi	49–33 BC
Chengdi	33–7 BC
Aidi	7–1 BC
Pingdi	1BC–AD 6
Ruzi	AD 7–9

Broken terracotta beads found at Jingdi's tomb

EASTERN HAN

AD 25–220

Guang Wudi	25–57	Chongdi	144–145
Mingdi	57–75	Zhidi	145–146
Zhangdi	75–88	Huandi	146–168
Hedi	88–106	Lingdi	168–189
Shangdi	106	Xiandi	189–220
Andi	106–125
Shundi	125–144

TANG (see pp56–9)

618–907

Gaozu	618–626	Jingzong	824–827
Taizong	626–649	Wenzong	827–840
Gaozong	649–683	Wuzong	840–846
Zhongzong	684, 705–710	Xuanzong	846–859
Ruizong	684–690, 710–712	Yizong	859–873
Wu Zetian	690–705	Xizong	873–888
Xuanzong	712–756	Zhaozong	888–904
Suzong	756–762	Aidi	904–907
Daizong	762–779
Dezong	779–805
Shunzong	805
Xianzong	805–820
Muzong	820–824

Sancai-glazed dancing tomb figures

FIVE DYNASTIES & TEN KINGDOMS

907–960

Based north of the Yangzi, five successive dynasties swiftly usurped one another, with no dynasty lasting for more than three reigns. The Ten Kingdoms to the south went through a similarly turbulent period.

Throughout this period and most of the Song dynasty, the northern frontiers were dominated by the semi-nomadic Liao dynasty (907–1125) in the east, and by the Western Xia (990–1227) in the west. In 1115, the Liao were overthrown by the Jin (1115–1234), who forced the Song southwards in 1127.

YUAN

1279–1368

Genghis Khan (1162–1227) united numerous Mongol-speaking tribes and captured Beijing in 1215. His son, Kublai, completed the conquest of China by finally defeating the Southern Song in 1279.	Ayurbarwada	1311–1320
	Shidebala	1321–1323
	Yesun Temur	1323–1328
	Tugh Temur	1328–1329, 1329–1333
	Khoshila	1329
	Toghon Temur	1333–1368
Kublai Khan	1279–1294
Temur Oljeitu	1294–1307
Khaishan	1308–1311

MING

1368–1644

Hongwu	1368–1398	Longqing	1567–1572
Jianwen	1399–1402	Wanli	1573–1620
Yongle	1403–1424	Taichang	1620
Hongxi	1425	Tianqi	1621–1627
Xuande	1426–1435	Chongzhen	1628–1644
Zhengtong	1436–1449
Jingtai	1450–1457
Tianshun (Zhengtong)	1457–1464
Chenghua	1465–1487
Hongzhi	1488–1505
Zhengde	1506–1521
Jiajing	1522–1567

WESTERN ZHOU DYNASTY		EASTERN ZHOU DYNASTY		QIN DYNASTY
1066–771 BC		770–221 BC		221–206 BC
The Zhou founded their capital at Chang'an (Xi'an). They continued some Shang traditions, but reorganized the political system, dividing the nobility into grades. The feudal system of the Western Zhou broke down after the capital was sacked and the king slain.		Spring and Autumn 770–475 BC Warring States 475–221 BC The Zhou dynasty ruled at its eastern capital of Luoyang alongside numerous rival states. This long period of almost constant warfare was brought to an end when the Qin emerged victorious.		Qin Shi Huangdi 221–210 BC Er Shi 210–207 BC  Statue of attendant from the tomb of Qin Shi Huangdi
PERIOD OF DISUNITY			SUI
220–589			581–618
China was divided into the warring Wei, Wu, and Shu kingdoms. The Wei briefly re-united China under the Western Jin (280–316), the first of the six Southern Dynasties (280–589), with the capital at Jiankang (Nanjing). The north was ruled by a succession of ruling houses – the 16 Kingdoms (304–439). The nomadic Toba Wei set up the Northern Wei dynasty, the first of five Northern Dynasties (386–581) with a capital first at Datong, then at Luoyang.			China was once more united by the short and decisive rule of the Sui. Wendi 581–604 Yangdi 604–617 Gongdi 617–618  Emperor Wendi's flotilla on the Grand Canal
NORTHERN SONG			SOUTHERN SONG
960–1126			1127–1279
Taizu	960–976	Shenzong	1068–1085	Gaozong	1127–1162
Taizong	976–997	Zhezong	1086–1101	Xiaozong	1163–1190
Zhenzong	998–1022	Huizong	1101–1125	Guangzong	1190–1194
Renjong	1022–1063	Qinzong	1126	Ningzong	1195–1224
Yingzong	1064–1067			Lizong	1225–1264
				Duzong	1265–1274
				Gongzong	1275
				Duanzong	1276–1278
				Bing Di	1279
 Painting by Emperor Huizong
QING (see pp432–3)
1644–1911
 Emperor Zhengde's love of leisure led to a relaxation of imperial control		Shunzhi	1644–1661	 Imperial dragon detail on the back of a eunuch's official court robe
		Kangxi	1661–1722
		Yongzheng	1723–1735
		Qianlong	1736–1795
		Jiajing	1796–1820
		Daoguang	1821–1850
		Xianfeng	1851–1861
		Tongzhi	1862–1874
		Guangxu	1875–1908
		Pu Yi	1909–1911

FOUNDATION OF IMPERIAL CHINA

The Warring States Period was finally brought to an end as the Qin emerged victorious. In 221 BC, Qin Shi Huangdi pronounced himself the first emperor of China and ruled over a short yet decisive period of history. The Qin state was based on the political theories of Legalism which established the role of the ruler as paramount and espoused a system of collective responsibility. Following unification, Qin Shi Huangdi conscripted thousands of workers to join together the defensive walls to the north, creating the Great Wall. He standardized the system of money, and weights and measures, and laid the foundations for a legal system. A ruthless ruler, Qin Shi Huangdi died in the belief that his famous terracotta army would protect him in the afterlife from his numerous enemies.

The founding of the Han Dynasty (206 BC–AD 220) heralded a “golden age” in Chinese history. Emperor Gaozi (r. 206–195 BC) established the capital of the Western Han (206 BC–AD 9) at Chang’an (Xi’an), and retained much of the centralized administration established by the Qin. Subsequent emperors developed the civil service examination to select able men for state office. Han society was founded on the principles propounded by Confucius, and the Confucian classics formed the basis of the civil service examination. Daoism and yin-yang theory coexisted with ancestor worship and would form the basis of indigenous Chinese belief (see pp30–33).

The Han empire expanded with regions of Central Asia, Vietnam, and Korea being brought under Chinese control. In 138 BC, General Zhang Qian was sent to establish diplomatic links with Central Asia and returned with tales of rich pastures and “heavenly horses.” The fine thoroughbreds of Ferghana were traded in exchange for Chinese silk, starting the flow of goods along the fabled Silk Road (see pp464–5).

Han rule was briefly interrupted as Wang Mang seized power in AD 9, only to be restored by Guang Wudi (r. AD 25–57), who established the Eastern Han capital in Luoyang. Once more, the Han expanded Chinese territory. Paper was by now in use for much official documentation and the first Chinese dictionary was produced. Buddhism began its spread to China with the first Buddhist communities being established in Jiangsu province.

Archer from Qin Terracotta army

Chariot and footmen, impressed into a tomb's brick, Han

TIMELINE

213 BC Burning of the books as part of process of “unification”	206 BC–AD 9 Western Han capital established at Chang’an (Xi’an)	c. 139–126 BC Official envoy Zhang Qian establishes first diplomatic and trading links of Silk Road AD 2 First known census: 57,671,400 individuals	Bronze horse and rider, Han	c. 100 First dictionary Shuo Wen produced with more than 9,000 characters
221–206 BC Founding of Qin dynasty under first emperor, Qin Shi Huangdi	200 BC	100 BC	0	AD 100
	165 BC First official examinations for the selection of civil servants	25–220 Eastern Han Dynasty capital at Luoyang		65 First mention of Buddhist community established at court of Prince Ying of Chu

Tomb figure, Qin

Sui emperors Yangdi and Wendi in a detail from "Portraits of the 13 Emperors" by Tang painter Yen Li Pen

PERIOD OF DIVISION

From the rule of Hedi (r. AD 88–105), the Eastern Han declined. Civil war finally split the country in 220. The next 350 years were characterized by almost constant warfare as China was ruled by over 14 short-lived dynasties and 16 "kingdoms."

China was divided into the Northern and Southern Dynasties (265–581), each region taking on its own distinct character. Foreign peoples took control of the North, such as the Toba branch of the Xianbei who founded the Northern Wei in 386. These rulers were receptive to foreign ideas and religions, creating some of the finest Buddhist cave complexes first at Yungang (see pp132–3), near their capital in Datong, and from 494, at Longmen (see pp154–5), when they moved their capital to Luoyang.

As foreign invaders took control of the North, the Han Chinese retreated south to establish their new capital at Jiankang (Nanjing). In a climate of relative stability, the south became the economic and cultural center as the population shifted to the Yangzi delta. Philosophy and the arts flourished alongside a renewed interest in Daoism and a growing interest in Buddhism.

UNIFICATION AND STABILITY

Following military successes against the Liang and the Chen, the Northern Zhou general Yang Jian (541–604) pronounced himself emperor of all China and founded the Sui Dynasty in 589. This brief but significant dynastic rule established political and social stability. He undertook an extensive program of works including extending the Great Wall and the beginnings of the Grand Canal. The second emperor, Yangdi (569–618), restored diplomatic relations with Japan and Taiwan and extended trade to Central Asia.

Apsara from Buddhist cave, Northern Wei

190 Communications with central Asia are cut late 3rd c. Renewed interest in Daoism

310 Massive exodus of Chinese upper classes to South

Colossal Buddha at Yungang Caves, Northern Wei

589–618 Sui Dynasty, initiated by Wendi's reunification of China

200

300

400

500

600

220 Civil war breaks out between the kingdoms of Wei, Shu, and Wu

265–581 China divided into Northern and Southern dynasties

386–535 Northern Wei, first of the ruling houses to adopt Buddhism

c. 6th C First true porcelain produced

c. 7th C Woodblock printing first used in China

Tang Dynasty

THE TANG DYNASTY IS WIDELY regarded as one of China's golden ages, characterized by economic prosperity, territorial expansion, and political stability. During this period China reached its largest size to date: from Korea to Vietnam and across Central Asia to southern Siberia. Trade flourished by land and sea, stimulating the flow of luxury goods between East and West. Foreign religions were tolerated and Buddhism gained popular and imperial patronage.

The arts and literature of the Tang are still considered to be among China's finest, notably the famous poets Li Bai and Du Fu.

■ Tang rule AD 750

This pottery figure, decorated in three-color or sancai glaze, depicts life along the Silk Route. Merchants and pilgrims traveled the legendary route bringing with them objects crafted in gold and silver, textiles, exotic foods, and fine horses.

The similar figures carry typical attributes of Avalokitesvara: this one holds a flower; the other a vase and a sprig of willow.

Foreign envoys, including Koreans (the figure on the right) and westerners (standing next to the Korean), traveled to the Tang court for delegations and giving tribute, as seen in this tomb mural.

Ample, draped robes, typical of Tang style

This silver cup, part of a board of buried treasure dug up in 1970, shows distinct western influence, although the relief decoration is lavishly Tang.

Chang'an's (Xi'an's) elaborate city walls enclosed a population of one million by the seventh century, making Chang'an the largest city in the world. The cosmopolitan capital was populated by Sogdians, Turks, Uighurs, Arabs, and Persians.

Emperor Taizong (r. 626–49) was a great military strategist, strengthening border protection and establishing diplomatic and trade links with foreign nations. An overhaul of the civil service examination system led to greater social mobility and contributed to stable government.

Wu Zetian (r. 690–705), the only empress in Chinese history, manipulated her weak husband, Emperor Gaozong, and ruthlessly eradicated her opposition. Despite her scandalous nature, she became a strong ruler and brought peace and prosperity.

Inscriptions were written for wealthy donors who commissioned paintings on behalf of themselves or loved ones in order to accrue religious merit.

Avalokitesvara, one of the most popular bodhisattvas, is identified by the Amitabha Buddha in his crown.

Emperor Xuanzong (r. 712–56) or Minghuang, the Brilliant Emperor, ruled over a glorious period. A great scholar and patron of the arts, he poured his wealth into temple construction and founded the Academy of Letters (Hanlin-yuan) in 754.

AN EMPEROR'S LOVE AND DEMISE

In his later years, the Xuanzong emperor increasingly neglected his official duties as he became infatuated with his concubine, Yang Guifei. Intrigue and factions at court bred instability and in AD 750, General An Lushan, half Sogdian half Turkish by descent, seized control of the northeastern frontier. In 755 An Lushan stormed the capital forcing the court to flee for Sichuan. As they reached Mawei, Xuanzong's troops mutinied and demanded the emperor hand over Yang Guifei. She was strangled before his eyes, and the tragic story of their love affair has been immortalised by poets. Although An Lushan was eventually defeated, the Tang dynasty fell into decline.

Yang Guifei's plump figure became a classic sancai form

DUNHUANG SILKS

During the Tang Dynasty, Buddhism gained popular and imperial support, particularly under the rule of the devout Wu Zetian. Buddhist communities became important centers for the translation of sutras and the production of Buddhist arts, such as the fine silk paintings of Dunhuang.

GLORY OF THE TANG

The Tang Dynasty (AD 618–907) marks a high point in Chinese history (see pp56–7). During this golden age, China enjoyed an extended period of peace and prosperity. The arts flourished and were enriched by foreign styles, motifs, and techniques such as silverworking. Foreign religions, such as Nestorian Christianity, were tolerated and co-existed alongside native Daoism and Confucianism. Woodblock printing was invented by the Chinese some time during the 7th century and hastened the spread of Buddhism.

Following the An Lushan rebellion of 755, the Tang became increasingly inward looking. The great Buddhist persecution of 841–46 was symptomatic of a dynasty in decline, which finally fell in 907.

THE LIAO DYNASTY (907–1125)

The Liao dynasty, which at its largest covered much of Mongolia, Manchuria and northern China, was ruled by semi-nomadic and pastoral people, the Qidan. The Liao maintained a dual administration, Qidan and Chinese, and even a prime-ministership, to ensure the survival of their own customs and traditions whilst utilizing the efficiency of Tang structures of government. In 1115, the Qidan were overthrown by another semi-nomadic people, the Ruzhen (Jurchen). With the support of the Northern Song, the Ruzhen took control of the north and founded the Jin dynasty. The Liao were forced westwards to the region of the Tian mountain range in present-day Xinjiang, where they established the Western Liao (1125–1211). The rest of northwest China was dominated by the Western Xia, a Tibetan-related people who recognized the Liao as their overlords.

Sancai glazed horse, Tang

FIVE DYNASTIES AND TEN KINGDOMS (907–960)

While the north of China was dominated by the resurgence of semi-nomadic peoples from the steppes regions, the south was ruled by a series of short military dictatorships. The Song Dynasty was founded in 960 by Zhao Kuangyin, a military commander of the later Zhou (951–960), whose imperial name became Shizong. In the Yangzi delta and regions to the south, the Ten Kingdoms existed in relative peace and stability and were reunited by the Song in 979.

Painting of an official celebrating, Five Dynasties (923–938)

TIMELINE

618–907 Tang dynasty heralds new golden age	690–705 Empress Wu Zetian rules as first empress of China	755–763 An Lushan rebellion drives emperor and court from Chang'an to Sichuan	806 Earliest dated printed manuscript, the Diamond Sutra	907–60 Period of division known as Five Dynasties and Ten Kingdoms	10th c. Gunpowder and firearms first used
700		750	800	850	900
661 Chinese administration in Kashmir, Bokhara and the borders of eastern Iran	705 Famous poet Li Bai born	 Tang silver		806–820 First bankers' bill	907–1125 Qidan people rule northeastern China as the Liao dynasty, making Beijing their southern capital
			770 Death of great poet Du Fu

THE SONG DYNASTY (960–1279)

The Song presided over a period of cultural brilliance and unprecedented growth in urban life during which the social makeup of China fundamentally changed. Less territorially ambitious than the Tang, the Song stimulated economic development through improved communications and transport. New industries based on mass production began to emerge, notably the porcelain industry based in Jiangxi province. During the Southern Song, China underwent an industrial revolution producing quantities of raw materials such as salt and iron on a scale that would not be seen in Europe until the 18th century.

In this buoyant economic climate a new middle-class emerged, stimulating demand for the new range of consumer goods. Power shifted from the aristocratic elite to government bureaucrats, who spent their spare time practicing the arts of poetry, calligraphy, and painting. Collecting and connoisseurship led to an artistic renaissance and the founding of the first Imperial collections. Emperor Huizong was a great patron of the arts who used ancient precedents and values to buttress his own position. Neo-Confucianism and a renewed interest in Daoism marked a return to indigenous beliefs and traditional structures of power.

The Northern Song repeatedly came under attack from the Western Xia in the northwest and the Jin in the northeast. Only 12 years after joining forces with the Song against the Liao, the Jin invaded the

Illustration of Song Emperor Huizong, r. 1101–1125

Northern Song capital at Bianliang (Kaifeng), capturing emperor Qinzong and forcing the court to flee southwards. The capital of the Southern Song (1127–1279) was established at Lin'an (Hangzhou) south of the Yangzi.

JIN DYNASTY (1115–1234)

The Jin were a semi-nomadic Tungusic people originating from Manchuria. War with the Song and persistent attacks from the Mongols resulted in a weakening of the Jin state which by the early 13th century formed a buffer state between the Song in the south and the Mongols in the north. In 1227, Mongol and Chinese allied forces defeated the Jin and in 1234 the Jin emperor committed suicide.

The Jin state was integrated into the Mongol empire.

Early movable type, Song

960–1126 Northern Song reunites China and bases capital at Bianliang (Kaifeng)

Detail of painting by emperor Huizong

1127–1279 Southern Song dynasty with capital at Hangzhou, after being forced south by the Jin

1154 First issue of paper money (Jin)

1206–1208 Song and Jin at war

950

1000

1050

1100

1150

1200

990–1227 Western Xia people establish kingdom dominating northwest China

1041–8 First attempts at printing with movable type

1090 First attested use of compass on Chinese ships

1115–1234 Jin dynasty founded in northeast China forcing Liao westwards

1214 Jin move capital from Beijing to Kaifeng in Henan province

MONGOL RULE (1279–1368)

The Mongol leader Genghis Khan (see p471) united the various Mongol-speaking tribes of the steppes and in 1215 conquered northern China. He divided his empire into four kingdoms, each ruled by one of his sons. His grandson Kublai Khan (r. 1260–94), ruler of the eastern Great Khanate, finally defeated the Southern Song in 1279 and proclaimed himself emperor of the Yuan dynasty. China now became part of a vast empire which stretched from the East China Sea across Asia as far as Poland, Hungary, and Bohemia. Two capital cities were maintained at Dadu or Khanbalik (present-day Beijing) and Yuanshangdu (Xanadu). The Silk Routes opened once more, connecting China to the Middle East and Medieval Europe. Direct contact was now made for the first time between the Mongol court and European diplomats, Franciscan missionaries, and merchants. According to the writings of Marco Polo, the

Buddhist deity, Yuan

Italian merchant spent 21 years in the service of Kublai and his court.

The Mongols ruled through a military type of government, in contrast to the bureaucratic civil service established by the Chinese. Although Chinese and Mongol languages were both used for official business, the Chinese were not encouraged to take up official posts. Muslims from Central and Western Asia took their place, and the Chinese increasingly retreated from official life.

As there were no clear rules for succession, civil war broke out in 1328 between Mongol nobles. The secret societies of the Red Turbans and the White Lotus led peasant rebellions and in 1368 General Zhu Yuanzhang forced the Mongols out of China, becoming the first emperor of the Ming dynasty.

MING DYNASTY (1368–1644)

The Ming (literally “brilliant”) dynasty was one of the longest and most stable periods in China’s history. The founder of the Ming, Zhu Yuanzhang, rose from humble beginnings to become a strong militarist, ruling as emperor Hongwu (“vast military accomplishment”). During his reign, Hongwu introduced radical changes to both central and local government which he made binding on his successors. The emperor’s role became more autocratic as Hongwu dispensed with the position of Prime Minister, taking direct responsibility for overseeing all Six Ministries himself.

Hongwu appointed his grandson to be his successor. Upon his death, his son the Prince of Yan, who controlled the region around Beijing, led an army

Genghis Khan (c.1162–1227), Persian miniature

TIMELINE

1215 Mongols capture
Beijing

1234 Jin emperor commits suicide and Jin integrated into Mongol empire

Mongol on horseback

1368–1644 Ming
Dynasty, founded by rebel leader General
Zhu Yuanzhang

1403
Construction of Great Walls in North China

1250

1300

1350

1400

1227 Genghis Khan
dies, having united various Mongol-speaking tribes of the steppe

1279–1368 Kublai
Khan defeats Southern Song and rules China as emperor of the Yuan dynasty

1328 Civil war breaks out between Mongol nobles

Jade elephant,
Ming

The existing battlements of the Great Wall, reinforced and joined together during the Ming dynasty against his nephew, taking Nanjing and proclaiming himself emperor Yongle (“Eternal Joy”). Yongle (r. 1403–24) moved the capital to his power base in Beijing where he created a new city based on traditional principles of Chinese city planning. At its core lay the Forbidden City (see pp86–9), the imperial palace and offices of government, surrounded by a grid system of streets, with four imperial altars at the cardinal points. The entire city was walled to provide both protection and enclosure. In 1421, Beijing became the official capital and would remain so until the present day. The Great Wall was reinforced, extended, and faced with brick during the Ming.

By the 15th century, China had become a significant maritime power, its ships dwarfing those of contemporary Europe. Blue and white porcelain, silk, and other luxury items were in high demand in the foreign markets of Japan, Southeast Asia, and the Middle East. Yongle sent six maritime expeditions under the Muslim eunuch admiral Zheng He which reached as far as the east coast of Africa. In 1514 Portuguese traders first landed in China, purchasing tea which had become a fashionable drink in European society. Porcelain provided ballast for the ships, and other luxury items were brought back along with the cargo. Trade was dominated by the

Wedding jewelry, Ming

Dutch in the 17th century, only to be surpassed by the British a hundred years later. Jesuit missionaries who arrived in the 15th century claimed few converts but gained access to the emperor and the inner court.

The arts thrived under emperor Xuande (r. 1426–35), an artist and poet, who patronized the arts, notably the porcelain industry at Jingdezhen. In literature, the late Ming is noted for its great dramas and classical novels, such as Journey to the West (see p29). Philosophy of the time reinforced the neo-Confucianism of the Song.

The late Ming was dominated by peasant uprisings, incursions by Japanese pirates and Mongolian tribes, and excessive eunuch power. Rebellions within China eventually joined with external forces to end Ming rule.

1426–35 Xuande emperor becomes first Ming emperor to patronize the arts extensively	1514 Portuguese land in China becoming the first Europeans to import tea and porcelain	Gilt bronze bowl, Ming	1573–1620 Wanli reign begins well but dynasty declines as emperor takes little interest in duties	1620 Emperor Taichang poisoned by eunuchs
1450	1500	1550	1600
1420 Construction of the Forbidden City in Beijing completed	c.1505 Later Ming monarchs neglect duties of government and eunuch power increases	1538 Jesuit Father Matteo Ricci enters southern China and begins missionary duties	1570 Popular novel Xi Yu Ji (Journey to the West) published	1600s Dutch dominate European trade with China	1601 Jesuit missionary Matteo Ricci settles in Beijing

QING RULE (1644–1911)

The Manchu leader Nurhachi established the Later Jin in 1616, organizing the scattered tribes of the north into eight banner units (see pp432–3). In 1636, the Manchu ruler Abahai changed the name to Qing, literally “pure,” and prepared the way for the capture of Beijing in 1644. Under Manchu control, China was once more ruled by a foreign people. The Manchus were keen to adopt the Chinese method of rule, encouraging Chinese scholars into the service of the new empire. Dual administration at national and provincial levels meant Manchu and Chinese bureaucrats worked side by side using first Manchu and later Chinese as the official languages of government. Despite close interaction of Manchu and Chinese, the ruling Manchus were keen to maintain a distinct separation, protecting Manchu privileges and cultural traditions.

The first emperors of the Qing were enlightened rulers who presided over one of largest and most populous countries in the world. The territorial aspirations of emperor Kangxi (see p122) brought the regions of Central Asia and southern Siberia once more under Chinese control. Kangxi was succeeded by emperor Yongzheng. It was his fourth son, emperor Qianlong, “Lasting Eminence,” (r. 1736–96) who heralded another golden age. An ambitious ruler, Qianlong was determined to extend China’s borders beyond those of the Tang, personally leading campaigns to Burma, Vietnam, and Central Asia.

During the 18th century, contact with the west increased through Jesuit missionaries and trade. By the mid-18th century, the Chinese sought to control trade by refusing all official contact with westerners and opening only Canton to foreign merchants. Pressure from European embassies increased as the British sent Lord Macartney in 1792–94 to establish diplomatic relations and open China to trade. China refused to grant a single concession to the British.

Emperor Kangxi, r. 1661–1722

THE DECLINE OF THE EMPIRE

The 19th century is one of the most turbulent periods of Chinese history, as internal uprisings, natural disasters, and the relentless encroachment of the West culminated in the end of the empire. A succession of weak rulers were manipulated and controlled by

Lord Macartney’s massive entourage arriving at Qianlong’s tent

TIMELINE

1644–1800 Military expansion into Central Asia and Siberia; colonization of new territories
Yunnan and Xinjiang

1723–1735 Kangxi’s son Yin Zhen seizes power ruling under name of emperor Yongzheng

Emperor Shunzhi, r. 1644–61

1747 Qianlong builds Yuanming Yuan (see p106) in western style

1650

1675

1700

1725

1750

1644–1911
Manchus establish Qing dynasty

1650 First Catholic church in Beijing

1662–1722 Rule of Kangxi emperor. Appoints Jesuits to run Board of Astronomy

1736–1795 Qianlong, a great patron of the arts, rules over another golden age

1757 Chinese restrict all foreign trade to Canton

A merchant testing tea quality in a Cantonese warehouse

In 1900 the Boxers allied with imperial troops and attacked the foreign legations in Beijing (see p433). An eight-nation army defeated the onslaught, and Cixi fled to Xi'an, blaming everything on the emperor. The Chinese government paid once more for the loss of life and Cixi returned to Beijing until her death in 1908. The child emperor Pu Yi lived in the Forbidden City as the last emperor until his abdication. On 1 January the Dowager Empress Cixi, who ruled for much of the late Qing from "behind the curtain." The Taiping Rebellion of 1850–64 (see p422) devastated south and central China.

Western powers, frustrated by the reluctance of the Chinese to open to foreign trade, brought the Chinese under increasing pressure. Keen to protect the trade of opium from their colonies in India, the British engaged in the first Opium War (1840–42), which culminated in the Treaty of Nanjing, resulting in the opening of four new ports to trade, the payment of huge indemnities, and the ceding of Hong Kong to Britain. Following the Arrow War (Second Opium War) with Britain and France (1856) the European forces divided China into "spheres of influence" – the British strongest along the Yangzi and Shanghai, the Germans controlling Shandong province, and the French controlling the borders with Vietnam.

1912 the Republican leader Sun Yat Sen inaugurated the Chinese Republic.

FROM EMPIRE TO REPUBLIC

In the final years of the empire, many Chinese intellectuals recognized the need to modernize. Supporters of the Reform Movement of 1898 propounded the adoption of western technology and education, and, following the Boxer Rebellion, a number of reforms were adopted. Elected regional assemblies were set up, further undermining the power of the Qing. In 1911 the empire collapsed completely. Sun Yat Sen (see p297) was elected provisional President of China, but was soon forced to resign in favor of general Yuan Shikai, who sought to become emperor. Yuan was forced to back down when governors revolted and he died soon after in 1916.

Sun Yat Sen, 1866–1925

China then came under the control of a series of regional warlords until it was united once more with the founding of the People's Republic of China in 1949.

1796–1805 White Lotus Rebellion damages prestige and wealth of dynasty	1816 Lord Amherst leads British envoy seeking to open China to trade	1851–64 Taiping Rebellion	1856–58 Arrow War (Second Opium War) with Britain and France	1898 Emperor Guangxu imprisoned by Empress Cixi	1900 Boxer uprising
1775	1800	1825	1850	1875	1900
 Jade pendant, Qing	1792–94 Lord Macartney leads embassy to Beijing and unsuccessfully attempts to establish trade relations with England	1861 Empress Dowager Cixi begins "rule from behind the screen"	 Cixi's nail covers	1908 Death of Empress Dowager Cixi 1894 Sino-Japanese war
1840–42 First Opium War with Great Britain

The Cultural Revolution

Actor in opera

IN 1965, MAO ZEDONG set in motion a chain of events that were to unleash the turmoil now known as the Cultural Revolution. Having socialized industry and agriculture, Mao called on the masses to transform society itself – all distinctions between manual and intellectual work were to be abolished and class distinction disappear. The revolution reached its violent peak in 1967, with the Red Guards spreading social unrest and disintegration. The PLA finally restored order, but the subsequent years were characterized by fear, violence, mistrust, and betrayal.

THE RED GUARD

Mao appealed to students to form the Red Guard, in whom he entrusted the fate of the revolution. The movement rapidly gathered momentum and the Red Guard, who raised Mao to godly status, traveled China spreading Mao Zedong Thought, smashing remnants of the past, vandalizing temples, and wreaking havoc.

Mass public meetings were held as part of the Socialist Education Movement, a precursor of the Cultural Revolution intended to reverse “capitalist” and “revisionist” tendencies perceived in social and economic life. Everyone was required to attend.

Children were encouraged to take part in the Revolution. Their enthusiasm led to the destruction of family photographs and possessions. In some cases, children denounced their own parents.

The Little Red Book was essential to the Red Guard and issued to every soldier under Lin Biao's command.

An injured cadre is carried away after being denounced. Shamings became the bench mark of public meetings. Many politicians and teachers were paraded and accused, leading to job loss and, in some cases, suicide.

Demonstrating their opposition to Soviet-style communism and their support for Maoism, Red Guards change a Beijing street sign in front of the Soviet Embassy from East Yangweixi to Fanxiu Lu (Anti-revisionism Road).

Lin Biao spread the study of the "Thoughts of Mao" and compiled the Little Red Book which became obligatory reading for his army recruits. As head of the PLA, Lin Biao provided essential military backing and was Mao's named successor. He died in a plane crash over Siberia in 1971 amid rumors of an imminent usurpation.

Model operas were the pet project of Mao's third wife, Jiang Qing. She set about creating a politically correct revolutionary culture. Many artists and intellectuals were sent to the countryside for re-education.

May 7 Cadre Schools were set up by the central government in 1968. 100,000 officials plus 30,000 family members were sent to perform manual labor and undergo ideological re-education. An unknown number of lower-ranking cadres were sent to thousands of other cadre schools.

Liu Shaoqi (right), president from 1959–66, was one of a number of high officials to be denounced, imprisoned, and paraded in "struggle rallies." He died from his experiences.

GANG OF FOUR

The Gang of Four, as they became known, orchestrated attacks on intellectuals and writers, high officials, the party, and the state and were responsible for some of the worst excesses of the Cultural Revolution. Zhang Chunqiao, critic and propagandist, Yao Wenyuan, editor-in-chief of Shanghai Liberation Army Daily, Wang Hongwen, a young worker and Mao's third wife Jiang Qing, an ex-film star, dominated the political center unchallenged until Mao's death in 1976. Millions of Chinese citizens watched their televised trial in 1980–81. Jiang Qing, who was singled out by propagandists and became one of the most hated figures in China, was defiant until the end, railing against her prosecutors throughout the trial. She took her life in 1991, while still serving her life sentence.

Lynched effigies of members of the Gang of Four hanging from a tree

Chiang Kai Shek (1887–1975), leader of the KMT

COMMUNISTS AND NATIONALISTS

After the fall of the empire, the political landscape changed dramatically and became dominated by two forces, the Nationalist Party or Kuomintang (KMT) and the Communist Party, founded in 1921. The Nationalists were led first by Sun Yat Sen from his power base in Guangzhou, then by General Chiang Kai Shek who seized power in 1926. In 1923 the two Parties formed a “united front” against the warlords, but in 1926 the Communists were expelled from the KMT. Chiang Kai Shek led his army to Nanjing where he tried to establish a Nationalist capital, and betrayed the Communist-led workers of Shanghai who were massacred by underworld gangsters. The Communists were driven underground and Mao Zedong retreated to the countryside.

High in the mountains of Jiangxi province, Mao and Zhu De founded the Jiangxi Soviet in 1930. From this inaccessible base, the communists began to redistribute land to the peasants and institute new marriage laws. In 1934, Chiang Kai Shek drove the communists from the area, forcing Mao to embark on the legendary Long March (see pp256–7). Yan’an, where the march ended, became the new Communist Party headquarters and would remain so until 1945.

JAPANESE ATTACK

Domestic turmoil laid China open to attack, and in 1931 the Japanese occupied Manchuria, founding the puppet state of Manchukuo and placing the last Qing emperor, Pu Yi, at its head (see p446). By 1937 the Japanese had occupied much of northern China, Shanghai, and the Yangzi valley ruthlessly taking cities, wreaking death and devastation. The Japanese were finally driven from Chinese soil in 1945, and China was plunged into civil war.

THE EAST IS RED

By 1947, the Communist policy of land reform was reaping rewards, gaining them the support of people in the countryside. In 1948–9, the Communists made decisive victories, capturing arms and land from the KMT. On 1 October 1949 Chairman Mao pronounced the founding of the People’s Republic of China in Beijing. Chiang Kai Shek fled to Taiwan, establishing a Nationalist government and taking

Communist poster depicting Mao surrounded by the masses

TIMELINE

 Last Emperor Pu Yi	1912 Abdication of emperor Pu Yi marks the end of Imperial China	1921 Founding of the Chinese Communist Party 1935 Mao becomes leader of Chinese Communist Party	1937 Japanese take much of northern China	1945 End of World War II; Japan defeated 1947 Civil War breaks out in China
	1910	1920 1926 Chiang Kai Shek seizes leadership of National Party	1930 1931 Japanese invasion of Manchuria	1940 1934 Mao leads the Red Army on Long March	1950 1951–2 Rural co-ops established 1949 Mao proclaims founding of People’s Republic of China

with him many Imperial treasures.

In the early years of the People's Republic, the Chinese worked hard to rebuild agriculture and industry in a country devastated by 100 years of turmoil. New laws sought to redress inequities of the past, redistributing land and outlawing arranged marriages. In 1957 the party launched the Hundred Flowers Movement which initially encouraged freedom of expression. Unprepared for the storm of criticism, the Party promptly branded intellectuals as "rightists" and sent them to the countryside for re-education. Frustrated with the slow rate of change, Mao launched the Great Leap Forward in 1958. Large communes providing food and childcare replaced the family, releasing manual labor and improving productivity. But unrealistic productivity targets and the falsification of statistics concealed the disastrous effect of Mao's experiment. Agricultural failure coupled with natural disasters resulted in the starvation of millions.

Having reformed agriculture and industry, Mao sought to transform culture and launched the Cultural Revolution in 1965 (see pp64-5). The excesses of the period were over by 1971, but the country was tightly controlled and directed until Mao's death in 1976. Deng Xiaoping emerged as leader, implementing economic reforms which returned land to the peasants and encouraged greater economic freedom.

The economic liberalization of the 1980s stimulated the economy but was unmatched by political freedom. On

Zhou Enlai (see p250) with President Nixon

4 June 1989 the democracy movement called for political reform and an end to corruption, but was brutally suppressed in Tian'an Men Square. Whilst many students and intellectuals fled abroad, others remain incarcerated in China's jails. Deng Xiaoping pressed on with economic reform, and the 1990s saw the opening of Special Economic Zones and stock exchanges in most major cities. By 1992, China's economy was the third largest in the world.

The unprecedented rate of economic growth in the 1990s was matched by the transformation of the landscape as traditional buildings made way for modern high-rises. The former colonies of Hong Kong and Macau were returned to China and foreign investment flooded in. Entrepreneurs prospered, and the Communist Party has been keen to attract this new class into its ranks. Disbanding the state economy has also spawned inequity, and the gap between rich and poor grows increasingly wider. China today enjoys many of the benefits of modern society and suffers from its familiar afflictions.

Traders at the Stock Exchange of Hong Kong

1958 Radical reform of the Great Leap Forward

Little Red Book

1976 Mao dies and Cultural Revolution brought to an end

1978 Deng Xiaoping emerges as leader

1993 Jiang Zemin becomes president; construction of Three Gorges Dam begins

2001 China admitted as member of World Trade Organisation

1960

1970

1980

1990

2000

1965 Mao launches Cultural Revolution

1971 Mao's heir Lin Biao killed in plane crash

1972 President Nixon is first American president to visit China

1980 Televised trial of Gang of Four

1989 Democracy movement suppressed in Tian'an Men Square

1997 Hong Kong handed back to China; Macau, two years later

2003 Chinese launch first manned spacecraft; Hu Jintao becomes president

BEIJING & THE NORTH

INTRODUCING BEIJING & THE NORTH 70-77

BEIJING 78-119

HEBEI, TIANJIN & SHANXI 120-139

SHANDONG & HENAN 140-159

SHAANXI 160-171

Beijing & the North at a Glance

THREADED BY THE YELLOW RIVER and the Great Wall, China's north encompasses the six provinces of Hebei, Tianjin, Shanxi, Shandong, Henan, and Shaanxi, as well as Beijing, the nation's capital. From this vast domain, six ancient capitals governed China, leaving behind a wealth of dynastic sites, such as Beijing's magnificent Forbidden City, the Terracotta Warriors near Xi'an, and the Buddhist carvings at Longmen and Yungang. The region's religious sites include the Daoist peaks of Hua Shan and Tai Shan, the Buddhist Wutai Shan, and the Shaolin Temple. Along the coast are the ports of Tianjin and Qingdao, preserves of European architecture, and Shanhaiguan, where the Great Wall meets the sea.

Practicing tai ji quan, Temple of Heaven, Beijing

Vividly painted cave interior at the Yungang Caves, Shanxi

GETTING AROUND

Beijing has good air, rail, and bus links to the surrounding region. There are daily flights to Xi'an, Luoyang, Qingdao, Kaifeng, and Zhengzhou. Express trains link Beijing directly with all the region's large cities, while many smaller towns are served by slower trains. Tianjin is a major north-south rail junction. There is also a comprehensive long-distance bus service, while faster private buses ply the popular tourist routes.

KEY

-  National highway
-  Major road
-  Minor road
-  Mountain area

The imposing Great White Dagoba at Tayuan Si, Wutai Shan, Shanxi

A PORTRAIT OF BEIJING & THE NORTH

THE YELLOW RIVER, THE WELLSPRING of Chinese culture and civilization, carves a course through the country's parched northern terrain, the historic homeland of the Han Chinese and location of the most significant monuments. Thus most visitors to the Middle Kingdom usually concentrate on these historic sites, beginning with the nation's capital, Beijing.

For millennia, the Yellow River (Huang He) has nurtured the communities strung along its banks while sporadically washing away their settlements. The great river flows through the provinces of Shaanxi, Shanxi, Henan, and Shandong, often forming a natural boundary between provinces. It also features in the names of Henan (South of the River) and Hebei (North of the River). In its long and looping journey it traverses a land rich in historic sights and cities, before spilling into Bo Hai (Bo Sea), north of the sacred mountain, Tai Shan. Occasionally, it comes across the vestiges of that other barrier, the Great Wall. Now a largely disintegrating bastion, the wall crawls across the face of North China, a reminder of the region's vulnerable position so close to the border with Inner Mongolia and erstwhile Manchuria. Although the Great Wall was built as a defensive fortification, it could not prevent the hordes of nomadic tribes, the so-called "barbarians," from entering China.

Defender of the Buddha, Longmen

Neolithic finds and archeological sites wrote the province of Henan into the earliest pages of Chinese history. Here, South of the Yellow River, Luoyang and Kaifeng are two of the country's most important dynastic capitals; another ancient city, Anyang, was capital of the Shang dynasty. However, it is Xi'an in Shaanxi province that is more eclipsed by its past than any other ancient capital.

The Tower of the Fragrance of the Buddha overlooking Kunming Lake at the Summer Palace, Beijing

The modern skyline of Qingdao, Shandong Province on China's east coast

Xi'an's most magnificent treasures are the Terracotta Warriors (see pp168-9), created to guard the tomb of Qin Shi Huangdi, the Qin emperor who unified China. However Xi'an reached its zenith during the Tang dynasty (see pp56-7), prospering because of its position at the eastern end of the Silk Road. The Grand Mosque and sizable Muslim population testify to Xi'an's cosmopolitan grandeur during that time.

Toward the end of the 13th century, the Mongol Kublai Khan established Beijing as his capital. But it was only in 1407, when the Ming emperor Yongle moved his seat of power here, that Beijing achieved imperial status. Still organized along its grand Ming and Qing dynasty lines, it is a city of straight, wide boulevards and narrow, winding alleys around an ancient palatial core, the Forbidden City. The temples and palaces are today complemented by slick shopping streets and the commercial buzz of a people coming into their own in the 21st century.

The two adjoining provinces of Hebei and Shanxi are griddles in summer and iceboxes in winter, although Hebei's eastern seaboard towns benefit from cooling sea breezes. Shanxi, on the other hand, is sometimes affected by seasonal sand storms blowing in from the Gobi Desert. Hebei's fertile soil and productive agrarian economy contrast with landlocked Shanxi's mineral-rich terrain. Both provinces are heavily industrialized but there are still many sights that demand attention, such as the Buddhist monastery of Chongshan Si (see p137), the holy mountain Tai Shan, and the port of Tianjin, Hebei's former capital. Despite modernization, Tianjin has preserved its European architecture, a legacy of its past as a foreign trading post. The Buddhist sculptures at the UNESCO World Heritage Site of the Longmen Caves in Luoyang (see pp154-5) are remarkable while Shandong is best known for Qufu, the birthplace of Confucius, the eminent philosopher-sage, whose teachings, which greatly influenced Chinese culture, are acceptable once more.

Lighting incense sticks
Beijing's Lama Temple

The kind of scenery that has inspired Chinese poets and artists for thousands of years, Hua Shan, Shaanxi

Beijing Opera

Souvenir mask

ONE AMONG MANY HUNDREDS of local Operas across China, Beijing Opera began in the Qing dynasty. It is said that Emperor Qianlong (r.1736–96), on a tour of the south, was rather taken by the operas of Anhui and Hebei and brought these troupes back to Beijing, where a new form of opera was established. The Guangxu emperor and Dowager Empress Cixi were also keen devotees and helped develop the art form. Beijing Opera has proved remarkably resilient, surviving the persecution of actors and the banning of most of the plays during the Cultural Revolution.

Emperor Qianlong, credited with starting Beijing Opera

BEIJING OPERA

Visually stunning and with a distinct musical style, the plays are based on Chinese history and literature. Beijing

Opera is a form of “total theater” with singing, speech, mime, acrobatics, and symbolic visual effects.

Monkey is one of the favorite characters – clever, resourceful and brave. He appears in Chinese classic literature (see p29).

The colors of the painted faces symbolize the individual character's qualities. Red, for example, represents loyalty and courage; purple, solemnity and a sense of justice; green, bravery and irascibility.

Riding a horse is represented by raising a tasseled horsewhip. Other actions and movement on the stage are similarly stylized rather than realistic.

The acrobatics of Beijing opera combine graceful gymnastics and movements from the martial arts. Training is notoriously hard. The costumes are designed to make the jumps seem more spectacular by billowing out as they spin.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

Despite the dramatic visual elements of Beijing Opera, the Chinese say that they go to “listen” to opera, not to see it. The importance of the musical elements should not therefore be underestimated. Typically six or seven instrumentalists accompany the opera. The stringed instruments usually include the erhu or Chinese two-stringed violin, sanxian or three-stringed lute, and moon guitar, or possibly pipa (traditional lute). The main function of the instruments is to accompany the singing. Percussion instruments include clappers, gongs, and drums. These are used largely to punctuate the action; movement and sound are intimately linked. Wind instruments also sometimes feature, such as the Chinese horn, flute, and suona.

Mei Lanfang was the foremost interpreter of the female role type or dan during the opera's heyday in the 1920s and 1930s. Traditionally all female roles were played by male actors, although that has now changed.

THE FOUR MAIN ROLES

There are four main role types in Beijing opera: the sheng (male) and dan (female) roles have naturalistic make-up. The jing or “painted faces,” in contrast, have stylized patterned, colored faces, while the chou are comic characters.

Sheng: these may be young or old, with beard or without.

Chou: with a white patch on his face, the chou is usually dim but amusing.

Dan: there are six parts within this role from virtuous girl to old woman.

Jing: the most striking looking, they also have the most forceful personality.

Regional Food: Beijing & the North

COMMUNITIES DEVELOPED beside the Yellow River before 6000 BC, but it is not until about 1500 BC, when written records started, that a picture of the dietary habits of the ancient Chinese becomes clear. They kept pigs and grew millet, wheat, barley, and rice and even fermented their grain to make alcoholic beverages. Later (around 1100 BC), soybeans were added to the Chinese diet, soon followed by by-products such as soy sauce and beancurd (tofu). Beijing never had a distinctive cuisine of its own, but as the center of the empire it imported elements and influences from a variety of sources.

Chinese leaf also known as Tianjin cabbage

Candied apples on the street, a feature of northern cuisine expensive ingredients – shark's fin, bird's nest soup, and abalone, all imported from the south – feature as well as artistic presentation and poetic names. Beijing cuisine can be summed up as the distillation of the creations of generations of Imperial Palace chefs over almost a millennium.

SHANDONG

AS THE BIRTHPLACE and home of Confucius, the cuisine of Shandong is generally regarded as the oldest and best in China. Shandong has produced the largest number of famous master chefs, and it is even said that the iron wok originated here as well.

THE PALACE KITCHEN

KUBLAI KHAN made Beijing the capital in 1271 and brought simple Mongolian influences to the northern Chinese cuisine – lamb, roasting, and the hot pot. Prior to that, the national capitals had been centered around the Yellow River valley in Xi'an, Luoyang, or Kaifeng. Elaborate preparation and

A whole Peking duck with traditional accompaniments

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Peking duck – an Imperial meal – must be the best known dish in north Chinese cuisine. The duck, a local Beijing variety, is carefully dried, and then brushed with a sweet marinade before being roasted over fragrant woodchips. Finally it is carved by the chef and eaten wrapped in pancakes with a special duck sauce, slivered scallions, and cucumbers. To accompany the duck, diners might also be served duck liver pâté, and duck soup to finish. Another specialty of the region is Mongolian Hotpot; a simple one-pot dish which suited the nomadic way of life. Other regional specialties are made with local resources – carp from the Yellow River, king prawns and yellow croakers from the coast of Shandong, and not forgetting the aromatics – garlic, leeks, and scallions.

Duck pears – like a duck's head

Mu Shu Pork: stir-fried tiger lily buds, scrambled egg, black fungus, and shredded pork – eaten with pancakes.

When we talk of Beijing cooking, we really mean Shandong food. As one of the most important agricultural areas of China, Shandong supplies Beijing with most of its food; its main crops are wheat, barley, sorghum, millet, and corn as well as soybeans and peanuts. Additionally, fisheries are widely developed along the Yellow River and the north China coast, particularly the rocky Shandong peninsula where the specialties are fish, prawns, shellfish, abalones, sea slugs, and sea urchins. Fruits are also a Shandong specialty, and wines and beers – especially the famous Tsingtao beer (see p146) – are exported worldwide.

The art of pouring tea, shown in a Beijing restaurant

TIANJIN

THE THIRD largest city of China after Shanghai and Beijing, Tianjin occupies a rather unique position in Chinese cuisine. As a treaty port, Tianjin has over the years acquired a cosmopolitan nature in many aspects of its daily life, particularly that of Russian and Japanese influences, hence you will find a large number of beef and lamb dishes here.

Some of the wide variety of foods on display at a night food market

MONGOLIAN & MUSLIM CUISINE

THE CHINESE Muslim school of cooking derives mainly from the Hui, the Uighur, and the Mongolian minorities. The Hui are distributed throughout China, but their traditional area of settlement is in the north. The Uighur are mainly in the northwest, while the Mongols are traditionally nomadic and spread throughout the north. As Muslims they do not eat pork, so beef, lamb, and mutton cooked on skewers are important foods in their daily diet. Hand-made noodles and flat breads also feature.

ON THE MENU

Drunken Empress Chicken

Supposedly named after Yang Guifei, an imperial concubine overly fond of her alcohol.

Stir-fried Kidney-flowers

These are actually pork kidneys criss-cross cut into "flowers" and stir-fried with bamboo shoots, water chestnuts, and black fungus.

Fish Slices with Wine Sauce

Deep-fried fish fillet braised in a wine sauce.

Phoenix-tail Prawns

King prawn tails coated in batter and bread crumbs, then deep-fried.

Lamb in Sweet Bean Sauce

Tender fillet of lamb sliced and cooked in sweet bean paste with vinegar to give it that classic sweet and sour taste.

Hot Candied Apples

A popular Chinese dessert.

Lamb & Scallions: sliced lamb rapidly stir-fried with garlic, leeks or scallions, and sweet bean paste.

Mongolian Hotpot: thinly sliced lamb, vegetables, and noodles dipped in boiling water and an array of sauces.

Sweet & Sour Carp: the quintessential Shandong dish traditionally made with Yellow River carp.

BEIJING

THE CAPITAL OF THE People's Republic of China is one of the world's largest cities with a population of over 14 million. Beijing first became an imperial capital during the Mongol Yuan dynasty (1279–1368), and both the Ming and Qing emperors ruled from the Forbidden City at its heart. Today, an all-pervading spirit of change has added an exciting new dimension to the city.

Expanding in concentric rings from the Forbidden City at its core, the grid-like layout of modern-day Beijing still echoes its Ming dynasty blueprint. Old Beijing survives in its temples, palaces, and old alleyways (hutong) that crisscross the city outside the second ring road, which itself charts the loop of the demolished City Wall. Within this ancient outline are huge avenues, vaulting flyovers, towering skyscrapers, shopping malls, and the vast expanse of Tian'an Men Square. The city that the 13th-century Mongol warlord Genghis Khan once put to the torch is undergoing a new, dramatic facelift, as a result of a culmination of a quarter-century of reform, the pressures of a growing population, and the 2008 Olympics. Beijing is a microcosm of modern China and all its contradictions, a bustling mix of affluent shoppers, trendy youths, beggars, and plain-clothes police. Bars and cafés proliferate, and entertainment options range from traditional Beijing opera and spectacular acrobatics to modern jazz and even raucous punk clubs. And in the capital's many restaurants, China's diverse cuisine can be sampled across its range – from the fierce spices of Sichuan to the dainty morsels of Cantonese dim sum. On the roads, the city's army of bicycles may be under pressure from the huge influx of new cars, but for the time being pedal power is still one of the best ways to get around Beijing.

Pleasure cruise on Kunming Lake, Summer Palace

Exploring Beijing

BEIJING'S MOST significant sights and districts are marked on this map. At the core is the Forbidden City, with Tian'an Men Square and Qian Men to the south, and the shopping district of Wangfujing to its east. North of the Forbidden City stand the Drum and Bell Towers and farther northeast is the Buddhist Lama Temple. North of Beihai Park, the Mansion of Prince Gong stands in a historic hutong quarter, the old alleyways that riddle the city. To the south, Tian Tan, known as the Temple of Heaven, is a majestic example of Ming dynasty design. Beijing's environs are also dotted with sites including the magnificent Great Wall and the scenic Ming Tombs.

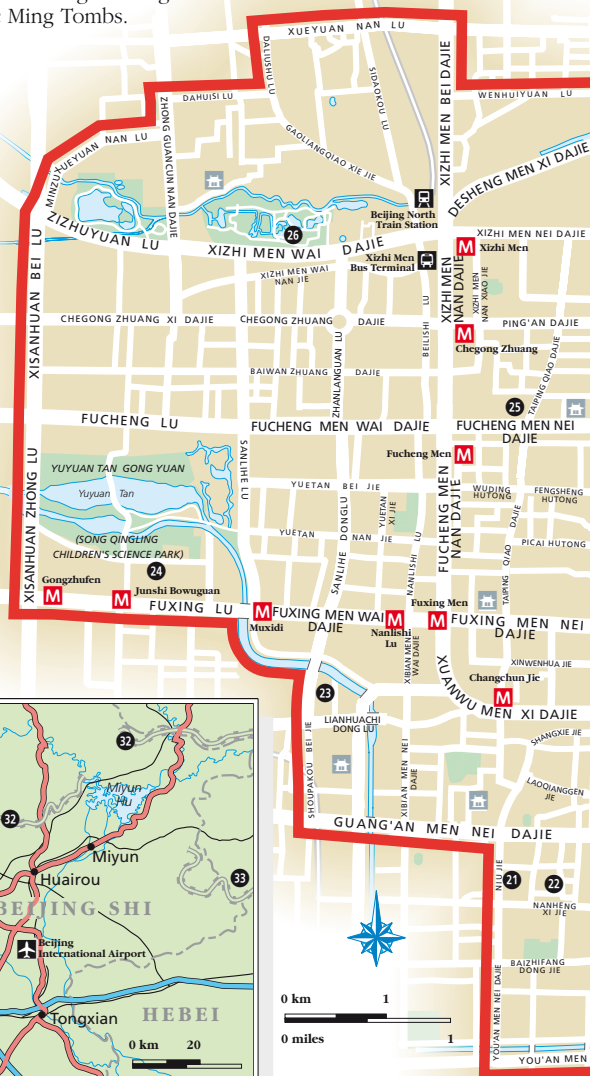

LOCATOR MAP

See Map pp70-71

KEY

-  Street-by-Street area: see pp82-3
-  International airport
-  Train station
-  Long distance bus station
-  Subway station
-  City bus station
-  Tourist information
-  Hospital
-  Post office
-  Temple
-  Church
-  Mosque
-  National highway
-  Major road
-  Provincial border
-  Great Wall of China

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Historic Buildings, Sites & Neighborhoods

- Ancient Observatory 17
- Chuandixia 38
- Dazhalan & Liulichang 4
- Drum & Bell Towers 10
- Eastern Qing Tombs 35
- Forbidden City pp86-9 6
- Great Wall of China pp106-9 32
- Mansion of Prince Gong 9
- Marco Polo Bridge 34
- Ming Tombs pp104-5 31
- Peking Man Site 36
- Qian Men 2
- Summer Palace pp100-2 27

- Tian'an Men Square pp82-3 1
- Underground City 3
- Yuanming Yuan 28

Museums & Galleries

- Beijing Natural History Museum 19
- National Art Museum of China 15
- Chinese Military History Museum 24
- Southeast Corner Watchtower 18

Temples, Churches & Mosques

- Confucius Temple 12
- Cow Street Mosque 21
- Dong Yue Miao 14
- Fayuan Temple 22
- Great Bell Temple 25
- Lama Temple 11
- Miaoying Temple White Dagoba 25
- South Cathedral 5
- Tanzhe Temple 35
- Temple of Heaven pp96-7 20
- White Clouds Temple 23

Areas of Natural Beauty

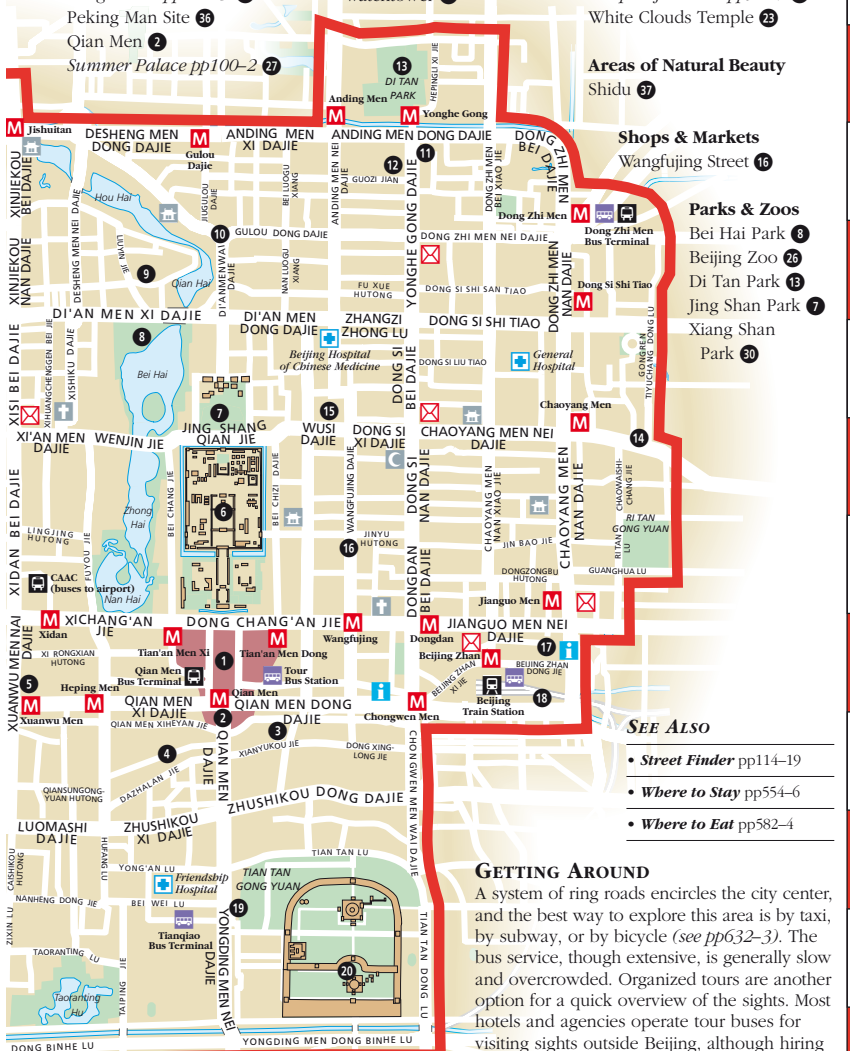

- Shidu 37

Shops & Markets

- Wangfujing Street 16

Parks & Zoos

- Bei Hai Park 8
- Beijing Zoo 26
- Di Tan Park 13
- Jing Shan Park 7
- Xiang Shan Park 30

SEE ALSO

- Street Finder pp114-19
- Where to Stay pp554-6
- Where to Eat pp582-4

GETTING AROUND

A system of ring roads encircles the city center, and the best way to explore this area is by taxi, by subway, or by bicycle (see pp632-3). The bus service, though extensive, is generally slow and overcrowded. Organized tours are another option for a quick overview of the sights. Most hotels and agencies operate tour buses for visiting sights outside Beijing, although hiring a taxi for the day allows for greater flexibility.

Street-by-Street: Tian'an Men Square ❶

天安门广场

Chairman
Mao

TIAN'AN MEN GUANGCHANG – the Square of the Gate of Heavenly Peace – is a vast open concrete expanse at the heart of modern Beijing. With Mao's Mausoleum at its focal point, and bordered by 1950s Communist-style buildings and ancient gates from Beijing's now levelled city walls, the square is usually filled with visitors strolling about as kites flit overhead. The square has also traditionally served as a stage for popular demonstrations and is most indelibly associated with the student protests of 1989 and their gory climax.

Cyclists along Chang'an Jie

Great Hall of the People

Seat of the Chinese legislature, the vast auditorium and banqueting halls are open for part of the day except when the National People's Congress is in session.

★ Qian Men

Also called Zhengyang Men, this tower formed a double gate along with Jian Lou. It now houses a museum on the history of Beijing.

Jian Lou or Arrow Tower, like Zhengyang Men, was first built in the Ming dynasty.

★ Mao's Mausoleum

Flanked by revolutionary statues, the building contains the embalmed body of Chairman Mao. His casket, raised from its refrigerated chamber, is on view mornings and afternoons.

★ Tian'an Men

Mao proclaimed the founding of the People's Republic of China on 1 October 1949 from this Ming dynasty gate, where his huge portrait still remains.

LOCATOR MAP

See Street Finder Map 2

The national flag is raised at dawn and lowered at dusk every day.

Bags, coats, and cameras must be left here before visiting Mao's Mausoleum.

Monument to the People's Heroes

Erected in 1958, the granite monument is decorated with bas-reliefs of episodes from China's revolutionary history and calligraphy from Communist veterans Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai.

China National Museum

Built in 1959, this building was originally home to the Museum of Chinese History and the Museum of the Revolution, now merged. The same exhibits are on display (and the same propagandist lens). The halls also host exhibitions from other world class museums.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Mao's Mausoleum
- ★ Qian Men
- ★ Tian'an Men

Zhengyang Men, Qian Men – part of Beijing's central fortifications

Qian Men ②

前门

Qian Men Dajie. Map 3 C2. M Qian Men. ☐ 8:30am–4pm daily. **📷

QIAN MEN OR the Front Gate consists of two towers, Zhengyang Men, on the southern edge of Tian'an Men Square, and Jian Lou just across Qian Men Dajie to the south. Zhengyang Men (Facing the Sun Gate) was the most imposing of the nine gates of the inner city wall that divided Beijing's imperial quarters in the Forbidden City from the "Chinese City," where, during the Manchu Qing dynasty, the Chinese inhabitants lived.

Rising 131 ft (40 m), the gate stands on the north-south axis that runs through Tian'an Men and the Forbidden City. Its museum has dioramas of the old city walls, and photographs of Beijing's old streets.

The 125 ft (38 m) high Jian Lou (Arrow Tower), originally built in 1439, has 94 windows that were used for shooting arrows. Both the Jian Lou and Zhengyang Men were badly damaged by fire during the Boxer Rebellion (see p433). In 1916, the enceinte, a semi-circular wall that connected the two towers, was demolished to make way for a road. Jian Lou is now closed to the public. Across the road to the east, the Old Railway Station was built by the British and now houses a number of shops. The surrounding area comprises the city's old shopping district, with alleys filled with specialty stores. Numerous silk and cloth shops, food stalls and cinemas make it a lively area worth exploring.

📍 Zhengyang Men

☎ (010) 6525 3176. ☐ daily. **📷

Underground City ③

北京地下城

62 Xi Damochang Jie. Map 4 D2.

M Qian Men. ☎ (010) 6702 2657.

☐ daily. 📷 📱 (flash required).

AT THE HEIGHT of the Sino-Soviet rift in the 1960s, Mao Zedong gave orders to carve out a vast network of bombproof tunnels beneath Beijing. Work on this subterranean hideaway was done by hand, and the resulting maze of tunnels was equipped with weapons, hospitals, and large stocks of water and food. Most of the labyrinth's entry points are hard to find, but the one most easily accessible is on Xi Damochang Jie, an alley southeast of Qian Men. Guides show visitors around a circuit of dank tunnels, where signs illustrate the earlier functions of rooms, and point the way to surface landmarks. Unlit passageways branch off from the main circuit, but many are either damaged or blocked, and it is dangerous to wander off alone. Old ventilation shafts and flood-proof doors can be seen. Rumor has it that a tunnel once connected the Zhongnanhai, the Communist Party Headquarters, to the Western Hills, 12 miles (20 km) west of the city, for the evacuation of China's leaders in the event of an emergency.

War Hospital sign, Beijing Underground City

BEIJING'S CITY WALLS

The earliest defensive walls around Beijing (then called Yanjing, later Zhongdu) were erected in the Jin dynasty (1115–1234) and modeled on the wall around Kaifeng (see p150). The Mongol Kublai Khan rebuilt Zhongdu, naming it Dadu, and encompassed it with a 19-mile (30-km) wall. It was only during the Ming era (1368–1644) that the walls took on their final shape of an Outer Wall with seven gates, and an Inner Wall with nine gates. The magnificent Inner Wall was 38 ft (11.5 m) high and 64 ft (19.5 m) wide. The walls and most of their gates were unfortunately demolished in the 1950s and 60s to make way for roads. Of the inner wall, only Zhengyang Men and Desheng Men survive, while the outer wall retains only Dongbian Men (see p95). The old gates live on as place names on the second ring road, and as the names of stations on the Beijing Underground Loop line.

Arrow Gate of Qian Men, Inner Wall

Shop selling Communist memorabilia, Dazhalan Jie

Dazhalan & Liulichang 4

大栅栏和琉璃厂

Map 3 C2. M Qian Men.

SOUTH OF QIAN MEN are the narrow and lively butong (see p91) of the old Chinese quarter. The inner city wall and its gates separated the "Inner City" containing the imperial quarters of the Manchu emperors from the "Chinese City," where the Chinese lived apart from their Qing overlords. Today, the district buzzes with shops, cinemas, and restaurants. Running west off the northern end of Qian Men Dajie is Dazhalan Jie, whose name "Big Barrier Street" refers to the now-demolished gates that were closed every night to fence off the residents from Qian Men and the Inner City. The area was damaged during the Boxer Rebellion and later restored. There are butong tours by rickshaw – drivers just wait in the street in Dazhalan.

The area is a great place for browsing, and has several quaint Qing-era specialty shops. Located down the first alley on the left from Dazhalan Jie is the century-old pickle shop Liubiju, selling a vast array of pungent pickles.

Ruifuxiang, on the right-hand side of Dazhalan, dates from 1893 and is renowned for its silks and traditional Chinese garments. On the south side of Dazhalan Jie is the Chinese medicine shop Tongrentang Pharmacy, which has been in business since 1669 and enjoyed imperial patronage. On the same side of the road, the Zhangyiyuan Chazhuang or Zhangyiyuan Teashop has been supplying fine teas since the early 20th century. To the west of Dazhalan Jie, Liulichang Jie, with its restored buildings and many stores, is a fascinating place to wander around. It has everything from ceramics, bric-à-brac, paintings, lacquerware, and antique Chinese books to Cultural Revolution-era memorabilia. However, beware of so-called "antiques" which should be judiciously examined before buying.

South Cathedral 5

南堂

141 Qian Men Xi Dajie. Map 3 A2.

M Xuanwu Men.

THE FIRST CATHOLIC church to be built in Beijing, South Cathedral (Nan Tang) stands close to the Xuanwu Men underground station, on the site of Jesuit Matteo Ricci's former residence. Ricci was the first Jesuit missionary to reach Beijing. Arriving in 1601, he sent gifts of European curiosities such as clocks, mathematical instruments, and a world map to the Wanli emperor, thus gaining his goodwill, and was eventually given permission to establish a church.

Like many of China's churches, this restored building has suffered much devastation. Construction first began in 1605, and it subsequently burned down in 1775. It was rebuilt a century later, only to be destroyed once again during the Boxer Rebellion of 1900. The cathedral was rebuilt in 1904. Also known as St. Mary's Church, it is the city's largest functioning Catholic cathedral, and has regular services in a variety of languages including Chinese, English, and Latin. Service timings are posted on the noticeboard. A small gift shop is located near the south gate.

Cyclists on restored Liulichang Jie

Stained glass at the South Cathedral (Nan Tang)

Forbidden City 6

故宫

Decorative wall relief

FORMING THE VERY HEART OF BEIJING, the Forbidden City, officially known as the Palace Museum (Gugong), is China's most magnificent architectural complex and was completed in 1420. The huge palace is a compendium of imperial architecture and a lasting monument of dynastic China from which 24 emperors ruled for nearly 500 years. The symbolic center of the Chinese universe, the palace was the exclusive domain of the imperial court and dignitaries until the 1920s. It was fully opened to the public in 1949.

★ Golden Water

Five marble bridges, symbolizing the five cardinal virtues of Confucianism, cross the Golden Water, which flows from west to east in a course designed to resemble the jade belt worn by officials.

OUTER COURT

At the center of the Forbidden City, the Outer Court is easily its most impressive part. Most of the other buildings in the complex were there to service this city within a city.

Meridian Gate

From the balcony the emperor would review his armies and perform ceremonies marking the start of a new calendar.

Chinese Lions

Pairs of lions guard the entrances of halls. The male is portrayed with a ball under his paw, while the female has a lion cub.

Storehouses

Offices of the imperial secretariat.

Gate of Supreme Harmony

Originally used for receiving visitors, the 78-ft (24-m) high, double-eaved hall was later used for banquets during the Qing dynasty (1644-1912).

★ Marble Carriageway
The central ramp carved with dragons chasing pearls among clouds was reserved for the emperor.

Hall of Preserving Harmony

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

North of Tian'an Men Square.
 Map 1 C5. ☎ (010) 513 2255.
 ☑ Apr-Oct: 8:30am-5pm daily;
 Nov-Mar: 8:30am-4:30pm daily.
 📶 📱 📷 📺 📺
 🌐 www.dpm.org.cn

Bronze cauldrons were filled with water in case of fire.

Gate of Heavenly Purity

Hall of Middle Harmony received the emperor before official ceremonies.

Imperial sundial

★ Hall of Supreme Harmony
The largest hall in the palace, this was used for major occasions such as the enthronement of an emperor. Inside the hall, the ornate throne sits beneath a fabulously colored ceiling.

Roof Guardians
An odd number of these figures, all associated with water, are supposed to protect the building from fire.

STAR FEATURES

- ★ Golden Water
- ★ Marble Carriageway
- ★ Hall of Supreme Harmony

DESIGN BY NUMBERS

The harmonious principle of yin and yang is the key to Chinese design. As odd numbers represent yang (the preferred masculine element associated with the emperor), the numbers three, five, seven, and the ultimate odd number – nine, recur in architectural details. It is said that the Forbidden City has 9,999 rooms and, as nine times nine is especially fortunate, the doors for imperial use usually contain 81 brass studs.

Palace door with a lucky number of studs

Exploring the Forbidden City

A SHORT DISTANCE NORTH through the Gate of Heavenly Purity lies the Inner Court with three impressive inner palaces. Further on through the Imperial Flower Garden stands the Shenwu Gate, the north gate of the Forbidden City, an exit from the palace that leads to a walk across to Jing Shan Park (see p90). On the western and eastern flanks of the Inner Court, it is also possible to explore numerous halls, some of which house museum collections (entry fee payable).

The Pavilion of a Thousand Autumns in the Imperial Gardens

☞ The Inner Court

Beyond the Hall of Preserving Harmony (Outer Court) lies a large but narrow courtyard with gates leading to the open areas east and west of the Outer Court and a main gate, the Gate of Heavenly Purity, leading to the Inner Court. Here lie three splendid palaces, mirroring those of the Outer Court but on a smaller scale. The double-eaved Palace of Heavenly Purity was used as the imperial sleeping quarters and for the reception of officials. It was here that the last Ming emperor, Chongzhen, wrote his final missive in red ink, before getting drunk, killing his 15-year-old daughter and his concubines, and then hanging himself on Jing Shan (see p90), just north of the palace, as peasant rebels swarmed through the capital. Beyond lie the Hall of Union, used as a throne room by the empress, and the Palace of Earthly Tranquillity, the living quarters of the Ming empresses. During the Qing dynasty, the hall was used for Manchurian shaman rites, including animal sacrifice.

☞ The Imperial Gardens

The Imperial Flower Garden, north of the three inner palaces and the Gate of Earthly Tranquillity, dates from the reign of the Ming Yongle emperor. It is symmetrically laid out with pavilions, temples, and halls as well as a rock garden and ancient trees. On the west and east sides of the garden are the charming Thousand Autumns Pavilion and Ten Thousand Springs Pavilion, each topped with a circular roof. Positioned centrally in the north of the garden, the Hall of Imperial Peace formerly served as a temple, and, on top of the lofty rockery in the northeast of the garden, the Imperial View Pavilion rises with long views over the gardens and beyond. During the Qing dynasty, sacrifices were performed in the gardens on the seventh day of the seventh lunar month (China's equivalent of Valentine's Day) by the emperor, empress, and imperial concubines to a pair of stars that represent lovers.

☞ Eastern Palaces

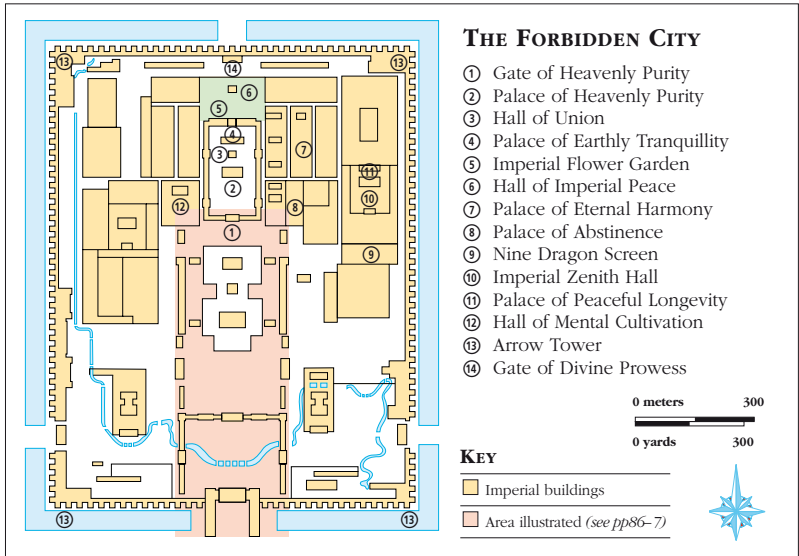

On the east side of the Inner Court lies a much closer knit series of smaller palaces and courtyards formerly used as the residences of imperial concubines. Nowadays, some of these areas serve as museums of jade, paintings, enamels, and antique collectibles, including the impressive Clock Exhibition Hall (housed in the Palace of Eternal Harmony) with its sizeable and fascinating display. Note that these are occasionally moved to other halls and at some an entry fee is payable. Among the collection are elaborate Chinese, British, and French timepieces, donated or collected by Qing emperors. In the southeast of the inner court is the Palace of Abstinence, where the emperor fasted before sacrificial ceremonies. Further southeast stands a beautiful Nine Dragon Screen, a 100-ft (31-m) long spirit wall made from richly glazed tiles and similar to the screen in Beihai Park (see p90). Screens were used to shield areas from sight and allow visitors to make themselves presentable. The screen leads on to the jewelry displays housed in a series of halls in the northeast of the complex, including the Imperial Zenith Hall and the Palace of Peaceful Longevity. These halls contain an array of decorative objects and tools used by the emperor. Northwest of the Palace of Peaceful Longevity is its flower garden, a tranquil strip of rockeries and pavilions.

Imperial five-clawed dragons on a glazed Nine Dragon Screen

CHINESE DRAGONS

The Chinese dragon is a curious hybrid of sometimes many animal parts – snake's body, deer horns, bull's ears, hawk's claws and fish scales. Endowed with magical characteristics, it can fly, swim, change into other animals, bring rainfall and ward off evil spirits. The five-clawed dragon represented the power of the emperor, and therefore could only adorn his imperial buildings. The Chinese dragon is a beneficent beast offering protection and good luck, hence its depiction on screens and marble carriageways, and its significance, even today, in festivals such as Chinese New Year.

Tile relief by the Hall of Mental Cultivation

Western Palaces

Much of the western flank of the Forbidden City is closed to visitors, but the halls west of the three inner palaces are accessible. The Hall of Mental Cultivation was used by Yongzheng (see p109) for his residence, rather than the Hall of Heavenly Purity, where his father, Kangxi, had lived for 60 years. The East Warm Chamber of the Hall of Mental Cultivation was the site of the formal abdication by Henry Pu Yi, the last emperor, on February 12, 1912 (see p446).

The Palace Walls

The wall around the Forbidden City is marked at each corner by an elaborate Arrow Tower, notable for its many eaves. The northern gate of the palace is called the Gate of Divine Prowess or Shenwu Men, and served as a combined bell and drum tower. The palace wall was enclosed within a moat and another wall ran around the grounds of the Imperial City. Beyond this lay the inner and outer city walls of Beijing. Damaged in the 1950s and 1960s, only a few parts of the Imperial City wall survive, while the city walls have all but vanished. However, the wall of the Forbidden City and its four gates have survived intact and can still be admired.

One of four arrow towers at each corner of the palace wall

Bei Hai with Jing Shan's summit in the background

Jing Shan Park 7

景山

1 Wenjin Jie, Xicheng. Map 1 C4.

M Tian'an Men Xi. C (010) 6404 4071. ☐ daily. **🚶

SITUATED ON Beijing's north-south axis, Jing Shan Park has its origins in the Yuan dynasty (1279–1368). Its hill was created from earth that was excavated while building the palace moat during the reign of the Ming Yongle emperor. In the early years of the Ming dynasty it was known as Wansui Shan (Long Life Hill), but was renamed Jing Shan (View or Prospect Hill) in the Qing era. Foreign residents also referred to it as Coal Hill (Mei Shan), supposedly because coal was stored at the foot of the hill although other theories exist. Until the fall of the Qing, Jing Shan was linked to the Forbidden City and was restricted to imperial use. The hill's purpose was to protect the imperial palaces within the Forbidden City from malign northern influences, which brought death and destruction according to classical feng shui. However, it failed to save the last Ming emperor Chongzhen, who hanged himself from a locust tree (buaishu) in the park in 1644, when rebel troops forced their way into Beijing. Another tree, planted after the original tree was cut down, marks the spot in the park's southeast. The park is dotted with several pavilions and halls, but the highlight of any visit is the superb view of the Forbidden City from the hill's Wancheng Ting (Wancheng Pavilion).

Bei Hai Park 8

北海公园

1 Wenjin Jie, Xicheng. Map 1 C4.

M Tian'an Men Xi. C (010) 6403 1102. ☐ daily. **🚶

White Dagoba, Bei Hai Park

AN IMPERIAL garden for more than 1,000 years, Bei Hai Park was opened to the public in 1925. Filled with artificial hills, pavilions, and temples, it is associated with Kublai Khan, who redesigned it during the Mongol Yuan dynasty. The Tuancheng (Round City), near the south entrance, has a huge, decorated jade urn belonging to him.

The park is named after its extensive lake, Bei Hai, whose southern end is bordered by the inaccessible Zhongnanhai, the Communist Party Headquarters. In the middle of Bei Hai, Jade Island was supposedly made from the earth excavated while creating the lake. It is topped by the 118-ft (36-m) high White Dagoba, a Tibetan-style stupa built to honor the visit of the fifth Dalai Lama in 1651. Beneath the huge dagoba, Yongan Si comprises a series of ascending halls. The lake's northern shore has several sights, including the massive Nine Dragon Screen, an 89-ft (27-m) long spirit wall made of colorful glazed tiles. Depicting nine intertwining dragons, it was designed to obstruct evil spirits. The Xiaoxitian Temple lies to the west.

Mansion of Prince Gong 9

恭王府

17 Qianhai Xi Jie, Xicheng.

Map 1 B3. M Gulou. C (010) 6616 8149. ☐ 8:30am–5pm daily. **🚶

BEIJING'S MOST complete example of a historic mansion is situated in a charming butong district west of Qian Hai. It was supposedly the inspiration behind the residence portrayed by Cao Xueqin in his classic 18th-century novel Dream of the Red Chamber (see pp28–9). Built during the reign of the Qianlong emperor, the house is extensive and its charming garden is a pattern of open corridors and pavilions, dotted with pools and gateways. Originally built for Heshun, a Manchu official and the emperor's favorite, the residence was appropriated by the imperial household after he was found guilty of using regal motifs in his mansion design. It was later bequeathed to Prince Gong in the Xianfeng emperor's reign (r.1851–61). The house is popular with tour groups, so early morning is the best time to visit and afterwards, the local butong can be explored. In summer, Beijing opera is performed in its Grand Opera House.

Elaborate arched gateway, Mansion of Prince Gong

Beijing's Courtyard Houses

AT FIRST GLANCE, Beijing seems a thoroughly modern city, but a stroll through the city's alleyways (hutong) reveals the charm of old Beijing. These hutong – weaving across much of central Beijing – are where many Beijing residents (Beijingren) still live. Typically running east to west, hutong are created by the walls of courtyard houses (sibeyuan). Formerly the homes of officials and the well-to-do,

Washing the laundry in public most are now state-owned. The hutong are very easy to find, try the alleyways between the main streets south of Qian Men, or around Hou Hai and Qian Hai. The modernization of Beijing has destroyed many traditional sibeyuan, but some have been cleaned up and have again become homes. A few have been converted into hotels (see pp554-6), allowing the visitor a closer look at this disappearing world.

Crowded courtyards

As space became an issue in Beijing, additional buildings filled in the large courtyards. Several families may be living together in one siheyuan.

The main hall was the most northerly and usually reserved for the eldest of the family, such as the grandparents.

Wall adds privacy and keeps out spirits as they are unable to turn corners.

The open courtyard lets in both the sunlight and the wind and cold.

The number of halls and courtyards determines the grandeur of the residence.

Walls were important to the Chinese psyche – even in the secure capital, they felt the need to retreat behind them.

Entrance is at the southeastern corner as prescribed by feng shui.

Social housing

With several families living together, a strong community spirit is fostered, while the hutong outside becomes an extension of the home.

Typical Beijing hutong

You can take organized rickshaw tours of the hutong, sometimes with a visit to the Mansion of Prince Gong (see p90), but it can be more fun to explore them by yourself.

A view of the Bell Tower from Beijing's Drum Tower

Drum & Bell Towers ⑩

鼓楼

Northern end of Dī'an Men Wai Dajie, Dongcheng. Map 1 C2. M Gulou.

☎ (010) 6401 2674. 🕒 daily. 📷

LOCATED ON THE north-south meridian that bisects the Forbidden City and Tian'an Men Square, the Drum Tower (Gu Lou) rises up from a historic Beijing hutong district (see pp91). The squat structure seen today was originally built in 1420 during the reign of the Ming Yongle emperor. Visitors can clamber up the steep stairs to look out over the city and inspect the 25 drums there. The one large and 24 smaller drums were beaten to mark the hours of the day. According to the official Chinese accounts, the original drums were destroyed by the foreign soldiers of the international army that relieved Beijing during the Boxer Rebellion (see p433).

A short walk north of the Drum Tower, the Bell Tower (Zhong Lou) is an edifice from 1745, which replaced an earlier tower that had burnt down. Suspended within the tower is a 15-ft (4.5-m) high and 42-ton (42,674-kg) bell, that was cast in 1420. During Spring Festival (see pp42–3), visitors can pay to ring the bell for good luck.

Lama Temple ⑩

雍和宫

12 Yonghe Gong Dajie, Dongcheng.

Map 2 E2. M Yonghe Gong.

☎ (010) 6404 4499. 🕒 daily. 📷

BEIJING'S MOST spectacular temple complex, the Lama Temple (Yonghegong) was constructed during the 17th century and converted into a Tibetan lamasery in 1744. Its five main halls are a stylistic blend of Han, Mongol, and Tibetan motifs. The first hall has a traditional display – the plump laughing Buddha, Milefo, is back-to-back with Wei Tuo, the Protector of Buddhist Doctrine, and flanked by the Four Heavenly Kings. Yonghe Hall beyond has three manifestations of Buddha, flanked by 18 luohan – those freed from the cycle of rebirth. Even farther back, the Tibetan-styled Falun Hall or Hall of the Wheel of Law has a statue of Tsongkhapa, the founder of the Yellow Hat sect of Tibetan Buddhism (see pp522–3).

The highlight, however, is encapsulated within the towering Wanfu Pavilion (Wanfu Ge) – a vast 55-ft (17-m) high statue of Maitreya (the Future Buddha), carved from a single block of

The striking main gateway of the colorful Lama Temple

Statue of Confucius at the main entrance, Confucius Temple sandalwood. The splendid exhibition of Tibetan Buddhist objects at the temple's rear includes statues of the deities Padmasambhava (Guru Rinpoche), and the Tibetan equivalent of Guanyin, Chenresig, alongside ritual objects such as the sceptre-like dorje (thunderbolt) and dril bu (bell), symbols of the male and female energies. Few captions are in English.

Confucius Temple 12

孔庙

13 Guozijian Jie, Dongcheng.
Map 2 E2. M Yonghe Gong.
C (010) 8401 1977. O daily. **🚶

ADJACENT TO the Lama Temple, the Confucius Temple is the largest in China outside Qufu, the philosopher's birthplace in Shandong province (see p142). The alley leading to the temple has a fine pailou (decorative archway), few of which survive in Beijing. First built in 1302 during the Mongol Yuan dynasty, the temple was expanded in 1906 in the reign of Emperor Guangxu. It is a tranquil place that offers respite from the city's bustle. Around 200 ancient stelae stand in the silent courtyard in front of the main hall (Dacheng Dian), inscribed with the names of those who successfully passed the imperial civil service exams. Additional stelae are propped up on the backs of bixi (mythical cross between a tortoise and a dragon), within pavilions surrounded by cypress trees. On a marble terrace in the main hall are statues of Confucius and some of his disciples.

Di Tan Park 13

地坛公园

North of the Lama Temple, Dongcheng. Map 2 E1.
M Yonghe Gong. O daily. **🚶

AN IDEAL PLACE TO stroll amidst trees, Di Tan Park was named after the Temple of Earth (Di Tan), which was the venue for imperial sacrifices. The park's altar (Fangze Tan) dates to the Ming dynasty and its square shape represents the earth. Under the Ming, five main altars were established at the city's cardinal points – Tian Tan (Temple of Heaven) in the south, Di Tan in the north, Ri Tan (Temple of the Sun) in the east, Yue Tan (Temple of the Moon) in the west, and Sheji Tan (Temple of Land and Grain) in the center. Mirroring ancient ceremonies, a lively temple fair (miaohui) is held during the Chinese New Year (see pp42–3), to welcome the spring planting season and appease the gods.

Guardian at entrance, Dong Yue Miao

Dong Yue Miao 14

东岳庙

141 Chaoyang Men Wai Dajie, Chaoyang. Map 2 F4. M Chaoyang Men. C (010) 6551 0151.
O Tue–Sun. **🚶

ON BEIJING'S eastern side near the Workers' Stadium, the mesmerising Dong Yue Miao takes its name from the Daoist Eastern Peak, Dong Yue, also known as Tai Shan (see pp144–5). It is fronted by a fabulous glazed Ming dynasty paifang inscribed with the characters "Zhisi Daizong," meaning "offer sacrifices to Mount Tai (Tai Shan) in good order."

This colorful and active temple, dating to the early 14th century, was restored at considerable cost in 1999, and is tended by Daoist monks. The main courtyard leads into the Hall of Tai Shan, where there are statues of the God of Tai Shan and his attendants. The greatest attractions here are over 70 "Departments," filled with vivid Daoist gods and demons, whose functions are explained in English captions. In Daoist lore, the spirits of the dead go to Tai Shan, and many Departments dwell on the afterlife. The Department for Increasing Wealth and Longevity, for example, offers cheerful advice.

Corn laid out to form Chinese characters, temple festival, Di Tan Park

National Art Museum of China 15

中国美术馆

1 Wusi Dajie, Dongcheng district. Map
2 D4. M Wangfujing. ☎ (010) 6401
6234. ☑ daily, last entry 4pm. 📷

HOSTING A number of exhibitions of Chinese and international art, as well as occasional photographic displays, the National Art Museum of China (Zhongguo Meishuguan) has 14 halls spread over three levels. This quite ordinary building holds an exciting range of Chinese modern art, which suffers less censorship than other media, such as film or literature. Magazines such as Beijing Talk and That's Beijing carry details of current and forthcoming exhibitions.

Wangfujing Street 16

王府井

Map 4 D1. M Wangfujing. Night Market ☑ 5:30pm–10pm daily. St. Joseph's Church ☎ (010) 6524 0634. ☑ early morning during services.

BUSTLING Wangfujing Street (Wangfujing Dajie), Beijing's main shopping street, is filled with department stores and giant malls such as the Sun Dong'an Plaza (see p112). Everything from curios, objets d'art, antiques, clothes, and books are available here. The huge Foreign Language Bookstore is a good place to buy a more detailed map of

The imposing façade of St. Joseph's Church, Wangfujing Street

Beijing. The street has a lively mixture of pharmacies, laundry and dyeing shops, as well as stores selling silk, tea, and shoes.

However, the street's highlight is the Night Market, with its endless variety of traditional Chinese snacks, including skewers of beef, and more exotic morsels such as scorpions. Other offerings include pancakes, fruit, shrimps, squid, flat bread, and more. The Wangfujing Snack Street, south of the Night Market, also has a range of colorful restaurants.

The impressive triple-domed St. Joseph's Church, known as the East Cathedral, is situated at 74 Wangfujing Dajie. One of the city's most important churches, it has recently been restored at a cost of US$2 million. It was built on the site of the former residence of Jesuit Adam Schall von Bell (1591–1669) in 1655, and has been rebuilt a number of times after being successively destroyed by earthquake, fire, and then during the Boxer Rebellion. It is fronted by an open courtyard and an arched gateway. One of the best times to view the church is at night, when it is illuminated.

The Ancient Observatory 17

古观象台

Map 4 F1. M Beijing Zhan. ☎ (010) 6524 2202. ☑ 9am–4pm daily. 📷

Ecliptic armillary sphere, Ancient Observatory

BEIJING'S ANCIENT Observatory (Gu Guanxiangtai) stands on a platform alongside a flyover off Jianguo Men Nei Dajie. Dating to 1442, it is one of the oldest in the world. A Yuan dynasty (1279–1368) observatory was also located here, but the structure that survives today was built after the Ming emperors relocated their capital from Nanjing to Beijing.

In the early 17th century, the Jesuits, led by Matteo Ricci (1552–1610) and followed by Adam Schall von Bell, impressed the emperor and the imperial astronomers with their scientific knowledge, particularly the accuracy of their predictions of eclipses.

The Belgian Jesuit Father Verbiest (1623–88) was appointed to the Imperial Astronomical Bureau, where he designed a set of astronomical instruments in 1674. Several of these were appropriated by German soldiers during the Boxer Rebellion of 1900, and were only returned after World War I. A collection of reproduction astronomical devices lie in the courtyard on the ground floor, some decorated with fantastic Chinese designs including dragons. Steps lead to the roof, where there are impressive bronze instruments, including an azimuth theodolite, used to measure the altitude of celestial bodies, and an armillary sphere, for measuring the coordinates of planets and stars.

Delicious street food at the Night Market, Wangfujing Street

The atmospheric Red Gate Gallery, Southeast Corner Watchtower

Southeast Corner Watchtower (Dongbian Men)

Southeast Corner Watchtower 18

东边门箭楼

Off Jianguo Men Nan Dajie, Chongwen.

Map 4 F2. M Beijing Zhan.

Red Gate Gallery ☎ (010) 6525 1005. ☒ 10am–5pm daily. 🚶

For exhibition details visit www.redgategallery.com

A SHORT DISTANCE south of the Ancient Observatory, an imposing chunk of the Beijing City Walls (see p85) survives in the form of the 15th-century Southeast Corner Watchtower (Dongbian Men). After climbing onto the Ming dynasty battlements, visitors can walk along the short but impressive stretch of attached wall to admire the towering bastion, pitted with archers' windows, and look down on the city below. The walls of the tower are engraved with graffiti left by soldiers of the international army that marched into the city to liberate the Foreign Legations during the Boxer Rebellion in 1900.

Within its splendid, cavernous interior, accessed from the battlements, the rooms reveal enormous red wooden columns and pillars, crossed with beams. The Red Gate Gallery, one of Beijing's most appealing art galleries, is situated within this superb setting on levels 1 and 4. Originally founded in 1991 by an Australian who came to Beijing to learn Chinese, the gallery exhibits works in a variety of media such as inks, oils, acrylic, lithographs, collages, and photography, by up-and-coming contemporary Chinese and foreign artists. The gallery also runs an artist-in-residence program and forthcoming exhibitions are listed on the gallery's website.

Beijing Natural History Museum 19

自然历史博物馆

126 Tianqiao Nan Dajie, Chongwen.

Map 3 C4. M Qian Men.

☎ (010) 6702 4431.

☒ 8:30am–5pm daily. 🚶

HOUSED IN an enormous 1950s building covered in creepers, this museum is the largest of its type in China, with about 5,000 specimens arranged into three collections: zoology, paleontology, and botany. The most interesting collection is found in the Paleontology Hall which displays a selection of the dinosaurs and prehistoric animals that populated China between 500 million and one million years ago. Exhibits to look out for include the large-handed Lufengosaurus from the early Jurassic period, and a skeleton of the spine-nosed Qingdaosaurus (Tsintaosaurus spinorhinus), from the late Cretaceous period, whose skull sported a horn-like crest. The zoology section displays an abundance of marine, bird and plant life to explain and illustrate the course of evolution from simple aquatic to far more complicated land-based forms. There is also a display devoted to human evolution, however, many of the braver visitors head for the basement that houses a macabre display of cross-sections of human cadavers, pickled corpses, limbs, and organs. The botany collection is less impressive but also much less disturbing.

Dinosaur skeletons in the Paleontology Hall, Natural History Museum

Temple of Heaven 20

天坛

Gate to the Round Altar

COMPLETED DURING the Ming dynasty, the Temple of Heaven, more correctly known as Tian Tan, is one of the largest temple complexes in China and a paradigm of Chinese architectural balance and symbolism. It was here that the emperor would make sacrifices and pray to heaven and his ancestors at the winter solstice. As the Son of Heaven, the emperor could intercede with the gods, represented by their spirit tablets, on behalf of his people and pray for a good harvest. Off-limits to the common people during the Ming and Qing dynasties, the Temple of Heaven is situated in a large and pleasant park that now attracts early morning practitioners of tai ji quan (see p273).

THE TIAN TAN COMPLEX

The main parts of the temple complex are all connected on the favored north-south axis by the Red Step Bridge (an elevated pathway) to form the focal point of the park. The Round Altar is made up of concentric rings of stone slabs in multiples of nine, the most auspicious number. The circular Echo Wall is famed for its supposed ability to carry a whisper from one side of the wall to the other.

- ① Hall of Prayer for Good Harvests
- ② Red Step Bridge
- ③ Echo Wall
- ④ Imperial Vault of Heaven
- ⑤ Round Altar

KEY

■ Area illustrated

Triple gates for emperor (east), officials (west) and gods (center)

Imperial Vault of Heaven, store for the spirit tablets of the gods

The Round Altar, site of the emperor's sacrifice

Qinian Dian, where the emperor prayed for a good harvest

Name plaques are often written in the calligraphy of an emperor.

Circular roof symbolizes the sky.

Red is an imperial color.

Dragon and phoenix motifs inside and out represent the emperor and empress.

STAR FEATURES

★ Caisson Ceiling

★ Dragon Well Pillars

The golden finial is 125 ft (38 m) high and prone to lightning strikes.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Tian Tan Dong Lu (East Gate), Chongwen. Map 4 E4. ☎ (010) 6702 2617. M Qian Men. 🚏 34, 6, 35. Park ☐ 8am–5pm daily. Temple Buildings ☐ 8:30am–5pm. 📷 📱 📺 📺

★ Caisson Ceiling

The splendid circular caisson ceiling has a gilded dragon and phoenix at its center. The ball is entirely built of wood without using a single nail.

Blue represents the color of heaven.

★ Dragon Well Pillars

The roofs of the hall are supported on 28 highly-decorated pillars. At the center, the four huge columns, known as Dragon Well pillars, represent the seasons, while the other 24 smaller pillars symbolize the months in a year plus the two-hour time periods in a day.

Symbolic offerings

Tablets in memory of his ancestors were worshipped by the emperor.

Marble Platform

Three tiers of marble form a circle 300 ft (90 m) in diameter and 20 ft (6 m) high. The balusters on the upper tier are decorated with dragon carvings to signify the imperial nature of the structure.

QIANIAN DIAN

Originally built in 1420, the Qianian Dian, or Hall of Prayer for Good Harvests, is often incorrectly called the Temple of Heaven. There is in fact no single temple building as such at Tian Tan, a more literal translation of which is Altar of Heaven – referring to the whole complex.

Cow Street Mosque ㉑

牛街清真寺

88 Niu Jie, Xuanwu. Map 3 A3.
M Xuanwu Men. ☎ (010) 6353
 2564. ☑ daily. Avoid Fri (holy day) unless practicing. 🚫

BEIJING'S OLDEST and largest mosque dates back to the 10th century. It is located in the city's Hui district, near numerous Muslim restaurants and shops. The Hui, a Chinese Muslim minority group mainly from Ningxia province, are now scattered throughout China and number around 200,000 in Beijing. The men are easily identified by their beards and characteristic white hats.

The Cow Street Mosque is an attractive edifice, with Islamic motifs and Arabic verses decorating its halls and stelae. Its most prized possession is a 300-year-old, hand-written copy of the Koran (Gulanjing).

Astronomical observations and lunar calculations were made from the tower-like Wangyue Lou. The graves of two Yuan dynasty Arab missionaries engraved with Arabic inscriptions can be seen here. The courtyard is lush with greenery, making it an idyllic escape from Beijing's busy streets. Visitors are advised to dress conservatively. Non-Muslims are not allowed to enter the prayer hall.

Buddhist statuary in the main hall, Fayuan Temple

Fayuan Temple ㉒

法源寺

7 Fayuan Si Qian Jie, Xuanwu. Map
 3 A3. M Xuanwu Men. ☎ (010)
 6353 4171. ☑ 8am–5pm daily. 🚫

A SHORT WALK EAST from Cow Street Mosque, the Fayuan Temple dates to AD 696 and is probably the oldest temple in Beijing. It was consecrated by the Tang Taizong emperor (r.626–49), to commemorate the soldiers who perished in an expedition against the northern tribes. The original Tang era buildings were destroyed by a succession of natural disasters, and the current structures date from the Qing era.

The temple's layout is typical of Buddhist temples. Near the gate, the incense burner (lu) is flanked by the Drum and Bell Towers to the east and west. Beyond, the Hall of the Heavenly Kings (Tianwang Dian) is guarded by a pair of bronze lions, and has statues of Milefo (the Laughing Buddha) and his attendant Heavenly Kings. Ancient stelae stand in front of the main hall, where a gilded statue of Sakyamuni (the Historical Buddha) is flanked by bodhisattvas and luoban – those freed from the cycle of rebirth.

At the temple's rear, the Scripture Hall stores sutras, while another hall contains a 16-ft (5-m) Buddha statue. The grounds are busy with monks who attend the temple's Buddhist College.

White Clouds Temple ㉓

白云寺

6 Baiyuanquan Jie, Xibian Men Wai, Xuanwu. M Nanlishi Lu. ☎ (010)
 6340 4812. ☑ daily. 🚫

HOME TO THE China Daoist Association, the White Clouds Temple (Baiyun Guan) was founded in AD 739 and is Beijing's largest Daoist shrine. Known as the Temple of Heavenly Eternity, it was one of the three ancestral halls of the Quanzhen School of Daoism, which focused on right action and the benefits of good karma. Built largely of wood, the temple burnt to the ground in 1166, and since then has been repeatedly destroyed and rebuilt. The structures that survive date largely from the Ming and Qing dynasties. A triple-gated

Resplendent interior of the Cow Street Mosque

Ming pailou (decorative archway) stands at the entrance. It is believed that rubbing the carved monkey on the main gate brings good luck. The major halls are arranged along the central axis, with more halls on either side. The Hall of the Tutelary God has images of four marshals who act as temple guardians, while the Hall of Ancient Disciplines is dedicated to the Seven Perfect Ones, disciples of Wang Chongyang, the founder of the Quanzhen School. The Hall of Wealth is popular with pilgrims who seek blessings from the three spirits of wealth, while the infirm patronize the Hall of the King of Medicine.

The temple grounds are full of Daoist monks with their distinctive topknots. It is most lively during the Chinese New Year (see pp42-3), when a temple fair (miaobui) is held.

Chinese Military History Museum 24

军事博物馆

9 Fuxing Lu, Haidian. M Junshi Bowuguan. T (010) 6686 6244.
☐ 8am-5:30pm daily. **📷

TOPPED BY A gilded emblem of the People's Liberation Army, the Chinese Military History Museum is devoted to weaponry and revolutionary heroism. It is close to Muxidi, where the Liberation Army killed scores of civilians in 1989. Visitors are greeted by paintings of Mao, Marx, Lenin, and Stalin. The ground floor exhibits defunct F-5 and F-7 jet fighter planes, tanks,

F-5 Fighter Planes, Military Museum

Buddhist monks, Miaoying Temple White Dagoba

and surface-to-air missiles. The top floor gallery chronicles with pride many of China's military campaigns.

Miaoying Temple White Dagoba 25

妙应寺

Fucheng Men Nei Dajie, Xicheng. Map 1 A4. M Fucheng Men. ☐ daily. **📷

CELEBRATED FOR its distinctive Tibetan-styled, 167-ft (51-m) white dagoba (stupa or funerary mound) designed by a Nepalese architect, the Miaoying Temple (Miaoying Si Bai Ta) dates to 1271, when Beijing was under Mongol rule. In addition to its conventional Drum and Bell Towers, Hall of Heavenly Kings, and Main Halls, this Buddhist temple has a remarkable collection of small Tibetan Buddhist statues in one of its halls. Another hall has a collection of 18 bronze luoban.

Beijing Zoo 26

北京动物园

137 Xizhi Men Wai Dajie, Haidian.
M Xizhi Men. T (010) 6831 4411.
☐ 7:30am-6pm (till 5pm winter). **📷

WEST OF THE Beijing Exhibition Hall, Beijing Zoo is a relic of a bygone era, with outdated concrete and glass cages. The Panda Hall is one of its better enclosures, and the bears are at their liveliest in the mornings. The real reason for visiting is the huge Aquarium, with coral reefs, an Amazon rainforest, and a very impressive shark pool. Whales, dolphins, and an array of aquatic mammals complete the collection.

Summer Palace 27

颐和园

Bronze dragon

THE SPRAWLING GROUNDS of the Summer Palace (Yihe Yuan) served the Qing Dynasty as an imperial retreat from the stifling summer confines of the Forbidden City. Despite existing as an imperial park in earlier dynasties, it was not until the time of Emperor Qianlong, who reigned from 1736 to 1795, that the Summer Palace assumed its current layout. The palace is most associated, however, with Cixi who had it rebuilt twice: once following its destruction by French and English troops in 1860, and again in 1902 after it was plundered during the Boxer Rebellion.

★ Longevity Hill

The Tower of the Fragrance of the Buddha dominates this slope covered with impressive religious buildings.

Temple of the Sea of Wisdom

Marble Boat

Cixi paid for this extravagant folly with funds meant for the modernization of the Imperial Navy. The superstructure of the boat is made of wood painted white to look like marble.

Boat pier

PLAN OF GROUNDS

The grounds of the Summer Palace cover 716 acres (290 hectares), with Kunming Lake lying to the south of Longevity Hill. South Lake Island is just off the east shore and a stroll around the entire shoreline takes about two hours.

- ① Jade Belt Bridge
- ② West Causeway
- ③ South Lake Island
- ④ Bronze ox

The Bronze Pavilion, weighing 207 tons (188 tonnes), is a highly-detailed replica of a timber-framed building.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Longevity Hill
- ★ Garden of Virtue and Harmony
- ★ Long Corridor

KEY

Area illustrated

0 meters 800
0 yards 800

Empress Cixi,
1835–1908

EMPERESS DOWAGER CIXI

Together with Tang-dynasty Empress Wu Zetian (see p57), Cixi is remembered as one of China's most powerful women. Having borne the Xianfeng emperor's son as an imperial concubine, Cixi later seized power as regent to both the Tongzhi and Guangxu emperors (her son and nephew respectively). Cixi prevented Guangxu from implementing state reforms and, in her alliance with the Boxer Rebellion, paved the way for the fall of the Qing Dynasty in 1911.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

6 miles (10 km) NW of Beijing.
 ☎ (010) 6288 1144. 🚶 Xizhi
 Men then bus No. 32, or 808 from zoo. 🚗 from Yuyuan Tan Park, and Exhibition Center near zoo (not in winter). 🕒 8:30am–
 5pm daily. 📶 📱 📺 📷

★ Garden of Virtue and Harmony

This three-story building served as a theater, where the court's 348-member opera troupe entertained Cixi, who watched from the surrounding gallery.

Suzhou Street

Back Lake

The Garden of Harmonious Pleasures was Cixi's favorite fishing spot.

Hall of Happiness and Longevity

Hall of Jade Ripples

East Palace Gate (main entrance)

★ Long Corridor

The beams along the length of this 2,388-ft (728-m) walkway are decorated with over 14,000 scenic paintings.

Hall of Benevolence and Longevity

The principal ceremonial hall, this single-eaved building houses the throne upon which Cixi sat.

Exploring the Summer Palace

LIKE THE IMPERIAL RESORT at Chengde (see pp122–5), the palace grounds are arranged as a microcosm of nature, its hills (shan) and water (shui) creating a natural composition further complemented by bridges, temples, walkways, and ceremonial halls. Even after repeated restoration, the Summer Palace tastefully harmonizes the functional and fanciful, with administrative and residential quarters leading to the pastoral vistas of the grounds, as well as numerous peaceful temples and shrines.

Seventeen-arch Bridge linking South Lake Island to the mainland

THE GROUNDS of the Summer Palace are extensive, but the main buildings can all be visited by those with a bit of energy and time. The main entrance at the East Palace Gate (Gong Dong Men) leads to the official and residential halls of the palace complex. Just inside the main gate stands the Hall of Benevolence and Longevity (Renshou Dian). Note the bronze statues in front of this ceremonial hall, including the symbol of Confucian virtue, the mythical qilin, a hybrid, cloven-hoofed animal with horns and scales.

By the lakeside to the west, the Hall of Jade Ripples (Yulan Tang) is where Cixi incarcerated the Guangxu emperor after the abortive 1898 Reform Movement. Cixi's residence, and the Hall of Happiness and Longevity (Leshou Tang) is to the west of the Garden of Virtue and Harmony (Dehe Yuan) and north of the jetty from where Cixi would set sail across the lake. From here, the Long Corridor (Chang Lang) follows the lakeside, interrupted along its length by four pavilions. At the corridor's halfway point, a series of religious buildings ascends the slopes of Longevity Hill (Wanshou Shan), a sequence marked at the lakeside by a fabulous decorative gate (pailou), beyond which stands Cloud Dispelling Gate, with two bronze lions sitting alongside it. The first main hall, the Cloud Dispelling Hall (Paiyun Dian) is a double-eaved structure, above which rises the prominent, octagonal Tower of the Fragrance of the Buddha (Foxiang Ge). Behind the tower sits the rectangular brick and tile 18th-century Temple of the Sea of Wisdom (Huihai Si), its exterior decorated with green and yellow tiles and glazed Buddhist effigies, many of which have been vandalized. From here you can look down to the Back Lake (Hou Hu) and Suzhou Street, a row of commercial buildings where emperor Qianlong and his concubines would shop that today houses snack and souvenir stalls. West of the Tower of the Fragrance of the Buddha is the Precious Clouds Pavilion (Baoyun Ge), also called the Bronze Pavilion. Dating from the 18th century, the building is one of a handful that survived the destruction wrought by foreign troops.

The buildings at the north end of the lake are more than enough to fill a single day, however the southern end of the grounds can be blissfully free of crowds. Boat trips to South Lake Island depart from the jetty near the Marble Boat (north of which are the imperial boathouses). Alternatively, if time will allow, hire a boat for a leisurely row around Kunming Lake.

Dragon King Temple (Longwang Miao) on South Lake Island is dedicated to the god of rivers, seas, and rain. The island is connected to the eastern shore by the elegant Seventeen-arch Bridge (Shiqi Kong Qiao). A marble lion crowns each of the 544 balusters along the bridge's length, and a large bronze ox, dating back to 1755, reposes on the eastern shore. On the opposite shore, steep-sloped Jade Belt Bridge links the mainland to the West Causeway which slices through the lake to its southern point.

Bronze ox, believed to pacify the waters and prevent floods

The unusual Bronze Pavilion, fashioned entirely from metal

Remnants of the Yuanming Yuan, once said to resemble Versailles

Yuanming Yuan 28

圆明园

28 Qinghua Xi Lu, Haidian.

M Xizhi Men, then bus 375.

○ 7am–6:30pm daily.

THE YUANMING YUAN (Garden of Perfect Brightness, sometimes called the Old Summer Palace), now sits isolated from the main Summer Palace, but was a collection of princely gardens fused into the main mass by the Qing Qianlong emperor in the mid-18th century. He commissioned Jesuits at his court to design and construct a set of European-style buildings in one corner, which they likened to Versailles. Unfortunately, all the traditional Chinese halls were burned down by British and French troops during the Second Opium War in 1860. Later the European-style buildings were pulled down, and much of the remains carted away by the locals for building purposes. Chinese narrations of the devastation criticize both the marauding European troops and the ineffectual Qing rulers.

Today, Yuanming Yuan is a jumble of sad, yet graceful fragments of stone and marble strewn in the Eternal Spring Garden in the park's northeastern corner. A small museum displays images and models of the palace, depicting its scale and magnificence. The Palace Maze has been recreated in concrete to the west of the ruins. The rest of the park is a pleasant expanse of lakes, pavilions, gardens, and walks.

Great Bell Temple 29

大钟寺

31a Beisanhuan Xi Lu, Haidian. sub 300, 367. ☎ (010) 6255 0819. ○ daily.

HOME TO a fascinating collection of bells, the 18th-century Dazhong Si follows a typical Buddhist plan, with the Heavenly Kings Hall, Main Hall, and the Guanyin Bodhisattva Hall. Its highlight is the 46.5 ton (47,246 kg) bell – one of the world's largest – that is housed in the rear tower. The bell was cast between 1403 and 1424, and brought here from Wanshou Temple in the reign of the Qianlong emperor. Buddhist sutras in Chinese and Sanskrit embellish its surface. During the Ming and Qing dynasties, the bell was struck 108 times to bring in the New Year, and could be heard for 25 miles (40 km). The gallery above has a display on bell casting, and visitors can toss a coin into a gap at the top of the bell for luck. Hundreds of bells from the Song, Yuan, Ming, and Qing eras can be seen in a separate hall on the west side.

Heng, Biyun Temple deity

Xiang Shan Park 30

香山公园

Wofosi Lu, Xiang Shan, Haidian district.

sub 333 from Summer Palace, 360

from Zoo. ○ 6am–7pm.

Botanical Gardens ○ daily.

THIS WOODED parkland area, also known as Fragrant Hills Park, is at its scenic best in the fall, when the maples turn a flaming red. Its main attractions are the fine views from Incense Burner Peak, accessible by a chairlift, and the splendid Biyun Temple, or Azure Cloud Temple, close to the main gate. The temple is guarded by the menacing deities Heng and Ha in the Mountain Gate Hall. A series of halls leads to the Sun Yat Sen Memorial Hall, where his coffin was stored in 1925, before being taken to Nanjing. At the temple's rear is the distinctive 112-ft (34-m) high Diamond Throne Pagoda. About a mile (2 km) east of Xiang Shan Park are the Beijing Botanical Gardens, with pleasant walks and some 3,000 plant species. The gardens' Sleeping Buddha Temple is renowned for its magnificent bronze statue of a reclining Buddha. China's last emperor, Pu Yi (see p446), ended his days here as a gardener.

The Great Bell Temple or Dazhong Si

Ming Tombs: Chang Ling 明十三陵

明十三陵

Mythical qilin
on Spirit Way

THE RESTING PLACE for 13 of the 16 Ming emperors, the Ming Tombs (Shisan Ling) are China's finest example of imperial tomb architecture. The site was originally selected because of its auspicious feng shui alignment; a ridge of mountains to the north cradles the tombs on three sides, opening to the south and protecting the dead from the evil spirits carried on the north wind. The resting place of the Yongle emperor (1360–1424), the Chang Ling is the most impressive tomb and the first to be built. It has been beautifully restored, although the burial chamber, where Yongle, his wife, and 16 concubines are thought to be buried, has never been excavated.

★ Spirit Way

Part of the 4-mile (7-km) approach to the tombs, the Spirit Way is lined with 36 stone statues of officials, soldiers, animals, and mythical beasts.

A large triple-gated entrance leads to the first of the three courtyards that often front imperial tombs.

★ Hall of Eminent Favor

One of China's most impressive surviving Ming buildings, this double-eaved sacrificial hall is erected on a three-tiered terrace.

The Stele Pavilion bears inscriptions dating from the Qing dynasty which revered the Ming emperors.

Gate of Eminent Favor

THE MING TOMBS

The 13 tombs are spread over 15 square miles (40 sq km), so are best visited by taxi. Chang Ling, Ding Ling, and Zhao Ling have been restored and are very busy. Unrestored, the rest are open yet quiet.

- | | |
|---------------------|------------------------|
| ① Chang Ling (1424) | ⑧ Mao Ling (1487) |
| ② Yong Ling (1566) | ⑨ Tai Ling (1505) |
| ③ De Ling (1627) | ⑩ Kang Ling (1521) |
| ④ Jing Ling (1435) | ⑪ Ding Ling (1620) |
| ⑤ Xian Ling (1425) | ⑫ Zhao Ling (1572) |
| ⑥ Qing Ling (1620) | ⑬ Concubine cemeteries |
| ⑦ Yu Ling (1449) | ⑭ Si Ling (1644) |

0 kilometers 4
0 miles 4

★ Ding Ling Treasures

Artifacts from the Wanli emperor's tomb, such as this threaded-gold crown decorated with two dragons, are on display in the main hall at Chang Ling.

The Spirit Tower marks the entrance to the burial chamber.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

30 miles (45 km) NW of Beijing.
 ☞ 845 from Xizhi Men (near subway) to Zhengfa Daxue in Changping, then taxi or bus 314 to Da Gong Men. Many tours to the Great Wall (see pp 106–8) stop here. ☎ (010) 8976 1554. ☐ 8am–5pm daily. 📶 📷 interiors.

An earthen mound, surrounded by a circular rampart, covers the stone burial chamber.

Cedar Columns

Supporting the huge weight of the roof, the colossal 43-foot (13-m) nanmu (fragrant cedar) columns are topped with elaborate dougong bracket sets.

Statue of the Yongle Emperor
 Yongle, the third Ming emperor, moved the capital from Nanjing to Beijing, where he then oversaw the construction of the Forbidden City.

DING LING BURIAL CHAMBER

Ding Ling, the tomb of the longest reigning Ming emperor, Wanli (1573–1620), is the only burial chamber of the 16 tombs to have been excavated and opened to the public. During the 1950s, archeologists were stunned to find the inner doors of the chamber still intact. Inside they found the treasures of an emperor whose profligate rule began the downfall of the Ming Dynasty.

STAR FEATURES

- ★ Hall of Eminent Favor
- ★ Spirit Way
- ★ Ding Ling Treasures

The Great Wall of China ❷

长城

ASYMBOL OF CHINA'S historic detachment and sense of vulnerability, the Great Wall snakes through the countryside over deserts, hills, and plains for several thousand miles. Originally a series of disparate earthen ramparts built by individual states, the Great Wall was created only after the unification of China under Qin Shi Huangdi (221–210 BC). Despite impressive battlements, the wall ultimately proved ineffective; it was breached in the 13th century by the Mongols and then, in the 17th century, by the Manchu. Today, only select sections of its crumbling remains have been fully restored.

Crumbling ruin

Most of the wall is still unrestored and has crumbled away leaving only the core remaining.

★ Panoramic views

Because the wall took advantage of the natural terrain for defensive purposes following the highest points and clinging to ridges, it now offers superb panoramic views.

Ramparts enabled the defending soldiers to fire down on their attackers with impunity.

Surface of stone slabs and bricks

Tamped layer of earth and rubble

Bigger rocks and stones

Kiln-fired bricks, cemented with a mortar of lime and glutinous rice

Large, locally quarried rocks

RECONSTRUCTION OF THE GREAT WALL

This shows a section of the wall as built by the most prolific wall builders, the Ming dynasty (1368–1644). The section at Badaling, built around 1505, is similar to this and was restored in the 1950s and 1980s.

★ Watchtowers

A Ming addition, these served as signal towers, forts, living quarters and storerooms for provisions.

STAR FEATURES

★ Panoramic views

★ Watchtowers

Cannons

Another Ming addition, cannons were used to defend the wall and summon help.

Towers were spaced two arrow shots apart to leave no part unprotected.

TIPS FOR VISITORS

- The wall is exposed to the elements so be prepared for all outcomes: wear layers of clothing and a waterproof top, but also bring some sunscreen.
- Bring plenty of water.
- The wall can be very steep in places, so make sure you have strong footwear with a good grip such as hiking boots or tough waterproof runners.

Signal beacons were used to warn of attack by burning dried wolf dung.

The carriageway averages 8 m (26 ft) high and 7 m (21 ft) wide.

Multi-function wall

The wall enabled speedy communications via smoke, flares, drums, and bells, as well as allowing for the rapid transport of troops throughout the country.

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA (MING DYNASTY)

0 kilometers 400

0 miles 400

Most visitors travel to the wall from Beijing (see p108), but it is worth seeing the wall anywhere along its length. Also impressive are the restored forts at Juyong Guan, Jiayu Guan, and Shanhaiguan.

Places to visit

- ① Jiayu Guan (see pp498-9)
- ② Badaling & Juyong Guan
- ③ Mutianyu & Huanghua Cheng
- ④ Simatai
- ⑤ Shanhaiguan (see p128)

Exploring The Great Wall of China

A TRIP TO THE WALL is a must for any visitor to Beijing. Most hotels will be able to organize this for you, usually combined with a visit to the Ming Tombs (see pp104-5). However, be sure to find out whether there are any unwanted diversions planned to cloisonné workshops, jade factories, or Chinese medicine clinics. Small groups can have a more personalized visit, and see the more remote parts of the wall, by hiring a taxi for the day from Beijing and sharing the cost.

Stall selling tourist paraphernalia at the Great Wall, Badaling

Badaling

44 miles (70 km) northwest of Beijing.
☎ (010) 6912 2222. 🚗 1 from Qian Men. 🕒 7:30am–5pm daily. 🚶 🚲 🚠

Equipped with guardrails, cable car, pristine watchtowers, and tourist facilities, the restored Ming fortification at Badaling is the most popular section of the Great Wall. The reward for coming to Badaling is the breathtaking view of the wall winding its way over the hills. To fully appreciate this, get away from the crowds by walking as far as you can along the wall either east or west of the entrance. The ticket includes admission to the Great Wall Museum. The pass at Juyong Guan is on the way to Badaling and although recently restored, it is often quieter than Badaling. With unscalable mountains on either side it is easy to see why this spot was chosen for defense. There are also some authentic Buddhist carvings on a stone platform, or “cloud terrace,” in the middle of the pass that date back to the Yuan dynasty (1279–1368).

Mutianyu

56 miles (90 km) north of Beijing, Mutianyu Town, Huairou County.
🚗 6 from Xuanwu Men. 🕒 7:30am–6pm daily. 🚶 🚲 🚠 & chair lifts.

The appeal of Mutianyu lies in its dramatic hilly setting and less intrusive tourist industry. With a series of watchtowers along its restored length, the wall you can see here dates from 1368 and was built upon the foundations of the wall built during the Northern Qi dynasty (AD 550–77).

Huanghua Cheng

37 miles (60 km) north of Beijing, Huairou County. 🕒 daily. 🚶 🚲 🚠
Situating on the same stretch of wall as Mutianyu, Huanghua is an exhilarating section of Ming wall that is far less developed than other parts of the wall. The great barrier is split into two here by a large reservoir; most travellers take the right hand route on the other side of the reservoir, as the left-hand section is more difficult to reach. Devoid of guardrails, the crumbling masonry at Huanghua Cheng can be uneven and fairly treacherous, so be careful. Due to its crumbling state, access has been limited by the authorities. Because of ongoing reconstruction, it may not always be possible to visit Huanghua Cheng.

Ruins at Huanghua Cheng clinging to the steep hillside

Simatai

68 miles (110 km) northeast of Beijing, Miyun County. 🚗 6 from Xuanwu Men. 🕒 8am–5pm daily. 🚶 🚲 🚠 (Apr–Nov).

The wall at Simatai has only been partially repaired, affording a more genuine impression of the original wall. The steep and hazardous parts of the wall are also a lot riskier to navigate. Most visitors clamber along the eastern section of wall at Simatai, which leads to much steeper sections of wall, and later, impassable ruins. Despite the tourist trappings, the views are superb here. There is a four-hour trek from Simatai to Jingshanling that provides spectacular vistas, too.

The restored section of the wall at Badaling, northwest of Beijing

Eastern Qing Tombs 33

清东陵

77 miles (125 km) east of Beijing, Zuahua County, Hebei Province.

☐ May–Oct: 8am–5:30pm daily;

Nov–Apr: 9am–4:30pm daily.

THE REMOTENESS of the Eastern Qing Tombs east of Beijing and over the border in Hebei province makes them far less popular than the Ming ones (see pp104–5), despite the fact that the setting is even more splendid. In fact, the Eastern Qing tombs make up the largest and most complete imperial cemetery in China, built on as grand a scale as the Forbidden City itself (see pp86–9). Of the many tombs scattered throughout the area, only five are the burial places of Qing emperors: the tombs of the Shunzhi emperor (r.1644–61), Kangxi (r.1661–1722), Qianlong (r.1736–95), and Xianfeng (r.1851–61) are open, while that of the Tongzhi emperor (r.1862–74), at a distance from the main tomb grouping, is not. A 3-mile (5-km) Spirit Way, an approach lined with guardian figures, leads to Shunzhi's tomb, Xiao Ling, at the heart of the main tomb cluster, while several of the other tombs have their own smaller Spirit Ways. Southwest of here lies Yuling, Qianlong's tomb, with its incredible chamber adorned with Buddhist carvings and Tibetan and Sanskrit scriptures (rare features at imperial and principally Confucian tombs).

Incense burners in front of a spirit tower at the Eastern Qing Tombs

Spirit Way to emperor Shunzhi's tomb at the Eastern Qing Tombs

The devious Empress Cixi (see p101) is buried at Ding Dong Ling to the west, in the right-hand tomb of a complex of twin tombs, the other being the resting place of Ci'an, eldest wife of the Xianfeng emperor. Although both tombs were built in 1879, Cixi had her magnificent tomb lavishly restored in 1895. The marble carriageway up to the Hall of Eminent Favor notably locates the carving of the phoenix (feng), symbol of the empress, above the carving of the dragon (long), symbol of the emperor. West of Ding Dong Ling, Ding Ling is partially open and approached via a set of stone animal statues. Look for the smaller tombs of imperial concubines, their roofs tiled in green (not the yellow of emperors and empresses).

EMPEROR YONGZHENG

The son of the Kangxi emperor and a maidservant, Yongzheng (r.1723–35) chose not to be buried at the Eastern Qing Tombs, but perversely started a necropolis as far away as possible in the Western Qing Tombs (Yixian County, Hebei Province). Perhaps, racked with guilt, he could not face burial alongside his father, whose will he had thwarted. For after Kangxi's death, Yongzheng seized the throne from his brother (his father's chosen successor), and declared himself the legitimate heir, ruthlessly eliminating any other brothers and uncles who may have been a threat to his rule. Despite this shaky start, Yongzheng was an able ruler and a devout Buddhist, punishing dishonesty among his officials and seeking to improve the morals and education of his people. Another possible reason for the switch was that he just wasn't satisfied with the Eastern tombs and chose an area with a better natural setting. Whatever the reason, those keen on Chinese tomb architecture will enjoy the peace of the Western Qing Tombs. Nearby, moved in 1995 to a commercial cemetery, are the remains of Pu Yi, the last emperor of China.

Yongzheng in robes embroidered with symbols of his power

Brick stupas at Talin Si or Stupa Forest Temple

Marco Polo Bridge 34

芦沟桥

Wanping town, Fengtai District.
10 miles (16 km) SW of city center.

339 from Beijing's
Lianhuachi bus station; 309 from WAZI (near Beijing West Railway Station).

7am–7pm daily. 163

Memorial Hall 101

Wanpingcheng Nei Jie.

8am–5pm Tue–Sun. 163

STRADDLING the Yongding River in Wanping town, the 876-ft (267-m) long marble bridge was first built during the Jin dynasty in 1189 but destroyed by a flood. The current structure dates to 1698. Known as Lugou Qiao in Chinese, the bridge acquired its English name after Marco Polo described it in his famous treatise The Travels (see p243). At the bridge's eastern and western ends are stelae inscribed by the Qing emperors, Kangxi and Qianlong. The poetic observation by Qianlong on a stele at the eastern end reads "lugou xiaoyue," meaning "Moon at daybreak at Lugou."

Stone lion, Marco Polo Bridge

The balustrades along the length of the bridge are decorated by more than 400 carved stone lions, each one slightly different in appearance. Local legend has it that these fierce-looking statues come alive during the night.

Despite the widening and extensive restoration work done over the centuries, a surprising amount of the bridge is original.

In addition to its antiquity, it is significant as the site of the disastrous Marco Polo Bridge Incident. This is where, on July 7, 1937, the Japanese Imperial Army and Nationalist Chinese soldiers exchanged fire – an event that led to the Japanese occupation of Beijing and a full-scale war. For those with a keen interest in this period of history, the incident is marked by some rather gruesome displays in Wanping's Memorial Hall.

Tanzhe Temple 35

潭柘寺

Mentougou district. 28 miles (45 km) W of Beijing. M to Pingguo Yuan (1 hr), then bus 931 or tourist bus 7.

(010) 6086 2505.

8am–5pm daily. 163

THIS ENORMOUS temple dates back to the 3rd century AD, when it was known as Jiafu Si. It was later renamed Tanzhe Temple, after the adjacent mountain Tanzhe Shan, which in turn got its name from the nearby Dragon Pool (Long Tan) and the surrounding cudrania (zhe) trees. It has a splendid mountainside setting, and its halls rise up the steep incline. The temple is especially famous for its ancient trees, among which is a huge ginkgo known as the Emperor's Tree. A slightly smaller tree close by is called The Emperor's Wife.

The most fascinating sight, however, is the Stupa Forest Temple (Talin Si) near the parking lot, with its marvelous collection of brick stupas hidden among the foliage. Each stupa was constructed in memory of a renowned monk. The towering edifices were built in a variety of designs, including the graceful miyanta or dense-eave stupa, characterized by ascending layers of eaves. The earliest among them dates from the Jin dynasty (1115–1234).

The 11-arched Marco Polo Bridge known locally as Lugou Qiao

The prehistoric Peking Man Site at Zhoukoudian

Peking Man Site 36

周口店北京猿人遗址

Zhoukoudian Village. 30 miles (48 km) SW of Beijing. 917 from Beijing's Tianqiao bus station to Fangshan, then bus 2 or taxi to site.

8:30am–4:30pm daily.

UNEARTHED FROM A cave at Zhoukoudian in the 1920s, the 40-odd fossilized human bones and primitive implements were identified as the prehistoric remains of Peking Man (Homo erectus Pekinensis), who lived here over 500,000 years ago. It was thought that this exciting discovery provided the much sought-after missing link between Neanderthals and modern humans. Designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site, the area is geared toward specialists, although the small museum has an interesting display of tools, ornaments, and bone fragments. Sadly, Peking Man himself is not actually here and the site has suffered neglect recently.

Shidu 37

十渡

Fangshan district. 62 miles (100 km) SW of Beijing. daily from Beijing's Yongding Men station to Shidu.

(010) 6134 9241.

SHIDU OFFERS A fabulous escape from the commotion of urban Beijing and a chance to enjoy some stunning natural scenery.

Before the new road and bridges were built, travelers had to cross the Juma River ten times as they journeyed through the gorge between Shidu and nearby Zhangfang village, hence the name Shidu meaning "Ten Ferries" or "Ten Crossings." Pleasant walking trails wind along the riverbank between impressive gorges and jagged limestone formations. Visitors can stop en route to paddle in the shallow river and picnic under the towering peaks. The main sights are around Qingjiang Gou and the lovely Gushan Zhai, marred somewhat by bungee jumping and other entertainment ventures.

Chuangdixia 38

川底下

Near Zhaitang town. 56 miles (90 km) NW of Beijing. to Pingguo Yuan (1 hr), then bus 929 to Zhaitang (3 hrs), then taxi. daily.

DESPITE THE rather laborious expedition required to get here, a trip to the tiny village of Chuangdixia (Under the River) is well worth the effort as the crumbling hamlet survives as a living museum of Ming and Qing dynasty village architecture. Situated on a steep mountainside, it is a picturesque outpost of courtyard houses (sibeyuan) and rural Chinese buildings. Because of the close-knit nature of the original village all the courtyards were interconnected by small lanes. The entry ticket allows access to the entire village, all of which can be explored within a few hours. Look out for the Maoist graffiti and slogans that survive on the boundary walls; similar graffiti from the Cultural Revolution has been whitewashed in most other Chinese towns.

Chuangdixia's population consists of about 70 people spread over a handful of families. Accommodations can be arranged for those wanting to explore the surrounding hills or simply experience the rural hospitality. Alive to the opportunities brought by tourism, quite a few of the old homesteads provide basic facilities at a reasonable price.

Traditional Ming and Qing dynasty houses, Chuangdixia village

Shopping & Entertainment in Beijing

Mao Memorabilia,
Liulichang

BEIJING'S SHOPPING scene has undergone a dramatic change over recent years and slick department stores co-exist with older retail outlets. Its vast array of retail options range from shopping malls and department stores to specialist stores, boutiques, antique and silk markets, and street vendors. The main shopping street is Wangfujing Dajie (see p94), anchored by the impressive Oriental Plaza Mall. Regrettably, many of the traditional shops no longer exist with the exception of those on Dazhalan Jie (see p85). Beijing also has a lively entertainment scene, with a growing number of pubs, bars, and clubs, and numerous venues for traditional Beijing Opera, theater, and music.

SHOPPING

VISITORS CAN BUY anything from traditional handicrafts, collectibles, carpets, and silks to electronic goods, furniture, antiques, and designer clothing in Beijing. Many of the stores listed here arrange packaging and shipping as part of their service.

ANTIQUES, CRAFTS & CURIOS

GENUINE ANTIQUES (gudong) are hard to find. Objects dating between 1939 and 1795 cannot officially be taken out of the country without a certificate, anything older may not be exported at all (see pp598-9). The most interesting market for antiques and curios is Panjiayuan Market in the southeast of town. Open all week, for the best deals and pickings, visitors should aim to get there at sunrise during weekends to rummage through the Bodhisattva statues, ceramics, screens, calligraphy, and variety of ornaments. The Beijing Curio City nearby also has a vast collection of ceramics, furniture, jewelry, and Tibetan art on several floors. The large Hong Qiao Market near the Temple of Heaven (see pp96-7) is great for collectibles, souvenirs, and pearls, especially the section on the third and fourth floors. The Friendship Store on Jianguo Men Wai Dajie also has an array of traditional craft objects, and useful everyday items. Visitors could spend a few hours browsing through Liulichang (see p85) for its lacquerware, ceramics, paintings, and crafts. Huayi Classical Furniture sells classical antique, restored, and reproduction furniture.

BOOKS

IT IS ADVISABLE to take your own reading material when traveling to China, as the choice of imported and English-language fiction in Beijing is quite limited. But a fine selection of photographic, cultural, and travel books on China can be found. The Foreign Languages Bookshop is conveniently located, but its selection of English-language titles is small. The bookshop in the Friendship Store stocks a range of books and magazines. Beijing's largest bookshop (shudian), the Tushu Dasha, has English-language books on its third and fourth floors, but can get busy and noisy.

Some bars (such as the Pass By Bar and The Bookworm) have book swaps or lending libraries.

DEPARTMENT STORES & SHOPPING MALLS

DESPITE FIERCE competition from new specialized outlets, huge department stores are still popular with the Chinese. Xidan Dajie is known for its concentration of stores. The Friendship Store (which is less popular these days) has inexpensive souvenirs, carvings, and a good bookshop. In a frenzy of consumerism, giant new malls have sprung up everywhere (there are a lot around Xidan subway station), stocked with a wide range of branded items and clothing. The huge Sun Dong'an Plaza on Wangfujing Dajie sells just about everything.

CARPETS & TEXTILES

BEIJING'S MARKETS sell a variety of carpets (ditan) from Tibet, Gansu, and Xinjiang, but visitors should bargain hard on all purchases. The Qian Men Carpet Company on Xingfu Dajie has fine handmade carpets from Xinjiang, Mongolia, and Tibet. Other shops worth visiting are Antique Carpets, the carpet stores on Liulichang, the Liangma Antique Market, and the stalls at Panjiayuan Market.

Near the Friendship Store, the cramped confines of Silk Street Alley Market have been transformed into the multi-story New Silk Street Alley Market; experienced shoppers say it lacks the character of the old place and visitors should still haggle for good prices. The popular Yuanlong Silk Corporation sells silk fabric and a large selection of ready-made silk garments, and the Beijing Silk Store south of Qian Men has good value silk. For upscale clothes try Na-Li, where it is still fine to haggle. The Yaxiu Clothing Market has four floors of clothes, fabric, and curios.

ENTERTAINMENT

ENTERTAINMENT in Beijing is largely based on the performance arts, such as Beijing Opera and traditional theater. English-language theater remains largely amateur but is increasingly popular, as are art exhibitions and music concerts. The rock, punk, and jazz live music scene is rapidly expanding.

Cinemas show a limited range of English-language films, as there are only a small number of foreign films admitted each year. Many embassies and bars show movies (either in English or with subtitles). Cherrylane (www.Cherrylanemovies.com.cn) has good movies. All European and Hollywood films are pirated on release, and appear in the markets as DVDs and VCDs of variable quality. For entertainment events, check the listings in the English-language entertainment magazines circulating in the expat pubs on Sanlitun Lu, as well as in most hotels. That's Beijing has one of the best listings.

BEIJING OPERA

TRADITIONAL performances of Beijing Opera (jingju) are staged in the splendid Zhengyici Theater, the sole surviving wooden theater in China that was formerly a temple. Shows begin on most nights at 7:30pm. The Huguang Guildhall has a similarly distinguished setting, with daily performances at 7:15pm. During the warmer months, there are evening shows in the marvellous Mansion of Prince Gong (see p90) at 7:30pm. Visitors who are part of tour groups are usually taken to the Liyuan Theater in the Jianguo Hotel.

TRADITIONAL THEATER

THE CITY'S numerous teahouses are excellent venues for the enjoyment of a variety of performances such as traditional Chinese music, storytelling, Chinese opera, acrobatics, and martial arts.

The extraordinary body-bending feats of Chinese acrobats (zaji) can be seen at several places in the capital. Popular performances are held nightly at the Chaoyang Theater at 7:15pm, and the Beijing Acrobat Troupe stages performances at 7pm at the Wan Sheng Theater. Performances are also held at the Universal Theater every night at 7pm. Shows featuring opera and acrobatics take place every evening at the Lao She Teahouse at 7:40pm; there are sometimes afternoon shows as well. The Tianqiao Happy Teahouse also stages similar performances every evening at 6:30pm.

PUBS, BARS & CLUBS

THE CAPITAL CITY'S expat bar scene has for years concentrated along Sanlitun Lu in Beijing's Chaoyang district – east of Dong Si Shi Tiao subway station. For a more laid-back experience, try bars around the shore where Hou Hai and Qian Hai lakes meet, such as the stylish World of Suzie Wong, with its Ming Dynasty beds. One of the first, still one of the best, the No Name Bar near Hou Hai is well worth a visit. For a more upscale mood, try the bars at any of the city's four- and five-star hotels.

DIRECTORY

ANTIQUES, CRAFTS & CURIOS

Beijing Curio City
21 Dongsanhuan Nan Lu,
W of Huawei Bridge,
Chaoyang District.

Hong Qiao Market
Hong Qiao Lu, Chaoyang
District. Map 4 E3.

Huayi Classical Furniture
89 Xiaodian Dongwei Lu,
Chaoyang District.

Panjiayuan Market
Panjiayuan Lu,
Chaoyang District.
☐ 6am–3pm daily.

BOOKS

Foreign Languages Bookshop
235 Wangfujing Dajie.
Map 2 D5.

Tushu Dasha
17 Xi Chang'an Jie, Xi
Cheng District. Map 3 B1.

DEPARTMENT STORES

Friendship Store
17 Jianguo Men Wai
Dajie, Chaoyang District.

Sun Dong'an Plaza
138 Wangfujing Dajie.
Map 2 D5

CARPETS & TEXTILES

Antique Carpets
4A6 Gongti Donglu,
Chaoyang District.

Beijing Silk Store
5 Zhubaoshi, Qian Men
Dajie. Map 3 C2.

Liangma Antique Market
27 Liangmaqiao Lu,
Chaoyang District.

Na-Li
Sanlitun Beilu,
Chaoyang District.

Qian Men Carpet Company
F1, Building 3, 59 Xingfu
Dajie. Map 4 F3.

Yaxiu Clothing Market

58 Gongti Bei Lu,
Chaoyang District.

Yuanlong Silk Corporation
15 Yongding Men Dong
Jie. Map 4 D4.

BEIJING OPERA

Huguang Guildhall
3 Hufangqiao Lu.
Map 3 B3.
☎ (010) 6351 8284.

Mansion of Prince Gong
17 Qianhai Xi Jie.
Map 1 B3.
☎ (010) 6615 7671.

Zhengyici Theater
220 Qian Men Xiheyuan
Dajie. Map 3 C2.
☎ (010) 6303 3104.

TRADITIONAL THEATER

Chaoyang Theater
36 Dongsanhuan Bei Lu.
☎ (010) 6507 2421.

Lao She Teahouse

3 Qian Men Xi Dajie, Xuanwu. Map 3 C2.
☎ (010) 6303 6830.

Tianqiao Happy Teahouse
1 Bei Wei Lu, Xuanwu
District. Map 3 C3.
☎ (010) 6304 0617.

Universal Theater

10 Dong Zhi Men Nan
Dajie. Map 2 F3.
☎ (010) 6416 9893.

Wan Sheng Theater
95 Tianqiao Market Street. Map 3 C3.
☎ (010) 6303 7449.

BARS & CLUBS

No Name Bar
Qianhai Dong Yan,
E. of the Yinding Bridge.
Map 1 C3.

World of Suzie Wong
1A Nongzhanguan Lu,
Chaoyang District.

BEIJING STREET FINDER

THE MAP REFERENCES given for all sights, hotels, restaurants, shopping, and entertainment venues described in this chapter refer to the following two maps. The page grid superimposed on the schematic map below shows which parts of Beijing's city center are covered in this Street Finder.

An index of the street names marked on the maps follows on the opposite page. The key, set out below, indicates the scales of the maps and shows what other features are marked on them, including subway, train, and bus terminals, hospitals, and tourist information centers. Beijing has extended a long way beyond the main city center and the Greater Beijing map on page 80 gives an idea of the area to the north, west, and south of central Beijing. Getting used to the directional system of road naming (see opposite) is vital to getting around easily in cities.

Cycling, a good way to get around

KEY TO STREET FINDER

	Major sight
	Place of interest
	Other important building
	Train station
	Long distance bus station
	Subway station
	City bus station

	Tourist information
	Hospital
	Post office
	Temple
	Church
	Mosque

SCALE OF MAP ABOVE

0 km 2
0 miles 2

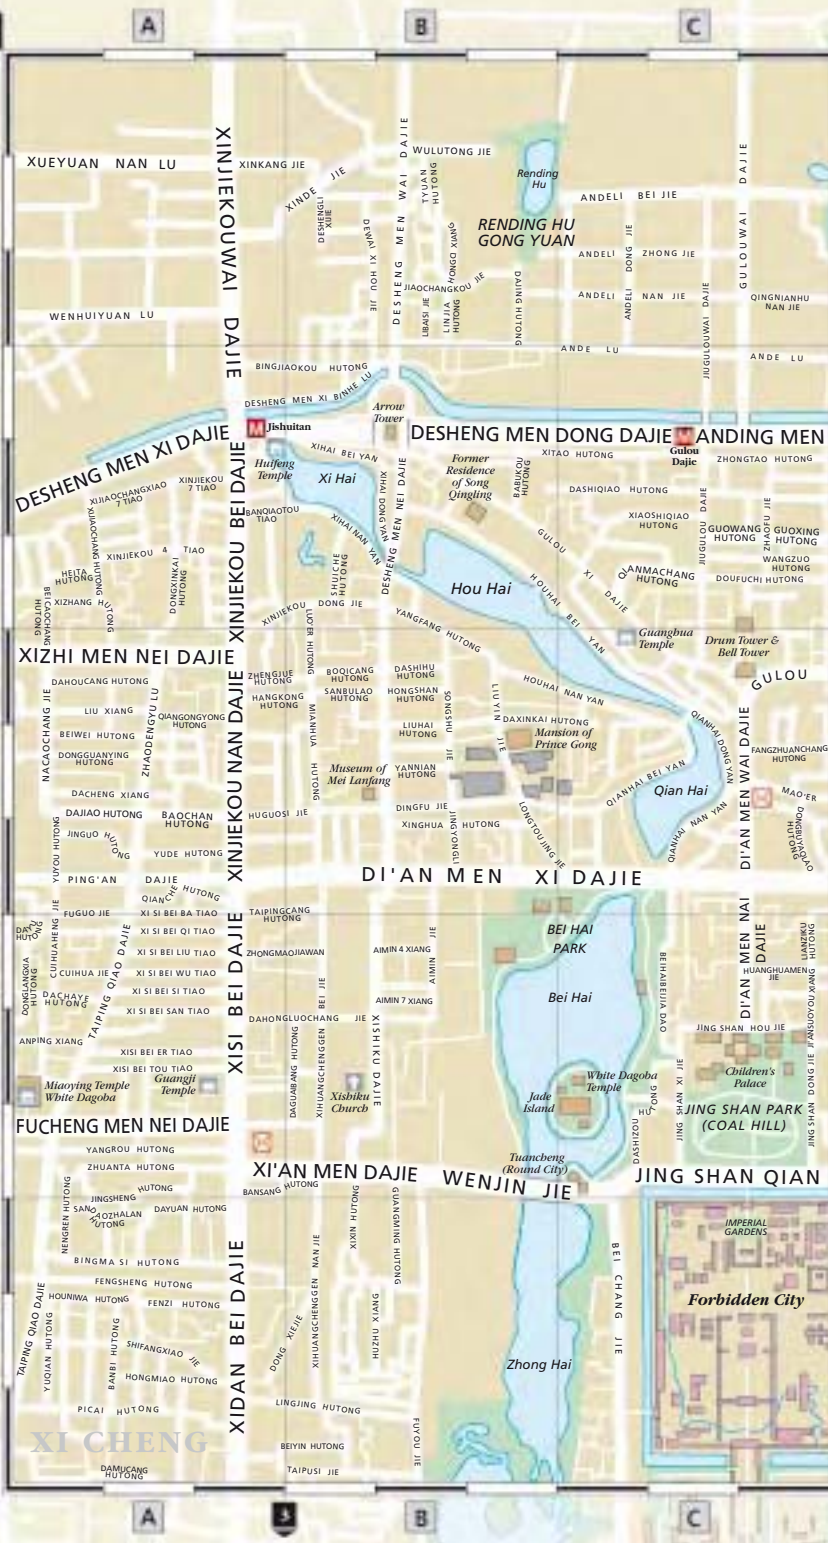

SCALE OF MAPS 1-4

0 meters 500
0 yards 500

Street Finder Index

IN STREET NAMES, the suffix “jie” meaning street, or “lu” meaning road are often interchangeable. Therefore, when asking for directions or an address, note that Tian Tan Jie may also be known as Tian Tan Lu. Many streets are also called “dajie” or avenue. Directionals such as “zhong” (middle), and the four cardinal points – “dong” (east), “xi” (west), “bei” (north), and “nan” (south) – are often added to street names. The other key word mentioned here is “hutong” (alleyway).

- A
- Andeli Bei Jie 1C1
 Anding Men Dong Dajie 2E2
 Anding Men Xi Dajie 1C2
continues 2D2
 Anding Men Nei Dajie 2D2
 Anding Men Wai Dajie 2D1
- B
- Baizhifang Dong Jie 3A4
 Baochan Hutong 1A3
 Bei Chang Jie 1C5
 Bei Chizi Dajie 2D5
 Bei Gangzi Jie 4E3
 Bei Heyan Dajie 2D4
 Beijing Zhan Dong Jie 4F1
 Beijing Zhan Jie 4F1
 Beijing Zhan Xi Jie 4E1
continues 4E2
 Bei Wei Lu 3C3
 Bei Xinhua Jie 3B1
 Bei Yangshikou Jie 4E2
 Bingjiaoxie Jie 3C2
continues 3C3
- C
- Caishikou Dajie 3A3
continues 5A3
 Chaoyang Men Bei Dajie 2F4
 Chaoyang Men Bei Xiao Jie 2F4
 Chaoyang Men Nan Dajie 2F5
 Chaoyang Men Nan Xiao Jie 2F5
 Chaoyang Men Nei Dajie 2E4
continues 2F4
 Chongwen Men Dong Dajie 4E2
continues 4F2
 Chongwen Men Xi Dajie 4E2
 Chongwen Men Xi Heyan 4D2
 Chongwen Men Nei Dajie 4E1
 Chongwen Men Wai Dajie 4E2
continues 4E3
- D
- Dajiao Hutong 1A3
 Daxi Hutong 4D2
 Dazhalan Jie 3C2
 Desheng Men Dong Dajie 1B2
 Desheng Men Xi Dajie 1A2
 Desheng Men Nei Dajie 1B2
 Di'an Men Dong Dajie 2D3
 Di'an Men Xi Dajie 1B3
continues 1C3
- E
- Dong Chang'an Jie 4D1
continues 4E1
 Dong Huashi Dajie 4F2
 Dong Rongxian Hutong 3B1
 Dong Si Shi Tiao 2E3
continues 2F3
 Dong Si Shi San Tiao 2E3
 Dong Si Shi Si Tiao 2E3
 Dong Si Bei Dajie 2E4
 Dong Si Nan Dajie 2E5
 Dong Si Xi Dajie 2E4
 Dong Xinglong Jie 4D2
continues 4E2
 Dong Zhi Men Bei Dajie 2F2
 Dong Zhi Men Bei Xiao Jie 2F2
 Dong Zhi Men Nan Dajie 2F3
 Dong Zhi Men Nan Xiao Jie 2F3
 Dong Zhi Men Nei Dajie 2E3
continues 2F3
 Dong Zongbu Hutong 4F1
 Douban Hutong 2F4
 Dongdan Bei Dajie 4E1
- F
- Fahua Si Jie 4E3
 Fayuan Si Qian Jie 3A3
 Fenchangliu Jie 3B3
 Fucheng Men Nei Dajie 1A4
 Fu Xue Hutong 2D3
continues 2E3
 Fuxing Men Nei Dajie 3A1
 Fuyou Jie 3B1
- G
- Guang'an Men Nei Dajie 3A3
 Guangming Lu 4F3
 Guangqu Men Nei Dajie 4E2
continues 4F2
 Gulou Dong Dajie 1C3
continues 2D3
 Gulouwai Dajie 1C1
 Guowang Hutong 1C2
 Guoxing Hutong 1C2
 Guozi Jian 2E2
- H
- Haiyuncang Hutong 2F3
 Heiyaochang Jie 3B3
continues 3B4
 Hepingli Dong Jie 2F1
 Hepingli Xi Jie 2E1
continues 2E2
 Hepingli Zhong Jie 2E1
 Hongxian Hutong 3B3
 Hufang Lu 3B3
- I
- Jianguo Men Bei Dajie 4F1
 Jianguo Men Nei Dajie 4E1
continues 4F1
 Jiaochangkou Hutong 3A2
 Jiadaokou Dong Dajie 2D3
continues 2E3
 Jiadaokou Nan Dajie 2D3
 Jin Bao Jie 2E5
continues 2F5
 Jing Shan Qian Jie 1C4
continues 2D4
 Jingtu Hutong 2D2
 Jinyuchi Zhong Jie 4D3
- J
- Jianguo Men Bei Dajie 4F1
 Jianguo Men Nei Dajie 4E1
continues 4F1
 Jiaochangkou Hutong 3A2
 Jiadaokou Dong Dajie 2D3
continues 2E3
 Jiadaokou Nan Dajie 2D3
 Jin Bao Jie 2E5
continues 2F5
 Jing Shan Qian Jie 1C4
continues 2D4
 Jingtu Hutong 2D2
 Jinyuchi Zhong Jie 4D3
- K
- Kaifeng Hutong 3B3
- L
- Laoqiangan Jie 3A2
 Liuyin Jie 1B3
 Longtan Lu 4F4
 Luomashi Dajie 3B3
- M
- Maweimao Hutong 4E3
 Meishuguan Houjie 2D4
- N
- Nacaochang Jie 1A3
 Nanchang Jie 3C1
 Nan Chizi Dajie 4D1
 Nan Gangzi Jie 4F3
 Nanheng Dong Jie 3A3
continues 3B3
 Nanheng Xi Jie 3A3
 Nan Heyan Dajie 4D1
 Nan Qiaowan Jie 4D3
 Nan Xiaoshikou Jie 4F2
 Nan Xinhua Jie 3B2
- P
- Puhuangyu Lu 4E5
- Q
- Qianmachang Hutong 1C2
 Qian Men Dajie 3C2
 Qian Men Dong Dajie 4D2
 Qian Men Xi Dajie 3C2
 Qian Men Xiheyan Jie 3C2
 Qingyun Hutong 4D2
- R
- Rufuli 3A4
- S
- Shangxie Jie 3A2
 Shengou Hutong 4D2
- T
- Taijichang Dajie 4D1
 Taiping Jie 3B4
 Taiping Qiao Dajie 1A5
continues 1A4
 Taoranting Lu 3B4
 Tianqiao Nan Dajie 3C3
continues 3C4
 Tian Tan Dong Lu 4E4
 Tian Tan Lu 4D3
 Tieshuxie Jie 3B2
continues 3B3
 Tiyuquan Lu 4E3
 Tonglingge Lu 3A1
- W
- Wangfujing Dajie 2D5
 Wenhuiyuan Lu 1A1
 Wenjin Jie 1B4
- Wulutong Jie 1B1
 Wusi Dajie 2D4
- X
- Xi'an Men Dajie 1A4
continues 1B4
 Xianyukou Jie 3C2
 Xiaxie Jie 3A2
 Xibahe Nan Lu 2F1
 Xicaochang Jie 3A2
continues 3B2
 Xi Chang'an Jie 3B1
continues 3C1
 Xidan Bei Dajie 1A5
 Xi Damochang Jie 3C2
continues 4D2
 Xi Huashi Dajie 4E2
 Xijiaomin Xiang 3B1
continues 3C1
 Ximi Hutong 4D2
 Xinde Jie 1B1
 Xingfu Dajie 4F3
 Xinjiekou Bei Dajie 1A2
 Xinjiekou Nan Dajie 1A3
 Xinjiekouwai Dajie 1A1
 Xinkang Jie 1A1
continues 1B1
 Xinwenhua Jie 3A1
 Xi Rongxian Hutong 3A1
continues 3B1
 Xishiku Dajie 1B4
 Xisi Bei Dajie 1A4
 Xizhi Men Nei Dajie 1A3
 Xizongbu Hutong 4E1
 Xuanwu Men Dong Dajie 3B2
 Xuanwu Men Dong Heyan Jie 3B2
continues 3A2
 Xuanwu Men Xi Dajie 3A2
 Xuanwu Men Nai Dajie 3A1
 Xueyan Nan Lu 1A1
- Y
- Yong'an Lu 3C3
 Yongding Men Dong Binhe Lu 4D5
 Yongding Men Dong Jie 4D4
 Yongding Men Xi Binhe Lu 3C5
continues 3B5
 Yongding Men Xi Jie 3C4
continues 3B4
 Yongding Men Nei Dajie 3C4
 Yongding Men Wai Dajie 3C5
 Yonghe Gong Dajie 2E3
continues 2E2
 You'an Men Dong Binhe Lu 3A5
continues 3B5
- Z
- Zhangzi Zhong Lu 2D3
continues 2E3
 Zhaodengyu Lu 1A3
 Zhengyi Lu 4D1
 Zhushikou Dong Dajie 4D2
continues 4E2
 Zhushikou Xi Dajie 3B3
continues 3C3
 Zhuying Hutong 4E2
 Zuo'an Men Dong Jie 3A5
continues 3B5
 Zuo'an Men Nei Dajie 4F4
 Zuo'an Men Xi Binhe Lu 4E5
continues 4F5

XUEYUAN NAN LU

WENHUIYUAN LU

XINJIEKOU WAI DAJIE

XINKANG JIE

XINDE JIE

DESHENG MEN WAI DAJIE

WULUTONG JIE

YUAN TIAN HUTONG

RENDING HU GONG YUAN

ANDELI BEI JIE

ANDELI DONG JIE

ANDELI NAN JIE

ANDE LU

GULOU WAI DAJIE

QINGNIANHU NAN JIE

ANDE LU

DESHENG MEN XI DAJIE

XINJIEKOU BEI DAJIE

Xi Hai

DESHENG MEN DONG DAJIE

Former Residence of Song Qingsong

ANDING MEN

XIZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

XINJIEKOU NAN DAJIE

Hou Hai

Hou Hai

HOUHAI BEI YAN

GUANGHUA TEMPLE

Drum Tower & Bell Tower

MAO ER

XISI BEI DAJIE

MUSEUM OF MEI LANFANG

DI'AN MEN XI DAJIE

DI'AN MEN WAI DAJIE

FUCHENG MEN NEI DAJIE

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

BEI HAI PARK

BEI HAI

BEI HAI

DI'AN MEN NAI DAJIE

MIAOYING TEMPLE

XISHIKU CHURCH

XISHIKU DAJIE

White Dagoba Temple

JADE ISLAND

JING SHAN PARK (COAL HILL)

GUANGJI TEMPLE

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

YANGROU HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

ZHUANTA HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

JINGSHENG HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

SANGZHU HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

DAYUAN HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

BINGMA SI HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

FENGSHENG HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

HOU NIWA HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

FENZI HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

SHIFANGXIAO JIE

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

HONGMIAO HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

PICAI HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

DAMUCANG HUTONG

XI'AN MEN DAJIE

WENJIN JIE

Tuancheng (Round City)

JING SHAN QIAN

JING SHAN QIAN

XI CHENG

IMPERIAL GARDENS

Forbidden City

Forbidden City

HUANGSI DAJIE
LIUYIN GONG YUAN
QINGNIANHU BEI ZE

QINGNIAN HU GONG YUAN
Qingnian Hu

HEPINGLI XI JIE
HEPINGLI ZHONG JIE
HEPINGLI NAN JIE
HEPINGLI

DI TAN PARK

Temple of Earth

Yonghe Gong Lama Temple
Confucius Temple

ANDING MEN WAI DAJIE

XI DAJIE
Anding Men

DONGTAO HUTONG
JINGTU HUTONG
HUAFENG HUTONG

CHENIANDIAN HUTONG
XIEJIA HUTONG
FENSITING HUTONG

ANDING MEN NEI DAJIE

WUDAOYING HUTONG
GUOZI JIAN
FANGJIA HUTONG

Yonghe Gong Lama Temple
Confucius Temple

DONG DAJIE

JU'ER HUTONG
HOEYUAN'ENSI HUTONG
HUTONG

YU'ER HUTONG
FU XIANG HUTONG

DI'AN MEN DONG DAJIE

BEIHE HUTONG

SONGZHUYUAN BEIJANG
SANYANG HUTONG

DONG DAJIE

JU'ER HUTONG
HOEYUAN'ENSI HUTONG
HUTONG

YU'ER HUTONG
FU XIANG HUTONG

DI'AN MEN DONG DAJIE

BEIHE HUTONG

SONGZHUYUAN BEIJANG
SANYANG HUTONG

SHATAN HOUJIE

WANGFUJING DAJIE

BAOFANG HUTONG
DENGSHIKOU DAJIE
BAISHU HUTONG
XITANGZI HUTONG
GAN YU HUTONG
JIN YU HUTONG

WANGFUJING DAJIE

BAOFANG HUTONG
DENGSHIKOU DAJIE
BAISHU HUTONG
XITANGZI HUTONG
GAN YU HUTONG
JIN YU HUTONG

Meizha Hutong

WANGFUJING DAJIE

BAOFANG HUTONG
DENGSHIKOU DAJIE
BAISHU HUTONG
XITANGZI HUTONG
GAN YU HUTONG
JIN YU HUTONG

WANGFUJING DAJIE

BAOFANG HUTONG
DENGSHIKOU DAJIE
BAISHU HUTONG
XITANGZI HUTONG
GAN YU HUTONG
JIN YU HUTONG

Meizha Hutong

ANDING MEN
Yonghe Gong Lama Temple
Confucius Temple

WUDAOYING HUTONG
GUOZI JIAN
FANGJIA HUTONG

Yonghe Gong Lama Temple
Confucius Temple

JIAODAOYOU DONG DAJIE

TU'ER HUTONG
XIANG'ER HUTONG
DAIXING HUTONG

FU XUE HUTONG

ZHANGZI ZHONG LU

SHANLAO HUTONG
WANGZHIMA HUTONG
WEIJIA HUTONG

SHIJIANHUYUAN HUTONG
YUQUAN HUTONG
QIANLIANG HUTONG

JIAODAOYOU DONG DAJIE

TU'ER HUTONG
XIANG'ER HUTONG
DAIXING HUTONG

FU XUE HUTONG

ZHANGZI ZHONG LU

SHANLAO HUTONG
WANGZHIMA HUTONG
WEIJIA HUTONG

SHIJIANHUYUAN HUTONG
YUQUAN HUTONG
QIANLIANG HUTONG

YUQUAN HUTONG
QIANLIANG HUTONG

DONG SI XI DAJIE

CUIHUA HUTONG
DUOFU XIANG
DONGSHANG HUTONG

DONG SI XI DAJIE

CUIHUA HUTONG
DUOFU XIANG
DONGSHANG HUTONG

DONG SI XI DAJIE

CUIHUA HUTONG
DUOFU XIANG
DONGSHANG HUTONG

DONG DAJIE

QINGLONG HUTONG
JINGGUAN HUTONG
PAOJU HUTONG
HOUYONGKANG HUTONG

BEIXINQIAO SAN TIAO
CAOYUAN HUTONG
BEIXIQAOTOU TIAO

YONGHE GONG DAJIE

SHIQUO HUTONG
DAJU HUYONG
XINSHICAN
DONG SI SHI SI TIAO
DONG SI SHI SAN TIAO
DONG SI SHI ER TIAO
DONG SI SHI YI TIAO

DONG DAJIE

QINGLONG HUTONG
JINGGUAN HUTONG
PAOJU HUTONG
HOUYONGKANG HUTONG

BEIXINQIAO SAN TIAO
CAOYUAN HUTONG
BEIXIQAOTOU TIAO

YONGHE GONG DAJIE

SHIQUO HUTONG
DAJU HUYONG
XINSHICAN
DONG SI SHI SI TIAO
DONG SI SHI SAN TIAO
DONG SI SHI ER TIAO
DONG SI SHI YI TIAO

DONG SI SHI TIAO

DONG SI JIN TIAO
DONG SI BA TIAO
DONG SI QI TIAO
DONG SI LIU TIAO

DONG SI SHI TIAO

DONG SI JIN TIAO
DONG SI BA TIAO
DONG SI QI TIAO
DONG SI LIU TIAO

DONG SI WU TIAO
DONG SI SI TIAO
DONG SI SAN TIAO

DONG SI SHI TIAO

DONG SI JIN TIAO
DONG SI BA TIAO
DONG SI QI TIAO
DONG SI LIU TIAO

DONG SI WU TIAO
DONG SI SI TIAO
DONG SI SAN TIAO

Fuwangfu Temple

DONG SI SHI TIAO

DONG SI JIN TIAO
DONG SI BA TIAO
DONG SI QI TIAO
DONG SI LIU TIAO

DONG SI SHI TIAO

DONG SI JIN TIAO
DONG SI BA TIAO
DONG SI QI TIAO
DONG SI LIU TIAO

DONG SI WU TIAO
DONG SI SI TIAO
DONG SI SAN TIAO

DONG SI SHI TIAO

DONG SI JIN TIAO
DONG SI BA TIAO
DONG SI QI TIAO
DONG SI LIU TIAO

DONG SI WU TIAO
DONG SI SI TIAO
DONG SI SAN TIAO

Fuwangfu Temple

DONG ZHI MEN
Dong Zhi Men Bus Terminal

BEIGUANTU HUTONG
ZHENMIAN HUTONG
ZHENZHONG
XIYANGUAN HUTONG

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

DONG ZHI MEN
Dong Zhi Men Bus Terminal

BEIGUANTU HUTONG
ZHENMIAN HUTONG
ZHENZHONG
XIYANGUAN HUTONG

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

DONG ZHI MEN NEI DAJIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

BEIXINCANG HUTONG
DONGZHIMEN NAN XIAO JIE

XI CHE
Cultural Palace for Nationalities
FUXING MEN NEI DAJIE

XUANWU MEN XI DAJIE

GUANG'AN MEN NEI DAJIE

WANSU PARK

XUANWU

XI CHANG'AN JIE
Capital Cinema
Beijing Concert Hall
National Theater
Great Hall of the People
Mao Zedong Mausoleum
Bank of China
Qian Men Bus Terminal
Qian Men

XUANWU MEN DONG DAJIE
Zhengyici Beijing Opera Theater

LUOMASHI DAJIE
Beijing Workers Club
Liyuan Theater

TAORANTING HU
Waterside Pavilion
Taoranting Gong Yuan
Xianmou Tan Stadium

YONGDING MEN XI BINHE LU
Yongding Men Bus Terminal
Beijing South Train Station

ZHONG SHAN Gong Yuan
PARK OF THE PEOPLE'S CULTURE
Tian'an Men
Tian'an Men Xi Dajie

QIAN MEN XI DAJIE

ZHUSHIKOU XI DAJIE

TIANQIAO NAN DAJIE
Beijing Natural History Museum

YONGDING MEN NEI DAJIE

YONGDING MEN WAI DAJIE

3

1

2

3

4

5

A

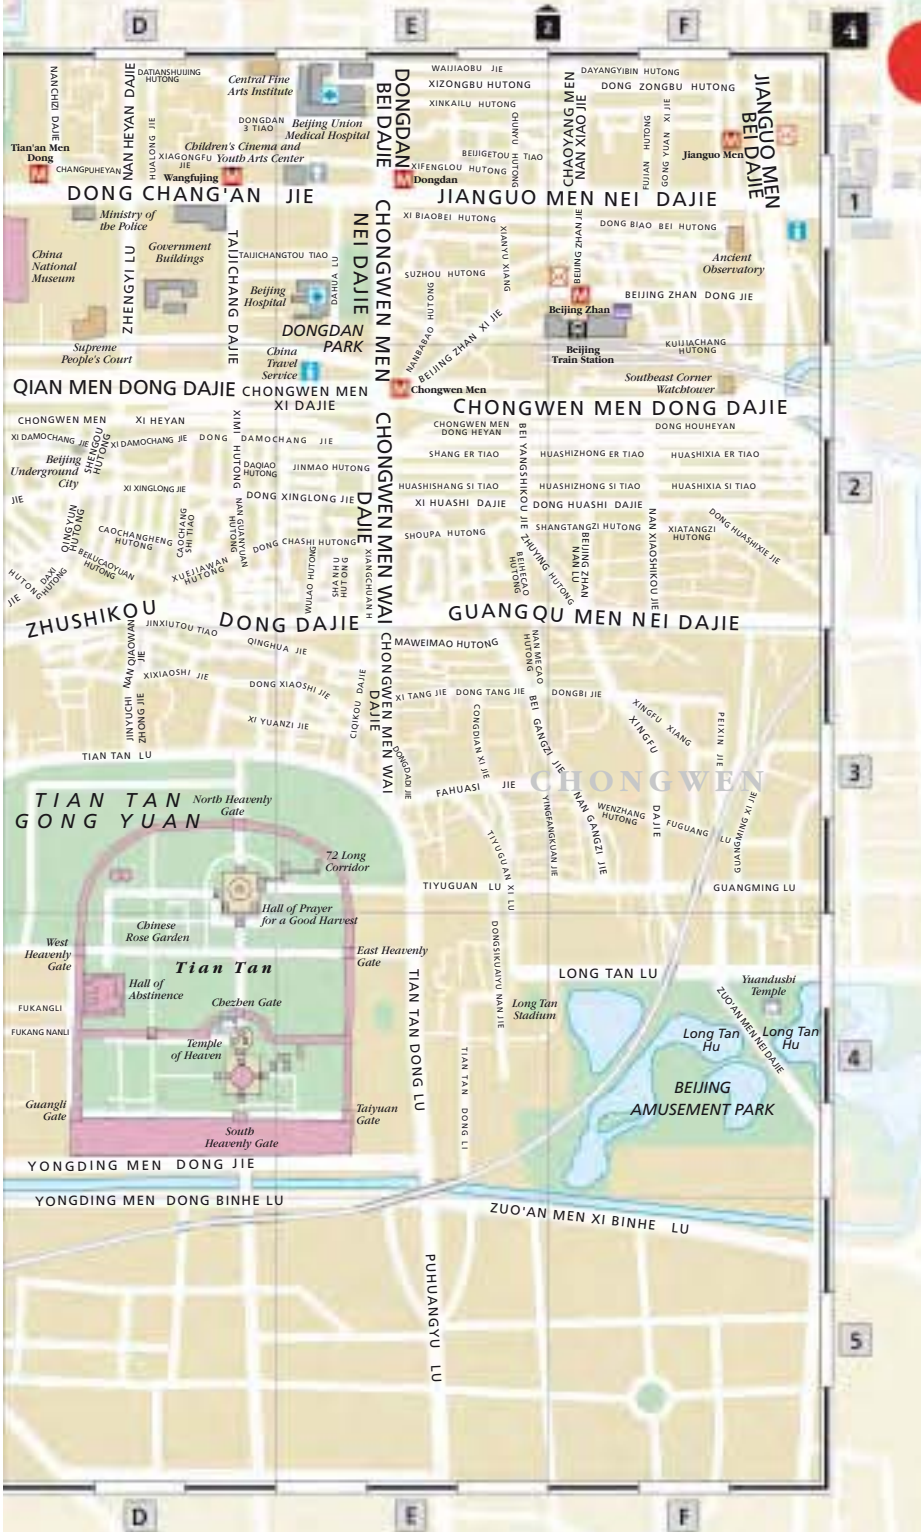

B

C

A

B

C

D

E

F

G

H

1

2

3

4

5

NANQI DAI JIE
 TIAN AN MEN DONG
 CHANGPU HEYAN
 NAN HEYAN DAI JIE
 DATIANSHUING HUTONG
 HUALONG JIE
 HUIJIANG JIE
 WANGFUJING
 DONG CHANG AN JIE
 Ministry of the Police Government Buildings
 ZHENG YI LU
 CHONGWEN MEN XI DAI JIE
 XI HEYAN
 XI DAMOCHANG JIE
 XI DAMOCHANG JIE
 XI XINGLONG JIE
 XI XINGLONG JIE
 CAOCHANGHENG HUTONG
 BEIJIANG SHI TIAO
 XUEJIAHAI HUTONG
 JINXIUTOU TIAO
 JINXIAOSHI JIE
 XIXIAOSHI JIE
 ZHONG JIE
 TIAN TAN LU
 TIAN TAN GONG YUAN
 North Heavenly Gate
 72 Long Corridor
 Hall of Prayer for a Good Harvest
 Chinese Rose Garden
 West Heavenly Gate
 East Heavenly Gate
 TIAN TAN
 Hall of Abstinence
 Cezhen Gate
 Temple of Heaven
 Guangli Gate
 South Heavenly Gate
 Tatyuan Gate
 YONGDING MEN DONG JIE
 YONGDING MEN DONG BINHE LU
 PUHUANGYU LU
 DONGDAN BEI DAI JIE
 WAIJIABU JIE
 XIZONGBU HUTONG
 XINKAILU HUTONG
 QIANQU HUTONG
 BEIJIETOU TIAO
 JIFENGLU HUTONG
 XI BIAOBEI HUTONG
 SUZHOU HUTONG
 NIMBARAO HUTONG
 BEIJING ZHAN XI JIE
 CHONGWEN MEN NEI DAI JIE
 CHONGWEN MEN XI DAI JIE
 CHONGWEN MEN DONG DAI JIE
 CHONGWEN MEN WAI DAI JIE
 CHONGWEN MEN WAI DAI JIE
 MAWEIMAO HUTONG
 XI TANG JIE
 DONG TANG JIE
 CONGDAN XI JIE
 FAHUASI JIE
 TIYUGUAN LU
 DONGSINQUANVU NAN JIE
 TIAN TAN DONG LU
 JIANGUO MEN BEI DAI JIE
 DAYANGYIBIN HUTONG
 DONG ZONGBU HUTONG
 JIE XI NUYUAN HUTONG
 FUJIAN HUTONG
 GONGYUAN HUTONG
 JIANGUO MEN NEI DAI JIE
 DONG BIAO BEI HUTONG
 ANCIENT OBSERVATORY
 BEIJING ZHAN DONG JIE
 KULIACHANG HUTONG
 BEIJING ZHAN
 BEIJING TRAIN STATION
 SOUTHEAST CORNER WATCHTOWER
 CHONGWEN MEN DONG DAI JIE
 CHONGWEN MEN DONG HEYAN
 SHANG ER TIAO
 HUASHISHANG SI TIAO
 XI HUASHI DAI JIE
 SHOUPIA HUTONG
 BEIJING ZHAN NAN LU
 BEIJING ZHAN NAN LU
 SHANGTANGZI HUTONG
 CHONGWEN MEN DONG DAI JIE
 HUASHIZHONG ER TIAO
 HUASHIZHONG SI TIAO
 DONG HUASHI DAI JIE
 NAN XIAOSHOU JIE
 DONG HUASHI JIE
 GUANGQU MEN NEI DAI JIE
 NANMEICAO HUTONG
 BEI GANZI JIE
 WANGFENGQUAN JIE
 XINGFU XIANG
 XINGFU
 PEIXIN JIE
 WENZHANG HUTONG
 FUGUANG LU
 GUANGMING LU
 LONG TAN LU
 Long Tan Stadium
 YUANDUSHI TEMPLE
 Long Tan Hu
 Long Tan Hu
 BEIJING AMUSEMENT PARK
 ZUO AN MEN NEI DAI JIE

HEBEI, TIANJIN & SHANXI

WITH ITS NORTHERN borders adjoining Inner Mongolia and the western tip of erstwhile Manchuria, Hebei divides into a long southern plateau and a mountainous north, dotted with fragments of the Great Wall.

Despite these barriers, the Manchu army flowed through the Shanhaiguan Pass in 1644 to impose 250 years of foreign rule on the Chinese. Hebei borders Shanxi to the west and envelops the wealthy conurbations of Beijing and Tianjin – Hebei's former capital and a repository of foreign concession-era architecture.

Shanxi (West of the Mountains), its northern edge protected by the Great Wall, was once a buffer zone against the hostile Mongol and Turkic tribes. It is largely a mountainous plateau, heavily industrialized, with the Yellow River (Huang He) flowing the length of its western border. Leaving Beijing, most visitors first explore Chengde, with its imperial park and temple architecture, or the celebrated Buddhist carvings at Yungang, outside Datong. Other key sights include the magnificent Hanging Temple clinging to the cliff face, the peaceful hills around Wutai Shan, one of China's four sacred Buddhist mountains and the charming Ming and Qing architecture in the ancient walled town of Pingyao.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Beidaihe ②
- Datong ⑥
- Pingyao pp138-9 ⑪
- Shanhaiguan ③
- Shijiazhuang ⑤
- Taiyuan ⑩
- Tianjin ④

Temples & Monasteries

- Chengde pp122-5 ①
- Hanging Temple ⑧
- Shuanglin Si ⑫

Areas of Natural Beauty

- Wutai Shan pp134-6 ⑨
- Yungang Caves pp132-3 ⑦

Historic Sites

- Qiao Jia Dayuan ⑬

Chengde ①

承德

Incense burner

THE MOUNTAIN RESORT at Chengde (Bishu Shanzhuang) was chosen by the Kangxi emperor in 1703 as a means of eluding the hot summers in the Forbidden City. Set in a river valley surrounded by mountains, the park was strategically secure and allowed the hardy Manchu to engage in hunting and martial sports. The rural setting beyond the Great Wall reminded the Manchu rulers of their homelands to the northeast. The eclectic temple design of the surrounding Eight Outer Temples put visiting Mongol and tribal chieftains at ease, so the emperor could exploit their allegiances.

★ Putuocongcheng Zhi Miao

Built to resemble the Potala Palace in Lhasa, the temple is the largest of the Eight Outer Temples and has displays of thangkas (Tibetan religious scrolls), Tibetan religious ornaments, and two scaled-down sandalwood pagodas.

KEY

Town area

Road

The wall is over 6 miles (10 km) long

THE KANGXI EMPEROR

Kangxi (1654–1722) was the second Qing emperor to reign from Beijing, and held on to power for 61 years, the longest reign in China's history. His rule was, in comparison with other emperors, frugal, practical, and conscientious. During his reign the empire increased in size and wealth, and generally enjoyed peace and prosperity. He taxed the farmers moderately and protected the peasantry, building up a healthy rural economy. An outstanding militarist, he was also a patron of the arts and sciences inviting Jesuit scholars to the Chinese court. He was followed by his fourth son, Yongzheng (r.1723–35), and then his grandson Qianlong (r.1736–95), who idolized him so much that he resigned as emperor after sixty years so as not to outdo him.

The Kangxi emperor pictured in his library

Tibetan Buddhist designs to make the Mongol allies feel at home

STAR SIGHTS

★ Putuocongcheng Zhi Miao

★ Puning Si

★ Bishu Shanzhuang

Xumifushou Zhi Miao

This temple was built to impress the visiting Panchen Lama who came to Chengde on the occasion of the Qianlong emperor's birthday in 1780.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Chengde. 150 miles (250 km)

NE of Beijing. 🚗 🚏 🚝 5, 7,

11, 15 from Chengde station. 🚗

Bishu Shanzhuang 🕒 8:30am–6:30pm daily. 🎫 📷 Outer

Temples 🕒 daily (temples are not all open at the same time). 🎫

★ Puning Si

This temple combines Han Chinese designs at the front with typical Tibetan structures at the back. The highlight is the majestic wooden statue of Guanyin in the main hall (see pp124–5).

Pule Si

The most impressive hall in Pule Si, the Temple of Universal Joy, is the yellow-tiled twin conical-roofed hall which has strong echoes of the Temple of Heaven in Beijing.

GETTING AROUND

It is possible to see the temples and resort in a one-day minibus tour. However, it is quite a tough day. If time allows, try a more leisurely walk around the resort one day and hire a taxi for the temples the next.

★ Bishu Shanzhuang

The southern section of the resort contains an array of simple but elegant palaces, cool shaded lakes and waterside pavilions, best viewed from a rowing boat.

Puning Si, Chengde

普宁寺

Incense burner

ONE OF THE MOST IMPRESSIVE outer temples at the Imperial Summer Retreat at Chengde, Puning Si (Puning Temple) was built in 1755 by the Qianlong emperor to commemorate the defeat of Mongol rebels. The whole temple complex is a harmonious synthesis of Chinese and Tibetan styles of architecture. As part of a series of halls ascending the slope of a mountain, the temple's pinnacle is the Mahayana Hall, in which towers one of the world's largest wooden statues, a vast 73-ft (22-m) high representation of the Buddhist goddess of compassion, Guanyin.

Buddhist Symbols

Guanyin's hands hold an array of Buddhist symbolic instruments – the pure sound of the bell is said to drive away evil spirits.

The terrace buildings form a three-dimensional mandala (see p536), a physical representation of Buddhist cosmology.

★ Guanyin

The huge effigy of Guanyin, also known to Buddhists as Avalokitesvara, is fashioned from five different types of wood. Viewing galleries can be climbed for views above ground level.

STAR FEATURES

★ Guanyin

★ Mahayana Hall

Amitabha Buddha, Guanyin's teacher, is shown perched on the top of her head.

Viewing gallery

One of two attendant statues

Diyu houses a macabre display of Buddhist punishments.

Monks

Puning Si is the only working temple at Chengde and the monks can be seen praying in the morning.

Prayer Wheels

In Tibetan

Buddhism, sacred mantras and prayers are inserted into the decorated cylinders and activated by spinning the wheel clockwise.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

5 miles (8 km) NE of Chengde, Hebei Province. 🚗 6. 🚗

☐ May–mid-Oct: 8am–5:30pm daily; mid-Oct–Apr: 8am–4:30pm daily. 📱 📺 📷

Stupa (Chorten)

These monuments represent Buddha's physical presence and traditionally held sacred relics or even the remains of revered lamas.

Tibetan elements of the buildings are the bricks, the red and white coloring, and the shape of the windows.

Miaoyan Shi was where the emperor rested when visiting.

Defensive wall

Gatehouse

PUNING SI

This illustration shows the Tibetan-styled rear section of the temple complex. This part uses several terraces to emphasize differences of height and scale, whereas the traditional Chinese part of the complex consists of a symmetrical series of buildings on a single axis.

★ Mayahana Hall

Called Dacheng Ge in Chinese, the 122-ft (37-m) high hall symbolizes the palace of Buddha on Mount Sumeru, the center of the Buddhist world.

Beidaihe, one of northern China's premier resorts

Beidaihe ②

北戴河

186 miles (300 km) E of Beijing. ☒ to Qinhuangdao, 9 miles (15 km) NE of Beidaihe, then express bus. ☒ ☒

DESPITE ITS immense coastline, China has very few good quality beaches, except perhaps in Hainan Island in the south. Nevertheless, the coastal town of Beidaihe, North China's breezy seaside retreat, is a pleasant escape from Beijing's intolerable summer heat. Discovered in the 19th century by British railway engineers, it soon became popular with foreign nationals from Tianjin, and villas, summer holiday homes, and golf courses soon sprang up. These were later taken over by Chinese Communist Party cadres, and party leaders still gather in Beidaihe for their annual conference in August.

Sadly, many of the elegant European-style villas are now obscured by garish modern seafront properties. During summer (April–October), Beidaihe's beaches are packed with hawkers and holiday-makers. The best way to spend one's time is to sample the array of seafood, or hire a bike or tandem from one of the outlets on Zhonghaitan Lu for panoramic rides along the coast. The hilly Lianfengshan Park in the west of town is covered in cypresses and pines, and its hilltop Sea-Viewing Pavilion provides a good vantage point for views of the coast. The restored Guanyin Temple, dedicated to the Goddess of Compassion, is also located here. Beidaihe's three beaches are dotted with statues of revolutionary workers. Middle Beach is the most popular, while West Beach is quieter. Nearby, Tiger Rocks is a popular spot to watch the sunrise. East Beach, 4 miles (6 km) northeast of Beidaihe, gets covered in seaweed and shells at low tide.

Shanhaiguan ③

山海关

218 miles (350 km) E of Beijing. ☒ to Qinhuangdao, 8 miles (13 km) SW of Shanhaiguan, then express bus. ☒ ☒

ASHORT HOP UP along the coast from Beidaihe, Shanhaiguan (The Pass Between the Mountain and the Sea) is where the Great Wall meets the sea. Although less affluent than Beidaihe, the town is steeped in history and is fortified by a Ming-era wall. The charming area within the walls is segmented by hutong (historic alleys), and serviced by a few hotels.

Shanhaiguan promotes its Great Wall links. The First Pass Under Heaven in the east of town is a formidable section of wall attached to a huge gatehouse. The Manchus overcame half-hearted resistance here and headed for Beijing to establish the Qing dynasty. Visitors can climb up on the ramparts, or access its tower, which displays Qing weapons and costumes. To the south is the Great Wall Museum, worth visiting for its photographs and models of the wall. Also on display are tools that were used to build it, as well as the various weapons that were used in its defense. Although there are no English captions, the exhibits are well displayed.

A more stirring section of the wall lies 2 miles (3 km) north of town at Jiao Shan, where bracing climbs can be made up its steep incline – or take a cable car. Lao Long Tou (Old Dragon Head) marks the end of the Great Wall at the sea, 3 miles (4 km) south of town. This part of the wall has been reconstructed and, despite the tour buses, is worth visiting. Visitors can head west along the beach to explore Haishen Miao (Temple of the Sea God).

Great Wall Museum

☒ 8am–5pm daily. ☒

The aptly named Lao Long Tou, shaped like a dragon's head

Tianjin 4

天津

50 miles (80 km) SE of Beijing.

☎ 10,000,000. 🚆 🚉 Main Train Station, North Train Station, West Train Station. 🚌 West Bus Station, Northeast Bus Station, Bus Station No. 1, CAAC (buses to airport), South Bus Station. 🌊 Tanggu Harbor. 📞 22 Youyi Lu, (022) 2835 8309.

HEBEI'S FORMER capital, the municipality of Tianjin is China's fourth largest city and a major seaport. The city's appeal lies in its Western Concession architecture, a legacy of its past as a foreign trading post since 1858. The former powers, led by Britain and France, and followed by Japan, Germany, Austro-Hungary, Italy, and Russia, built schools, banks, and churches.

In the north of town, the Ancient Culture Street is a recreation of an ancient Chinese street. The Tianhou Temple, dedicated to the Goddess of the Sea, is on the street's west side. To the southwest, close to the Old

Deity, Street Market

Chinese Town, the Confucius Temple was damaged during the Cultural Revolution, and restored in 1993. About a mile (0.6 km) northeast across the River Hai is the gaunt Wang Hai Lou Cathedral (Wang Hailou Jiao Tang). Outside, a plaque in Chinese relates the church's turbulent history.

It was destroyed by a mob in 1870, and again during the 1900 Boxer Rebellion. The 1976 Tang Shan earthquake damaged it for the third time, and it was repaired in 1983. North of the cathedral, the Qing-era Dabei Monastery is reached via a colorful market selling incense sticks and Buddhist talismans. People pay their respects to Milefo (the Laughing Buddha) at the entrance and to Guanyin in her own hall. To the west is the Chinese-style mosque Qingzhen Si. This is not open to the public, but suitably dressed visitors may ask to be admitted. Some distance to the southeast, the Tianjin Fine Art Museum is housed in a fine French concession-era building in the heart of town. Exhibits include prints, silk paintings, and artifacts. Close by, on Jiefang Bei Lu, are many of Tianjin's colonial buildings including the Astor Hotel, whose guests included China's last emperor, Pu Yi. The excellent Antique Market on Shenyang Dao is a riveting sprawl of collectibles. To the south, at the end of Binjiang Dao, are the three green domes of the French-built Xi Kai Cathedral (Xi Kai Jiao Tang), open on Sundays.

Beautiful tiled wall at the Tianhou Temple, Tianjin

🏯 Dabei Monastery

40 Tianwei Lu. ☑ daily. 📞

🏛️ Tianjin Fine Art Museum

12 Chengde Dao. ☑ daily. 📞

TIANJIN CITY CENTER

- 1 Ancient Culture Street
- 2 Antique Market
- 3 Confucius Temple
- 4 Dabei Monastery
- 5 Jiefang Bei Lu
- 6 Qingzhen Si Mosque
- 7 Tianhou Temple
- 8 Tianjin Fine Art Museum
- 9 Wang Hai Lou Cathedral
- 10 Xi Kai Cathedral

KEY

- 🚆 Train station
- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 📧 Post office

Shijiazhuang 5

石家庄

155 miles (250 km) SW of Beijing.

☎ 8,600,000. ☒ ☑ ☒ ☒

📍 26 Donggang Lu, (0311) 582 7777.

THE CAPITAL OF HEBEI often suffers from unfair comparisons to both Beijing and the former provincial capital, Tianjin. An industrial town dating from the modern railway age, Shijiazhuang has just a few sights including the Hebei Provincial Museum in the east of town, which displays interesting historical relics such as a jade burial suit and an entire miniature terracotta army. To the west along Zhongshan Lu is the Martyrs' Memorial, a park which honors two doctors as Heroes of the Revolution. Both men, a Canadian named Norman Bethune and an Indian named Dwarkanath Kotnis, served the Communist Party in the early 20th century.

🏛️ Hebei Provincial Museum

🕒 9am–4:30pm daily. 📍

ENVIRONS: Most of the area's main sights lie outside Shijiazhuang, and are easily accessed by train, bus, or minibus. Lying a short train or bus journey 9 miles (15 km) north of town, the ancient walled town of Zhengding is known for its temples and pagodas. The most renowned is Dafo Si (Great Buddha Temple), also known as Longxing Si. Its highlight is the gargantuan 69-ft (21-m) high bronze statue of Guanyin (the Goddess of Compassion) that stands in the Dabei Ge (Pavilion of Great Mercy). Fashioned over 1,000 years ago during the Song dynasty, the multi-armed statue is a riveting sight. Visitors can climb the gallery surrounding the statue for a closer look.

Kaiyuan Si's Tang pagoda, Zhengding

West of Dafo Si, the 135 ft (41 m) Lingxiao Ta (Lingxing Pagoda) in Tianning Si is a restored Tang dynasty structure built from wood and brick, while Kaiyuan Si's Tang-dynasty pagoda rises up just off Yanzhao Dajie, Zhengding's main street. Also situated here is China's sole surviving Tang dynasty Bell Tower (Zhong Lou). Dotted around Zhengding are several temples and pagodas, including the Confucian Temple, Chengling Ta (Chengling Pagoda) at Linji Si, and the Hua Ta (Hua Pagoda) at Guanghui

Si, with its many intriguing motifs that represent the Buddhas, elephants, and whales.

About 25 miles (40 km) southeast of Shijiazhuang, near Zhaoxian town, the 1,400-year old Zhaozhou Bridge (Zhaozhou Qiao) is a graceful feat of engineering. Built over ten years by the mason Li Chun and completed in

Qiao Lou at Cangyan Shan Si (Hanging Palace), Cangyang Shan

AD 605, the 167-ft (51-m) long bridge satisfied several requirements. The gentle bow had to be level enough to convey imperial soldiers, yet high enough to evade flood waters, while relying on the soft riverbanks for support. The main arch (forming an arc rather than a semicircle) is an effortless span of 28 stone blocks. Supported on each end of the arch are two smaller ones that are designed to lighten the structure of the bridge and allow the passage of flood waters.

About 25 miles (40 km) southwest of Shijiazhuang is a surprising group of monasteries and pagodas tucked away among the cypresses and sheer drops of Cangyan Shan (Cangyan Mountains). The Cangyan Shan Si also known as the Hanging Palace, situated hundreds of steps up the mountainside, dates from the Sui dynasty. One hall, the Qiao Lou, is spectacularly slung between two cliffs, suspended on a bridge over the void. In the valleys and on the slopes beyond, the trail continues to explore the dramatic landscape, passing several shrines.

🏛️ Dafo Si

🕒 8am–5pm daily. 📍

🌉 Zhaozhou Bridge

🕒 daily. 📍

🏛️ Cangyan Shan

📍 from Shijiazhuang. 🕒 daily. 📍

The graceful, stone Zhaozhou Bridge (Zhaozhou Qiao)

Datong 6

大同

165 miles (265 km) SW of Beijing.
 2,700,000. 11. 11. 11. CITS
 Datong, (0352) 510 2265.

SITUATED NEAR THE southern flank of Inner Mongolia, Datong has some splendid sights worth exploring despite the coal mines and power stations that blight the surrounding landscape.

The city was twice a dynastic capital, under the Northern Wei (AD 386–534), and the Liao (AD 907–1125), both non-Chinese. The Northern Wei were fervent Buddhists who carved and decorated the Yungang Caves nearby, while a significant relic of the Liao era survives in the Huayan Si (Huayan Temple), located in an alley off Da Xi Jie, west of the crossroads in the old town. Completed by the Jin, the temple was much restored by later dynasties. Raised up on a 13-ft (4-m) terrace, Huayan Si's Great Treasure Hall (Daxiong Bao Dian) is one of China's largest Buddhist halls. Within the hall sit five gilded and enthroned Ming-era statues with attendants. The ceiling panels are decorated with Sanskrit letters, flowers, and dragons. A short walk east of the crossroads on Da Dong Jie is Jiulong Bi (Nine

Gilded Buddhist statuary, Mahavira Hall, Huayan Si, Datong

Dragon Screen), a 148-ft (45-m) tiled spirit wall built to front the palace of the 13th son of Hongwu, the first Ming emperor. Less than a mile south of the crossroads on Da Nan Jie is the Shanhua Si. Erected during the Tang era, it was subsequently destroyed by fire and rebuilt in the 12th century. The main hall has five Buddhist statues, flanked by 24 divine generals.

- 11. Huayan Si
- 8am–5pm daily. 11. 11. 11.
- 11. Shanhua Si
- 8:30am–5pm daily. 11. 11. 11.

Yungang Caves 7

See pp132–3.

Hanging Temple 8

悬空寺

40 miles (65 km) SE of Datong.
 from Datong to Hunyuan, then taxi. 11. (0352) 832 7417.
 7am–6pm daily. 11. 11.

ONE OF CHINA'S five sacred Daoist mountains, Heng Shan is also known as Beiyue (Northern Peak). The mountain range is a huge draw, its highest peak daring climbers to scale its 6,600 ft (2,000 m) slopes – a tradition started by the first emperor, Qin Shi Huangdi, and kept alive by later rulers. Its main attraction, however, is the spectacular Xuankong Si. Supported by slender wooden pillars, the temple seemingly clings precariously to the canyon's walls. The Northern Wei were the first to build here, but flood waters from the Heng River below regularly washed the buildings away. The current edifice dates from the Qing dynasty. The temple's 40-odd halls are hewn from natural caves and hollows in the rock, and are covered with wooden façades. They are connected by walkways and bridges, and contain statues of Confucian, Buddhist, and Daoist gods in stone, iron, and bronze. The Sanjiao Dian (Three Religions Hall) has statues of Confucius, Buddha, and Laozi all seated together.

The spectacular Hanging Temple (Xuankong Si), Heng Shan

Yungang Caves 7

云岗石窟

Lively arhat,
Cave 18

CARVED INTO SANDSTONE CLIFFS, the caves at Yungang are one of China's most celebrated accomplishments of Buddhist art. The assembly of over 51,000 statues was started by the Northern Wei dynasty in AD 453 to atone for their persecution of Buddhism.

The statues, which range in size from the colossal to the minute, are accompanied by English explanations. Hellenistic, Persian, Central Asian, and Indian influences are evident in the carvings, testifying to the many influences entering China via the Silk Road. When the capital moved from Datong to Luoyang, in AD 494, work at Yungang all but stopped.

★ Exterior of Cave 6

The wooden temple façade has protected the beautifully carved 50-ft (16-m) stone pagoda and the rest of the sculptures within.

Cave 16

Has finely featured carving especially Buddha's head.

Cave 13

Look for the small figure supporting the Buddha's arm.

Caves 16–20

These are the oldest caves, built between AD 453 and 462 by the monk Tan Hao.

Caves 5 & 6

Protected by wooden frontage.

★ Main Buddha, Cave 20

The simplicity and balance of the tableau shows great artistic merit. This cave would have been shielded by a wooden screen.

Detail of Cave 10

Built as a pair along with Cave 9, this cave is also divided into two chambers. The interior is densely decorated with colorful bas-reliefs and statues in niches.

Musicians, Cave 12

This cave is decorated with devotees of music and dance. The colorful walls provide excellent evidence for the development and use of musical instruments in China at the time.

★ Seated Buddha, Cave 5

Marking a move from the more stylized earlier Buddhas, this one has a more corpulent and naturalistic air. Protected by the wooden façade, the cave is in good condition.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Cave 20
- ★ Cave 6
- ★ Cave 5

View of the central section of the Yungang Caves, Datong

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

10 miles (16 km) W of Datong.
 ☎ (0352) 510 2265, CITS Datong.
 🚌 4 then bus 3 or minibus from opposite Datong train station or CITS tour booked at train station.
 ⌚ 8:30am–5:30pm daily. 📷

Interior, Cave 3
The Buddhas here have rounded fleshy faces and full lips, indicating that they are later creations, perhaps Sui dynasty (AD 581–618).

Pagoda in Cave 2
Nearly square in construction, this cave has a carved square pagoda linking ceiling and floor. The statues in the cave have suffered a little due to exposure to the weather.

ARTISTIC INFLUENCES, CAVE 18

The colossal Buddha recalls the style of Gandhara (see p465). This Buddhist stronghold and meeting point for many of the Silk Roads sought to recreate the solemnity, dignity, and awe-inspiring nature of Buddha. A more realistic style can be seen in the five smaller arbats on each side and the crown worn by the Bodhisattva.

The bared shoulder was replaced by the more Chinese robe and girdle, (see Cave 5)

The realistic faces of these arbats show the personal input by the artists

Statue has webbed fingers one of the marks of Buddha

The exterior of Cave 18 with the colossal Buddha

Wutai Shan ⑨

五台山

Incense burner

THE CHARMING monastic village of Taihuai, nestling in the valley ringed by Wutai Shan's five mountain peaks (or terraces), has the largest concentration of temples as well as most of Wutai Shan's hotels and restaurants. Although Wutai Shan was the site of over 300 temples during the Qing dynasty, many were destroyed. Tsongkhapa, the founder of the Buddhist Yellow Hat Sect (which has the Dalai Lama as its head), lived here and the mountains and its shrines are revered by Lamaist Buddhists from Tibet and Mongolia. Late spring and summer is the best time to visit Wutai Shan, but also the most crowded.

Luohou Si

Inside this temple is a wooden lotus flower decorated with eight wooden petals that, when rotated, open to reveal carved Buddhist figures.

★ Tayuan Si

This temple is dominated by its distinctive Ming Dynasty and Tibetan-styled Great White Dagoba (Da bai Ta), which rises to a height of 190 ft (50 m). The dagoba is topped with a bronze cap with bells.

KEY

■ Built-up area

— Road

STAR SIGHTS

★ Tayuan Si

★ Xian Tong Si

★ Pusa Ding

Taihuai

West of the Qingshui River, the village is thronging with pilgrims, monks, and lamas. Visitors come for its Buddhist temples and to shop for religious talismans.

★ Xian Tong Si

The highlight of this, the largest temple on Wutai Shan, is the Bronze Hall. Made entirely from metal, it is decorated with thousands of small Buddhist figures.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

149 miles (240 km) N of Taiyuan.

🚗 from Datong or Taihuai.

🚗 from Beijing to Shahe then a 1-hr bus ride. 📞 CITS (0350)

654 2122. ☑ daily. 🚗 🚗 by privately organized minibuses, taxis, or through CITS.

Shou Ning Si is a little bit off the beaten track in the hills.

San Ta Si

Guang Hua Si

Jin Jie Si

Shang Cai Dong sits at the foot of the hills in view of the cable car to the north.

0 meters 100
0 yards 100

★ Pusa Ding

To reach Pusa Ding (Bodhisattva Summit), a temple complex dating from the Ming and Qing dynasties, there is a climb of 108 steps. A significant number – it is the number of beads on a Buddhist rosary.

Qi Fo Si

This temple is not visited as much as the other more famous temples and as such will be a quieter spot to take in the scenery. It also has a white stone pagoda.

THE CULT OF MANJUSRI

Known as Wenshu in China, Manjusri is the Buddhist bodhisattva of Wisdom and the patron deity of Wutai Shan. A disciple of Sakyamuni (Buddha), Manjusri is often portrayed riding a lion or holding a sword – for cleaving both ignorance and suffering. Many of Wutai Shan's temples and halls are dedicated to Wenshu and the deity's association with the mountain dates as far back as the first century AD, when a visiting Indian monk had a vision of the bodhisattva. Many more sightings have been recorded since.

Manjusri or Wenshu, patron deity of Wutai Shan

Exploring Wutai Shan

WUTAI SHAN WAS ORIGINALLY worshiped by followers of the Dao (Daoists) pursuing the secrets of immortality, before attracting devotees of Buddha who built many temples in his name. If visitors explore around Taihuai they will find many temples scattered among the surrounding peaks and in more distant parts of the region. Most can be reached without much difficulty, and the effort rewards the adventurous with the chance to admire some of China's oldest buildings.

The thickly wooded slopes of Wutai Shan

Wutai Shan's Temples

The first temples appeared on Wutai Shan during the Eastern Han Dynasty. The five peaks of Wutai Shan are each topped with a temple, but they are hard to reach and tend to attract only devout pilgrims. Several temples can be visited either by hiking, by bus, or by minibus tour from Taihuai (including those through CITS), although other trips, such as to Nanchan Si, involve longer expeditions.

With lovely views over the valley, Nanshan Si (South Mountain Temple), around 2 miles (3 km) south of Taihuai, is one of the largest temples on Wutai Shan, most notable for its 18 superbly crafted arbat effigies. Three miles (5 km) southwest of Taihuai, immediately above Nanshan Si and part of the same temple complex, is Youguo Si. Longquan Si (Dragon Spring Temple), at the top of 108 steps through a marvelous marble archway, features the Hall of Heavenly Kings (with an effigy of Milefo – the future Buddha, also known in this chubby incarnation as the Laughing Buddha), the attractively decorated and designed Puji Pagoda, and the Guanyin Hall, among other structures.

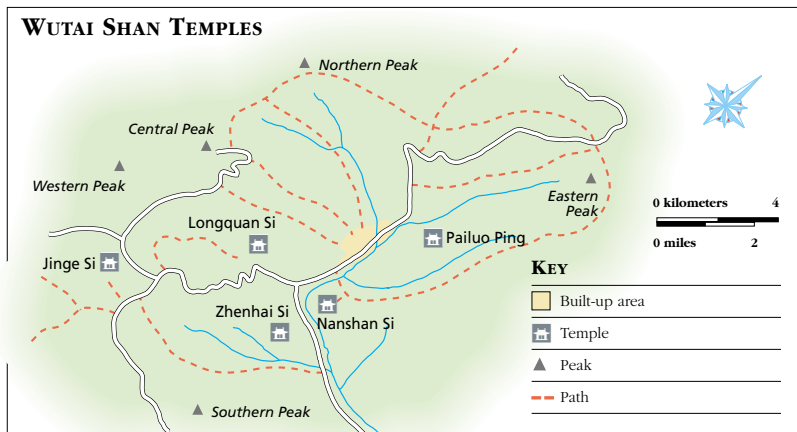

Two more temples within easy reach of Taihuai include the Ming dynasty Bishan Si, which contains some intriguing Buddhist sculptures, and Zhenhai Si.

Considerably farther away is the remote Nanchan Si, about 44 miles (70 km) south of Taihuai on the road to Taiyuan, which contains one of China's oldest surviving wooden halls (782 AD). The main hall has somehow avoided destruction – a miracle considering the many anti-Buddhist purges during China's history. Despite much restoration work, the hall's original Tang-dynasty design, a rarity in Chinese temple hall architecture, is preserved.

Foguang Si (Buddha's Light Temple), about 25 miles (40 km) south of Taihuai, also features a Tang dynasty hall dating to the 9th century. The hall is especially notable for its fine dougong (see p35) bracket work, Tang and Song dynasty wall paintings, and collection of Ming dynasty arbats.

The elaborately carved archway at Longquan Si

The Buddhist Chongshan Si, Taiyuan

Taiyuan 10

太原

254 miles (408 km) SW of Beijing.

☎ 1,900,000. ☑ ☎ ☎ ☎ ☎ CITS 38
Pingyang Lu, (0351) 821 1109.

A HEAVILY INDUSTRIALIZED city, Taiyuan lies on the banks of the Fen River at the heart of Shanxi and makes a convenient base for trips to Pingyao (see p138) and Wutai Shan (see pp134–6).

Between the years 471–221 BC Taiyuan was the capital of the Zhao Kingdom, and became a flourishing center of Buddhism by the 6th century AD. Because of its strategic position, bordering the hostile nomadic tribes to the north, the city underwent heavy fortification during the Tang dynasty. However, fearing its ambitions, the Song ruler had it torched to the ground. The city was rebuilt a few years later.

The Buddhist monastery Chongshan Si is hidden down an alleyway northeast of Wuyi (May 1) Square. A temple has existed here since the 7th century, although the current building dates from the 14th century. A fire reduced much of the temple to ashes in 1864, but considerable rebuilding has taken place. The Hall of Great Compassion (Dabei Dian) houses the striking Qianshou Guanyin (Thousand-Armed Goddess of Compassion), the central figure in the trinity of statues. The multi-armed and multi-eyed goddess stands over 26 ft (8 m), her arms fanned out behind her. Also displayed in the temple are sutras (Buddhist scriptures) and scrolls from the Song, Yuan, and Ming eras. In the east of town, the Twin Pagoda Temple (Shuangta Si) was built on imperial instruction during the late Ming era. Also known as Yongzuo Temple, its 13-story, 164-ft (50-m) high pagodas have come to symbolize Taiyuan. The Shanxi Provincial Museum has two sections – the main part is housed in a Ming-era Daoist temple formerly called Chunyang Temple, northwest of Wuyi Square. Within the halls are relics, bronzes, and statuary found in Shanxi. The second section, in the Ming-era buildings of the former Confucius Temple east of Wuyi Square, houses relics of Shanxi's recent history, and a collection of Buddhist sutras.

Guardian deity, Jinci Temple

☑ Chongshan Si

☉ 8am–4:30pm daily. ☎

☑ Shanxi Provincial Museum

Both sections ☉ 9am–5pm

Tue–Sun. ☎

ENVIRONS: The bustling Jinci Si, 15 miles (25 km) southwest of town at the base of Xuanwang Shan (Xuanwang Mountain), dates to the Northern Wei, although much of its architecture is from the Song period. The main entrance leads straight to the Ming-era Mirror Terrace, originally used as a theatrical stage. To the west, a canal runs through the temple complex, crossed by a bridge that leads to a terrace supporting four fierce iron statues. Lying beyond is the impressively carved Hall of the Sacred Mother (Shengmu Dian), one of China's oldest surviving wooden buildings. Inside the hall, a group of ceramic Song-era figures waits on a central figure of the Sacred Mother.

About 25 miles (40 km) southwest of Taiyuan, the Tianlong Shan Grottoes in the Tianlong Mountains constitute a small, but significant, collection of Buddhist cave art. A total of 21 caves dot the eastern and western sides of the mountain, with worn and damaged statues dating from the Eastern Wei to the Tang dynasties. The best-preserved specimen is the large seated Buddha in Cave No. 9.

☑ Jinci Si

☉ 8am–5pm daily. ☎

☑ Tianlong Shan Grottoes

☉ daily. ☎

The temple spring at Jinci Si, Taiyuan

Pingyao 平遥

平遥

Traditional red lantern

SURROUNDED BY ONE of China's few intact Ming city walls, Pingyao's streets are lined with a wealth of traditional Chinese buildings, including courtyard houses, temples, and more than 3,000 historic shops. Pingyao's treasure trove of Ming and Qing architecture is a legacy of the town's affluent days as a banking center, which ceased when the Qing dynasty defaulted on loans and abdicated, leaving the banks empty. The transfer of the country's finances to Shanghai and Hong Kong turned the city into a backwater, saving it from development and, ultimately, preserving its character.

County Yamen

Pingyao's justice department during the Ming and Qing dynasties, these offices represented the secular world while the Daoist temples, mirroring the County Yamen on the other side of Nan Dajie, represented the spiritual realm.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ City Walls
- ★ Rishenchang
- ★ Bell Tower

★ City Walls

The 39-ft (12-m) high, crenellated enclosure dating from 1370 is said to resemble the outline of a tortoise. Its head lies at the south gate, its four feet at the east and west gates, and its tail at the north gate.

★ Rishenchang

This extensive museum of early banking is the site of China's first draft bank, founded in 1824.

West Gate, train station

South Gate (Ying Xun Men)

SOUTHEAST PINGYAO

The most notable part of the car-free town, the southeast corner and center of Pingyao has the largest concentration of sights, museums, and heritage architecture.

Furniture Museum

As well as this rickshaw, there are rooms in this typical Qing dynasty compound that are furnished as bedrooms, kitchens, and opium dens.

0 meters 30
0 yards 30

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

62 miles (100 km) S of Taiyuan.

40,000. City Walls
access at West Gate.

Rishenchang daily.

Furniture Museum daily.

County Yamen daily.

★ Bell Tower

Rising above Nan Dajie, the Bell Tower is a charming structure decorated with ornamented eaves.

The Tianjixiang Museum

has a small collection of local artifacts.

These three adjoining

Daoist temples were last rebuilt in 1859, after burning down during a temple fair.

North Gate
(Gonji Men)

DONG
DAJIE

CHENG
GUANG
MIAO
JIE

Upper East Gate

Watchtowers

punctuate the length of the wall every 164 ft (50 m).

Kuixing Tower

This extravagant and unusually designed eight-sided pavilion rises above the battlements. It is named after a star in the 28 constellations of the Chinese zodiac.

Shuanglin Si 12

双林寺

4 miles (6 km) SW of Pingyao.

8:30am-6:30pm daily (until 5pm in winter).

THIS TEMPLE has a long history, dating back 1,500 years to the Northern Wei, which had its capital at Datong. The current temple was built during the Ming and Qing dynasties and contains over 2,000 Buddhist statues, some from the Song dynasty. The effigies are arranged in ten halls around three courtyards. The expertly fashioned figures' expressions vary from the sublime through the comic to the sinister. The lifelike luoban in the second hall each reveal an individual persona and the bodhisattvas in the third hall are well worth seeking out.

Classic courtyard at the extensive Qiao Jia Dayuan

Qiao Jia Dayuan 13

乔家大院

12 miles (20 km) N of Pingyao.

between Taiyuan and Pingyao can drop you off. from Pingyao.

8am-5:30pm daily.

THIS MAGNIFICENT courtyard house was the setting for director Zhang Yimou's classic 1991 film Raise the Red Lantern, starring Gong Li. Dating from the 18th century, the vast complex, comprising 313 rooms, is an exquisite exercise in architectural balance, its linked courtyards pervaded by a sense of equilibrium. Enclosed by a 33-ft (10-m) high, fortified wall, the house was built by Qiao Guifā, a merchant who made his fortune in tofu and tea.

SHANDONG & HENAN

THE SWATHE of territory comprising Shandong and Henan, irrigated by the final sweep of the Yellow River (Huang He), sustained some of China's earliest settled societies. The Shandong Chinese are proud of their many treasures, which include sages Confucius and Mencius, the Yellow River, and Tai Shan, China's holiest Daoist peak, and the former German colony of Qingdao, with its Bavarian cobbled streets and Teutonic architecture. (Qingdao may be testament to humiliating 19th-century foreign ambitions, but it was German expertise that helped brew China's famous Tsingtao beer.) The Yellow River enters Shandong (East of the Mountains) from the west, after slicing Henan (South of the River) into two uneven chunks. Henan's historic sights cluster around the river in the province's north, in an area that was the cradle of Chinese civilization as early as 6000 BC. The ancient capitals of Anyang, Kaifeng, and Luoyang are located here. The impressive Longmen Caves, with their Buddhist carvings, lie outside Luoyang. Other sights include the sacred Daoist mountain of Song Shan, home to the Shaolin Temple and its band of warrior monks, and the Northern Song capital of Kaifeng, with its fine Buddhist architecture and historic Judaic links.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Anyang 9
- Ji'nan 1
- Kaifeng 8
- Luoyang 11
- Qingdao 4
- Qufu 3
- Weihai 6
- Yantai 5
- Zhengzhou 10

Historic Sites

- Gongyi 14
- Penglai 7

Areas of Natural Beauty

- Song Shan & Shaolin Temple 13
- Tai Shan pp144-5 2

Buddhist Sites

- Longmen Caves pp154-5 12

Jinan's modern skyline, with the Yellow River in the distance

Jinan ①

济南

216 miles (350 km) S of Beijing.
 人 5,500,000. 交通 9 Qianfoshan Dong Er Lu, (0531) 296 7401.

SOUTH OF THE Yellow River as it makes its final thrust for the sea, Shandong's capital is visited primarily by travelers en route to the popular sights of Tai Shan, Qingdao, and Qufu. It was known for its many natural springs. The most famous of these, the Black Tiger Spring, gushes out of tiger-headed spots.

In the north of town, the park surrounding Daming Hu (Big Brilliant Lake) is filled with pedal boats, ponds, gardens, and temples, and is a good place for a stroll. To the southwest is the Li Qingzhao Memorial Hall, which commemorates one of China's most famous female poets who lived in the 12th century. There is a statue of her as well as portraits and extracts from her writings.

In the southeast of the city, the slopes of Thousand Buddha Mountain (Qianfo Shan) are dotted with Buddhist statues. Several temples are situated on the summit, which is over an hour's climb up the steps. A cable-car service is available. The earliest statuary dates from the 6th century, but many recent additions compensate for the statues broken by Red Guards. A short walk north of the mountain is the Shandong Provincial Museum. Its exhibits include Buddhist carvings, Neolithic pottery fragments (some from Long Shan nearby), and dinosaur fossils. Also on display is China's oldest existing book made from strips of bamboo.

ENVIRONS: Near Liubu village, 21 miles (33 km) southeast of Jinan, the Si Men Pagoda (Four Gate Pagoda) is known for its antiquity and unusual design. This squat, one-story stone structure with four doors is topped by a steeple, and would have housed the remains of an important monk. The pagoda, erected in AD 611 is the oldest of its kind in China. Inside is a column with statues of Buddha.

🏯 Thousand Buddha Mountain

About 3 km (2 miles) south of Museum (below). ☑ daily. 📷

🏛️ Shandong Provincial Museum

14 Jingshiyi Lu. ☑ daily. 📷 🕒 lunchtimes weekdays. 📷

Tai Shan ②

See pp144-5.

Qufu ③

曲阜

112 miles (180 km) S of Jinan.
 人 160,000. 🚗 to Yanzhou, 10 miles (16 km) W, then minibus. 📷 📷 CITS
 36 Hongdao Lu, (0537) 449 149.

AS THE BIRTHPLACE of China's most revered sage, Qufu occupies a hallowed place in the minds of not only the Chinese, but also the legions of Japanese and Koreans who come here on pilgrimage. In September the town comes alive during the annual festival that celebrates Confucius's birthday. Although the sage lived in relative obscurity, his descendants dwelt in the grand Confucius Mansion (Kong Fu) in the heart of town. Wielding immense political authority and wealth, the Kong family – referred to by the Chinese as the First Family Under Heaven – built a palatial mansion occupying over 40 acres (16 ha). Arranged on a traditional north-south axis, the mansion is divided into residential and administrative quarters, with a temple in the east and a garden at the rear. Most of the halls date from the Ming era. The Gate of Double Glory in the north was used for the emperor's visits, while to the east stands the Tower of Refuge, where the family assembled in times of strife.

Covered corridor to the Confucius Temple at Qufu

Next to the mansion, the Confucius Temple (Kong Miao) is a lengthy complex of memorial gateways, courtyards, halls, stele pavilions, auxiliary temples, gnarled cypresses, and ancestral shrines. Originally a simple shrine in 478 BC, the year after Confucius's death, the temple grew gradually over the centuries before suddenly expanding during the Ming and Qing eras. Beyond the entrance stand 198 stone stelae, listing the names of as many as 50,000 successful candidates in the imperial examinations, during the Yuan, Ming, and Qing dynasties. Some are supported on the backs of mighty

Carved column, Confucius Temple

Mencius Temple at Zoucheng, south of Qufu

bixi, primitive, turtle-like dragons. A long succession of gateways leads to the 11th-century Kuiwen Pavilion, a triple-roofed building. Confucius instructed his disciples from the Apricot Pavilion, accessed through the Great Achievements Gate. On top of a marble terrace with columns that are elaborately carved with dragons, the Great Achievements Hall (Dacheng Dian) forms the temple's splendid nucleus. Beyond, the Hall of the Sage's Relics houses carved stone plates with scenes from the sage's life. The Lu Wall in the eastern section is where one of his descendants hid his books to save them from Emperor Qin Shi Huangdi (259–210 BC), who wished to burn them. The books were rediscovered during the Han era.

In the north of town, the walled Confucius Forest (Kong Lin) contains the grave of Confucius and other members of the Kong clan. The forest is mostly pines and cypresses interspersed with shrines and tombstones.

Not far south of Qufu, Zoucheng (now a city), is the hometown of Mencius (372–289 BC), the Confucian philosopher, second in importance only to Confucius himself. The tranquil Mencius Temple consists of 64 halls set around five large courtyards. As in Qufu, the philosopher has a Mansion and Graveyard.

Confucius Mansion

 8 am–5 pm daily.

Confucius Temple

 daily.

CONFUCIUS

The teachings of Confucius (551–479 BC), China's most renowned philosopher, profoundly influenced the culture of China as well as other nations, including Japan, Korea, and Vietnam. Born in the state of Lu during an age of uninterrupted war, Confucius (whose name was derived from his Chinese name, Kong Fuzi or Master Kong) was prompted by the suffering around him to develop a practical philosophy built upon the principle of virtue (ren), in the hope that rulers would govern in a just manner. Finding no audience among his native rulers, he communicated his beliefs to a body of disciples and embarked on a journey in search of a ruler who would apply his rules of governance. He died unrecognized and never recorded his philosophy in writing, but his thoughts were compiled by his followers into a volume called the Analects (Lunyu), and promulgated. Championed by successive thinkers including Mencius, Confucius's philosophy later achieved predominance and formed the basis for the civil service examination system, a major hurdle to a career in officialdom right until the 20th century.

The philosopher-sage, Confucius

Tai Shan ②

泰山

Porter carrying supplies to peak

HAVING PLAYED A PART in China's earliest creation myths, Tai Shan (Peaceful Mountain) has held sway over the Chinese imagination for millennia. It is ascended year-round by legions of pilgrims and travelers, making it China's most climbed mountain. Despite the crowds, a supernatural presence permeates Tai Shan, best experienced via a slow ascent with plenty of pit stops at wayside shrines and monuments.

Many tourists stay overnight at hotels on the mountain and watch the sunrise from the cloud-wreathed peak, which is where Tai Shan's most significant temples can be found, attracting droves of devout worshippers.

★ Yuhuang Miao

Dedicated to the supreme deity of Daoism, the Jade Emperor Temple marks the conclusion of the ascent at 5,070 ft (1,545 m) and houses a statue of the Jade Emperor and wall paintings.

★ Shiba Pan

The last and most punishing part of the climb, the steep Path of Eighteen Bends is visible from Zhong Tian Men (the halfway point), and brings weary travelers to Nan Tian Men, the last gate on Tai Shan, but not the summit.

Puzhao Si

Tai Shan's shrines are not exclusively Daoist and this temple – with a typically Buddhist name (the Temple of Universal Light) – is easily visited if taking the Western Route up the mountain.

Bixia Ci, dedicated to the Princess of the Azure Clouds, attracts would-be mothers to the summit.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Shiba Pan
- ★ Yuhuang Miao
- ★ Dai Miao

MOUNTAIN OF EMPERORS

The most exalted of China's five Daoist mountains, Tai Shan has been an essential imperial climb since the time of Qin Shi Huangdi. Emperors ascended Tai Shan to gain assurance that their heavenly mandate would be maintained; an abortive ascent could signal Heaven's favor was in question. Several sights have imperial associations: Huima Ling (Horse Turns Back Ridge) marks the spot where emperor Zhenzong's horse refused to go any farther and the ruler had to continue by sedan chair. Tai Shan's importance is further evinced by two other notables who clambered up its slopes: Confucius and Mao Zedong.

Qin Shi Huangdi, first emperor of China

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Tai'an, 45 miles (70 km) S of Jinan. ☒ at Jinan. 🚠 🚗
 📍 near Train Station, (0538) 827 2114. 🕒 24 hrs. 🗺️ 🗺️ Tai Shan Race (Sep). 🏯 Dai Miao Shengping Jie. 🕒 7:40am–5pm. 🗺️

KEY

-  Cable car
-  Temple
-  Minor road
-  Path
-  Built-up area

CLIMBING TAI SHAN

Two routes lead to the summit. The Central Route is more popular, following the traditional imperial way and taking travelers past the most notable monuments. Despite having fewer historical sights and not being particularly well-marked, the Western Route boasts lovely natural scenery, including Heilong Tan. Many travelers ascend by the Central Route and descend by the Western Route.

Stone Sutra Valley

North of Doumu Gong is a further Buddhist contribution to this Daoist peak, a large flat rock carved with the text of the Diamond Sutra, one of Buddhist literature's most important passages.

JINSHI YU
(STONE SUTRA VALLEY)

Doumu
Gong

Hong Men Gong

This Ming dynasty temple, Red Gate Palace, is the first of numerous shrines dedicated to the Princess of the Azure Clouds (Bixia).

Yi Tian Men
(First Gate under Heaven)

0 meters 800
0 yards 800

TAI'AN

★ Dai Miao

This vast temple is a natural departure point in a climb of the mountain. The main building, the Tiankuang Dian, is an immense yellow-eaved hall that contains a massive dimly-lit Song dynasty fresco depicting the Zhenzong emperor as the God of Tai Shan.

Qingdao 4

青岛

A WORLD AWAY FROM China's drab industrial towns, the breezy seaside city of Qingdao is a colorful port on the Shandong Peninsula. Known to foreign nationals as Tsingtao, where its namesake beer is brewed, pretty Qingdao's charms derive from its German textures, namely its cobbled streets, red roof tiles, distinctive stonework, and tree-lined avenues. Its German legacy dates from 1897, when the city came under German jurisdiction, but was returned to China in 1922. Selected as the host city for the sailing competitions of the 2008 Olympics, modern-day Qingdao is a clean, entrepreneurial, and forward-thinking city, a kind of miniature Shanghai with high ambitions.

Ying Hotel, the former Governor's Residence

Exploring Qingdao

In 1897, Kaiser Wilhelm took over Qingdao after two German missionaries were killed by the Boxers (see p433). The Qing court was forced to cede the city to Germany for 99 years, but it was returned to China in 1922, after eight years under Japanese occupation. The Japanese took over the port again between 1938 and 1945.

Wandering about at leisure is the best way to see Qingdao's main sights, most of which lie in the German Concession in the southwest of town, that roughly stretches between Tai'an Lu and Xiaoyu Shan Park. The Germans built the imposing train station, equipped with a belfry, to mark the end of the line they laid to the provincial capital of Jinan. Reproduced on the label of Tsingtao beer, the octagonal Huilai Pavilion, which hosts craft exhibitions, lies at the tip of Zhanqiao Pier. The 1,444 ft (440 m) pier juts into Qingdao Bay off the frenetic

No. 6 beach. The busy Zhongshan Lu running north is Qingdao's premier shopping street. To the east is St. Michael's Church, whose twin spires preside over an atmospheric part of town filled with steep cobbled streets and iron balconies. Southeast of the church is the charming Protestant Church, with its distinctive clocktower and white clock face. Built in 1910, its exterior has sandy yellow walls and red clay tiles, while the frugal interior is open to visitors. The 128-ft (39-m) clocktower is also occasionally open, and visitors can climb up its steep stairway. Farther east in Xinhao Shan Park is the former Governor's Residence, now the Ying Hotel. This grand mansion once played host to Yuan Shikai and Mao Zedong. A short walk to the south, the

QINGDAO CITY CENTER

- Badaguan ⑦
- Governor's Residence ③
- Huashi Lou ⑥
- Protestant Church ④
- Qingdao Museum ③
- St. Michael's Church ②
- Zhanqiao Pier ①

CHINESE BEER

Tsingtao beer can

Tsingtao, which swears by its magic ingredient of mineral water from Lao Shan, is China's most famous beer (píjiu). Built by homesick Germans in 1903, the Tsingtao brewery is China's largest, with exports to over 40 countries. Once the best (and most expensive) in China, Tsingtao faces stiff local competition as international breweries invest heavily in joint ventures in what is the fastest growing beer market in the world. Vast amounts of beer are drunk during the town's Beer Festival in August. The tourist office can arrange tours of the brewery.

An expanse of sand on one of Qingdao's many beaches

Qingdao Museum is worth exploring for its collection of relics, including several huge stone Buddha statues dating to AD 500, and paintings from the Yuan and Ming eras. Visitors can stroll down Qingdao's waterfront past its many beaches. No. 1 beach is the longest and busiest, while farther east, No. 2 beach is more attractive. Its clean stretch of sand leads to Huashi Lou, a stone mansion with a turret, that was once the residence of a Russian aristocrat. The genteel Badaguan area to the north is known for its villas and sanatoriums set amidst charming tree-lined streets.

✚ St Michael's Church

15 Zhejiang Lu. ☐ 8am–5pm daily; services 6am, 8am, 6pm Sun.

✚ Protestant Church

15 Jiangu Lu. ☐ 8:30am–5pm daily; services on Sun.

🏛 Qingdao Museum

27 Meiling Lu. ☐ daily. 📖

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

200 miles (330 km) E of Ji'nan. 🏠
1,860,000. 🚉 Train Station.
🚌 Long Distance Bus Station,
CAAC (buses to airport). 🚢 Passenger Ferry Terminal, Local Ferry Terminal. 📍 9 Nanhai Lu, (0532)
389 3062. 🍺 Beer Festival (Aug).

ENVIRONS: An easy 25-mile (40-km) bus ride from Qingdao, the vast mountainous region of Lao Shan is steeped in Daoist lore. It is known for its mineral water, an essential ingredient of Tsingtao beer. The Song-era Great Purity Palace was built to perform Daoist rituals for the dead. From here, paths lead to the summit. Visitors can either climb the stairs located half-way up, or take the cable car for dramatic views. Earlier, Lao Shan was dotted with Daoist temples, but only a few survive today. The most famous is the Song-dynasty Taiqing Temple near the coast, not far from where the Shandong writer Pu Songling (1640–1715) lived. Many more temples survive on Lao Shan's slopes, along with caves, waterfalls, and hiking trails.

KEY

- 🚉 Train station
- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 🚢 Ferry terminal
- 📍 Tourist information
- ✉ Post office
- 🏠 Temple

Qingdao's skyline, similar to the modern architecture of Pudong, Shanghai

Gateway to the Yantai Museum, housed in a fine Qing-era guild hall

Yantai 烟台

烟台

149 miles (240 km) NE of Qingdao.
 920,000. ☒ ☑ ☒ ☑ ☒ to Shanghai, Dalian & Tianjin. 📞 180
 Jiefang Lu, (0535) 623 4144.

FORMERLY KNOWN as Chefoo and overshadowed by the dynamic port of Qingdao to the south, Yantai is a deepwater harbor town situated on the north coast of the Shandong Peninsula, famous for its clocks, fruit, and locally produced wine. The name Yantai, meaning “Smoke Terrace,” refers to the wolf-dung-burning beacons erected along the coast in the Ming dynasty to warn of sudden raids by pirates or the Japanese. In 1863, the city became a British treaty port and a substantial number of foreign merchants moved here, although its rise was eclipsed by the development of Qingdao at the end of the 1900s. The British were followed by the Germans, the Americans, and finally the Japanese. Despite its history as a treaty port, very little foreign architecture survives here, as the town never had a foreign concession.

Most travelers pass through en route to Penglai to the west, but the Yantai Museum is definitely worth a visit. Housed in a splendid Qing dynasty guild hall built for sailors and merchants, the museum’s exhibits pale by comparison to the building’s elaborate architectural detail and wood and stone carvings.

The impressive main hall, known as the Palace of the Empress of Heaven, was dedicated to Tianhou, the Empress of Heaven and

Ornate Qing dynasty doors, Yantai Museum

Protector of Seafarers, by sailors from Fujian, who had taken shelter in Yantai during a fierce storm. All the component parts of the hall were designed by craftsmen from the southern provinces of Fujian and Guangdong, and shipped to Yantai where it was assembled in 1864. It is a fine example of the southern style, with a double roof decorated in mythical ceramic, stone, and wood figures. The entrance hall to the guild hall is elaborately carved with parables and episodes from Chinese literature and mythology, including the Eight Immortals who Crossed the Sea, battle scenes, figures, fabulous creatures, and several scenes from the Romance of the Three Kingdoms (see p29). Arab figures playing musical instruments lie beneath the eaves, while the beams take the shape of a woman with her infant child. The temple has a garden and is equipped with a stage, employed for performances and events celebrating the Goddess Tianhou.

Yantai also has several parks, including the small and central Yuhuangding Park, and Yantai Shan Park, a hillside haven above the sea. East of here are Yantai’s two rather forlorn beaches. Both are a bit of a disappointment, and are surrounded by buildings and construction. The town’s waterfront, however, is a pleasant place for a leisurely stroll. Toward the eastern headland, fishermen can be seen repairing their nets or simply relaxing.

🏛️ Yantai Museum

Nan Dajie. ☒ 8:30am–11:30am,
 1pm–4:30pm daily. 📞

Weihai 威海

威海

37 miles (60 km) E of Yantai.

2,500,000. ☒ ☑ ☒ to Yantai,
 Qingdao, Beijing & Shanghai. 📞 CITS
 96 Guzhai Dong Lu, (0631) 589 2269.
 ☒ daily to Dalian, three times a week to Incheon (South Korea).

THE PORT CITY of Weihai was the site of the mauling of China’s European-built North Sea (Beiyang) Fleet by a Japanese flotilla during the 1894–5 Sino-Japanese War.

Museum of the 1895 Sino-Japanese War, Weihai

The Penglai Pavilion, mythical abode of the Eight Immortals

Afterwards, between 1898 and 1930, the city was a rather unproductive British Concession and was known as Port Edward, but little remains of the town's British heritage. Today, Weihai's chief diversion is Liugong Island (Liugong Dao), 3 miles (5 km) off the coast, reached by ferry. Providing shelter for Weihai harbor, the island forms a natural stronghold and served as the base for the doomed Chinese North Sea Fleet.

The island's main sight is the Museum of the 1895 Sino-Japanese War. The conflict between the two nations resulted in the ceding of Taiwan and the Liaodong Peninsula (including Dalian) to Japan. Not far from the jetty, the museum functions for the "patriotic education" of Chinese visitors, with displays of photographs and artifacts salvaged from ships, as well as reminders of the island's days as a station for the British Royal Navy.

The rest of the island is a pleasant place to explore, with several hiking trails heading off into the forested hills. Its International Beach is popular for its long stretches of sand and calm waters. Ferries connect Weihai with Dalian and Inchon in South Korea. No accommodation is available on the island.

Museum of the 1895 Sino-Japanese War

Liugong Island.  from Weihai (20 mins). Ferry back to Weihai: summer 7am–6pm, every 8 mins; winter 8:30am–4:30pm, every 30 mins.  daily.

Penglai 7

蓬莱

43 miles (70 km) NW of Yantai.

 from Yantai.

ASSOCIATED WITH the Eight Immortals of Daoism, who drank wine here before making their mythical crossing of the sea without the aid of boats, the castle-like pavilion complex of Penglai Ge affords dramatic views out to sea from its breezy cliff-top perch. Accessible by boat or bus, the pavilion dates back to 1061, though Penglai entered folklore when China's first emperor, Qin Shi Huangdi, foraged in the area for herbs that bestow immortality.

The imposing complex has a large network of buildings, pavilions, halls, temples, gardens, and crenellated walls. Many of the buildings are thickly covered in ivy and vines. Among its six main halls, which have been extensively renovated, the Tianhou Palace is dedicated to Tianhou, the Empress of Heaven, and enshrines a golden statue of the goddess. The statue is backed by a fine mural of dragons frolicking in the sea and amongst the clouds. The castle is at its liveliest on the occasion of the goddess's birthday, on the 23rd day of the third month of the Chinese lunar calendar (see p45), when a lively temple fair is held. The goddess is invoked with incense sticks and prayer. The complex now has a cable car and a theater.

Penglai Ge is also known for the mirage that is supposed to occur here every few decades. Witnesses have described seeing an island, complete with buildings, inhabitants, and trees arising from the mist. Visitors can watch a video recording of the mirage in the Tianhou Palace for a small fee. Penglai is usually busy on weekends when large tour groups visit the pavilion. It is quieter on weekdays, and can be easily visited as a daytrip from Yantai.

Penglai Ge

 from Penglai (90 mins) every 20 mins.  daily. Last entry at 5pm.

THE EMPRESS OF HEAVEN

The Empress of Heaven, Tianhou, is also known by the Chinese as Mazu, Niangniang, and Tianshang Shengmu. She is the Daoist equivalent of Guanyin, the Buddhist Goddess of Compassion. In the coastal provinces of Goddess Tianhou depicted on a Chinese pirate flag

Guangdong and Fujian, she is worshiped as the Goddess of the Sea, and is the guardian deity of seafarers. She was supposedly originally a woman named Lin Mo, born in AD 960 on Meizhou Island in Fujian (see p290). From a tender age, Lin Mo was famous for helping sailors in distress, and after her death at age 27, her red-clothed apparition was seen by fishermen and sailors in danger. Confusingly in Cantonese, her name is pronounced as Tinhou, and she is also known as A-Ma in Macau.

Kaifeng 8

开封

SOUTH OF THE YELLOW RIVER as it snakes into Shandong Province, the ancient walled city of Kaifeng, the capital of seven dynasties, which reached its zenith as the capital of the Northern Song (AD 960–1126). Its glory days as a burgeoning Song city are pictorially recorded in the 16-ft (5-m) long scroll “Going Upriver during the Qingming Festival,” now kept in Beijing’s Forbidden City. However, its prosperity could not prevent the Yellow River from repeatedly flooding the city, with a heavy loss of life. Significant buildings were also washed away, including the synagogue. Today, Kaifeng is an attractive city with fine examples of temple and pagoda architecture and some lively markets.

The ornately decorated Shanshaan Gan Guild Hall

Exploring Kaifeng

Much of modern Kaifeng lies within the old city walls. In the west of the city is the large and peaceful Baogong Hu (Baogong Lake). Within walking distance to the south of the lake, the Kaifeng Museum on Yingbin Lu houses three stelae that originally stood outside the old Jewish synagogue. They record the history of the city’s Jewish community. The No. 4 People’s Hospital on Beitu Jie sits on the remains of the synagogue in the Jewish quarter. All that can be seen today is the iron cover over an old well. Outside the city walls, 6 miles (10 km) to the north, is the Yellow River Viewing Point. From the pavilion, there are expansive views across the vast silt plain of the winding river. Adjacent to the pavilion stands an iron statue of an ox, that was originally a charm to protect the city from floods.

Shanshaan Gan Guild Hall

Xufu Jie, off Shudian Jie. daily. The exuberant Qing-dynasty Shanshaan Gan Guild Hall was built by merchants of Gansu, Shanxi, and Shaanxi provinces, as housing. It sports a drum and bell tower, as well as a spirit wall. The building’s eaves have vivid scenes from merchant life, while the eaves in the main hall are carved with animals, birds, and gold bats (symbols of luck).

Da Xiangguo Si

Ziyou Lu. 5, 9. 8am–6pm daily. Yanqing Guan Baogong Hu Dongbei Shengli Jie. daily. Kaifeng’s most celebrated temple is Da Xiangguo Si (Prime Minister’s Temple). Originally built in AD 555, it was China’s principal temple during the Song era when it accommodated 64 halls and a huge legion of monks. Swept away by flood waters in AD 1642 at the end of the Ming dynasty, it was rebuilt around 1766. The octagonal pavilion at the back of the temple houses a remarkable statue of Guanyin, known as Qianshou Guanyin or the Thousand-Armed Goddess of Compassion. Carved from a single tree and covered in gold leaf, it is the temple’s finest statue, and its four-sided arrangement is a rare feature. The main hall has a frieze of luoban (see p31). A sprawling open-air market lies near the temple.

To the west is the Yanqing Guan (Yanqing Temple), a small Daoist shrine known for the unusual design of its Pavilion of the Jade Emperor. This ornate, octagonal building, covered in turquoise tiles and carved brickwork, has a bronze image of the Jade Emperor inside.

Iron Pagoda

Iron Pagoda Park, Beimen Dajie.

8am–6pm daily.

The 13-story Iron Pagoda (Tie Ta) rises up just within the Song dynasty ramparts in the northeast of the city. This brick pagoda was built in AD 1049 and is covered with brown glazed tiles, which give the tower its metallic luster as well as its name. Visitors can climb the narrow interior staircase for views over the city and its walls. The pagoda is Kaifeng’s best known landmark.

The magnificent Qianshou Guanyin, Da Xiangguo Si

Prayer flags in front of Da Xiangguo Si

Longting Park

North of Zhongshan Lu. ☐ daily. 🚶
Millennium City ☐ daily. 🚶
 Songdu Yu Jie, built on the Imperial Way – Kaifeng's main thoroughfare during the Song dynasty – leads north up to Longting Park. It features reproduction Song-dynasty restaurants and shops selling antiques, calligraphy, and knick-knacks. The street gets progressively more touristy as it heads northward to Yangjia Hu (Yangjia Lake), originally part of the imperial park, and now surrounded by tourist attractions and amusement parks such as the popular Millennium City. Longting Park itself stands on the site of the Song-dynasty Imperial Palace and its surrounding park. The Xibei Hu and Yangjia Hu lakes lie to its northwest and south respectively. The park is marked by several amusement rides for children, as well as the Qing-dynasty Dragon Pavilion, and is an excellent place to watch the locals relaxing in their leisure time.

Fan Pagoda

1 mile (1.5 km) southeast of Kaifeng. 🚶 15. ☐ 8am–5pm daily. 🚶
 Hidden away (albeit reachable by bus) south of the city walls and just west of the pleasant Yuwangtai Park (Yuwangtai Gongyuan), the

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

44 miles (70 km) E of Zhengzhou.
 🚶 4,630,000. 🚶 Train Station.
 🚶 Southern Bus Station, West Bus Station. 📍 98 Yingbin Lu, (0378) 398 4593.

Northern Song-dynasty Fan Pagoda (Po Ta) is Kaifeng's oldest Buddhist structure, and was built in AD 997. Known for its carved brickwork, the three-story pagoda once stood nine stories and 263 ft (80 m) high. Visitors can climb right to the top for views of the surrounding factories and houses.

CHINA'S JEWS

It is not known when Jews (youtairen) first came to Kaifeng, but evidence suggests that Jewish merchants arrived in China in the 8th century, along the Silk Routes. Marco Polo wrote of meeting Israelites in China in the Yuan era. It is also recorded that Chinese Jews were given seven surnames (Ai, Jin, Lao, Li, Shi, Zhang, and Zhao) by imperial decree in the Ming era. According to one story, in 1605 Jesuit Matteo Ricci traveled to Kaifeng because he was told there was a community here who believed in one god. Expecting to meet Catholics he was surprised to find they were in fact Jewish. The community struggled in isolation over the years, and all but disappeared after the synagogue, damaged by flooding, was torn down in the 19th century.

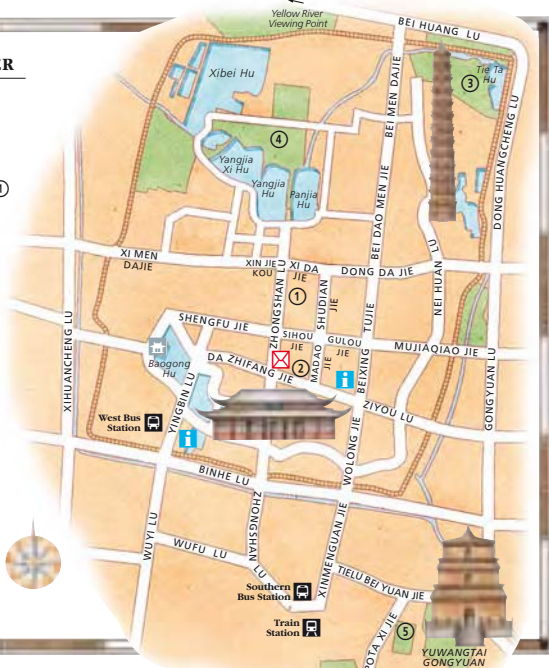

KAIFENG CITY CENTER

- Da Xiangguo Si ②
- Fan Pagoda ⑤
- Iron Pagoda ③
- Longting Park ④
- Shanshaan Gan Guild Hall ①

0 km 1
 0 mile 1

KEY

- 🚶 Train station
- 🚶 Long distance bus station
- 📍 Tourist information
- ✉ Post office
- 🏯 Temple
- 🚶 City wall

Anyang ⑨

安阳

124 miles (200 km) N of Zhengzhou.
 5,170,000. ☎️ 🚗 🚶

ARCHEOLOGICAL excavations have identified that Anyang in northern Henan was the site of Yin, the capital of the Shang dynasty. In the late 19th century, peasants unearthed bones etched with ancient Chinese symbols, identified as “oracle bones” or bones used for divination (see p26).

Further discoveries of bronzes, jade, and royal tombs, helped form a picture of the long forgotten city of Yin. The Museum of Yin Ruins (Yinxu Bowuguan), in the north of town, exhibits fragments of oracle bones, pottery, and bronze vessels, as well as six chariots, drawn by skeletal horses. To the east is the ostentatious Tomb of Yuan Shikai, a warlord who helped force the Qing abdication in return for the presidency, but later tried to have himself enthroned as emperor. The bustling Old City, centered around the Bell Tower south of Jiefang Lu, is also worth exploring. To the southwest, stands the octagonal, multi-eaved Wenfeng Pagoda, originally built in the 10th century and restored during the Ming era.

Wenfeng Pagoda, Anyang

🏛️ Museum of Yin Ruins

🕒 8am–5:30pm daily. 🎫

🏛️ Tomb of Yuan Shikai

🕒 8, 23. 🕒 8am–5pm daily. 🎫

A Shang-era war chariot and charioteer from an imperial tomb, Anyang

Traditional three door gateway, Baima Si (White Horse Temple), Luoyang

Zhengzhou ⑩

郑州

440 miles (700 km) SW of Beijing.
 6,210,000. ☎️ 🚗 🚶 🏠 Nongye Lu (Cm Huayuan Lu), (0371) 585 2339.

HENAN'S CAPITAL is used primarily as a stopover en route to Kaifeng, Luoyang, and the Shaolin Temple. The Shang City Walls to the east of town are all that remain of the city that existed here 3,000 years ago. To the west is Chenghuang Miao (Temple of the City God), with its roof sculptures of dragons and phoenixes. The pyramidal Henan Provincial Museum, in the north of town, has a superb collection of Shang relics with English captions, while the fourth floor houses a dinosaur gallery. For fine views of the Yellow River, visit the Yellow River Park, 17 miles (28 km) northwest of town.

🏛️ Henan Provincial Museum

8 Nongye Lu. 🕒 9am–4pm daily. 🎫

Luoyang ⑪

洛阳

75 miles (121 km) W of Zhengzhou.
 6,230,000. ☎️ 🚗 🚶 🏠 Jiudu Xi Lu, (0379) 432 3212.

LUOYANG'S INDUSTRIAL face conveys little of its impressive history. The city was the site of the ancient Zhao court, where the sage Laozi was keeper of the archives. It was also the site of China's first university in 29 BC, and was capital to 13 dynasties from Neolithic times till AD 937.

East of Wangcheng Park is the Luoyang City Museum, which exhibits Shang bronzes, jade carvings, and Tang era sancai (three-color) porcelain. Visitors flock here each spring to attend the Peony Festival, when hundreds of peonies – brought here on the orders of the Tang Empress Wu Zetian – bloom in Wangcheng Park.

Most of Luoyang's sights lie outside the city. Guanlin, 4 miles (7 km) south, is dedicated to Guan Yu (see p29), a heroic general of the Three Kingdoms period. The buildings are ornately decorated, and stone lionesses line the path to the main hall housing an impressive statue of Guan Yu. About 8 miles (12 km) east of town is Baima Si (White Horse Temple). Claiming to be China's oldest Buddhist monastery (AD 68), Baima Si remains active, with a constant stream of worshippers. The monks' tombs lie in the first courtyard, while the main hall has a statue of the Buddha.

🏛️ Luoyang City Museum

🕒 8:30am–5:30pm daily. 🎫

🏛️ Guanlin Si

🕒 8am–6pm daily. 🎫

The Yellow River

CHINA'S SECOND-LONGEST river, at 3,400 miles (5,464 km), the Huang He or Yellow River gets its name from its vast silt load, picked up as it carves its way through the soft clay of the loess plateau. As the river slows, it deposits much of this silt elevating the river bed above the surrounding plains – outside Kaifeng it is up to 35 ft (10 m) higher than the city – making flooding likely. It has also changed its path completely

Banpo pottery
Yellow River

many times, sometimes running south of the Shandong peninsula, each time with widespread devastation. In 1642 an estimated 300,000 people died when the river broke through the dykes and took the southern route. These disasters have earned the river the nickname “China’s Sorrow.” Rapid economic growth has led to vastly increased water usage in north China and the Yellow River now regularly runs dry in its lower reaches.

① The source of the Yellow River is high in the Qinghai mountains. The descent from the plateau's height of 13,000 ft (4,000 m) gives the river its incredible power.

MOTHER OF CHINA

Evidence of some of the earliest Chinese settlements, dating back as far as 6000 BC, have been discovered beside the Yellow River, earning it another title “Mother of China.”

② The river fills with sediment as it cuts through the soft loess plateau in the north. Seemingly boiling with energy, each cubic yard (meter) of water carries over 82 lb (37 kg) of sediment.

③ As the river slows it deposits its silt and enriches the soil making the local farmland one of the most productive areas of China.

④ Pumping into the sea, the yellow river's silt is clearly visible. Over the years the millions of tonnes of sediment have increased the land mass of China.

KEY

■ Early settlement

■ Flood plain

--- Southern route of river

④ As the silt raises the riverbed those living close to the river have to work together to rebuild the dykes and keep the river banks in good condition.

Longmen Caves ⑫

龙门石窟

Flower, roof of the Lotus Cave

THIS OUTSTANDING collection of religious statuary was started by the Buddhist Northern Wei rulers (386–534 AD) – creators of the Yungang Caves (see pp132–3) – after they moved their capital from Datong to Luoyang. The ensuing Sui and Tang dynasties further added to the grottoes especially during the rule of Tang dynasty Empress Wu Zetian, before anti-Buddhist purges abruptly halted its development. The tragic number of headless statues as a result of vandalism and theft creates a solemn mood, although today the caves are obviously well cared for.

View across the river Yi looking onto Fengxian Si and the west bank caves

FENGXIAN SI ①

This cave, on the western bank, is largest of all the caves and dates back to AD 675.

★ Vairocana Buddha

Over 56 ft (17 m) tall, this colossal statue's face was reputedly modeled after the empress Wu Zetian. The statue's enigmatic smile has earned it the nickname the "Eastern Mona Lisa."

Ananda

This statue is of Ananda, a disciple of Sakyamuni, the founder of Buddhism. A master of memory, he compiled the Buddhist sutras.

Smashed Ananda

Some statues were damaged in the late-Tang dynasty, as Buddhism fell out of favor. Other figures were stolen by souvenir hunters or attacked by Red Guards during the Cultural Revolution.

STAR FEATURES

★ Vairocana Buddha

★ Heavenly King

★ Heavenly King

Holding a votive pagoda in one hand and crushing a demon under his feet, this sculpture of a Heavenly King is remarkable for its sense of movement and realistic posture.

Exploring the Longmen Caves

THERE ARE around 2,000 caves or niches and over 100,000 statues (with English captions) in total clustered inside a few caves, largely within a half-mile (1-km) section on the western bank of the Yi River.

The well-preserved Lotus Flower Cave ② was built c.527 and is important as it was built as a complete entity, and not added to over the years. It derives its name from the large lotus flower in the center of its domed roof, surrounded by musical water spirits – apsarases. The Ten Thousand Buddha Cave ③ is a typical Tang dynasty cave built in 680. The many figures of Buddha create an overwhelming sense of the presence of the great teacher. The Prescription Cave ④ is so called because it has 140

Seated Buddha, Sakyamuni, in the central cave Binyang Si

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

9 miles (14 km) S of Luoyang.

☎ (0379) 598 1651. 🚗 from the dock at Luoyang. 🚌 53, 60; 83 from the train station. 🚏 not allowed to enter the site. 🕒 7am–6.30pm daily. 📷 📱 📺 📺 inscriptions recording many treatments for a wide variety of diseases and conditions carved on the walls on either side of the entrance. The list has been added to over a period of 150 years and so provides a unique record of typological changes over time. The three Binyang San Dong ⑤ caves took 24 years to build and were completed in AD 523. On the main wall there are five very large Buddhist images: the central one, of Sakyamuni, is flanked by four bodhisattvas all in the ascetic and rather formal Northern Wei style. Together with the statues on the side walls, the three groups of figures symbolize the Buddhas of the past, present, and future. There were two large reliefs of the Emperor and Empress worshipping Buddha, but these were stolen in the 1930s and they now reside in museums in the USA. The southern Binyang cave has some beautiful sculptures that were completed in 641. These figures have serene features and can clearly be seen as a transition between the artistic styles of the solemn, austere Northern Wei and the lively naturalism of the Tang artists as displayed at Fengxian Si.

LONGMEN CAVES

The east bank of the river provides a great vantage point to appreciate the grandeur of the carvings of Fengxian Si. There is also a temple and a few minor caves.

0 meters 250

0 yards 250

KEY

□ Area illustrated

The monumental Forest of Stupas, Shaolin Temple

Song Shan & Shaolin Temple 13

嵩山和少林寺

50 miles (80 km) W of Zhengzhou. from Luoyang & Zhengzhou to Dengfeng & Shaolin Temple. Dengfeng

203 Beihuan Lu, (0371) 287 2137.

THE CENTRAL PEAK of China's five sacred Daoist peaks, Song Shan soars 4,895 ft (1,492 m) high. Its sights can be best explored by staying at Dengfeng, at the foot of Taishi Shan, where numerous trails lead past temples and pagodas, and offer splendid views around the valley. Just 3 miles (5 km) east is the vast Zhongyue Miao (Central Peak Temple). Possibly China's oldest Daoist shrine, it was consecrated over 2,200 years ago, although what exists today is more recent.

About 2 miles (3 km) north of Dengfeng is the Songyang Academy. A Confucian college that was one of China's four great centers of learning, its courtyard has two tall cypresses, said to have been planted 2,000 years ago by the Han emperor Wudi. Farther uphill, the 12-sided Songyue Si Pagoda, dating from the 6th century AD, is China's oldest brick pagoda. Just 6 miles (10 km) southeast of Dengfeng, the Gaocheng Observatory dates from the Yuan era. Its pyramidal tower is China's oldest intact observatory. Shaolin, literally

Bodhidharma statue, Shaolin Temple

“Young Forest,” is the name of the fighting order of monks who reside in the Buddhist Shaolin Temple, 8 miles (13 km) northwest of Dengfeng. Founded in the 5th century AD, it acquired its martial spirit under Bodhidarma, an Indian monk who arrived here in AD 527. He devised a system of exercises that evolved into shaolin quan, or Shaolin Boxing, the origin of all the great Chinese martial arts. The temple has burned down repeatedly and today its mystique has been dulled by blatant commercialization. It remains, however, a place of pilgrimage for many martial arts devotees, who still flock here to develop gong fu (skill), popularly known as kung fu.

The large temple has several halls. Toward the back, the Standing in the Snow Pavilion marks the spot where the monk Huihe chopped off his arm to commune more closely with Zen Buddhism. Behind, the Pilu Pavilion's floor is marked with pits where monks practiced their footwork. Within the Chuipu Hall, terracotta figures depict various styles of Shaolin Boxing.

The Forest of Stupas, a short walk from the temple, is a large assembly of brick pagodas, commemorating renowned Shaolin monks. Each September, the famous wusbu (martial arts) festival is held here. The cave where Bodhidarma reputedly sat in meditation for nine years is up the mountainside.

Shaolin Temple

8am–5:30pm daily.

Zhongyue Miao

8am–5pm daily.

Gongyi 14

工艺

50 miles (80 km) W of Zhengzhou. from Luoyang or Zhengzhou.

JUST OUTSIDE the town of Gongyi a historic collection of Song-era imperial tombs and a group of Buddhist grotto art can be found. The seven surviving tombs of Song emperors are marked by burial mounds and statuary. Scattered over a vast area southeast of town, the tombs can be seen from buses shuttling between Luoyang and Zhengzhou. About 5 miles (8 km) north of Gongyi, the Buddhist Grottoes (shiku) have some carvings from the Northern Wei period.

Buddhist Grottoes

daily.

Buddhist carvings in the grottoes outside Gongyi

◀ Striking sculptures of the Heavenly King and Defender of the Buddha, Longmen Caves

Kung Fu

CHINESE MARTIAL ARTS are loosely referred to as kung fu or gong fu in the West. Gong fu means “skill” and can describe the accomplishments of a calligrapher or pianist, as much as a martial artist. No one is certain when the fighting arts came to the country, but it is clear that China has the largest number and most colorful of fighting styles, including Drunken Boxing and Praying Mantis Fist. Although there is considerable blurring between them, kung fu divides into internal (neijia) and external (waijia) schools. The internal schools tend to stress internal power or qi (see pp32–3), using evasion and softness to lead an attacker off balance, while waijia forms seek to overwhelm an opponent with physical strength and power. Kung fu employs many weapons, including the spear, broadsword, pole, and whip and even encompasses training in the use of everyday objects, such as the fan, umbrella, or stool, as weapons.

Kung fu sword

Bodhidharma, the founder of Chan (Zen) Buddhism, was an Indian monk who visited the Shaolin Temple. He invented a system of exercises for the monks who were often seated in meditation. It was from these exercises that Shaolin Boxing developed.

Shaolin monks endure a rigorous training regimen. Here, they perform an acrobatic version of the horse stance (mabu), a painful exercise that is essential for developing a powerful stance and a deep “root” for stability while fighting.

Xingyi Quan

(Shape Mind Fist) is, of the neijia practices, probably the closest to a bard school. Although its strikes and blocks are linear and powerful, relaxation is paramount. The basics of this explosive fighting style are simple to learn, but tricky to master.

Bagua Zhang

(Eight Trigram Palm), an internal art, incorporates circular movements into all footwork and strikes. Bagua practitioners were traditionally seen by other stylists as unpredictable, elusive, and ferocious adversaries.

Bruce Lee (right) in The Chinese Connection

KUNG FU FILM INDUSTRY

The Chinese and Hong Kong film industry entertains its audience with stylized and prettified versions of kung fu in movie plots that typically hinge on themes of vengeance and retribution. Famous actors have included Bruce Lee, Jackie Chan, and Jet Li and a host of lesser known B-movie actors and actresses. Hallmark films include Drunken Master 2 (Jackie Chan) and Enter the Dragon (Bruce Lee). The martial arts employed in cinema are very different from the real thing – an impressive martial arts actor does not necessarily make a good martial artist. Movements are choreographed and stunts are practiced repeatedly to give the impression of a real fight, without the dangers inherent in real combat.

SHAANXI

AT THE HEART OF CHINA, bordered by the Yellow River to the east, the dusty province of Shaanxi has had its lion's share of splendor. In 1066 BC, the Western Zhou dynasty established its capital at Hao, near modern-day Xi'an (see pp162–7). It was from here, about 850 years later, that China was unified by its first emperor, Qin Shi Huangdi (see p54). This set the stage for Xi'an to serve as the seat of political power to successive dynasties including the Western Han, the Sui, and the Tang, for over a millennium. By the 9th century, Xi'an, known then as Chang'an, was the largest and wealthiest city in the world, immersed in the riches that spilled along the Silk Road. At the peak of the Tang era, Xi'an's population of over a million people worshiped at as many as 1,000 temples within the confines of a vast city wall.

The city's treasures are abundant, from the silent army of Terracotta Warriors just northeast of Xi'an, fashioned to guard the tomb of China's first emperor, to the impressive Shaanxi History Museum, with over 3,000 exhibits ranging from Shang and Zhou bronze vessels to Tang-era ornaments and funerary items.

Xi'an's other key sights include the extensive Eight Immortals Temple associated with Daoist legends, and the two Goose Pagodas with their strong connections to Tang-era Buddhism. Many visitors also make a trip to the holy mountain of Hua Shan, to the east of Xi'an, for its stimulating combination of energetic hiking opportunities and quiet sanctity.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

Xi'an ①

Historic Sites

Terracotta Army
pp168–9 ②

Yan'an ④

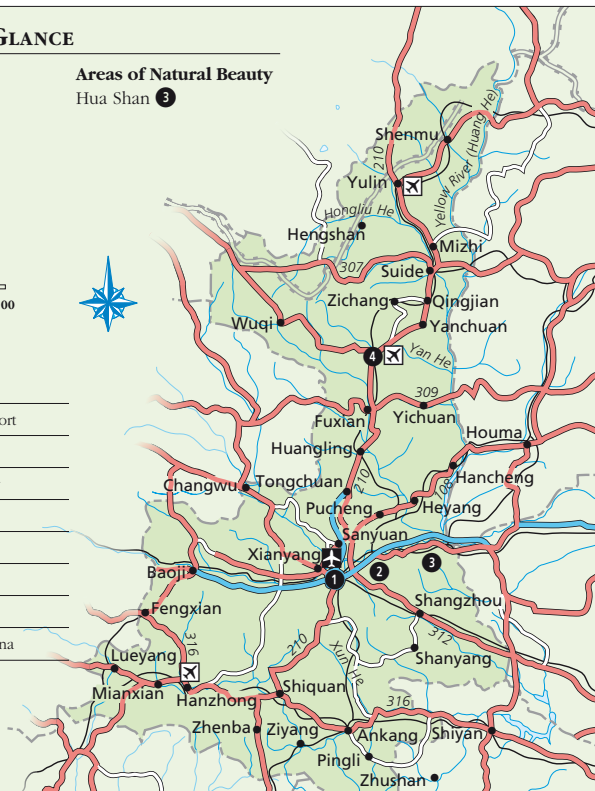

Areas of Natural Beauty

Hua Shan ③

KEY

	International airport
	Domestic airport
	National highway
	Major road
	Minor road
	Railroad
	Provincial border
	Great Wall of China

Xi'an ①

西安

Drum at Xi'an
Drum Tower

CAPITAL OF MODERN SHAANXI, Xi'an has served as capital to 11 dynasties over a period of 4,000 years, including the Western Zhou, Western Han, Qin, Western Wei, Northern Zhou, Sui, and Tang. The Chinese trace its lineage back even further to the mythical Yellow Emperor, who made Xianyang his capital (2200–1700 BC). Xi'an peaked during the Tang dynasty, when its position at the eastern end of the Silk Road (see pp464–5) transformed it into a bustling metropolis, luring foreign merchants and faiths, including Nestorian Christians, Muslims, Zoroastrians, Manicheans, and Buddhists. The city declined later but has some splendid sights and a thriving tourist economy.

A view of the South Gate, Xi'an City Walls

🏰 Xi'an City Walls

🕒 8:30am–6:30pm daily. 📍 Unlike many city walls in China including Beijing's mighty ramparts – now mostly flattened – Xi'an's walls are still intact, forming a 9-mile (14-km) long rectangle around the city center. In 1370, during the reign of Hongwu, the first Ming emperor, these walls were built on the foundations of the Tang imperial palace, using rammed earth, quicklime, and glutinous rice extract. The 39-ft (12-m) high bastions have bases up to 59 ft (18 m) thick. Visitors can climb the walls at several locations, particularly at the steps east of the South Gate or at the West Gate, for walks along the busy ramparts, where souvenir vendors gather. Though striking in themselves, the walls are modest compared to the mighty bastion that once encompassed 30 sq miles (78 sq km) of Chang'an, Xi'an's name during the Tang era.

🏛️ Forest of Stelae Museum

🕒 8am–6pm daily. 📍

A short distance east of the South Gate, this museum's seven halls house over 1,000 stelae – stone pillars carved for commemorative purposes – the earliest dating from the Han dynasty. The tablets bearing dense reams of classical Chinese may only interest scholars, but others are engraved with maps and illustrations. The stelae in the first hall comprise a record of the 12 Confucian classics, including the Book of Songs (Shijing), the Book of Changes (Yijing or I Ching), and the Analects (Lunyu). These were carved on 114 stone tablets in 837, upon the orders of the Tang Wenzong emperor, as the standard texts to eliminate copyist's errors, and were kept at the

Detail from the Nestorian tablet at the Forest of Stelae Museum

Imperial Academy in Xi'an. The Daqin Nestorian Tablet in the second hall may be of more interest to visitors. The stele is topped with a cross and was carved in 781 to commemorate the arrival of Nestorian Christianity in Xi'an. The characters at the top of the stele refer to Rome (or Daqin), and Nestorian Christianity, the "Revered Religion." Branded heretical for believing in the separation of Christ's human and divine attributes, the first Nestorians arrived in Xi'an in AD 635. They thrived in the city for two centuries before suddenly vanishing altogether.

Inside the third hall, an engraved map of Chang'an reveals the scale of the city at the height of its glory. The fourth hall houses calligraphic renditions of poems by Su Dongpo (1037–1101) and other Chinese poets, and illustrations including etchings of Bodhidharma, the Indian founder of Chan (Zen) Buddhism (see pp158–9).

Useful reference material for the study of local history and society during the Song, Yuan, Ming, and Qing eras can be found preserved in the fifth hall. The museum's side halls display further historical and religious artifacts.

The façade of the Forest of Stelae Museum, once the Temple of Confucius

Drum & Bell Towers

8:30am-5:30pm daily. The enormous Bell Tower, with its distinctive green three-tiered roof, is situated in the center of Xi'an, where the city's four main streets converge. Standing on a brick platform, this wooden structure was first built in 1384, two blocks west of here, before being relocated to its current site in 1582. It was later restored in 1739. The tower, which formerly housed a large bronze bell that was struck each morning, now stores a collection of bells, chimes, and musical instruments. A balcony running all along the outside offers splendid views of the town's main roads and heavy traffic. The Drum Tower, built in 1380, is situated to the west of the Bell Tower on the edge of the old Muslim Quarter, for centuries the home of Xi'an's Hui minority currently numbering around 30,000. Except for its recently restored interior, there is little to see inside the triple-eaved wooden Drum Tower.

Iron bell in the Bell Tower

The Great Mosque

8am-6:30pm daily. First built during the Tang dynasty, and located in the heart of the Muslim Quarter west of the Bell Tower, Xi'an's Chinese-styled Great Mosque (Da Qingzhen Si) is one of the largest in China. Originally built in 742, when Islam was still a young religion, the mosque's surviving buildings date to the Qing dynasty and have been recently restored. A serene oasis of tranquility, the mosque has four courtyards, the first of Arabic script on a stone arch in the Great Mosque's courtyard

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

744 miles (1,200 km) SW of Beijing. 6,620,000. Xiguan Airport, Xianyang 25 miles (40 km). Xi'an Train Station. Xi'an Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport), West Bus Station. Xi'an Tourist Information Services Center, (029) 8745 5043.

which contains a 30-ft (9-m) high decorated wooden arch, built in the 17th century, while the third houses the Introspection Minaret, an octagonal pagoda with a triple-eaved roof. Housed within the hall to the south of the minaret is a Ming-dynasty handwritten copy of the holy Koran. Located beyond two fountains is the main prayer hall, capped in turquoise tiles, its ceiling carved with inscriptions from the Koran. The prayer hall is usually closed to non-Muslims. Avoid visiting the mosque on Fridays, the Muslim holy day.

Also worth exploring is the charming Muslim Quarter, with its winding streets, low houses, narrow lanes, excellent ethnic cuisine, and resident Hui community.

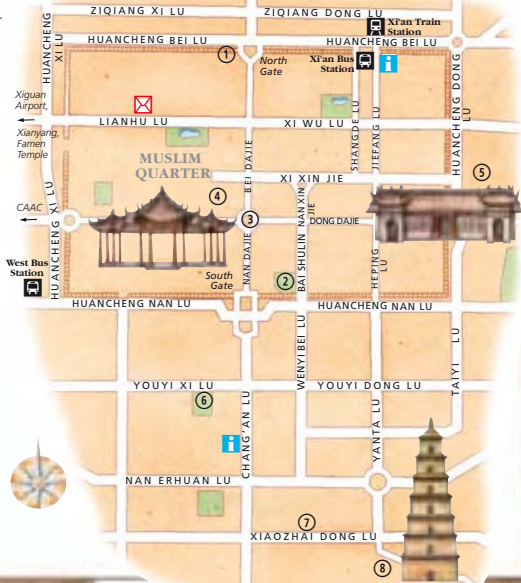

Xi'an City Center

- Drum & Bell Towers ③
- Eight Immortals Temple ⑤
- Forest of Stelae Museum ②
- Great Goose Pagoda ⑧
- The Great Mosque ④
- Shaanxi History Museum ⑦
- Small Wild Goose Pagoda ⑥
- Xi'an City Walls ①

KEY

- Train station
- Long distance bus station
- Tourist information
- Post office
- City wall

Eight Immortals Temple

☉ daily, 📷

East of Xi'an's walls, this is its largest Daoist shrine, built on the site of a temple originally consecrated to the Thunder God, whose presence had been indicated by subterranean rumblings. It was later named Baxian Gong, after the Eight Immortals of Daoist mythology, who were glimpsed here during the Song dynasty. The halls and courtyards of this active temple teem with monks and nuns. Of particular interest are a series of slabs attached to the wall in the main courtyard, inscribed with Daoist literature and illustrations, including extracts from the Neijing, the bible of Daoist yogis and alchemists. Other plaques are etched with curious Daoist designs, including a tablet illustrated with the five mystic symbols denoting the Five Daoist sacred mountains. On the left and right of the Lingguan Hall are statues of the guardian beings, the White Tiger and Green Dragon, and an effigy of Wang Lingguan, the protector of Daoism. Statues of the Eight Immortals line either side of their hall.

At the rear of the complex, the Doumu Hall is dedicated to the important Daoist Goddess Doumu, also called Doulao, the Queen of the Big Dipper. Also at the rear is the Hall of Master Qiu, where the dowager-Empress Cixi and the Guangxu emperor sought refuge when they fled Beijing's Forbidden City at the end of the Boxer Rebellion in 1900 (see p433). Above the door of the hall is a tablet inscribed with the characters yuging zhidao, meaning the Dao of Jade Purity, Cixi's dedication to the abbot. The temple hosts a popular religious festival on the first and fifteenth day of every lunar month. An excellent street market of curios, fakes, and memorabilia is held on Wednesdays and Sundays in the road outside the temple.

Stele Pavilion
Eight Immortals Temple

The Small Goose Pagoda, originally 15 stories high

Small Goose Pagoda

Youyi Xi Lu. 📍 21, 402. ☉ daily, 📷

Southwest of the South Gate, the 43-m (141-ft) high Small Goose pagoda, Xiaoyan Ta, is attached to the remains of a temple, Jianfu Si. One of the city's significant Tang relics, it was constructed to store sutras (scriptures) brought back to Xi'an from India along the Silk Road. Its brick tower, completed in AD 709, was meant to protect the sutras from fire, which often destroyed wooden temple buildings. The pagoda's top was jolted off by one earthquake and another in 1487 sent a large fracture, about a foot wide, along its length. A tremor in the next century reversed the damage.

Shaanxi History Museum

See pp166–7.

Great Goose Pagoda

Yanta Lu. 📍 5, 21, 501. ☉ daily.

📷 (separate fee to climb the pagoda).

This Tang-dynasty pagoda, built in AD 652, is attached to the extant Ci'en Si (Ci'en Temple). Known as Dayan Ta, the pagoda was built in memory of the Gaozong emperor's mother, Empress Wende. The monk Xuanzang, who traveled to India via Central Asia and returned with bundles of sutras (see p487), officiated at the temple, translating the hundreds of scriptures from Sanskrit into Chinese. The 210-ft (64-m) high pagoda, built on his orders for their storage, is a square, sturdy structure with a brick exterior and wood interior. At the height of the Tang dynasty, Xi'an's extent was almost seven times larger than it is today, enclosing within its walls both the temple and pagoda.

The Dayan Ta can be climbed for an additional fee. The first floor contains an exhibition of pagoda designs and their history. Visitors throw money from the windows for good luck. The large temple complex, smaller now than during its Tang heyday, can also be explored. Its main hall contains three statues of the Buddha flanked by 18 luohan or arbats (see pp30–1).

A visitor lighting a candle in the courtyard, Great Goose Pagoda

History of the Pagoda

CONSIDERED an archetypal element of Chinese architecture, the pagoda originates from India in concept and form as a development from the Buddhist stupa. However, Chinese architectural forms and styles were soon used in the design of pagodas, as can be seen by the pillar pagodas in the Yungang caves that clearly show multi-storied buildings. Over 1,500 years pagodas developed a variety of forms from pillars to squat tombs to soaring multi-story towers. Made of stone, brick, or wood, they could also be square or multi-sided. As they became uniquely Chinese they were also used slightly differently. Originally the focal point of the temple, they were superseded in this by the more functional hall. Feng shui led to pagodas being built without a temple on hills outside towns or overlooking rivers, to bring good luck or prevent floods.

Yungang pillar pagoda

The Indian stupa was a symbolic tomb and receptacle for Buddhist relics that inspired the pagoda. However the stupa form was largely dropped until the 13th century when the Yuan imported Tibetan Buddhist stupas (also known as dagobas), popularizing the form for later dynasties.

This Dali pagoda is a beautiful example of a stone close-eaved pagoda. From a square base it is 260-ft (69-m) high, tapering to a lotus bud spike that recalls the Indian stupas.

Octagonal pagodas may have come about as a result of Tantric Buddhism which used a cosmology with eight cardinal points.

YINGXIAN PAGODA

The wooden pagoda at the Fogong Si, Yingxian is one of the finest surviving pagodas. Built in 1056, the octagonal building is called the Sakyamuni Pagoda.

Shaanxi History Museum

陕西历史博物馆

Ancient crossbow

ONE OF XI'AN's premier attractions, this roomy, modern museum contains over 370,000 relics chronicling Shaanxi civilization and culture from as far back as prehistoric times. The collection is strong in ceramics, bronzes, jade pieces, gold and silver items, ancient coins, and calligraphy mainly from the pre-Ming periods, reflecting Xi'an's later decline. Look out also for some interesting Tang-dynasty frescoes and the chance to examine some of the renowned terracotta soldiers (see pp168-9) up close. Exhibits are well displayed and accompanied by both Chinese and English captions.

Tang-dynasty style architecture of the modern Shaanxi History Museum

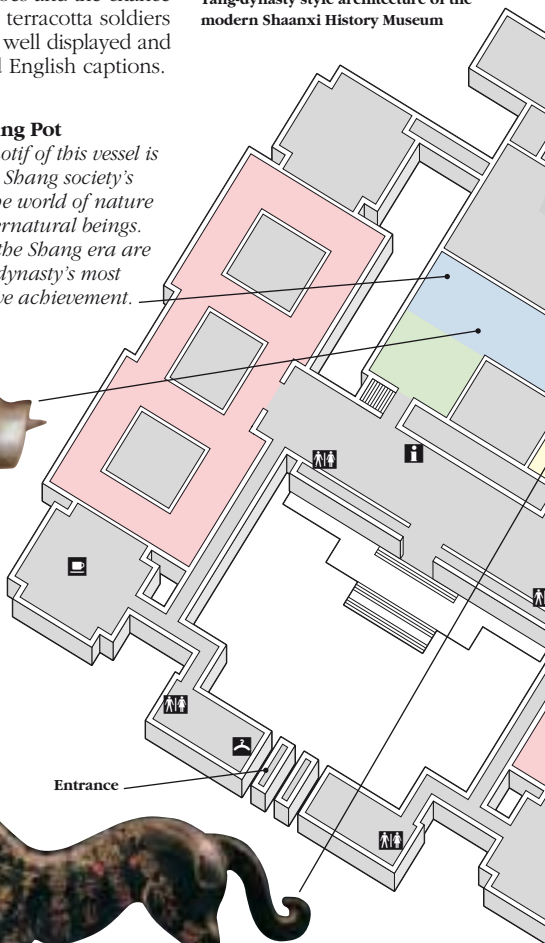

★ Shang Cooking Pot

The ogre-mask motif of this vessel is indicative of the Shang society's absorption in the world of nature spirits and supernatural beings. The bronzes of the Shang era are regarded as the dynasty's most significant creative achievement.

Zhou Wine Decanter

Capped with a lid in the shape of a tiger and incorporating a tail-shaped handle, this ox-shaped zun (a type of wine vessel) was excavated in 1967. The elaborate surface pattern is typical of Zhou-dynasty animistic design.

KEY TO FLOORPLAN

- Pre-history
- Shang and Zhou Dynasties
- Qin Dynasty
- Han Dynasty
- Northern and Southern Dynasties
- Tang Dynasty
- Song to Qing Dynasties
- Special exhibitions
- Non-exhibition space

Tiger-shaped Tally

Inscribed with the archaic script used for Qin official texts, this remarkable bronze artifact was issued to generals to authorize the mobilization of troops.

STAR SIGHTS

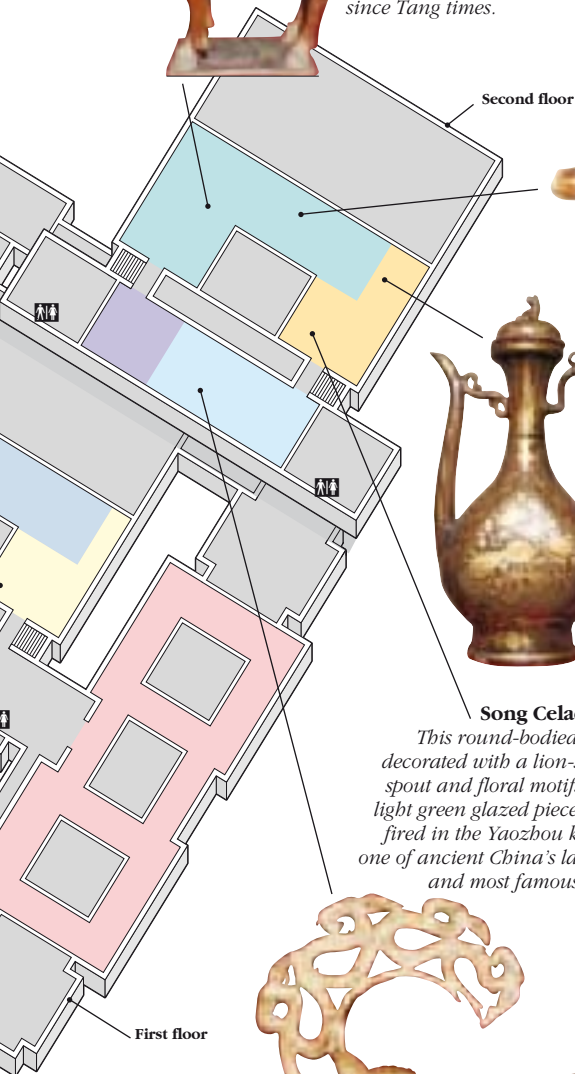

- ★ Shang Cooking Pot
- ★ Tang Sancai Horse

★ Tang Sancai Horse
This three-color (sancai) piece is a fine example of the polychrome earthenware pottery that has remained unsurpassed since Tang times.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

91 Xiaozhai Donglu, corner of Cuihua Lu. ☎ (029) 8521 7140.
 🚏 5, 19, 521 from train station.
 🕒 Apr–Sep: 8:30am–5:30pm;
 Oct–Mar: 9am–4:30pm. 📷 📱
 🌐 www.sxhm.com

Tang Dynasty Agate Cup
This beautifully colored ox-head cup displays Middle Eastern influences, probably derived via the Silk Road. The gold snout is a removable stopper.

Ming Kettle
Among the small number of Ming artifacts at the museum is this kettle with gold tracing in a peacock and peony (a flower symbolizing wealth and rank) pattern.

Song Celadon Pot
This round-bodied pot is decorated with a lion-styled spout and floral motifs. The light green glazed piece was fired in the Yaozhou kilns, one of ancient China's largest and most famous kilns.

Golden Monster
Standing as though poised to charge, this magnificent Han-dynasty ornament has a patterned body and stylized horns that arch high over the beast's back and end in a face.

GALLERY GUIDE

The exhibits are arranged in chronological order with Shang and Western Zhou exhibits in Gallery 1. On the second floor, Gallery 2 covers the Han, Western Wei, and Northern Zhou periods, while Gallery 3 concentrates on the Sui, Tang, Ming, and Qing dynasties. The two wings of the museum house temporary exhibits that can vary in quality and explanation.

Terracotta Army ②

兵马俑

Bell, tomb of Shi Huangdi

THE ARMY OF THE TERRACOTTA warriors was discovered in 1974 by peasants digging a well. The awesome ranks of life-size pottery figures, modeled from yellow clay, were made to guard the tomb of Qin Shi Huangdi, despotic ruler who unified China over 2,200 years ago (see p54). Excavations yielded three pits and over 7,000 soldiers, archers, and horses. Pit 1 contains the infantry; pit 2 (still being excavated) is filled with cavalry and soldiers; and pit 3 (unexcavated) seems to be the command center, with 70 high-ranking officers. Each warrior, originally colored with pigment and holding a weapon, has an individually crafted expression.

★ Army in Pit One

The most impressive pit contains over 6,000 warriors, arrayed in battle formation. The rear of the vault is strewn with smashed beads and fragments yet to be assembled.

High-ranking Officer

Dressed commandingly in a long, two-layered knee-length tunic, this imposing figure is distinguished both by his regalia and by being taller than the pottery infantry figures he appears to oversee.

Original Decoration

All of the figures were originally painted in vivid colors similar to this replica. Some retain traces of paint, but most of them faded after exposure to air.

The pottery horses have been assembled from broken fragments, like the warriors around them.

Infantry

The pottery warriors were originally equipped with weapons, including swords, spears, and bows and arrows, many of which have rotted.

STAR SIGHTS

★ Army in Pit One

★ Kneeling Archer

★ Kneeling Archer

Cloaked in upper-body armor and kneeling in a state of preparation, this archer is alert although his wooden bow has disintegrated.

His square-toed shoes are studded for extra grip.

The earth-walled corridors that house the warriors were originally roofed with wooden rafters.

Individual details

The intricacy is astonishing, especially in the careful execution of individual hairstyles on the hand-sculpted beads. Further artistry is evident in the detailed belts, clothing, and footwear.

Restoring the army

The work to excavate and restore the terracotta figures continues to this day. Each warrior is unique and must be painstakingly reassembled by a team.

QIN SHI HUANGDI'S TOMB

The Terracotta Army is just one part, the defending army, of a complex necropolis. A mile west of the pits, a large hill, yet to be fully excavated, is believed to be the burial mound of emperor Qin Shi Huangdi, a tyrant preoccupied with death and the legacy he would leave behind. He spared no expense, enlisting 700,000 people over 36 years in the tomb's construction. Historical sources portray a miniature plan of his empire: a floor cut by rivers of mercury beneath a ceiling studded with pearls to represent the night sky. The complex is also said to contain 48 tombs for concubines who were buried alive with the emperor, a fate also reserved for workers, to prevent the location and design of the tomb from becoming known. Two marvelous bronze chariots, originally housed in wooden coffins, were unearthed near the burial mound, and laboriously reassembled. Half actual size, one is made up of over 3,600 metal pieces.

One of the bronze chariots, on display in the Exhibition Hall

Colorful fresco in the tomb of Yi De, Qian Ling

Xi'an: Farther Afield

The several worthwhile sights around Xi'an are best visited by the Western Tour buses that depart from Xi'an train station in the morning. Located 15 miles (25 km) northeast, the modern city of Xianyang, China's first dynastic capital, is mainly visited for its museum and the surrounding imperial tombs.

Housed in a former Confucian Temple, the Xianyang City Museum displays relics from Qin and Han times, and its highlight is an army of 3,000 miniature terracotta soldiers excavated from a nearby tomb. Mao Ling (Mao Tomb), 25 miles (40 km) west of Xi'an, is the tomb of the Han emperor Wudi (141–87 BC). The largest of the Han tombs in the surrounding region, it has a museum that houses stone sculptures and further relics from the tomb complex. The impressive Qian Ling (Qian Tomb), 50 miles (80 km) northwest of Xi'an, is the burial site of the Tang

Stele in Yi De's Tomb, Qian Ling

Gaozong emperor and his wife, the indomitable Wu Zetian (see pp58–9). The Imperial Way is lined with stone figures, while the southeast section of the area contains 17 lesser tombs, including the vividly frescoed tombs of Prince Zhang Huai, the emperor's second son, and crown prince Yi De, the emperor's grandson. The mountainside mausoleum of the Tang Taizong emperor lies at Zhao Ling (Zhao Tomb), 43 miles (70 km) northwest of Xi'an.

Situated 74 miles (120 km) northwest of Xi'an, the remote Famen Temple isn't easy to reach, but is well worth the long journey. This shrine is one of China's first Buddhist temples, and a venerated place for Buddhist pilgrims the world over. It was built in the 2nd century AD to house a finger bone of Sakyamuni (the Historical Buddha) donated by the Indian king Ashoka, who was dispensing Buddhist relics (sarira) among Buddhist lands. The sacred bone enjoyed extensive veneration, and was periodically removed from the temple crypt and paraded through the streets of Xi'an during the height of the Tang era. After the dynasty's fall, the crypt was lost in obscurity, possibly as a result of anti-Buddhist purges. It is surprising that the crypt remained hidden for so long, as pagodas often have vaults for storing relics and Buddhist ornaments. In the 1980s, an exploration following a partial collapse of the pagoda exposed the crypt, along with its relics and Tang-dynasty riches. Today, the finger bone is once again preserved in a crypt, while the temple museum displays many Tang-era artifacts. The sacred bone is occasionally taken abroad, as it was in 2003, when it went to Taipei in Taiwan.

🏯 Xianyang City Museum

Zhongshan Lu. 🕒 8am–5pm daily. 🎫

🏯 Mao, Qian & Zhao Ling

📍 from Xi'an station. 🚗

🕒 daily. 🎫

🏯 Famen Temple

📍 from Xi'an station, 4 shuttles daily

🕒 from 7:30am. 🚗 🕒 8am–5:30pm

daily. 🎫

The 12-storied pagoda at the Famen Temple, now restored to its former glory

Pilgrims and hikers winding their way up North Peak, Hua Shan

Hua Shan ③

华山

75 miles (120 km) E of Xi'an.

🚗 from Xi'an to Menyuan, then bus. 🚠 Cable car available.

THE WESTERNMOST and loftiest of China's five Daoist peaks, the 8,563-ft (2,610-m) high Hua Shan is characterized by steep ascents, precipitous gullies, and peerless views. Crowned by five peaks (North, South, East, West, and Central), and towering southwest of the Yellow River as it loops east along the Henan-Shanxi border, Hua Shan (Flower Mountain) was traditionally likened to a lotus bloom. Also known by its other name, Xiyue (Western Peak), the mountain is believed to be presided over by the Daoist God of Hua Shan. For centuries, it was a magnet for hermits and ascetics in pursuit of immortality, and its crags and crannies still teem with Daoist myths. Its numerous temples have dwindled over the years, although several survive perched on the mountain.

Hikers can either drift to North Peak by cable car from the station at the eastern base, or make the strenuous 3–5 hour trek along with hordes of other pilgrims from Hua Shan village. From North Peak, one can either descend or follow the trail along the ridge to the other four peaks lying to the south. Spring and autumn are the best seasons to climb Hua Shan, since summers and winters are extreme. Night-time ascents can also be made. It is best to carry one's own food, though refreshments are available from vendors and at hotels along the trail. Wear shoes or boots with a rugged grip as certain sections are treacherous. At various places near the summits, bunches of padlocks hang on chains. According to the custom, couples have their names engraved on them and then lock them here forever. Accommodation is available in Hua Shan village and on the mountain itself for overnight stays and watching the sunrise from East Peak.

Yan'an ④

延安

155 miles (250 km) N of Xi'an.

🚗 140,000. 🚗 from Xi'an. 🚗

THE QUIET TOWN of Yan'an, set within the ribbed loess hills of northern Shaanxi, is best explored by train from Xi'an. Yan'an lures Mao fans, since the town was the Communist Party's headquarters for a decade after the culmination of the Long March (see p256) in October 1935.

In the north of town, the Yan'an Revolutionary Museum houses a varied display of Communist relics, including Mao's stuffed horse, weapons, photographs, and uniforms. Not far from the museum lies the Wangjiaping Revolution Headquarters Site, where Mao and other front-rank party leaders worked and lived. The Fenghuang Shan Lu Revolution Headquarters Site, the early residence of the Communists, houses memorabilia of prominent officers. Perched on a hill in the southeast of town, and offering impressive views, is the Ming-dynasty Yan'an Bao Pagoda, which sometimes features on Communist memorabilia and badges.

🏛️ Yan'an Revolutionary Museum

Zaoyuan Lu. ☉ 8am–5:20pm daily. 🚗

🏠 Wangjiaping Revolution Headquarters Site

Zaoyuan Lu. ☉ 7am to dusk daily. 🚗

Padlocks engraved with couples' names, Hua Shan

CENTRAL CHINA

INTRODUCING CENTRAL CHINA 174-181

SHANGHAI 182-201

JIANGSU & ANHUI 202-237

ZHEJIANG & JIANGXI 238-257

HUNAN & HUBEI 258-273

Central China at a Glance

DOMINATED BY THE MIGHTY YANGZI RIVER, China's central region encompasses the port city of Shanghai and the six provinces of Jiangsu, Anhui, Zhejiang, Jiangxi, Hunan, and Hubei, that fan out from it to the north, south, and west. The region is rich in historic sights as well as natural beauty, including the attractive city of Nanjing, with its largely intact city wall, and the splendid scenery around Zhejiang's West Lake and Anhui's Huang Shan mountain. The cultured cities of Hangzhou and Suzhou lie on the banks of the Grand Canal, one of the greatest engineering feats in China's early history. A more up-to-date colossal feat of construction, the Three Gorges Dam, is in the final stages of completion on the Yangzi River in Hubei, and is the world's largest dam.

View from Jiuhua Shan, a sacred Buddhist mountains

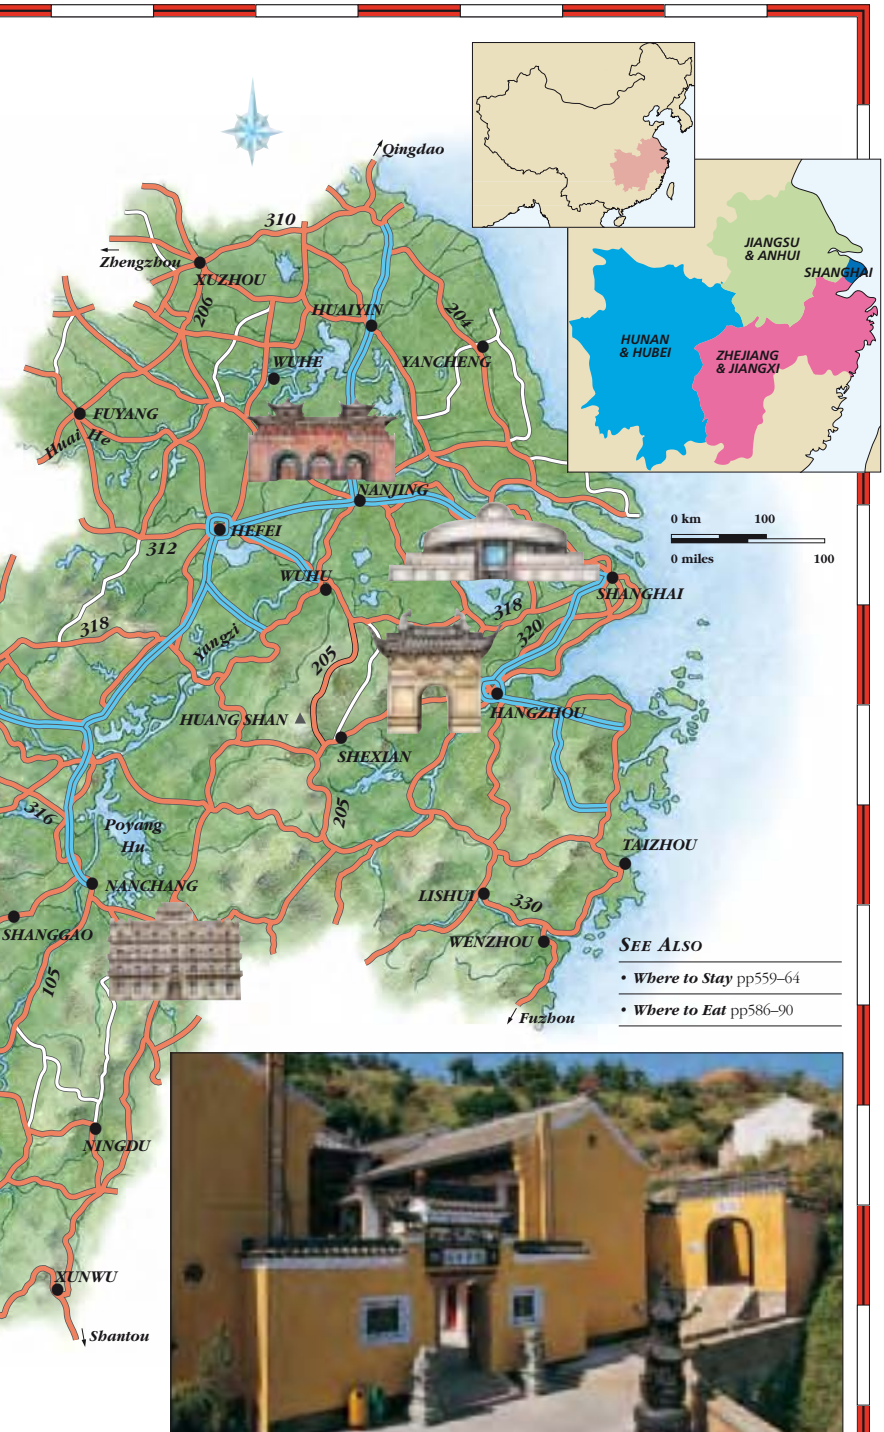

Tranquil scene in Shizi Lin (Lion Grove Garden), Suzhou

GETTING AROUND

The region's main airport hub is Shanghai, from where there are flights all over the world, as well as throughout China. Many other towns and cities in the region have domestic airports, but unless time is really an issue, it can be more pleasurable to travel by train. Both the Grand Canal and the Yangzi River operate ferry or canal-boat services, although these are mainly in the form of tourist excursions rather than regular services. In the remote mountainous regions such as Wudang Shan in northern Hubei, and Jिंगgang Shan in southern Jiangxi, bus travel is the most expedient means of transport.

A PORTRAIT OF CENTRAL CHINA

FROM THE MODERN CITY OF SHANGHAI to the historic and picturesque canal towns, Central China encapsulates the essence of the country and its culture. The region can also be considered the crucible of modern China, as many of the stirring historical events that shaped the nation took place here in the early 20th century.

The Yangzi (Chang Jiang), which flows into the East China Sea just below Shanghai, is the thread that binds all of Central China together. The combination of water and silt has fertilized vast areas, especially around Wuhan, referred to as “China’s Grain Basket”, or the “Land of Fish and Rice.” Despite its tendency to flood, the river has for centuries been a vital conduit for China’s trade, crowded with sampans and junks, as observed by Marco Polo in the 13th century, as well as tea clippers in the 19th century and ferries and cruise ships today. The river has also accelerated the country’s development: without the Yangzi there would have been no Grand Canal and no Shanghai. Now, with the controversial construction of the Three

Ornately-styled garden gate in Yangzhou

Gorges Dam, the river has been used again to supply the requirements of China’s vast, clamorous population.

Shanghai, which actually sits on the Huangpu River, a small tributary of the Yangzi, is something of an upstart, despite its reputation. A small provincial town until the mid-19th century, it evolved to become not only China’s greatest city but one of the great cities of the world. Even after the Cultural Revolution it remained, in Chinese minds, the country’s fashion and shopping capital as well as a great industrial powerhouse. It was, however, a large, rundown metropolis when Chairman Mao died in 1976 and it is only in the last decade that it has regained its stature. It is, today, one of the most visible symbols of “new” China’s vitality and dynamism.

The majestic sweep of the Bund, testament to European colonialism in Shanghai

Tour boats on one of Tongli's many canals

Politically too, Shanghai's impact has been enormous; it was the site of the first meeting of the Chinese Communist Party and the spawning ground for the Cultural Revolution and the Gang of Four, all of whom had strong connections with the city.

In fact, nearly all of the major political events of 20th-century China took place in its central provinces. Nanjing, the first Ming capital, was also Chiang Kai Shek's Republican center. Chairman Mao was born and educated, and began his revolutionary activities in Hunan. In Jiangxi, the 1927 Nanchang Uprising was the rallying point for the creation of the Red Army, while the same province was the starting point of the Long March. That revolution should ignite so easily was not surprising, since Anhui, Hunan, and Jiangxi, large parts of which are mountainous and remote from the Yangzi and seats of power, have always been associated with appalling poverty.

However, long before the fall of the last emperor, this was where many of the greatest features of pre-Revolutionary Chinese culture flowered during the brilliance of the Song and Ming dynasties. Before establishing their glorious capital in Peking, the Ming left their mark on Nanjing, as evidenced by the huge Ming tomb and formidable city wall, while Hangzhou, a former Song capital, is the location of the West Lake, one of China's most scenic places. Just as remarkable are the region's gardens and workshops producing sophisticated silk embroidery and porcelain. Suzhou, in Jiangsu, has to some extent retained some of its ancient charm and is renowned for its private gardens, which have survived the upheavals of recent history largely intact. Porcelain production continues alongside the historic imperial kilns of Jingdezhen, while silk, produced throughout parts of the region, is still a major export, as it was a thousand years ago.

Considering that Central China is a heavily populated region largely shaped by man's manipulation of nature, it is surprising to find that there are still large areas of wilderness to enjoy. This is best illustrated in the legend of the Wild Man, China's equivalent of the Yeti, who is said to haunt Shennongjia in Hubei. For those who want to escape urban or pastoral China, there are plenty of opportunities to do so, from the scenic beauty around Taihu Lake in Jiangsu to the wonderful mountain vistas at Hunan's Wulingyuan and Zhejiang's Yandang Shan.

Detail from the Ming Palace Ruins, Nanjing

Suspension bridge at the Divine Cliffs, Yandang Shan

Traditional Chinese Gardens

Lotus, a favorite symbolic flower

THE CHINESE GARDEN developed as a synthesis of two concepts linked in Daoist philosophy (see p31) – scenery and serenity: the contemplation of nature in isolated meditation led to enlightenment. Therefore, the educated and wealthy built natural-looking retreats for themselves within an urban environment. The garden creates poetic and painterly concepts, and aims to improve on nature in creating a picture that looks natural but is in fact entirely artificial. For this the Chinese garden designer used four main elements: rocks, water, plants, and architecture.

Classical Chinese garden design was considered a type of three-dimensional landscape painting or solid poetry.

Rocks: There were two main kinds of rock – the eroded limestones from lakes, often used as sculptures, or the yellow rock piled up to recall mountains and caves to the mind of the viewer. The beauty and realism of the rockery usually determined the success or failure of the garden.

Water: An essential element of life, water also could be used in the garden as a mirror and so appear to increase the size of the garden. Water also serves as a contrasting partner and therefore a balance to the hard stone. Finally it is a home for the goldfish, symbols of good fortune.

Corridors, paths and bridges link the different areas and give the artist control over how the views are presented to the visitor.

Interiors of pavilions were important as the venues for creativity. A lot of care was taken to select an appropriate and poetic name for each building.

Patterns and mosaics brighten up the garden and are also symbolic. Cranes represent longevity, while the yin and yang symbol often appears where the path forks in two.

GARDEN VIEWS

Using these four elements the garden is like a series of tableaux painted onto a roll of silk. One by one they come before your eyes just as the artist intended them to. As you follow the paths, you see just what he wanted you to see. These may be borrowed views, where the scenery from somewhere else is made to look part of the picture; hidden views, where you round a corner to come upon an unexpected scene; contrasting views where leafy bamboo softens the view of rock or opposite views as the yin element water balances the yang element rock.

A moon gate is a round door that neatly frames a view as though it were a picture. Gates can be square-, jar-, or even book-shaped.

Patterned screens allow in a certain amount of light and may be used to cast patterned shadows on white walls. They are also sometimes used to give tempting partial views through to other areas of the garden.

Plants: Plants were used sparingly and usually for their symbolic qualities. Thus the lotus is purity, as it flowers from the mud; bamboo is resolve, it is difficult to break; plum is vigor, as it blooms in winter; the pine is longevity, for it is an evergreen; the imperial peony, is wealth.

Buildings: An intrinsic part of the garden, these pavilions and waterside halls provide a place for contemplation and more importantly a specific viewpoint, as well as shelter from the sun and rain. They could range from open kiosks to multistory halls and meeting rooms.

PENJING

Dating as far back as the Tang dynasty (618–907), penjing is the art of creating a miniature landscape in a container. Not limited to small trees, the artist may use rocks and specially cultivated plants to portray a scene of natural beauty, as though it were a landscape painting. As well as being beautiful, the harmony in these creations is seen as the spiritual expression of man's relationship with nature, the meeting of the temporal with the omnipresent. Often part of a Chinese garden will be devoted to the display or cultivation of this delicate art.

The Chinese art of penjing, the forerunner to Japanese bonsai

Regional Food: Central China

TRADITIONALLY REFERRED TO AS the “Lands of Fish and Rice,” Central China is one of the country’s leading agricultural regions with some of the most fertile land in China. Both wheat and rice are grown here as well as barley, corn, sweet potatoes, peanuts, and soybeans. Freshwater fisheries abound in the network of lakes and rivers, while deep-sea fishing has long been established in the coastal provinces. In the holy mountains of Huang Shan and Jiuhua Shan, Buddhist vegetarianism has also influenced the region’s cuisine. Hunan’s cuisine is like Sichuanese food but even hotter (see pp346–7).

Garlic chives and bok choy

Market stall displaying the wide variety of dried goods available

SHANGHAI

THE CHARACTERISTICS of Shanghai cuisine are summarized as “exquisite in appearance, rich in flavor, and sweet in taste.” A favorite ingredient is the hairy crab from the Yangzi estuary (although overfishing means they come from elsewhere). A relatively new city, Shanghai has not really developed its own cuisine, although it has its own filled dumplings. Instead the city’s main influences are older schools of cuisine – Huiyang and Suzhe. Another culinary influence is the Buddhist school of cuisine. Strangely, the best Buddhist vegetarian restaurants are to be found in Shanghai – a city with a racy reputation. Maybe the sinners want to redeem themselves by abstaining from meat occasionally. Often these dishes have similar names to meat dishes and, thanks to the skilful use of soy sauce, tofu, gluten, and agar, they can look and even taste like meat.

Lotus Root

Dried Bean Curd Skin

Fine Bean Noodles

White Fungus

Black Fungus

Hair Moss

Dried Mushrooms

Tiger Lily Buds

Eight-treasure Buddha's Special

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Two of the area’s great cities, Nanjing and Hangzhou, were at different times capitals in central China.

Whenever there was a change of capital, the vast Imperial kitchens changed location bringing the staff with them resulting in a cross-fertilization of recipes and methods from one region to another.

One favorite imperial dish despite its lowly name is Beggar’s Chicken – a whole chicken is stuffed with vegetables and herbs, wrapped in lotus leaves, and encased in clay before being baked.

Fermented Bean Curd

The clay container is then broken at the table releasing the beautiful aromas. A central China specialty (but actually enjoyed all over) is red fermented bean curd. This has a pungent, cheese-like flavor that is also very savory and appears in vegetarian and meat dishes alike. Fresh water crabs are best during October and November, simply steamed with spring onions, ginger, soy, sugar and vinegar.

Lions’ Heads: pork meatballs braised with Chinese leaf – meant to look like lions’ heads and manes.

HUAIYANG & SUZHE

BASED SPECIFICALLY around the deltas of the Huai and Yangzi Rivers, Huaiyang cuisine is most famous for its excellent fish and shellfish – the freshwater crabs from Tai Hu are superb. Suzhe cuisine, however, covers a wider area – the provinces of Jiangsu and Zhejiang – and includes culinary centers such as Nanjing and Hangzhou that both served as capital cities. Along with stews flavored with a light stock, the region is famous for its “red cooking” – food braised in soy sauce, sugar, ginger, and rice wine. “Chinkiang Vinegar” is black rice vinegar from Zhenjiang, Jiangsu, and is acknowledged to be the best

Eels, a popular ingredient from the rivers of central China rice vinegar in China.

The province of Zhejiang, of course, produces China's best rice wines from Shaoxing and top quality hams from Jinhua. It is also worth trying the Long Jing (Dragon Well) green tea grown around West Lake in Hangzhou.

Park cafés – popular places to snack on some filled dumplings

ANHUI

FURTHER INLAND is the little known Anhui cuisine, which has a long history, but is often overlooked by visitors. Despite being landlocked, Anhui still enjoys a lot of fish thanks to its network of lakes and rivers. The province is also one of the leading agricultural regions in China, producing a great number and variety of crops and vegetables. One of Anhui's famed ingredients are its tender white bamboo shoots. These crisp shoots feature prominently in the vegetarian cuisine prepared in the lofty Buddhist mountain retreats and are often combined with a variety of exotic woodland mushrooms. Finally the world-famous Keemun red tea – it is actually black – comes from the humid hills of Qimen in south Anhui.

ON THE MENU

Beggars Chicken A whole chicken stuffed with flavorings and cooked in a clay pot.

Fried Prawns in Shells Prawns still in their shells are rapidly fried and then braised in a soy and tomato sauce.

Three-layer Shreds Steamed shredded ham, chicken, and pork with bamboo shoots and black mushroom – should be called five-layer shreds.

Fresh Water Crabs Simply steamed with scallions, ginger, soy, sugar, and vinegar.

Steamed Belly Pork with Ground Rice Also known as Double-braised Pork, this long-cooked dish literally melts in your mouth.

Eight-treasure Buddha's Special A generic name for a delicious vegetarian dish which can actually contain any number of different ingredients.

Tofu Casserole: tofu with sea cucumbers, ham, prawns, mushrooms, bamboo shoots, and bok choy in a stew pot.

Squirrel Fish: a bream is filleted, coated with batter, deep-fried, and served with a sweet-and-sour sauce.

Sweet & Sour Spare Ribs Deep-fried bite-size pork spare ribs braised in soy, sugar, and vinegar.

SHANGHAI

LYING ON THE BANKS OF THE HUANGPU RIVER, close to the mouth of the mighty Yangzi on China's eastern seaboard, Shanghai is the nation's largest and most dynamic city, with a population of more than 13 million people. It is an autonomous municipality, and the recent explosion of economic and industrial development has made it one of the fastest growing cities in the world.

By Chinese standards, the development of Shanghai, which means "above the sea," is a recent phenomenon. In the 13th century it became a minor county seat and so it remained until the mid-19th century when British commercial ambitions led to war with China. The ensuing Treaty of Nanking allowed the British to trade freely from certain ports, including Shanghai. The city soon became an outpost of glamor, high living, and ultimately decadence. It was divided into "concessions," where foreign nationals lived in miniature versions of first Britain, then France, the US, and Japan. The Bund or quay along the Huangpu is still lined with colonial buildings, evidence of a time when Shanghai was the third largest financial center in the world. In 1949, the Communists took over and the city was stripped of its grandeur. However, in 1990, the Pudong area across the river from the Bund was declared a Special Economic Zone, and a revival started for the city. Investments poured in at a frenetic pace; flyovers, malls, and hotels sprang up, and clusters of shining metal and glass skyscrapers towered above the Huangpu. Today, Shanghai is once more at the forefront of business and fashion trends, and has a pulsating nightlife, with many clubs and bars.

Early morning exercises along the waterfront promenade of the Bund, Shanghai

Exploring Shanghai

OF SHANGHAI'S THREE MAIN AREAS, the Old City to the south is typically Chinese, with alleys, markets, and temples. It is also the site of the Yu Gardens (Yu Yuan), Shanghai's finest traditional garden. The former concession areas comprise the French Concession to the Old City's west and the British and American Concessions – collectively known as the International Settlement – to its north. Here are the Bund, the river-side promenade lined with grand colonial buildings, including the Peace Hotel and the Shanghai Club, and the city's two main shopping streets, Nanjing Lu and Huaihai Lu. Pudong, Shanghai's newest district, on the Huangpu's east bank, is now an immense business zone, with some of the highest buildings in the world.

LOCATOR MAP

See Map pp174–75

SEE ALSO

- Where to Stay pp559–61
- Where to Eat pp586–8

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Historic Buildings, Sites & Neighborhoods

- The Bund* pp186–7 ①
- French Concession ⑨
- Longhua Cemetery of Martyrs ⑯
- Pudong ⑤
- Shanghai Exhibition Center ⑩
- Site of the First National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party ⑦
- Song Qingling's Former Residence ⑭

Temples & Churches

- Jade Buddha Temple ⑫
- Jing'an Temple ⑪
- Xujiahui Catholic Cathedral ⑮

Parks & Gardens

- Fuxing Park ⑧
- Hongkou Park ⑬
- People's Park & Square ③
- Yu Gardens & Bazaar* pp192–3 ⑥

Museums

- Shanghai Museum* pp190–91 ④

Towns

- Song Jiang ⑱

Shops & Markets

- Nanjing Lu ②

Areas of Natural Beauty

- She Shan ⑰

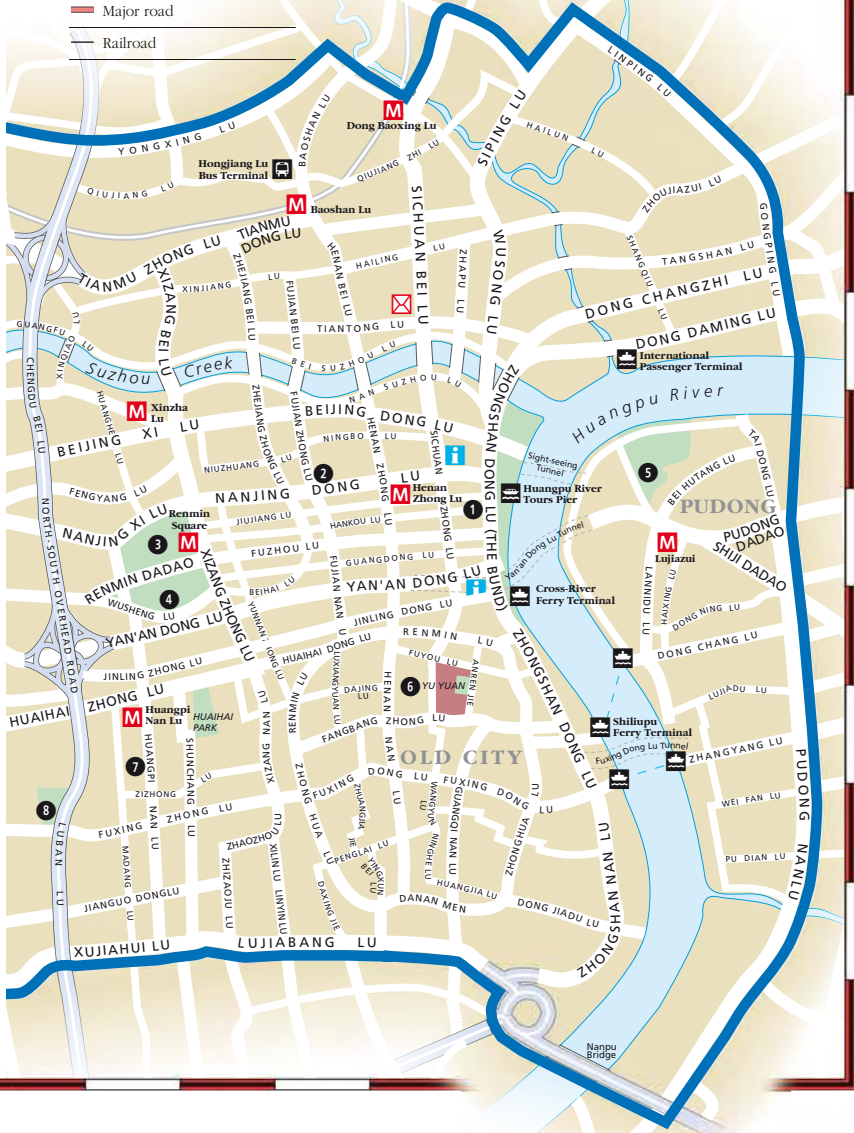

GETTING AROUND

The city metro is the best way of getting around Shanghai. Its network is rapidly expanding, and currently there are three lines open (see p632). Taxis are also convenient, cheap, and plentiful. There are plenty of buses, but these tend to be extremely crowded and slow due to the traffic congestion, especially during the morning and evening rush hours. Each bus has its own schedule, but these are slightly complicated for visitors to follow.

KEY

- Street-by-Street area: see pp192-3
- International airport
- Train station
- Long distance bus station
- Subway station
- Ferry terminal
- Riverboat pier
- Tourist information
- Post office
- National highway
- Major road
- Railroad

The Bund ①

外滩

Lion, symbol of colonial power

SOME PLACES ARE FOREVER associated with a single landmark and in the case of Shanghai it is surely the Bund. Also known as Zhongshan Lu, the Bund was at the heart of colonial Shanghai, flanked on one side by the Huangpu River and on the other by the hotels, banks, offices and clubs that were the grandiose symbols of western commercial power. Most of the old buildings are still in place and a walk along here can easily absorb a couple of pleasant hours.

The Bund, at its peak the third biggest financial center in world

★ Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank

Built in 1921, it was vaunted to be the most beautiful building in Asia. Inside there are some delightful restored murals.

Customs House

The entrance hall is decorated with some handsome marine mosaics.

The bronze lions' paws and head are rubbed for good luck.

Russo-Asiatic Bank Building

Former Bank of Communications

★ River Promenade

On the river side of the Bund is a wide pavement, a wonderful place for watching the river traffic and, in the early morning, locals practising tai ji quan (tai chi).

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ River Promenade
- ★ Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank
- ★ Peace Hotel
- ★ Views of Pudong

★ Peace Hotel

The most distinctive building on the Bund was built in 1930 by the millionaire, Sir Victor Sassoon. Something of a pre-war atmosphere lingers in the form of its Old Jazz Band.

Bank of China

Blending 1920s American and traditional Chinese styles, this impressive block was built by a rival of Sassoon, H.H. Kung.

Former Palace Hotel

The Palace Hotel was built in 1906 and was for a long time one of the best hotels in Shanghai until it became part of the Peace Hotel in 1949.

Chartered Bank Building of India, Australia, and China.

Former Bank of Taiwan

North China Daily News Building

★ Views of Pudong

In the evening the Bund throngs with people enjoying the river breeze and the spectacular lights of Pudong's (see p189) modern skyline.

Chen Yi's Statue

The bronze statue looking down the Bund is not Chairman Mao but Chen Yi, revolutionary commander and first mayor of Shanghai after 1949.

Nanjing Lu ②

南京路

M Henan Zhong Lu (for Nanjing Dong Lu), Shimen Yi Lu (for Nanjing Xi Lu).

RUNNING WEST FROM THE Bund, Nanjing Lu is considered to be Shanghai's foremost shopping street, despite competition from areas such as chic Huaihai Lu in the French Concession. The street is divided in two – Nanjing Dong Lu (East) runs from the Bund to just before People's Park, after which it becomes Nanjing Xi Lu (West), a total length of 6 miles (10 km). The "shopper's paradise" is along Nanjing Dong Lu, where huge department stores vie for space with small specialty shops. Theaters, cinemas, restaurants, beauty salons, and crowds of shoppers complete the picture. Before 1949, all the major stores were located here. One of them, the Sun Department Store, is now the Shanghai No.1 Department Store, which attracts 100,000 customers every day with its exotic window displays. As window shopping is such a popular pastime, the pedestrianized section of Nanjing Dong Lu between People's Park and the Bund,

Statues on Nanjing Lu

The busy, pedestrianized section of Nanjing Lu

Birds for sale at the Fish & Flower Market on Jiangyin Lu with its numerous 1930s European-style buildings, is perpetually busy. Farther west, Nanjing Xi Lu, formerly known as Bubbling Well Road after the well near Jing'an Temple, is more upscale and less crowded. It runs past the Pacific Hotel, with its impressive exterior and fine plasterwork interior, and the rundown Park Hotel, once one of the city's most fashionable hotels, as well as China's tallest building when it was built in 1934. Nanjing Xi Lu continues west past exclusive shopping and residential developments such as the Shanghai Center (see p200), a clutch of designer shops, restaurants, and apartments clustered around the Portman Ritz-Carlton Hotel, opposite the Shanghai Exhibition Center.

People's Park & Square ③

人民广场

Nanjing Xi Lu. M Renmin Park & Renmin Square. ☐ 7am–6pm daily.

OPPPOSITE THE PARK HOTEL lies the former Racecourse, now occupied by the pleasantly landscaped People's Park (Renmin Gong Yuan) in the northern half, and People's Square and Shanghai Museum in the southern section. Most people visit the park to walk, gossip, exercise, or simply watch the world go by. The park is ringed by gleaming new glass and metal skyscrapers. Facing it on its eastern side is Mu'en Tang, the Merciful Baptist Church that was built in 1929 as the American Baptist Church. An inter-denominational survivor of China's many revolutions, it is open to all and foreign nationals are welcome, although the services are only in Chinese. A little out of character with the newer buildings, the Great World Entertainment Center is the wedding-cake construction at the corner of Xizang Zhong Lu and Yan'an Dong Lu. It was built in 1917 and offered everything from a stuffed whale to saucy peep-shows and demonstrations of the latest imported lavatories. It is now trying to recapture its past, and has a hall of mirrors and other fairground attractions, as well as a variety of performances, from local opera to motorbike stunt shows. The entrance fee permits visitors to wander around at will and enjoy everything on offer.

At the northwest corner of People's Square is the new Shanghai Grand Theater (see p200), made almost entirely of glass and topped by a spectacular convex roof. It is definitely worth a visit, for a meal with a view or just to look around, and tours are also available. For a change of pace, visitors can try the Fish & Flower Market situated to the west of the Shanghai Grand Theater. This vibrant street market is patronized by locals and specializes in ornamental fish, flowers, plants, stones, teapots, birds, pet crickets, and other items for daily use.

+ Mu'en Tang

328 Xizang Zhong Lu. ☐ daily. + daily services, see entrance for times.

🎭 Shanghai Grand Theater

☐ 9am–11am & 1pm–4pm daily.

Fish & Flower Market

Jiangyin Lu. ☐ daily.

Shanghai Museum 4

See pp190–91.

Pudong 5

浦东

East bank of Huangpu. M from Renmin Square to Lujiazui. 🚢 Renmin
Square. 🚢 Cross-River Ferry Terminal.

IN THE mid-20th century, Pudong, facing the Bund on the other side of Huangpu, was the city's poorest quarter, a squalid huddle of slums and brothels and also the home of the notorious gangster Du Yuesheng or Big-Eared Du. In 1990, it acquired the status of Special Economic Zone, and

THE OLD RACECOURSE

The Old Racecourse was the center of Shanghai's social life in the early 20th century, and its Race Club was one of the most profitable corporations in China. It also had a swimming pool and a cricket pitch. After the communists came to power in 1949, the course became a symbol of Western decadence, and was turned into a pretty park and a square that was used for political rallies and finally landscaped to accommodate the Shanghai Museum. All that remains is its old grandstand clock on the park's west side.

A view of Shanghai's Old Racecourse before 1949 has since become one of the largest building sites in the world, supposedly festooned with a third of the world's large cranes. The transformation has been remarkable – a forest of skyscrapers has grown out of this run-down backwater as investment poured in. The 1,500-ft (457-m) Oriental Pearl TV Tower offers astounding views across the city from halfway up, and houses the interesting Shanghai History Museum.

Pudong is also the site of the 1,379-ft (421-m) Jinmao Dasha, one of the tallest buildings in China, whose 88th-floor observation deck has views down on the Pearl. Both will be surpassed by the 1,509-ft (460-m) Shanghai Financial Center in 2006.

📺 Oriental Pearl TV Tower

1 Shiji Dadao. ☎ (021) 5879 8888.

☐ 8am–9:30pm daily. **📺

🏛️ Shanghai History Museum

☎ (021) 5879 1888. ☐ 8am–9pm.

The Oriental Pearl TV Tower sitting at the heart of the futuristic skyline of Pudong

Shanghai Museum ④

上海博物馆

Bronze coin
(AD 927-51)

WITH A COLLECTION OF OVER 120,000 pieces, the Shanghai Museum displays some of the best cultural relics from China's neolithic period to the Qing dynasty, a span of over 5,000 years. While the highlights are the bronze ware, ceramics, calligraphy, and painting, it also has excellent displays of jade, furniture, coins, and Chinese seals or "chops." The museum was established in 1952, and the current building opened in 1995 with a design that recalls some of the exhibits and symbolizes "a round heaven and a square earth."

Shanghai Museum, reminiscent of a Shang-dynasty bronze ding pot

Calligraphy

To the Chinese, calligraphy is more than mere communication, it is one of the highest art forms. This cursive script (see p27) was painted by Huai Su (AD 737) in typically wild movements that combine delicate and forceful strokes.

★ Sancai pottery figures

The major technical advance of the Tang dynasty (618-907) in ceramics was the development of sancai (three-color) pottery.

This grave figure is a superb piece of polychrome pottery.

Celadon wares

Celadon's simple beauty and strength made it highly desirable. This example of Longquan Ware from the Southern Song dynasty (1127-1279) elegantly captures the movement of the coiled dragon.

KEY TO FLOORPLAN

Bronzes

Sculpture

Ceramics

Zande Lou Ceramics

Paintings

Calligraphy

Seals

Jade

Furniture

Coins

Ethnic Minorities Gallery

Temporary exhibitions

Non-exhibition space

Second floor

Third floor

Zande Lou ceramics is a privately donated collection of 130 pieces and includes some outstanding Qing imperial items.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

201 Renmin Da Dao, Renmin Square. ☎ (021) 6372 3500.
 M Lines 1 & 2. 🕒 9am–5pm
 Sun–Sat (last entry one hour before closing). 📶 📷 🚻
 📱 📺 📢 📞
 🌐 www.shanghaimuseum.net

Jade Gallery

Sculpture in jade, the quintessential Chinese stone, reached its peak in the Qing dynasty (1644–1911) as exemplified by this exquisite jade Gu (wine vessel).

Ming & Qing furniture gallery

★ Landscape paintings

Chinese painting owes a great deal to Daoist philosophy. Accordingly, Wang Meng's (1308–85) picture Retreat in the Qingbian Mountain tries to capture the powerful, almost animate essence of nature.

Liangtuxuan is a privately donated collection of paintings and calligraphy.

Seal gallery displays examples of virtuoso carving and calligraphy.

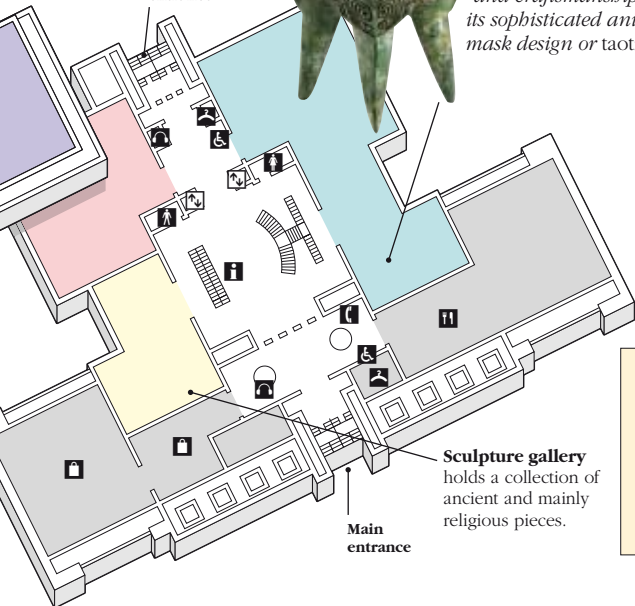

★ Shang bronzes

This Jia (wine vessel), a burial gift from the mid-15th–13th century BC, shows great skill and craftsmanship in its sophisticated animal mask design or taotie.

Back entrance

GALLERY GUIDE

The calligraphy and painting exhibits are changed frequently for their own protection. As well as the permanent collections, the museum often holds displays from other major museums around the world.

Sculpture gallery holds a collection of ancient and mainly religious pieces.

Main entrance

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Sancai pottery figures
- ★ Landscape paintings
- ★ Shang bronzes

Yu Gardens and Bazaar 6

豫园

Chinese lion statue

THE OLD-STYLE BUILDINGS of the Yu Gardens bazaar are not really old, but the fanciful roofs are nevertheless very appealing. The shops here peddle everything from tourist souvenirs to traditional medicines and, despite inflated prices, the area is incredibly popular. It is best to arrive early and go straight to the beautiful and relatively peaceful Ming-dynasty Yu Gardens (Yu Yuan). A dumpling lunch, before the restaurants get too busy, will set you up for a hectic afternoon of shopping and haggling, followed by a cup of tea in the quaint Huxingting Teahouse.

Yu Gardens Bazaar, modern shops in old-fashioned buildings

Restaurants surround the lake – you can see the dumplings being made in the morning.

Yu Gardens Bazaar

Despite being a bit of a tourist trap, there is plenty of fun to be had wandering among the stalls and haggling over prices.

Street Performers

Every now and then a colorful troupe of performers appears bearing young children on top of poles to entertain the thronging crowds.

★ City God Temple

Dating back to the Ming era, the temple once housed the patron god of Shanghai and encompassed an area as large as the bazaar. Now this small restored temple is very popular with tourists.

Shanghai Old Street (Fangbang Lu) and an entrance to the Bazaar

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ City God Temple
- ★ Huxingting Teahouse
- ★ Huge Rockery, Yu Gardens

★ Huxingting Teahouse

This charming building, built in 1784 by cotton merchants, only became a teahouse in the late 19th century. The zig-zag bridge protects the structure, as evil spirits can't turn corners.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

269 Fangbang Zhonglu (Shanghai Old Street), Old City. 6. 6.

(021) 6386 8649. City God

Temple 8:30am-4:30pm daily. Yu Gardens

8:30am-4:45pm daily.

Huxingting Teahouse

8:30am-10pm daily.

★ Huge Rockery

Reputed to be one of the best Ming rockeries, it is surely one of the largest. The rockery recalls the peaks, caves and gorges of southern China.

Garden entrance

Dragon wall

The white walls in the garden are topped by an undulating dragon. Note it only has four claws and not five like an imperial dragon, so as not to incur the emperor's wrath.

Yu Gardens scenic areas

The walls divide the garden into six scenic areas, which makes it feel like a maze and seem larger than it really is. As a result, the garden gets very busy in the afternoon and on weekends.

Entrance, First National Congress of the Chinese Community Party

Site of the First National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party 7

中共一大会议纪念馆

374 Huangpi Nan Lu. M Huangpi Nan Lu. ☐ 9am–4pm. 🗺️

THIS HOUSE in the French Concession was the venue for a historic meeting, where representatives of China's communist cells met to form a national party on July 23, 1921. Officially, there were 12 participants including Mao Zedong, but it is believed that many others also attended. The police discovered the meeting and the delegates were forced to escape to a boat on Lake Nan, in Zhejiang. The house has a reconstruction of the meeting, with the original chairs and teacups used by the delegates. The exhibition hall tells the history of the Chinese Communist Party.

Fuxing Park 8

复兴公园

Fuxing Zhong Lu. M Huangpi Nan Lu. ☐ 5am–5pm daily. 🗺️ Sun Yat Sen Memorial Residence ☎ (021) 6473 0420. ☐ 9am–4:30pm Mon–Sat. 🗺️ Zhou Enlai's Former Residence ☐ 9am–4pm daily. 🗺️

THE FRENCH bought this private garden, located in the French Concession, in 1908. It was known then as the “French Park,” and has elements of a formal Parisian jardin, with meandering paths flanked by cherry trees. It was renamed Fuxing, meaning “revival,” in 1949.

Close by on Xiangshan Lu is the Sun Yat Sen Memorial Residence, a typical Shanghai villa where the leader and his wife, Song Qingling, lived between 1918 and 1924. The interior is just as it was in Sun's time, with many of his personal items such as his gramophone and books. South of the park, 73 Rue Massenet (now Sinan Lu) was the Former Residence of Zhou Enlai (see p250), who lived here when he was head of the city's Communist Party in the 1940s. It is furnished in a spartan style and is another excellent example of a European-style Shanghai villa.

Statue of Sun Yat Sen, Sun Yat Sen Memorial boulevards, shops, and cafés, and its residents were mainly White Russians and Chinese. It had its own electrical system, judiciary, and police force, whose highest ranking officer “Pockmarked Huang,” was the leader of the infamous Green Gang which controlled the opium trade.

Today, the Concession is centered around Huaihai Lu – a vibrant street lined with boutiques, candy stores, salons, and bars – and the stylish Jinjiang Hotel. The hotel's compound includes the Grosvenor Residence, pre-war Shanghai's most exclusive property. The VIP Club, in the hotel's old wing, retains its 1920s architecture. The surrounding streets, especially Julu Lu and Maoming Nanlu, come alive at night with lively bars and clubs (see p201). Another interesting building is the Ruijin Guesthouse at the corner of Fuxing Zhong Lu and Shaanxi Nanlu. This Tudor-style manor is now an inn set in a quiet compound. The Children's Palace at the western end of Yan'an Lu was part of an early-1920s estate, and is now a children's arts center. The tourist office arranges tours to watch its singing and dancing shows.

The European-style villa that was Zhou Enlai's former residence

The Huangpu River

THE HUANGPU RIVER is a mere 68 miles (110 km) in length from its source, Dianshan Lake, to its junction with the Yangzi River, 17 miles (28 km) downstream from Shanghai. As a spectacle, however, it is fascinating and there is much for the eye to take in, from the majestic but elderly waterfront at the Bund, and burgeoning modern metropolis

Cargo ships,
Huangpu River

on Pudong, the bustling docks that line the Huangpu all the way to the wide, windblown mouth of the Yangzi. The boat departs from the wharves on the Bund between Nanjing Lu and Yanyan Lu (see p184–5). The one-hour trip takes visitors as far as the Yangpu Bridge, but there is also the longer three-and-a-half hour trip, all the way to the Yangzi River.

Shanghai Docks ④

The Shanghainese proudly claim that nearly a third of all China's international trade enters via the perennially busy Huangpu river.

Yangpu Bridge ③

Built in 1993, this is one of the world's longest cable-stay bridges – cables are anchored to each tower.

Huangpu Park ②

At the northern tip of the Bund, this park is home to the Monument to the People's Heroes.

The Bund ①

The best way to enjoy the Bund's grandiose skyline is from the boat, which also gives the visitor a view of the city that would have greeted all expatriates on their arrival here before 1949.

The Yangzi River ⑦

The color of the water changes markedly here, as the oily Huangpu meets the muddy and turbulent Yangzi. A lighthouse marks the confluence of the two.

Wusong Fort ⑥

The site of a decisive battle against the British in 1842, it consisted of a crescent-shaped fort with ten imported cannons.

Gongqing Forest Park ⑤

This large and pleasantly landscaped park was reclaimed from marshland and is popular with the Shanghainese on weekends.

0 km 6
0 miles 3

TIPS BOX

Length: 37 miles (60 km).

One-hour trip: 10 miles (16 km).

Boat trips: The boats vary in size and facilities, so make sure you know what you are getting. The more expensive ones do food and even entertainment of sorts.

Times: 9am, 2pm, 7pm Mon–Fri; 11am, 3:30pm, 8pm Sat–Sun. The one-hour trips leave more frequently (times can vary).

Façade of the Soviet-style
Shanghai Exhibition Center

Shanghai Exhibition Center ⑩

上海展览中心

1000 Yan'an Zhong Lu. ☎ (021) 6279 0279. M Shimen Yi Lu. ☑ 9am–4pm daily.

THE ENORMOUS Shanghai Exhibition Center is one of the few reminders of the influence the Soviet Union once had in Shanghai. Built in 1954, it was known as the Palace of Sino-Soviet Friendship, and was designed as a place for exhibiting China's technological and agricultural advances since the founding of the People's Republic in 1949. Ironically, the building stands on the site of the estate of millionaire Silas Hardoon – Shanghai's biggest capitalist in the 1920s. The Center is worth seeing for its grimly florid Soviet-style architecture. It has an impressively ornate entrance, with columns decorated with red stars, and a gilded spire. Today, it is a gigantic mall, filled with shops selling furniture and a variety of souvenirs.

Nearby on Xinle Lu, in the former French Concession, is the old Russian Orthodox Church with its distinctive onion-shaped domes. It served thousands of refugees from the Russian Revolution in 1917. The area around Julu Lu and Changle Lu, nearby, has a number of interesting Art Deco and early 20th-century villas and mansions constructed by Shanghai's wealthy residents.

Jing'an Temple ⑪

静安寺

1686 Nan Jing Xi Lu (near Huashan Lu). M Jing'an Si. ☑ 7:30am–5pm daily. 📷

LOCATED OPPOSITE the attractive Jing'an Park, which contains the old Bubbling Well Cemetery, Jing'an Temple (Temple of Tranquility) is one of the city's most revered places for ancestor worship. Originally founded in the Three Kingdoms Period, its current structure dates to the Ming and Qing dynasties. In the 1930s, it was Shanghai's wealthiest Buddhist temple, headed by the influential abbot Khi Vehdu, who was also a gangster with a harem of concubines and White Russian bodyguards. It is said that his bodyguards went with him everywhere, carrying bulletproof briefcases as shields in the event of an attack. The temple was closed during the Cultural Revolution, but has reopened to become one of the best examples of an active Buddhist shrine in the city. It is a popular place to offer coins and pray for financial success.

Wall detail, Jade
Buddha Temple

Jade Buddha Temple ⑫

玉佛寺

170 Anyuan Lu. ☎ (021) 6266 3668. M Hanzhong Lu. ☑ 8:30am–4:30pm daily. 📷

THE MOST FAMOUS of Shanghai's temples, Jufo Si lies in the northwest part of the city. It was built in 1882 to enshrine two beautiful jade Buddha statues that were brought from Burma by the abbot Wei Ken. The temple was originally located elsewhere, but shifted here in 1918, after a fire damaged the earlier structure. After being closed for almost 30 years, it reopened in 1980, and today has some 100 monks. Built in the southern Song-dynasty style, it has sharply curved eaves and figurines on the roof. Its three main halls are connected by two courts. The first hall is the Heavenly King Hall, where the four Heavenly Kings line the walls. The Grand Hall of Magnificence houses three incarnations of the Buddha, while the Jade Buddha Chamber contains the first jade statue – that of a large reclining Buddha. The finer of the two statues, however, lies upstairs. Carved from a single piece of jade, this jewel-encrusted seated Buddha is exquisite. Visitors should note that photography is forbidden here.

Golden Buddhas in the Jade Buddha Temple

Old Shanghai

UNTIL 1842 SHANGHAI was a minor Chinese river port, worthy of a protective rampart but otherwise undistinguished. In that year the Chinese government capitulated to western demands for trade concessions resulting in a number of ports along China's eastern seaboard, including Shanghai, becoming essentially European outposts. Their key feature was that of extra-territoriality – foreign residents were answerable only to the laws of their own country. Thus the Calendar girls,

1930s

Americans, British, and French had their own “concessions” – exclusive areas within the city with their own police forces and judiciary – a situation that attracted not only entrepreneurs, but refugees, criminals, and revolutionaries. This mix was a potent one and Shanghai's reputation for glamor and excess derives from the politically combustible period between the two world wars. It all came to an end in the 1940s when foreigners gave up their rights in the face of growing Chinese opposition.

The Bund, also known as Zhongshan Lu, the wide thoroughfare running along the Huangpu River. This was where all the major players in Shanghai commerce built their offices and created the distinctively grandiose skyline that still greets the river-going traveler today.

The Great World was a quintessential Shanghai creation, a mixture of freakishness, fashion, sex, and theater under one roof, owned by the gangster Pockmarked Huang.

The Race Course, located in the area of today's People's Park, was an indispensable part of expatriate life, where, just as in the numerous clubs and institutions for non-Chinese, expats were able to socialize as if they were at home.

Opium, trafficked commercially with claims for free-trade by British companies like Jardine Matheson, was the foundation of Shanghai's prosperity and dens dotted the city. When the mercantile veneer was jettisoned, opium became the currency of Shanghai's gangster underworld.

Nanking Road, as it was then known, was, and still is, Shanghai's retail hub. Divided in two parts (the western end then known as Bubbling Well Road), it was home to China's first department stores, where Chinese and expatriates mixed on an equal footing.

Brightly colored boats alongside the lake pier at Hongkou Park (Lu Xun Park)

Hongkou Park 13

虹口公园

Baoshan Lu. M Hongkou. Q daily.

TO THE NORTH of Suzhou Creek and Waibaidu Bridge lies the Japanese section of the former International Settlement, which once had a Zen temple, a Japanese school, and specialist Japanese shops. The area's most interesting spot is Hongkou Park, which is a pleasant place to pass the time and watch the Chinese taking boat rides on the lake, playing chess, practising tai ji quan or simply relaxing. It is also known as Lu Xun Park due to its strong associations with the great Chinese novelist, Lu Xun (1881–1936), who lived nearby. His most famous work is The True Story of Ab Q, which lampooned the Chinese national character. Lu Xun was also an early proponent of the baibua or plain speech movement, which championed the simplification of the Chinese script and the use of spoken Chinese in literature.

Lu Xun's Tomb, where his ashes were interred in 1956 to mark the 20th anniversary of his death, is also in the park. To the right of the park's main entrance lies a Memorial Hall dedicated to the novelist, where visitors can view early editions of his work and his correspondence with various intellectuals including George Bernard

Statue, Lu Xun's Tomb

Shaw. Just south of Hongkou Park is Lu Xun's Former Residence, where the novelist spent the last three years of his life at a house on Shanyin Lu. It is an interesting example of a typical 1930s Japanese-style residence, but is perhaps even more sparsely furnished than other houses of the time. Lu Xun's rattan chairs and writing desk are also on display.

Lu Xun's Former Residence

9 Luxincun, Shanyin Lu.
Q 9am–4pm daily.

Song Qingling's Former Residence 14

宋庆龄故居

1843 Huaihai Zhong Lu. M Hengshan Lu. Q 9–11am & 1pm–4:30pm daily.

AT THE SOUTHWESTERN edge of the city is the fine villa that was the residence of Song Qingling, wife of the revolutionary leader Dr. Sun Yat Sen. All the Song siblings – three sisters and a brother – came to wield a lot of influence in China. Of the three sisters, Song Meiling married Chiang Kai Shek, the head of the Nationalist Republic of China from 1928 to 1949; Ailing married H.H. Kung, the director of the Bank of China, and Song Qingling married Sun Yat Sen. Her brother, known as T.V. Song, became Chiang Kai Shek's finance minister. Song Qingling stayed in China once the communists took over and became an honorary communist heroine. She lived in Shanghai after her husband's death, initially in the house they had shared in the former French Concession (see p194), before moving to this villa. She died in Beijing in 1981.

The house is a charming example of a mid-20th-century Shanghai villa. It has some wonderful wood paneling and lacquerwork. Her limousines are still parked in the garage, and some of her personal items are also displayed.

Song Qingling's Former Residence – a charming early 20th-century villa

Xujiahui Catholic Cathedral 16

徐家汇堂

158 Puxi Lu. ☎ (021) 6438 2595.
 M Xujiahui. 🕒 1pm–5pm Sat, Sun.

THE RED BRICK Gothic Cathedral of St. Ignatius that stands at a southwestern corner of Shanghai has long been associated with foreign nationals. The land originally belonged to a member of the Xu clan, Xu Guangqi (1562–1633), who was converted to Catholicism by Matteo Ricci. Upon his death, Xu left land to the Jesuits for the building of a church, seminary, and observatory. The cathedral, with its 164-ft (50-m) twin towers, was built in 1906. It was partly destroyed during the Cultural Revolution, but was rebuilt, and now holds Sunday services attended by over 2,000 worshippers. The interior is an interesting mix of traditional Catholic decoration and Chinese embellishment. Xu Guangqi is buried nearby in Nandan Park.

Longhua Cemetery of Martyrs 16

龙华烈士陵园

2887 Longhua Lu. M Shanghai Stadium. ☎ (021) 6468 5995. 🚌 Bus 41. 🕒 8:30am–4:30pm daily. 📞 Longhua Si 2853 Longhua Lu. 🕒 7am–5pm daily. 📞

THIS SITE HONORS those who died for the communist cause before the People's Republic was established in 1949. At the center is a Memorial Hall, while many commemorative sculptures dot the park. The cemetery is situated on the site of the Nationalist Party's execution ground, where several hundred communists were put to death by Chiang Kai Shek.

Lying adjacent is Longhua Si and an octagonal pagoda. A temple has existed on this site since AD 687, and a pagoda since AD 238–251. The foundations of the current pagoda, with its upturned eaves, date to

Commemorative statue at the Longhua Cemetery of Martyrs

AD 977, while the temple buildings were built during the late Qing era. The temple has several halls and is very active. The surrounding area is pretty in spring, when the peach trees are in bloom.

She Shan 17

佘山

22 miles (35 km) SW of Shanghai.
 📞 from Wenhua Guangchang bus stop or Xi Qu bus station in Shanghai.

SHE HILL OR SHE SHAN is a mere 328-ft (100-m) high, and is surmounted by a grand, red-brick Catholic church, Our Lady of China. In the 1850s, European missionaries built a small chapel here. Later, a bishop took refuge in the area and vowed to build a church. The basilica was built between

Exterior of the grand She Shan church, Our Lady of China

1925–35. Services, often in Latin, take place on Christian holidays and particularly in May, when pilgrims stream here in their hundreds. The impressive cathedral is worth a closer look. The route to the top represents the Via Dolorosa (The Way of Suffering), the road that Christ took to his crucifixion. It is a pleasant walk past bamboo groves, but there is a cable car that goes to the summit. The hill also has an ancient observatory that houses an ingenious earthquake-monitoring device of a jar with dragon heads around the outside and a pendulum inside. Each dragon has a steel ball in its mouth. When an earthquake occurred, the pendulum would swing, knock a dragon, causing its mouth to open and a ball to drop out and thereby point out the quake's direction.

Song Jiang 18

松江

25 miles (40 km) SW of Shanghai. 📞 from Xi Qu bus station in Shanghai.

SITUATED ON THE Shanghai-Hangzhou railway line, Song Jiang is a small county town with a handful of sights. These include a Song-dynasty square pagoda, and close by, a 13-ft (4-m) high and 20-ft (6-m) long Ming screen wall, decorated with carvings of legendary beasts that represent human failings. West of Song Jiang is an old mosque, part of which dates to the Yuan dynasty and is said to be one of the oldest Islamic buildings in China. It is still a place of worship.

Shopping & Entertainment in Shanghai

Mao Memorabilia,
Pongtai Lu Market

SHANGHAI HAS ALWAYS been China's premier shopping destination. Before World War II, the city's glamorous foreign community demanded the finest goods, and Shanghai's reputation for novelty and quality continues today, with stores that cater to all tastes and budgets. This is also a culturally vibrant city, with regular performances of opera, theater, acrobatics, Western classical music, and jazz. The city's nightlife is buzzing with plenty of fashionable bars and restaurants, as well as cinemas and nightclubs.

SHOPS & MARKETS

SHANGHAI'S BEST-KNOWN shopping street is Nanjing Lu, which is lined with stores (see p188). The Friendship Store is worth visiting for Chinese wares, while the most interesting local market is just off Nanjing Lu, on Jianguyin Lu. Huaihai Lu in the former French Concession is the other well-known street, packed with upscale fashion boutiques and stores.

CLOTHES & TEXTILES

ALL THE MAJOR brand names from Europe, the US, and Japan are represented here, along with some Hong Kong chain stores, though the latter often don't have sizes that fit foreign visitors. The main streets are Nanjing Lu, Shaanxi Nan Lu, Huaihai Lu, and Maoming Lu. For cheap clothing, visit the Xiangyang Lu Clothes Market that opens daily south of Huaihai Lu. For reasonably priced silk, try the No. 1 Department Store (see p188), but the best quality is sold at stores such as Isetan. Another good bet is the Friendship Store. The city has also revived its tradition of fine tailoring, and W.W. Chan & Sons Tailor Ltd is quality at good prices.

ANTIQUES

ALTHOUGH SHANGHAI offers a range of antiques, there are two potential hazards in buying them. First, the market is flooded with fakes which visitors might mistake for the real thing, and second, it is illegal to export antiques that do not bear a government-approved seal. Bargains are hard to come by and the best quality items are not likely to be much cheaper than at home. The main markets are near the Old City on Dongtai Lu, Fuyou Lu (open Sunday only), and Fangbang Lu. Fangbang Lu's (see p192) Hubao Building Basement Market is the largest indoor antique market in Shanghai. Guangdong Lu has the state-run Shanghai Antique & Curio Shop, while Hongkou district's Duolun Lu has a row of restored shops selling antiques, books, and art.

ARTS & CRAFTS

ALL TRADITIONAL Chinese arts and crafts are widely available in Shanghai. The Friendship Store is a good, if pricey, place to go for a general selection, while the Yu Gardens Bazaar is great for items such as tea, teapots, and teaware. For porcelain, the best buys are the fine reproductions of classical porcelain, available at the Shanghai Museum, which although expensive, are far better than anything else in the market. Handicrafts made by China's ethnic minorities such as Tibetans, as well as by people of neighboring countries such as Nepal, are available at specialist shops on Nanjing Lu. Jewelry shops abound all over the city, and jade, although available, is difficult to classify. Cultured pearls however, are a safer bet, and are available in stores such as Shanghai Pearl City. For Chinese art, there are several galleries on Maoming Lu and on Nanjing Lu such as Duoyun Xuan and Room With a View.

ENTERTAINMENT GUIDES & TICKETS

THERE ARE A number of English language publications, such as the monthly that's Shanghai, which carry details of current events, as well as restaurant reviews. Mainstream events are listed in local Chinese newspapers. Tickets can be arranged through the tourist office, directly at the venue or even through your hotel. Booking in advance, wherever possible, is recommended.

PERFORMING ARTS & MUSIC

SHANGHAI CAN BOAST a wide variety of performing arts. There are several international-standard venues such as the Shanghai Grand Theater (see p188) that stage national and international opera performances, Western classical music, dance, and theater. Another very popular cultural venue is the Shanghai Center (see p188), which also puts on classical Western music and opera, as well as nightly performances of the city's most famous acrobatic troupe. Traditional Chinese opera can be seen at the Tianchan Yifu Theater and occasionally at the old Lyceum Theater (Lan Xin), where some of the famous names of British music hall played before World War II. The Majestic Theater also has a programme of regular performances of ballet and local opera, while modern Chinese theater is performed at the Shanghai Dramatic Arts Center.

There are also concerts every Sunday evening at the Shanghai Music Conservatory Auditorium. Jazz, which is most famously available at the Peace Hotel Jazz Bar, can also be heard at the Cotton Club.

CINEMA

A PART FROM Chinese and Hong Kong films, films from Europe and the US are also screened in cinemas and bars. Halls such as UME International Cineplex, Shanghai Film Art Center, and Studio City show foreign films (often censored), either in their original language with Chinese subtitles or dubbed into Chinese with English subtitles.

BARS & NIGHTCLUBS

SHANGHAI'S NIGHTLIFE is lively, as befits this former "Paradise for Adventurers". Bars come and go, and what's

"in" one month may close down the next. Bars tend towards the avant-garde, and are heavily influenced by what is fashionable in Tokyo, New York, and London. Prices for drinks can be high, and many bars have dancing, live music, film nights, and comedy spots. The main streets are around Huaihai Lu, especially Maoming Lu and Julu Lu, with the beautiful Face, and hip places such as Buddha Bar, Judy's Too, and Pegasus. The House of Blues & Jazz has live music, while Goodfellas attracts a young crowd. Close by is the smart California Club in Fuxing Park. To the west, Hengshan Lu's popular Bourbon Street offers a live band and dancing. Just north of Nanjing Xi Lu, Tongren Lu has the American-style bar, Malone's American Café. The upscale Xintiandi district has a good selection of pubs including the stylish Le Club at La Maison. The Peace Hotel Jazz Bar at the corner of Nanjing Dong Lu on the Bund is an old Shanghai classic, while the Glamour Bar at the corner of Guangdong Lu is decorated like a 1930s Hollywood film set. Current reviews, including details of which clubs have DJs from London and New York, are to be found in that's Shanghai.

DIRECTORY

CLOTHES & TEXTILES

Friendship Store
68 Jinling Dong Lu.
☎ (021) 6337 3555.

Isetan
527 Huaihai Zhong Lu.
☎ (021) 5306 1111.

Number 1 Department Store
830 Nanjing Dong Lu.
☎ (021) 6322 3344.

W. W. Chan & Sons Tailor Ltd.
129-A02 Maoming Nan Lu.
☎ (021) 5404 1469.

Xiangyang Lu Clothes Market
☐ daily.

ANTIQUES

Shanghai Antique & Curio Shop
218-226 Guangdong Lu.
☎ (021) 6321 4697.

ARTS & CRAFTS

Duoyun Xuan
422 Nanjing Dong Lu.
☎ (021) 6351 0060.

Room With a View
12/F, 479 Nanjing Dong Lu.

☎ (021) 6352 0256.
Shanghai Museum
201 Renmin Dadao.
☎ (021) 6372 3500.

Shanghai Pearl City
Shanghai Travelling Gods Bldg, 2/F 558 Nanjing Dong Lu.
☎ (021) 6322 3911.

PERFORMING ARTS & MUSIC

Cotton Club
8 Fuxing Xi Lu.
☎ (021) 6437 7110.

Lyceum Theater
57 Maoming Nan Lu.
☎ (021) 6217 8530.

Majestic Theater
66 Jiang Ning Lu.
☎ (021) 6217 4409.

Peace Hotel Jazz Bar
20 Nanjing Dong Lu.
☎ (021) 6321 6888.

Shanghai Center
1376 Nanjing Xi Lu.
☎ (021) 6279 8600.

Shanghai Dramatic Arts Center
288 An Fu Lu.
☎ (021) 6473 4567.

Shanghai Grand Theater
300 Renmin Dadao.

☎ (021) 6386 8686.
Shanghai Music Conservatory Auditorium
20 Fen Yang Lu.
☎ (021) 6437 0137.

Tianchan Yifu Theater
701 Fuzhou Lu.
☎ (021) 6351 4668.
CINEMAS

Shanghai Film Art Center
172 Xinhua Lu.
☎ (021) 6280 8995.

Studio City
10/F, 1038 Nanjing Xi Lu.
☎ (021) 6218 7109.

UME International Cineplex
4/F No. 6,
Lane 123, Xingye Lu.
☎ (021) 6373 3333.

BARS & NIGHTCLUBS

Bourbon Street
191 Hengshan Lu.
☎ (021) 6473 7911.

Buddha Bar
172 Maoming Nan Lu,
The French Concession.
☎ (021) 6415 2688.

California Club
2a Gaolan Lu,
Fuxing Park.
☎ (021) 5383 2328.

The Door
3/F 1468 Honggiao Lu.
☎ (021) 6295 3737.

Face
Ruijin Guesthouse,
118 Ruijin Er Lu.
☎ (021) 6466 4328.

Glamour Bar
at M on the Bund,
7/F, 20 Guangdong Lu.
☎ (021) 6350 9988.

Goodfellas
907 Julu Lu.
☎ (021) 6467 0775.

House of Blues & Jazz
158 Maoming Nan Lu.
☎ (021) 6437 5280.

Judy's Too
176 Maoming Nan Lu.
☎ (021) 6473 1417.

Le Club at La Maison
North Block, House 23,
Xintiandi.
☎ (021) 6326 0855.

Malone's
255 Tongren Lu.
☎ (021) 6247 2400.

Pegasus
98 Huaihai Zhong Lu.
☎ (021) 5385 8187.

Red
284 An Fu Lu.
☎ (021) 5403 7297.

JIANGSU & ANHUI

THE PROVINCES OF Jiangsu and Anhui lie to the north and west of Shanghai respectively. Jiangsu, one of China's most fertile and populated areas, is largely rural. Its southern region is dominated by the Yangzi River, along which lie the major cities including Nanjing, the provincial capital, with a profusion of historic sights, and the cities of Suzhou and Yangzhou, known for their gardens, canals, and silk production. The province is developing fast but still retains its charm, especially in the small towns where traditional architecture can be seen. Anhui's main sights lie in the south, where vast spreads of paddy fields are watered by the Huai River.

The area south of the Yangzi River is dominated by mountain ranges offering spectacular scenery. Huang Shan, the Yellow Mountain, is Anhui's most popular scenic area, while the Buddhist mountain, Jiu Hua Shan, is more serene. The towns of Shexian and Yixian in the southeast are renowned for their traditional old houses with fine wooden carvings.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

Bozhou 11
Changzhou 7
Hefei 12
Nanjing 10
Shexian 16
Suzhou 1
Tongli 2
Tunxi 15
Wuhu 13
Wuxi 4

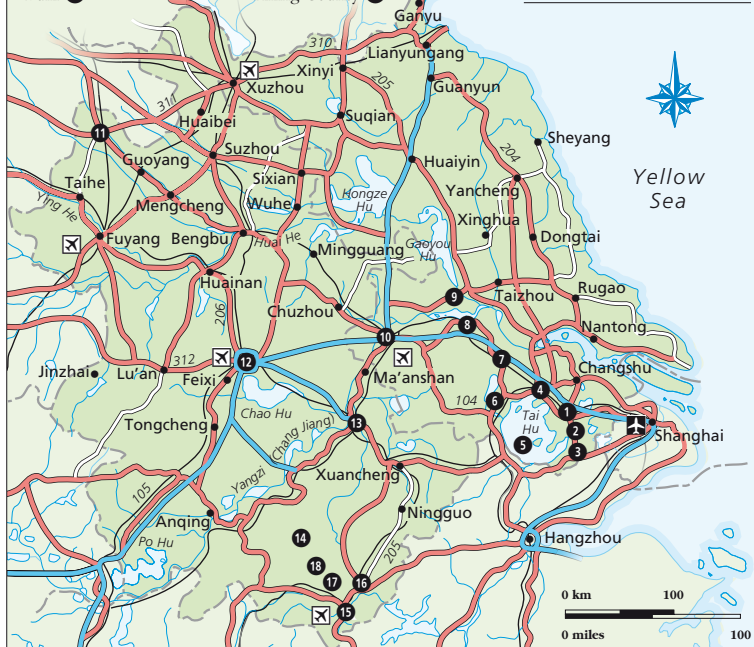

Yangzhou 9
Yixian 17
Zhenjiang 8
Zhouzhuang 3

Lakes, Reserves, & Areas of Natural Beauty

Huang Shan pp236-7 18
Jiu Hua Shan 14
Tai Hu 5
Yixing County 6

KEY

- International airport
- Domestic airport
- National highway
- Major road
- Minor road
- Railroad
- Provincial border

Suzhou ①

苏州

Milefo Buddha at the base of Beisi Ta

A NETWORK OF CANALS, bridges, and canal-side housing characterizes the city of Suzhou. Its history dates back to the 6th century BC, when the first canals were built to control the area's low water table. The construction of the Grand Canal (see p217), 1,000 years later, brought prosperity as silk, the city's prized commodity, could be exported northwards. During the Ming dynasty, Suzhou flourished as a place of refinement, drawing an influx of scholars and merchants, who built themselves numerous elegant gardens. The city has plenty of sights, and is dissected by broad, busy roads laid out in a grid.

Beisi Ta

1918 Renmin Lu. ☎ (0512) 6753 1197. ☐ daily. 📷

The northern end of Renmin Lu is dominated by the Beisi Ta (North Pagoda), a remnant of an earlier temple complex, which has been rebuilt. The pagoda's main structure dates from the Song dynasty, but its foundations supposedly date to the Three Kingdoms era (AD 220–265). Towering 249 ft (76 m) high, it is octagonal in shape, and has sharply upturned eaves. Visitors can climb right to the top, from where there are good views of the city, including Xuanmiao Guan and the Ruiguang Pagoda (see pp212–13).

The octagonal Beisi Ta

Suzhou Museum

204 Dongbei Jie. ☎ (0512) 6754 1534. ☐ daily. 📷

The municipal museum is housed in the villa which was formerly part of the adjoining Humble Administrator's Garden. The villa was occupied by Li Xiucheng, one of the leaders of the Taiping Heavenly Kingdom Rebellion (see p422) in 1860. This rather dry museum has no English captions, and concentrates on Suzhou's association with canal construction and silk production. Some of the exhibits, especially the early maps, are of interest, but are difficult to properly appreciate without captions.

Suzhou Silk Museum

2001 Renmin Lu. ☎ (0512) 6753 6538. ☐ 9am–5pm daily. 📷

The Suzhou Silk Museum is a pleasure to visit, mainly because its exhibits are well-documented with English captions. It traces the history of silk production (see pp208–9) and its use from its beginnings in about 4000 BC to the present day. Exhibits include old looms with demonstrations of their workings, samples of ancient silk patterns, and a section explaining the art of sericulture. The museum's most interesting exhibit is its room full of live silk worms, eating mulberry leaves and spinning cocoons.

Humble Administrator's Garden

See pp206–7.

Shizi Lin

23 Yuanlin Lu. ☐ daily. 📷

The Lion Grove Garden is considered by many the finest in Suzhou. However, visitors unfamiliar with the subtleties of Chinese garden design may find it rather bleak, as rocks are its main feature. Ornamental rocks were a crucial element of classical gardens, and symbolized either the earth or China's sacred mountains. Dating to 1342, the garden was originally built as part of a temple. The large pool is spanned by a zigzag bridge and buildings with unusually fine latticework, while part of the rockery forms a labyrinth.

Ou Yuan

Cang Jie. ☐ 7:30am–5pm daily. 📷

The Ou Yuan (Double Garden) is not as busy as many of the city's other classical gardens, and is a pleasure to visit. It takes its name from its two garden areas, separated by buildings and corridors. A relaxing place, Ou Yuan has rockeries, a pool, and a fine, open pavilion at its center that is surrounded by several tea-houses. It is situated in a charming locality filled with some of the most attractive houses, canals, and bridges in the city.

The charming Ou Yuan Garden

Mural in the Hall of Literary Gods, Xuanmiao Guan

Museum of Opera & Theater

14 Zhongzhangjia Xiang. ☎ (0512) 6727 3334. 🕒 daily. 🚶
Housed in a beautiful Ming dynasty theater of latticed wood, the Museum of Opera and Theater (Xiqu Bowuguan) is a fascinating and highly visual museum. Its display halls are filled with examples of old musical instruments, delicate hand-copied books of scores and lyrics, masks, and costumes. It also exhibits other paraphernalia including a life-size orchestra and vivid photographs of dramatists and actors. Traditional Suzhou Opera, known as kun ju, is renowned as the oldest form of Chinese opera, with a history of about 5,000 years.

The museum is the venue for occasional performances, while the adjacent teahouse stages daily shows of kun-style opera and music.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

32 miles (50 km) NW of Shanghai. 🏠 5,750,000.

🚉 Suzhou Train Station. 🚌 Beimen Station, Nanmen Station, Wu Xianshi Station. 🚢 ferries to Hangzhou. 🗺️ tours of Grand Canal. 📞 251 Ganjiang Xi Lu (0512) 6515 1369.

Xuanmiao Guan

Guanqian Jie. ☎ (0512) 6777 5479.

🕒 8:30am-4:30pm daily. 🚶

The Daoist Temple of Mystery was founded during the Jin dynasty but like many Chinese temples, has been rebuilt many times. The Hall of the Three Pure Worshipers dates to the Song dynasty, and is the largest ancient Daoist hall in China. The intricate structure of the roof in particular is worth scrutiny. Located in Suzhou's commercial center, the temple was associated with popular street entertainment, and although the musicians and jugglers have gone, it retains a casual atmosphere.

SUZHOU CITY CENTER

- Beisi Ta ①
- Canglang Ting ⑬
- Confucius Temple ⑮
- Humble Administrator's Garden ④
- Museum of Opera & Theater ⑦
- Ou Yuan ⑥
- Pan Men ⑭
- Shizi Lin ⑤
- Shuang Ta ⑨
- Silk Embroidery Research Institute ⑪
- Suzhou Museum ③
- Suzhou Silk Museum ②
- Wangshi Yuan ⑫
- Xuanmiao Guan ⑧
- Yi Yuan ⑩

0 meters 800
0 yards 800

KEY

- 🚉 Train station
- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 🚢 Ferry terminal
- 🚤 Riverboat pier
- 📍 Tourist information
- ✉ Post office

Humble Administrator's Garden

拙政园

Tai Hu rock display

SUZHOU'S LARGEST GARDEN, Zhuozheng Yuan, the Humble Administrator's Garden is also considered the city's finest. It was established in the 16th century by a retired magistrate, Wang Xian Chen, and developed over the years as subsequent owners made changes according to the fashion of the day. A 16th-century painting shows that originally the garden was less decorative than it is now. The garden is separated into three principal parts, east, central, and west. The eastern section has colorful flowers but is of less interest than the other two. There is also a museum that explains the history and philosophy of Chinese gardens.

Covered walkway – a way to enjoy the garden even in the hot sun

★ Mandarin Duck Hall
Split into two equal rooms, this arrangement allowed visitors to enjoy the cooler north-facing chamber in summer, and the warmer south-facing one in winter.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Fragrant Isle
- ★ Mandarin Duck Hall
- ★ Hall of Distant Fragrance

★ Fragrant Isle

This pavilion and terrace is supposed to resemble the deck and cabin of a boat. As it projects out over the water, it gives excellent views of the garden from all sides.

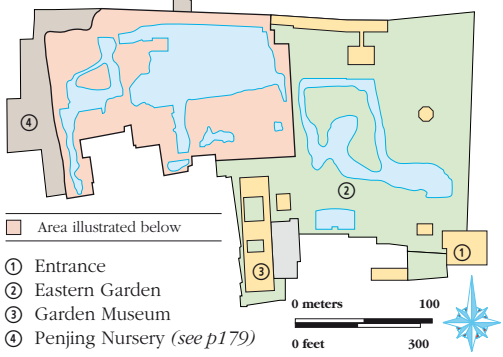

Western section of the garden

Wavy Corridor rises up and down over the water as if going over waves.

The central part of the garden imitates the scenery of China south of the lower Yangzi.

THE HUMBLE ADMINISTRATOR'S GARDEN

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

178 Dongbei Jie, Suzhou City.

☎ (0512) 6751 0286. 🚗

🕒 7:30am-5:30pm daily (last admission 5pm). 🏛️ includes the Garden Museum. 📷 📱

🌐 www.zhuzhengyuan.com.cn

Orange Pavilion

Artificial mountains were an important element in Chinese gardens and were ideal for contemplation.

Secluded Pavilion of Firmiana Simplex and Bamboo

The most famous view of the garden, the "borrowed view" (see p179) of Beisi Ta, the Northern Pagoda reflected in the water, is visible from here.

★ Hall of Distant Fragrance

The main hall of the garden, it is named after the perfume of the large lotus pond nearby that delicately wafts in.

The History of Chinese Silk

Statue of a silkwormer,
Silk Museum

ACCORDING TO LEGEND it was the Empress Xi Ling who, in 2640 BC, encouraged silkworm breeding on a large scale. Trading vast quantities of the material around the world, China profited massively from the industry. It remained a Chinese monopoly for the next 3,000 years or so until refugees smuggled the secret to Korea and Japan. Another story tells that a Chinese princess who married the Prince of Khotan secretly brought silkworms with her as a gift for her husband. The western world, which knew China as Seres, or Land of Silk, learnt the secret of silk production via two monks, who hid silkworms in their bamboo staffs.

Silk burial offering dating from c.200 BC

IMPERIAL GIFT

Silk was originally reserved for use by the imperial household, an example of which is this gorgeous robe embroidered with the imperial symbol of the five-clawed dragon. The imperial yellow symbolizes the earth.

Silk was traded (see pp464–5) extensively as an important source of income and indeed was often used as a form of payment of taxes or for payment of salaries.

Justinian was the Byzantine emperor who stole the secret of silk in AD 600. Silk had for long been fashionable in the Roman Empire but they had no idea how it was made, even thinking that it grew on trees.

This traditional pattern suggests waves and mountains and therefore the boundless nature of the Chinese empire.

Women produced silk in their own home – and it took up a large part of the day for six months of the year. The state also had many workshops producing and weaving silk. By the Tang dynasty all classes of society in China were allowed to wear silk.

Silk embroidery became an important art and the women of distinguished families could make a considerable fortune by skilful embroidery.

MEANING OF SYMBOLS

Axe is one of the twelve symbols of sovereignty that were reserved for the emperor. The axe stands for the power to punish.

Bat is not only for emperors but is a lucky symbol for everyone. The Chinese word for bat (fu) also sounds like good luck.

Double chi is another of the twelve imperial symbols that represents the emperor's power to judge his subjects.

THE PRODUCTION OF SILK

Thousands of years of intensive breeding have rendered the silk moth, Bombyx mori, a blind, flightless, egg-laying machine whose larvae hold the secret of silk. The genius of the Chinese lay in the discovery of the potential of its ancestor, a wild, mulberry-eating moth unique to China.

Farming silkworms: the eggs are first kept at 65° F (18° C) rising to 77° F (25° C), at which point they hatch. The silkworms (actually caterpillars) are now kept at a constant temperature and fed mulberry leaves at 30-minute intervals day and night, until fattened they are ready to enter the cocoon stage.

Silken saliva: the silkworms' saliva glands secrete a clear liquid, that solidifies into silk threads as it dries, and a gum that sticks these together.

Cocoons: when they are ready to pupate, with a figure-of-eight motion, they spin their sticky secretion into cocoons.

Making silk: the cocoons are steamed to kill the pupae and soaked to soften the sticky gum and allow the silk strands to be separated. Several strands are woven to make one silk thread.

Chinoiserie was popular in Europe and America at various times from the 17th century onwards. Chinese factories created a range of Chinese-style designs solely for export.

Silk has special qualities in that it retains warmth, and yet is lightweight and cool and can therefore be worn in comfort both in winter and summer.

China's silk industry is still strong today although a lot of the "silk" that is on display in cheap markets is actually rayon.

The octagonal Song dynasty twin pagodas, Shuang Ta

📌 Shuang Ta

Dinghui Si Xiang. 🕒 daily. 📷
 Once part of a temple, these 98-ft (30-m) high twin pagodas date to the early Song era. According to a recently discovered inscription, they were first built in AD 982 by the students Wang Wenhan and his brother in honor of their teacher, who helped them pass the imperial civil service exams. Twin pagodas are commonly found in India but are a rarer feature of Chinese temples, as pagodas were largely built as single edifices.

📌 Yi Yuan

343 Renmin Lu. 🕒 7:30am-midnight daily. 📷
 The Garden of Happiness is one of Suzhou's newer gardens, dating from the late Qing dynasty. It was built by a government official who utilized rocks and landscape designs from other abandoned gardens. The garden appears to have originally covered a larger area; today its central feature is a pool encircled by rockeries and spanned by a zigzag bridge. The best viewpoint is from the Fragrant Lotus Pavilion, while another pavilion that juts into the pool is known for catching cooling breezes. Look out for the calligraphy by famous scholars and poets.

📌 Silk Embroidery Research Institute

280 Jingde Lu. 🕒 daily. 📷
 Housed in the Huan Xiu Shan Zhuang Garden (Surrounded by Majestic Mountains), this institute creates exquisitely fine silk embroidery, work that is mainly done by women. In order to produce the painting-like effect of their designs, the women sometimes work with silk strands that are so fine, they are almost invisible. They specialize in double-sided embroidery – for example, a cat with green eyes on one side and blue on the other.

📌 Wangshi Yuan

Kuojia Xiang. 🕒 (0512) 6520 3514.
 🕒 7:30am-5pm daily. 📷
 It is said that the Master of the Nets Garden was named after one of its owners – a retired official who wished to become an accomplished fisherman. Dating to 1140, it was completely remodeled in 1770 and for many people, is the finest of all Suzhou's gardens. Although exceptionally small, it succeeds, with great subtlety, in introducing every element considered crucial to the classical garden (see pp178-9). It includes a central lake, discreet connecting corridors, pavilions with miniature courtyards, screens, delicate latticework, and above all, points which "frame a view", as if looking at a perfectly balanced photograph. The best known building is the Pavilion for Watching the Moon, from where the moon can be viewed in a mirror, in the water, and in the sky. Regular evening performances of Chinese opera, including local kun ju, take place here.

📌 Canglang Ting

3 Canglang Ting Jie, Renmin Lu.
 🕒 (0512) 6519 4375. 🕒 daily. 📷
 The Dark Blue Wave Pavilion Garden – whose name is suggestive of a relaxed and pragmatic approach to life – is perhaps Suzhou's oldest garden, first laid out in 1044 by a scholar, Su Zimei, on the site of an earlier villa. His successor, a general in the imperial army, enlarged it in the 12th century, and it was rebuilt in the 17th century. It is known for its technique of "borrowing a view", allowing the scenery beyond the garden's confines to play a role in its design. Here, it is achieved by lowering walls

The Pavilion for Watching the Moon, Wangshi Yuan

Gateway to the Confucian Temple

on the north side of some of the pavilions, allowing views across water; elsewhere the southwest hills can be seen. The central feature is a mound that is meant to resemble a wooded hill. Gardens were ideal places for contemplation and writing poetry, clearly visible in the engravings of verses and poems dotting Canglang Ting.

📍 Liu Yuan & Xi Yuan

Liu Yuan 338 Liuyuan Lu. ☎ (0512) 6533 7903. 🕒 7:45am–4:30pm daily.

📍 Xi Yuan Xiyuan Lu. ☎ (0512) 6533 4126. 🕒 5:30am–7pm daily. 📷

Originally a pair, these two gardens lie near each other to the west of the old moated area. The Liu Yuan (Garden for Lingerin in), was restored in 1953, and its four scenic areas are connected by a long corridor. The Xi Yuan (West Garden) once belonged to a devout Buddhist, and is more temple than garden. The Jiechang Temple, with its tiled roof and red beams is a fine example of southern style architecture. Adjoining it is the Hall of Five Hundred Louhan.

📍 Pan Men Scenic Area

See pp212–13.

📍 Confucian Temple

Renmin Lu. 🕒 daily. 📷

The original Song dynasty temple was rebuilt in 1864 after it was destroyed in the Taiping Rebellion (see p422). Its main hall, dating from the Ming dynasty, has several stone carvings including China's oldest surviving city map, depicting Suzhou, or Pingjiang as it was known in 1229. Also on display is a star chart dating from 1247 that maps the positions of stars and celestial bodies in the heavens. It is one of the earliest surviving maps of its kind.

📍 Tiger Hill

Huqiu Lu. ☎ (0512) 6723 2305.

🕒 7:30am–5pm daily. 📷

In the city's northwest is the popular Tiger Hill (Huqiu Shan), the burial place of He Lu, the King of Wu and founder of Suzhou. His spirit is said to be guarded by a white tiger who appeared three days after his death and refused to leave.

The main attraction is the Song-dynasty leaning pagoda (Yunyan Ta or Cloud Rock Pagoda), built in brick, which leans more than 7-ft (2-m) from the perpendicular at its highest point. Some 10th-century Buddhist sutras and a record of the year that it was constructed (959–961) were discovered during one of the attempts to prevent it from falling. The park is quite large, with pools and flowerbeds filled with blooms in spring and early summer. One of the many boulders is split in two, allegedly the result of He Lu's swordsmanship. He is supposedly buried nearby along with 3,000 swords.

📍 Hanshan Si

24 Hanshansi Long. ☎ (0512) 6723 2891. 🕒 7:30am–5pm daily. 📷

First constructed in the Liang dynasty, the Cold Mountain Temple was named after a Tang-dynasty poet-monk. A stone rendition of him and his fellow monk, Shi De, is to be seen here. The temple was rebuilt in the 19th century, after it was destroyed during the Taiping Rebellion. Located close to the Grand Canal, it was immortalized by the Tang-dynasty poet Zhang Ji, who arrived here by boat and anchored nearby.

His poem "Anchored at Night by the Maple Bridge" is inscribed on a stone stele, and contains the lines that made Hanshan Si famous: "Beyond Suzhou lies Hanshan Temple; at midnight the clang of the bell reaches the traveler's boat." The bell alluded to here was subsequently lost, and the temple's current bell was presented by Japan in 1905. Nearby, a beautiful arched bridge offers views along the Grand Canal.

Ceremonial urn, Tiger Hill

Incense burners in the grounds of Hanshan Si

Pan Men Scenic Area

盘门

Stone Buddha, Ruigang Pagoda

SET IN THE southwest corner of Suzhou, this once overlooked area has been extensively restored – gone are the pretty canalside shacks – but it still contains some of the city's most interesting historical sights. Pan Men is a unique fortified gate that once controlled access to the city by both land and water. It is said to date back nearly 700 years, although most of the present construction is much more recent. Other highlights include the charming Wu Men Bridge and the views of the city and canals from the Ruigang Pagoda.

★ Pan Men

This gate and attached section of wall (dating back to 1351) are all that remains of the city's ancient fortifications. It is the only land and water gate in China.

Wu Zixu's
Memorial
Temple

Hall of Attractive Scenery

This three-story pavilion houses a tranquil tea room with views to the platform of the Western Stage in front.

Doubledoored water gate

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Wu Men Bridge
- ★ Pan Men
- ★ Ruigang Pagoda

★ Wu Men Bridge

This graceful bridge spanning the Grand Canal is the tallest in Suzhou and its design dates back to the Song dynasty, although it has since been rebuilt a few times. It has steps built into it and a lovely view from the top.

View from Ruigang Pagoda

After a climb up narrow stairs, looking down into the heart of Suzhou itself reveals a city dotted with large pockets of green – the beautiful gardens that have made the city so famous.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

2 Dong Da Lu, SW corner of the city. 🚗 🚝 from the train station. 🕒 8am–5pm daily. 🎫 for scenic area (inc. Pan Men and Wu Men Bridge), separate fee for Ruigang Pagoda. 📷 📱 📶

Entrance Gate

This is the main entrance to the park. Pay here for access to the park and also a separate fee to climb the pagoda.

Ornamental pailou or gate

300-ft (90-m) section of city wall

★ Ruigang Pagoda

This seven-story, 140-ft (43-m) high pagoda dates back to the Song dynasty. It is constructed of brick with wooden platforms, and has simple Buddhist carvings at its base.

Hall of Four Auspicious Merits

The name of this hall is inspired by Buddhist teachings. At each side of the hall at the end of covered walkways are smaller pavilions, one containing a drum and the other a bell.

Houses fronting canals in Zhouzhuang's old town

Tongli ②

同里

16 miles (25 km) SE of Suzhou.

¥ 45,000. 🚗

A PRETTY LITTLE water town typical of the region, Tongli gives visitors a good idea of what Suzhou must have been like in its heyday. All its houses open out on to a network of canals that are spanned by dozens of stone bridges and are busy with transportation and trading boats. Some of its buildings are open to the public, such as Jiayin Hall, the former home of Liu Yazhi, an early 20th-century actor renowned for his rather bizarre collection of gauze caps. The other interesting sight is Tuisi Yuan, a classical garden dating from the late Qing period.

🌿 Tuisi Yuan

🕒 7:45am–5pm daily. 🚗

Sightseeing boats on one of Tongli's numerous canals

Zhouzhuang ③

周庄

12 miles (20 km) W of Shanghai.

¥ 32,000. 🚗 🚗 Shanghai, Suzhou.

🚗 to Tongli. Old Town tickets from Quangong Lu. ☎ (0512) 6721 1655.

A SMALL TOWN ON the Jinghang Canal, which links Suzhou and Shanghai, Zhouzhuang was once a flourishing port, specializing in silk, pottery, and grain. It attracted scholars and officials who built fine bridges and houses between the Yuan and Qing eras. The charming Old Town can be explored on foot or via a boat tour on the canals. Among the sights are the Ming-era Hall of Zhang Residence with 70 rooms, and the Hall of Shen's Residence, with 100 rooms connected to the main hall. The Chengxu Temple, located near the museum, is a Song-dynasty Daoist shrine.

Wuxi ④

无锡

25 miles (40 km) NW of Suzhou.

¥ 4,320,000. 🚗 🚗 🚗 services to

Hangzhou & Suzhou. 📞 88 Chezhan

Lu. ☎ (0510) 230 8335.

THE HIGHLIGHTS OF A trip to Wuxi are the scenic Tai Hu (Lake Tai) and the Grand Canal. According to legend, the town was established 3,500 years ago as the capital of the Wu Kingdom and was a center for the production of tin. When the mines ran dry (Wuxi means "without tin"), the capital moved west, but Wuxi remained significant due to its location on the Grand Canal. Xihui Park in the west of town was established in 1958, and houses the Jichang Yuan garden. At the park's entrance, a path leads to the Dragon Light Pagoda on top of Xi Shan. A cable car connects Xi Shan to nearby Hui Shan. The Wuxi Museum has exhibits dating back 6,000 years, and includes some Qing-dynasty cannons.

🌿 Xihui Park

Huihe Lu. 🕒 daily. 🚗

🏛️ Wuxi Museum

71 Huihe Lu. 🕒 daily. 🚗

The scenic cable car ride, Xihui Park, Wuxi

Tai Hu ⑤

太湖

3 miles (5 km) SW of Wuxi.

ONE OF CHINA'S largest lakes, Tai Hu is famous for its rocks, an indispensable feature of a traditional garden (see pp178–9). The lake's northern shores are fringed with scenic spots including Mei Yuan (Plum Garden), spectacular in spring when its 4,000 fruit trees blossom.

Yuantou Zhu (Turtle Head Promontory) is a favorite with the Chinese, with tea houses and pretty lake views. Nearby, Sanshan Island is a former bandit's haunt with temples and tall Buddha statues. However, none is as tall as the 289-ft (88-m) Lingshan Buddha on Ma Shan peninsula, a short bus ride from the other sights. The area also has a handful of lakeside theme parks.

🌿 Mei Yuan & Yuantou Zhu

🕒 7am–5pm daily. 🚗

Grand Canal

The Grand Canal, started in 486 BC, was built in sections over the next one thousand years, with the aims of linking the Yangzi with the Yellow River, and one capital with another. It remains the world's largest man-made waterway. The earliest northern section was built for military reasons but large-scale construction began in the 7th century under the Sui Wendi emperor, involving over 5 million conscripted males aged between 15 and 55, supervised by a vast and brutal police force. Linking the comparatively populous north with the southern rice producing region, it reached Beijing only in the 13th century. In the early 20th century, a combination of the altered course of the fickle Yellow River and the rise of the railways saw its gradual demise.

Boat for canal cruises

This map shows the route of the 1,112-mile (1,900-km) canal from Beijing to Hangzhou. Crossing the traditional battlefields between north and south, the canal supplied food throughout the empire. The billy terrain led to the first recorded use of double-locks in AD 984.

KEY

— Grand Canal

The Sui Yandi emperor is said to have celebrated the completion of his work by touring the canal with a flotilla of dragon boats hauled by the empire's most beautiful women.

Tourist boats are now the only way to enjoy a journey on the canal as road and rail transport is favored by the locals. Regular tourist boats operate overnight services between Hangzhou and Suzhou or Wuxi, whilst boats can also be chartered for day-trips between the major tourist stops.

Barges splutter their way along the canal laden with agricultural produce and factory supplies. The busiest sections are in the south and north of the Yangzi to the border with Shandong.

The canal banks are lively with people performing domestic tasks. Families, even if they have houses on shore, may live on board when they are working.

Pottery shop selling typical ceramic items, Ding Shan

Yixing County 6

宜兴

25 miles (40 km) SW of Suzhou. bus service between Wuxi & Yixing.

THE COUNTY'S main town, Yixing, is a busy transport hub that provides connections to the entire region. This fertile area of canals and farmland is known for its pottery, produced at Ding Shan for 3,000 years. Its name yixing or "purple sand" is derived from its distinctive deep maroon color. The town's streets are lined with factories and pottery shops, the latter full of items such as traditional little pots in all shapes and sizes. Ding Shan's tourist office also organizes factory visits.

A short journey from town, the Pottery Exhibition Hall displays a range of objects, from fine, early Yixingware to the prized miniature teapots. Nearby are the Karst Caves, comprising three groups – Zhanggong, Linggu, and Shanjuan. The highlight of Zhanggong's 72 caves is the Hall of the Sea Dragon King, that can hold several thousand people, while Linggu has an underground waterfall.

Pottery Exhibition Hall

150 Ding Shan Beilu. daily.

Karst Caves

daily.

Changzhou 7

常州

25 miles (40 km) NW of Wuxi.

650,000.

OFTEN OVERLOOKED, this city on the Grand Canal is worth visiting for its old center, crisscrossed by streets of traditional houses and canals. The two main streets, Bei and Nan Dajie, are lined with shops selling silks and the locally-made painted combs. The 7th-century Tianning Si has 83 Buddha statues decorating its roof, while the Song-era Yizhou Pavilion is associated with the poet Su Dongpo, who stayed here when he visited the city.

Zhenjiang 8

镇江

31 miles (50 km) E of Suzhou.

3,000,000.

92 Zhongshan Xi Lu.

ATTRACTIVELY SET on the banks of the Yangzi River, Zhenjiang's prosperity was linked to the construction of the Grand Canal (see p217). In the 19th century, the city was ceded to foreign powers. The former Royal Hotel is a fine example of European pastiche, while the old British Consulate now houses the Zhenjiang Museum. Its exhibits include the anchor of the Amethyst, the British ship that sailed upriver in 1949 to bring aid to the British in Nanjing. After coming under heavy fire, it ran aground, and was stranded for months. The ship finally made a dash for freedom, and miraculously, managed to rejoin its fleet.

To the museum's west, Jin Shan Park is the site of the Jin Shan Temple, founded in the Eastern Jin dynasty, and the Cishou Pagoda, one of a pair built in the Tang era. The climb to the top reveals splendid views of the Yangzi. To the city's northeast lies Beigu Shan hill with its beautiful Lingyun Ting pagoda. Farther east is Jiao Shan, an island famed for its scenery, accessible by cable car or boat. Above the island's fortifications, Xijiang Lou tower offers fine views of the river.

Zhenjiang Museum

85 Boxian Lu. daily.

Jin Shan Park

62 Jinshan Xilu. daily.

The southern-style Tianning Si (Temple of Heavenly Peace), Changzhou

Calligraphy

CALLIGRAPHY RAISES ordinary Chinese script into a high art form and is traditionally regarded as highly as painting or poetry as a method of self-expression. The beauty of calligraphy may seem hard to appreciate for most visitors who do not read Chinese. Freestyle calligraphy, however, which transforms ordinary characters almost into figurative and abstract paintings, can easily be appreciated for its artistry. The Chinese

Decorative ink stone

viewer, taught from a young age the basic sequence of strokes, can mentally trace the characters as they were created by the artists and so experience their spiritual world. As they are limited to the same eight strokes, the artists' individual styles – the variations in stroke weight, angle, and vigor – are easily appreciated. Experts consider the balance and proportional weight of the strokes, the structure of the character and its unity and harmony.

THE FOUR TREASURES

The main tools of the calligrapher are known as “The Four Treasures of the Study” – ink sticks, ink stone, brushes, and paper. Anhui is especially famed for the quality of its ink and brushes.

Ink sticks are made from soot – pine wood or tung oil – mixed with glue and even spices. Inks are usually black although colors are available.

Each character is made up of eight types of stroke performed in a set order.

The seal is carefully positioned on the page. The cinnabar ink stamp may be the name of the artist or some poetry.

Thinner dashes look less crowded

The ink stone is used to grind the ink stick with the right amount of water. A thick ink is glossy and strong, while thin ink can be lively or subtle.

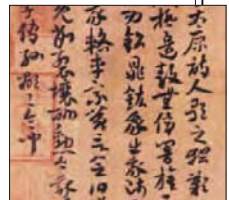

Graceful downstroke to the left

Finely tapered hook stroke

Brush rests were used to hold other brushes or so the artist could put down his brush and contemplate.

Paper, invented around AD 100, was made from mulberry or bamboo fibers. Much cheaper than the silk it replaced, paper is classed by its weight, as this affects how fast it absorbs the ink.

Brushes permitted greater freedom for expression than engraving bone or stone (see p26) and led to more fluid scripts. Supposedly made from many varieties of fur, the tip should be round yet pointed, even and strong.

Practice is crucial. The hand must always know what it is about to do; there is no room for indecision.

There are three levels of practice – tracing, copying and working from memory. Each step up allows the artist to add more individuality.

Yangzhou 9

扬州

Pagoda,
Daming Si

ONE OF THE YANGZI RIVER delta's great cities, Yangzhou has always been known for its prosperity and culture. Its location on the Grand Canal dictated the rise and fall of its fortunes. The city declined with the fall of the Song dynasty and the diminished use of the canal, but revived again in the Ming era, when the canal was restored and used to transport silk, rice, and salt. The salt merchants in particular built elegant villas and gardens, especially in the 18th century when Yangzhou was part of the imperial inspection tours. Despite development, the city has much to offer, including its several gardens.

and bridges. The handsome Wuting Qiao (Five Pavilion Bridge) is its most famous structure, built by a salt merchant in 1757 to honor the Qianlong emperor's visit to Yangzhou. To the west is Ershisi Qiao (Twenty-Four Bridge), so called because its 24 archways could be appreciated 24 hours a day. Bai Ta (White Dagoba) is a Tibetan-style stupa, modeled on the one in Beijing's Beihai Park (see p90). In the Xu Garden, the Listening to Orioles Pavilion has fine woodwork, while the Pinyuan Lou offers views that supposedly demonstrate the rules of perspective as compiled by the Song artist, Guo Xi. East of the lake, the Imperial Jetty is where Qianlong's barge was moored.

A fruit stall among the historic architecture on Dong Guan Jie

📍 Daming Si

1 Pingshan Tang. ☎ (0514) 734 0720. 🕒 8am–4.45pm daily. 📷
Sitting atop a hill, the Temple of Abundant Light dates to the 5th century AD, but was rebuilt after being destroyed in the Taiping Rebellion (see p422). The central Jian Zhen Hall was erected in 1973 in honor of the monk, Jian Zhen, who traveled to Japan in 753. Credited with introducing many aspects of Chinese culture to Japan, he is revered by the Japanese, who funded the main hall's construction, and modeled it on the Toshodai Temple in Nara, Japan. Nearby is a natural spring with an adjoining teahouse.

🏛️ Hanlinyuan Museum

Xiangbie Lu. 🕒 8:30am–5pm daily. 📷
The magnificent Western Han tomb of Liu Xu, ruler of the Guangling Kingdom, is five levels deep. Its second air-tight layer comprises 840 nanmu (cedar) bricks joined by hooks. The third level housed the warehouse, the fourth level the king's living quarters, and the fifth level, a coffin on wheels. The tomb was equipped with every imaginable luxury, including a bathroom.

📍 Shou Xi Hu

28 Da Hongqiao Lu. ☎ (0514) 734 1324. 🕒 6:30am–5pm daily. 📷
Yangzhou's most popular sight, the Thin West Lake is a slim version of Hangzhou's famous West Lake (see pp242–3). It winds through a park filled with willow trees, pavilions, and bridges. The handsome Wuting Qiao (Five Pavilion Bridge) is its most famous structure, built by a salt merchant in 1757 to honor the Qianlong emperor's visit to Yangzhou. To the west is Ershisi Qiao (Twenty-Four Bridge), so called because its 24 archways could be appreciated 24 hours a day. Bai Ta (White Dagoba) is a Tibetan-style stupa, modeled on the one in Beijing's Beihai Park (see p90). In the Xu Garden, the Listening to Orioles Pavilion has fine woodwork, while the Pinyuan Lou offers views that supposedly demonstrate the rules of perspective as compiled by the Song artist, Guo Xi. East of the lake, the Imperial Jetty is where Qianlong's barge was moored.

🏛️ Yangzhou Museum

Near Tianlin Si. ☎ (0514) 734 4585. 🕒 8:30am–11am, 1pm–5pm daily.
This museum is housed in a temple that was built in 1772 in memory of a Ming official who refused to surrender the city to the Qing rulers. On display are some splendid items, including an ancient boat salvaged from the Grand Canal, and a burial suit made of jade.

📍 Ge Yuan

10 Yanfu Dong Lu. ☎ (0514) 734 7428. 🕒 7:30am–5pm daily. 📷
Yangzhou's most famous garden, Ge Yuan was once owned by the painter Shi Tao, and later by a salt merchant. Its name derives from the leaves of its bamboo plants, that resemble the character "ge" meaning "self". Its central feature is its rockeries, but it also has some fine pavilions.

Wuting Qiao (Five Pavilion Bridge), Shou Xi Hu Gongyuan

🏯 Wang Shi Xiao Yuan

14 Dongquan Men Lishi Jiequ.

🕒 8am–5pm daily. 🎫

Located on a street of historic homes including that of former president Jiang Zemin, the grand Wang Shi Xiao Yuan was the residence of a wealthy salt merchant. Dating to the Qing era, it has nearly 100 rooms. The interior is lavishly furnished, and its main Spring Hall contains a German chandelier and marble wall panels.

🏯 Garden Tomb of Puhaddin

17 Jiefang Nan Lu. 📞 (0514) 722 2241. 🕒 8am–5pm daily.

Said to be the 16th descendant of the Prophet Mohammed, Puhaddin was a teacher who lived in Yangzhou until his death in 1275. His grave is enclosed in a building filled with inscriptions from the holy Koran. Other noted Muslim figures from the Song and Ming eras are buried nearby. Puhaddin also built the tiny Xianhe Mosque, located southwest on Ganquan Lu. Its wall is covered in arabesques, a legacy of the Persian traders who once frequented the city.

The Tang-dynasty Shi Ta or Stone Pagoda

🏯 He Yuan

77 Xuning Men Jie. 📞 (0514) 723 9626. 🕒 7:30am–6pm daily. 🎫

This small garden creates an illusion of space and depth by the clever arrangement of its features, including shrubs, trees, and a walkway. Named after one of its 19th-century owners, it is divided in two,

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

37 miles (60 km) NE of Nanjing.

🚏 4,500,000. 🚌 East Bus Station, West Bus Station. 📍 99 Daxue Bei Lu, (0514) 734 5746.

with some pavilions decorated in southern-style lattice work, although northern influences prevail in its overall layout and style. A few teahouses also dot the garden.

🏯 Wenchang Ge

The round Wenchang Ge (Promoting Literature Pavilion) is all that remains of the old Confucian Academy. Founded by the first Ming emperor, Hongwu, who believed in education for all, the academy originally had two pavilions. To the north, the Si Wang Ting (Pavilion of the Four Views) was a part of the Ming-era Provincial College, and was used as an observatory. Lying west of Wenchang Ge, the Tang-dynasty Shi Ta (Stone Pagoda) was once part of a temple located outside the city walls. It was moved here in the Song era.

YANGZHOU CITY CENTER

- Daming Si ①
- Garden Tomb of Puhaddin ⑦
- Ge Yuan ⑤
- Hanlinyuan Museum ②
- He Yuan ⑨
- Shi Ta ⑫
- Shou Xi Hu ③
- Si Wang Ting ⑩
- Wang Shi Xiao Yuan ⑥
- Wenchang Ge ⑪
- Xianhe Mosque ⑧
- Yangzhou Museum ④

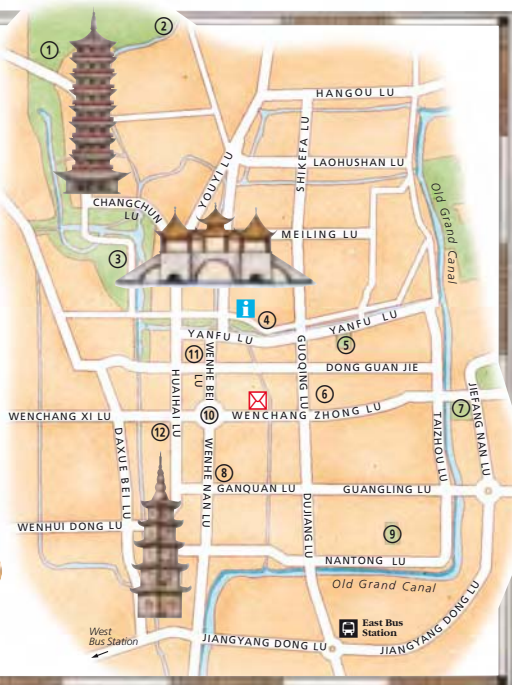

KEY

- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 📍 Tourist information
- ✉ Post office

0 km

1

0 miles

Nanjing 10

南京

Statue,
Fuzi Miao

OF ALL CHINA'S GREAT CITIES, Nanjing or Nanking, as it was once known, is the most attractive. The capital of Jiangsu province, it is picturesquely set on the banks of the Yangzi, close to the magnificent Purple Mountain. This city of lakes is still enclosed within its grand city wall, and its streets are shaded by plane trees. Meaning "southern capital," it was the capital of several regional kingdoms up to AD 220. Later, it was China's capital under the early Ming. It was also the capital of the 19th-century Taiping Heavenly Kingdom and the first Chinese Republic under Dr. Sun Yat Sen. Today, Nanjing is a fast developing city, with good restaurants and a lively nightlife.

Garden and pavilions at the Taiping Heavenly Kingdom History Museum

Exploring Nanjing

Although the medieval city walls give the impression that Nanjing is a small city, it is in fact fairly spread out. A lot of ground can be covered on foot, but visitors will also need to use the city's local transport, either the comprehensive bus service or taxis, which are plentiful and reasonably priced.

🏯 Zhonghua Gate

See pp224-5.

🏯 Taiping Heavenly Kingdom History Museum

128 Zhanyuan Lu. 📞 (025) 8662 3024. ☑ daily. 🚶

This museum commemorates the anti-dynastic Taiping Heavenly Kingdom Rebellion of 1851-64 (see p422). The building was used by one of the rebellion's leaders, or Heavenly Princes, while one section – the Zhan or Enthusiasm Garden – originally belonged to the first 1864. On display are weapons and uniforms, samples of Taiping currency, and documents explaining the Heavenly ideology, which aimed to change China's feudalistic society into one based on equality. Their aims included the modernization of the education system that was still based on Confucian classics, the redistribution of land, and equality of the sexes.

🌿 Bailuzhou Park

☑ daily. 🚶

The White Egret Park was once the property of the Ming general Xu Da, and subsequently became the Chinese quarter during the centuries of Manchu rule. The pavilions were all destroyed during the Taiping Rebellion but the park was restored in 1951, and the area still abounds in traditional houses.

🏯 Fuzi Miao

Gongyuan Lu. 📞 (025) 8662 8639.

☑ 8am-9:30pm daily. 🚶

The origins of Fuzi Miao (Temple of Confucius) go back to AD 1034, while the current buildings date to the late 19th century, with recent additions. The temple was the seat of Confucian study for more than 1,500 years. Its halls feature a small exhibition of folk arts. The surrounding streets are flanked by houses with long upturned eaves and whitewashed walls – many of which are being restored in typical southern style. Nearby, the attractive canal bank has plenty of boats that ply the short distance to Zhonghua Gate.

The distinctive double-eaved main hall of the Fuzi Miao

Chaotian Gong

Mochou Lu. ☎ (025) 8446 6460.
 ☉ 8am–4pm daily. 🏛️ Court Rites Display 11:15am–12:15pm daily.
 The substantial Chaotian Gong (Heaven Palace) was once a place of ancestor worship, a seat of learning, and a Confucian temple. Its mid-19th century buildings such as halls, towers, and walkways, stand on an ancient temple site dating to AD 390. It now houses the Municipal Museum, displaying Shang bronzes and fragments of the legendary porcelain pagoda, destroyed in the Taiping Rebellion. The pagoda was built in the 15th century by the Ming Yongle emperor to honor his mother, and was covered in glazed white bricks. There are daily shows of Ming-dynasty Court Rites in the palace square.

Nearby along Tangzi Jie, house No. 74 has colorful paintings dating to the Taiping occupation that were discovered in 1952. The house was occupied by a follower of the Taiping Eastern Prince, Yang Xiuqing. The paintings – of animals and birds – are more interesting for their historical associations than for their deft execution.

Detail from the Sun Yat Sen Hall, Tianchao Gong

Tianchao Gong & Xu Yuan

292 Changjiang Lu. ☎ (025) 8454 2362. ☉ 9am–5pm daily. 🏛️
 The Tianchao Gong (Heavenly Kingdom Palace), together with the surrounding classical Xu Yuan Garden

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

125 miles (200 km) NW of Shanghai. 🏠 5,350,000. ☑️ 🚗
 Main Train Station, West Train Station, ☑️ Zhongyang Men Station, Hanfu Jie Station, CAAC (buses to airport), East Bus Station. 🚗 to Shanghai, Wuhan & Chongqing. 📞 202/1 Zhongshan Bei Lu, (025) 8342 8999.

(Balmy Garden), were originally built by a Ming prince. Under the Qing dynasty, it became the seat of provincial government until 1853, when it was seized by the leader of the Taiping Rebellion, Hong Xiuquan, as his headquarters. Finally, after the overthrow of the Qing empire, the palace housed the Republican Government, from where both Dr. Sun Yat Sen and Chiang Kai Shek ruled China. Inside, there is an exhibition devoted to the Taiping Rebellion and to Dr. Sun Yat Sen. The surrounding Xu Yuan Garden is a popular weekend spot with the locals.

Zhonghua Gate

中华门

BUILT UNDER THE ORDERS of the first Ming emperor, Hongwu, from 1368–86, the walls surrounding the capital were the most extensive in the world at the time. The 40-ft (12-m) high walls snaked 20 miles (33 km) around the city's natural contours. Given that the city was elsewhere protected by river and mountain, Zhonghua Gate was a key element in Nanjing's southern defences. Its walls were cemented by a super-strong mortar made with glutinous rice. Certainly the Emperor's show of defense was effective – no enemy attempted to breach the walls via Zhonghua Gate. Today the gate's impressive remains are open to visitors and an interesting museum has been built into the battlements.

Nanjing from the city wall adjacent to Zhonghua Gate

★ Inner Citadels

Behind the main gate are three courtyards or citadels. During an attack, enemy forces that breached the main gate could be trapped in these courtyards. The cavities in the walls concealed soldiers waiting in ambush.

RECONSTRUCTION OF ZHONGHUA GATE

The main gate tower sat adjacent to the top of the wall, with the rest of the citadel protruding into the city. Today, only the brick walls remain – none of the gatehouses has survived.

Four gatehouses, sitting above each arched gateway, contained armaments and supplies.

Portcullises blocked passage through the gateways. The grooves are still visible.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Inner Citadels
- ★ Arched Gateways
- ★ Signed Bricks

★ Arched Gateways

Four arched tunnels, each as long as 174 feet (53 m), run through the battlements. Each gate had massive double doors and a portcullis.

★ Signed bricks

Numerous bricks are stamped with the name of the kiln where they were fired and even the name of the brickmaker himself, together with the date of manufacture.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Zhonghua Lu. 16 from city center. ☉ 8am-5pm. 📷 📱

Decorative wen

The main gate tower acted as the first line of defense, providing protection from enemy fire and a lookout point.

Statue of soldier

Statues wearing replica Ming-era uniforms are scattered strategically about the battlements.

Ramp

The wide ramps, which run up each side of the gate to the top of the city wall, allowed soldiers and horses quick access to the ramparts.

NANJING'S CITY WALLS

Originally 20 miles (33 km) long, much of the wall, about 75 percent, remains. The most impressive sections are near the refurbished Xuanwu Gate in the north and the long strip in the east. Parts, but not all, of the existing wall can be walked along.

- Xuanwu Gate ①
- Taiping Gate ②
- Zhongshan Gate ③
- Zhonghua Gate ④

KEY

- Existing wall
- Path of destroyed wall

Meiyuan Xincun

9am–4:30pm daily. 📷

The former Chinese Communist Party office was headed in 1946–47 by Zhou Enlai (see p250), who held negotiations with the Kuomintang after the Japanese surrender. The newly restored building houses a museum commemorating these events.

Ming Palace Ruins

Zhongshan Donglu. ☉ daily. 📷

The old Ming Palace (Ming Gugong) was built in the 14th century for the first Ming emperor, Hongwu, who made Nanjing his capital. Within a century of its construction, this splendid palace was severely damaged by two fires. Later, the Manchus and then the Taiping soldiers completed its destruction. All that remains are ten marble bridges, the old Wu Men or Meridian Gate, and a large number of pillar bases worth examining for their finely sculptured details. The pillars also give an idea of the layout of the palace buildings. Along its main axis, the palace would have had three major courtyards enclosed by enormous halls raised on platforms. These were flanked on either side by altars and temples. Beijing's Forbidden City (see pp86–9) is a larger version of this palace complex. The grounds have plenty of trees, which offer shade in the summer months.

Sculptural detail,
Ming Palace Ruins

Xuanwu Lake, edged by pavilions and boat piers

Provincial Museum

4 Chaotiangong Lu. ☎ (025) 8446 5317. ☉ daily. 📷

The Provincial Museum, founded in 1933, is one of China's better museums and definitely worth a visit. Its highlights include some wonderful ornate sedan chairs, bronzes from the Zhou dynasty, and model trading ships. The collection of jade and lacquerware includes a jade burial suit consisting of rectangles of jade sewn together with silver thread, dating from the Eastern Han dynasty. Also on display are bricks from the city wall, pictures of the old city, and relics from the Taiping Heavenly Kingdom Rebellion. Many of the exhibits are captioned in English, which makes the museum even more interesting.

Purple Mountain

See pp228–9.

Xuanwu Lake

Xuanwu Park. ☉ daily. 📷

In the northeast corner of the city an especially fine stretch of the Ming city walls skirts the western shore of the enormous Xuanwu Lake, situated in Xuanwu Park. At well over 1 mile (2.5 km) long, the lake was an important water source for the city, as well as a popular imperial resort for many centuries. During the Song dynasty, it was also used for naval exercises. The park was opened to the public after the fall of the Qing dynasty in 1911.

Xuanwu Lake has five small islands named after the five continents, which are linked by bridges and causeways. They offer a variety of entertainment options with tea-houses, restaurants, pavilions, boats of various types, swimming areas, an open-air theater, and even a small zoo. The most scenic is Yingzhou Island, delightfully laid out with lily pads, trees, and flowers. Although the park can get crowded, especially on weekends, it is a charming place to relax. The most convenient entrance is through the triple-arched Xuanwu Gate in the old city wall on Zhongyang Lu, while tickets are available from the booth on Jiwsu Lu.

Drum & Bell Towers

☉ daily.

The much-restored Drum Tower dates back over 600 years to 1382, and is fronted by a traditional gateway. It was built to house several drums that were beaten through the night to mark the change of the watch, and occasionally to sound alarms. Today, only one large drum remains. The tower also houses a collection of amateur paintings, and a part of it has been converted into a teahouse. A short distance to the northeast is the Bell Tower (Dazhong Ting), constructed during the Ming dynasty and rebuilt in 1889. The huge bronze bell, cast in 1388, is one of the largest in China.

Marble pillar bases mark the layout of the palace, Ming Palace Ruins

The area surrounding the towers was the administrative center of the old city. It is now a busy place, full of offices and heavy traffic.

Traffic on the Nanjing Yangtze River Bridge

Nanjing Yangtze River Bridge

Daqiao Nanlu. ☎ (025) 5878 5703.
Elevator  daily.

This impressive piece of engineering, completed in 1968, is one of the great achievements of the Chinese Communists, who took over the project after the Russians

NANJING MASSACRE

The Nanjing Massacre, or the Rape of Nanking as it is also known, is still an object of friction between the Chinese and the Japanese. In 1937, when the invading Japanese army succeeded in capturing Nanjing, a large number of civilians stayed behind instead of fleeing, following an appeal made by the Chinese government. While the government fled, the occupying army proceeded to carry out a brutal campaign of murder, pillage, and rape on the civilian population. It is thought that up to 400,000 people were killed in the incident. After Japan's surrender in 1945, the government returned to Nanjing and the city regained its status as the capital of China until the Communists shifted the capital back to Beijing in 1949.

Monument to the Nanjing Massacre marched out in 1960. According to the official Chinese version, the bridge was built from scratch, as the Russians took the original plans with them when they left. The double-decker bridge, designed for road traffic as well as trains, is almost a mile (1.5 km) long, and is one of the longest in China. Before it was built, ferries used to carry entire trains across the river, one carriage at a time. An elevator takes visitors to the top of one of the towers, from where there are excellent views across the river. Also worth noting are the Soviet-style sculptures that decorate the bridge. The best approach to the bridge is through the adjacent Daqiao Gongyuan (Bridge Park).

Mochou Lake

 daily.

Just outside the city wall in western Nanjing, Mochou Lake (Mochou Hu) is named after the legendary heroine, Mochou. Her name, meaning "Without Sorrow", was bestowed because her singing was so sweet that it banished all sorrow. Surrounding the lake, Mochou Lake Park is especially pretty when the lotus flowers on the water are in full bloom. An open-air stage and a teahouse lie along the water's edge. The Square Pavilion contains a statue of Mochou in a small pond, while the Winning Chess Pavilion next door was where the first Ming emperor Hongwu, played an important game of chess with his general.

Square Pavilion with a statue of the legendary maiden Mochou, Mochou Lake Park

Purple Mountain

紫金山

Door handle
Ming Xiao Ling

OVERLOOKING THE CITY, Zijin Shan, or the Purple Mountain, is said to take its name from the color of the rocks. It is a picturesque area of gentle hills shaded by woodland and bamboo groves, dotted with villas. It also contains several of the most important points of interest in Nanjing such as the Mausoleum of Dr. Sun Yat Sen, Ming Xiao Ling, and the Linggu Temple complex. Seeing everything will take a whole day and, although there are food stalls around, visitors are advised to take along a picnic. The energetic can make the long climb to the summit for splendid views over the city; alternatively you can take a cable car from outside the eastern wall.

Statue of Sun Yat Sen, "Father of Modern China," in his mausoleum

Purple Mountain Observatory

Alongside more modern equipment, the observatory houses a display of bronze instruments that date back to the 15th century. However, similar pieces were used by the Chinese as long as 3,000 years ago.

KEY

 Cable car

 Road

STAR SIGHTS

★ Ming Xiao Ling

★ Linggu Temple & Beamless Hall

★ Mausoleum of Dr. Sun Yat Sen

★ Ming Xiao Ling

This tomb was completed in 1405 for the first Ming emperor, Hongwu, and his wife. Although much of it was destroyed in the Taiping Rebellion (see p422), enough remains to give a sense of the grandeur of the original.

The cable car goes to the summit in two stages and is recommended for the views.

Museum of Dr. Sun Yat Sen

Set in a pretty building this museum is often overlooked by visitors. Four floors of exhibits chronicle Sun Yat Sen's life with paintings, photographs, and personal effects.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Jiangsu Province, 2 miles (3 km) E of Nanjing. 🚗 🚆 from the train station. There is a shuttle service between main sites in the park. Purple Mountain ☐
 Apr–Nov: 6:30am–6:30pm daily;
 Dec–Mar: 7am–6pm daily. 📞 for each site. 📷 📱

The Music Stage

was built in 1933 as part of Sun Yat Sen's mausoleum.

Linggu Pagoda

Built in 1929, this 199-ft (61-m) high pagoda was designed by an American, Henry Murphy, at the behest of Chiang Kai Shek, in memory of the soldiers killed in the 1911 revolution (see pp62–3).

★ Linggu Temple & Beamless Hall

Originally founded in AD 514 the temple was moved here by Ming emperor Hongwu to make room for his tomb. It is most notable for the beamless hall, built in 1381 without using any wood in the construction.

★ Mausoleum of Dr. Sun Yat Sen

Despite the use of blue tiles, instead of the emperor's yellow ones, this grand mausoleum has imperial resonances. Completed in 1929, the blue and white colors represent the Nationalist Party.

Exploring the Purple Mountain

ALSO KNOWN AS ZHONGSHAN MOUNTAIN, after Sun Yat Sen's Mandarin name, the Purple Mountain (Zijin Shan) is best explored by starting from the easternmost site at the Linggu Temple and slowly working your way west back to the city. To fully explore the area requires a long day, but if time is scarce, half a day will do for visiting Sun Yat Sen's Mausoleum, the most popular site on the mountain, and one other. However, it is also pleasant just to get away from everybody else and wander the network of shady woodland paths that crisscross the hillside, and to visit the many smaller visitor attractions.

Lake beside the Linggu Temple at the foot of the Purple Mountain

Linggu Temple, Beamless Hall, and Pagoda

The Linggu Temple was originally sited where the Ming emperor Hongwu wanted to build his tomb (Ming Xiao Ling), and so he had it moved to this site. The only original building that remains is the Beamless Hall. Built in 1381, it is a brick vaulted edifice constructed without any wooden beams. This was supposed to be the solution to a timber shortage, but, with few exceptions, it failed to be adopted. A small, restored Buddhist temple reputedly houses the remains of the Tang dynasty monk Xuanzang who traveled to India to get Buddhist scriptures (see p487). The nearby Linggu Pagoda is inscribed in the handwriting of Chiang Kai Shek saying "repaying the country with extreme loyalty." The building is meant to combine the future and the past in that it is an old style of building – a pagoda – but built with modern materials – reinforced concrete. From the top, there is a great view of the thick green leafy carpet that cloaks the mountain.

Stone sculpture from the Xiao Ling sacred way

Sun Yat Sen's Museum

Slightly off the tourist trail, this museum is inside a beautiful building that once held a Buddhist library. The collection of paintings, black and white photos and artifacts chronicles in detail the life of the "father of the people." The top two floors have captions in English. The Buddhist library of sutras is now housed in a separate building out the back.

Sun Yat Sen's Mausoleum (Zhongshan Ling)

The revolutionary leader died in 1925 and a competition was held to design his tomb. The winner was Y.C. Lu, a graduate of Cornell University School of Architecture. The tomb is approached up a typically long marble stairway of 392 steps and comprises a square hall with a life-size marble statue of the man leading to a round, domed building that contains his sarcophagus inset in the floor. There are other memorials in the area such as the Music Stage, an auditorium popular with picnicking visitors and the Guanghua Pavilion.

Xiao Ling Tomb

Although much of it is derelict, the site is mainly of interest as the first of the Ming Tombs. The sacred way, an avenue of stone statues of pairs of animals and officials, some sitting, some standing on duty is also impressive. Unusually it does not run south to north but winds its way up the hillside. South of the tomb lies the scenic area of Plum Blossom Hill, especially pretty in spring when the trees bloom pink. To the west lie the Botanical Gardens, a huge area with colourful planting, lawns, hills, and lakes. Nearby lies the Tomb of Liao Zhongkai and his wife He Xiangning, prominent Nationalists who followed Sun Yat Sen.

Observatory

Built in the 1930s, the observatory is slightly run down these days. The main point of interest for the casual visitor is the small collection of copies of bronze Ming and Qing astronomical instruments.

Approach to the tomb of the first Ming emperor, Hongwu

Gateway of the Memorial to the Nanjing Massacre

Around Nanjing

There are plenty of interesting sites around Nanjing that are worth seeing along with the Purple Mountain. All can easily be reached by taxi or in the case of Qixia Si, by bus.

㊦ Memorial to the Nanjing Massacre

195 Chaping Dong Jie. ☎ (025) 8661 0931. ☑ 8:30am–4:30pm daily. 📷

A short distance west of Mochou Park, this site recalls the Japanese atrocities, known as the Nanjing Massacre (see p227), that took place during the city's occupation in World War II. In the garden, shards of bone and piles of skulls are grim mementoes. Amid a photographic chronicle of the events, one room focuses on the post-war reconciliation between the two nations.

♣ Yuhuatai

Yuhuatai Lu. ☎ (025) 5241 1523. ☑ 7am–6:30pm daily. 📷

According to legend, Yuhuatai, south of Zhonghua Gate, is where a 5th-century monk gave a sermon that was so moving that flowers rained down from the sky. Chinese visitors still collect the colored pebbles that are found here. Sadly, the park became an execution ground during the Chinese Revolution (1927–49), and thousands lost their lives here. The Martyrs' Memorial consists of nine gigantic, 98-ft (30-m) high figures in typical Soviet realist style. Behind it is a pagoda, from where there are good views across the city.

Martyrs' Memorial, Yuhuatai

㊦ King of Borneo's Tomb

Off Ning Dan Gong Lu. Over 1 mile (2 km) NW of Yuhuatai. ☑ daily. Situated close to Yuhuatai, the King of Borneo's Tomb was discovered as recently as 1958. The rulers of Borneo had been sending tribute to China since AD 977. In the mid-14th century, the first Ming emperor, Hongwu, greatly expanded the existing tribute system, whereby foreign nations paid "tribute" to China in the form of gifts and precious goods. He sent envoys to all of China's tributary states including Borneo, to ensure that this economic exchange continued. The King of Borneo arrived in Nanjing in 1408, but died during his stay. His tomb is marked with a tortoise stele, and, similar to other tombs of the period, a sacred pathway with statues on either side. The site is not clearly signposted, so it is advisable to have the tomb's name written in Chinese in order to ask for directions.

㊦ Qixia Si & Thousand Buddha Cliffs

Qixia Shan. 9 miles (15 km) NE of Nanjing. 🚌 bus from opposite the railway station, 1 hr. ☎ (025) 8576 1831. ☑ 7am–5:30pm daily. 📷

One of the largest Buddhist seminaries in the country, Qixia Si was originally founded in AD 483, but the current building dates from 1908, at the end of the Qing dynasty. It consists of two principal temple halls; one has walls that are extensively covered with flying apsaras (celestial maidens), while the other houses a statue of an upright Vairocana Buddha, known as the Cosmic Buddha who is the embodiment of Truth and Knowledge. To the east stands an octagonal stone pagoda built in AD 601, which bears carvings of scenes from the life of the Buddha.

Behind the halls are the Thousand Buddha Cliffs. These are in fact just over 500 Buddha statues carved into the cliff face, but "thousand" is often used in China to denote "many." The earliest statues date to the 5th century Qi dynasty, while most were carved during the Song and Tang dynasties. Some statues were badly defaced during the bloody Taiping Rebellion (see p422) and again during the Cultural Revolution (see pp64–5), but enough remain to make the visit worthwhile. Visitors can spend a few enjoyable hours walking in the woods behind the cliffs.

Octagonal stone pagoda with carvings of the Buddha's life, Qixia Si

Traditional Medicine

MEDICINE IN CHINA dates back some 4,000 years and evolved as a result of the search for the elixir of life, research in which many emperors took a keen interest. Over the centuries an approach was adopted that would today be called holistic – the importance of diet, emotional health, and environment was emphasized. Today, treatment is still founded on the use of herbs, diet and acupuncture, with Daoist philosophy as an integral ingredient, the most notable aspect being that of qi (see pp32-3), the vital force of living things. Qi gives rise to the opposite and interdependent forces of yin and yang, signified in the universe and body by wet and dry, cold and heat, etc. Unlike western medicine, where an outside force, such as bacteria or a virus, is assumed to cause disease, in Chinese medicine a medical problem is caused by a yin-yang imbalance within the patient. When yin and yang are out of balance, the flow of qi has been depleted or blocked; Chinese medical practitioners seek to return the balance.

Yin yang symbol

10TH-CENTURY CHANNEL CHART

Qi flows through channels that radiate throughout the body from the vital organs to the extremities. This chart clearly illustrates a channel that runs from the intestines through the arm to the finger tips. Applying pressure to the specified points will moderate the flow of qi.

The Bencao Gangmu, a pharmacopeia of medicine listing all known diseases and their treatments, was compiled by the naturalist Li Shizhen during the 12th century.

A mixture of herbs, fungus, roots, bark, and sometimes dried animal products, such as ground antler, are carefully combined and dispensed to the patient who boils the ingredients to make a powerful decoction.

Needles from Qing Dynasty

Channel

Modern needles

Acupuncture needles

are inserted just below the skin at pressure points, also called men or gates, along the channels. Acupuncture has even proved an effective anesthetic.

Moxibustion, used in chronic cases, involves burning artemisia leaves to heat up the pressure points. The heat is conveyed by needles, but the moxa is sometimes held so close to the skin that it sings.

Plaque over the beautifully decorated entrance to the Guangji Si, Wuhu

Bozhou ①

亳州

155 miles (250 km) NW of Hefei.

BOZHOU'S medicinal market—the largest of its kind in the world—attracts over 50,000 traders from China and Southeast Asia. Every conceivable plant, insect, and animal limb, in whole and powdered form, can be found in its hall.

Also of interest is the 17th-century Flower Theater with wood and brick carvings and painted friezes around the stage. The town's museum exhibits a Han-dynasty jade burial suit of the father of Cao Cao, the Three Kingdoms warlord, who built the Underground Tunnel to conceal the army, if attacked.

☞ Medicinal Market

Zhongyao Shiyang. ☐ Mon–Fri.

☞ Underground Tunnel

Caocao Yunbingdao. ☐ daily. 📖

Hefei ⑫

合肥

93 miles (150 km) W of Nanjing. ☒

🚗 🚝 🚆 42 Changjiang Zhong Lu.

☎ (0551) 267 2945.

ANHUI'S PROVINCIAL capital grew into a flourishing industrial center after 1949, when the new Communist government supported the growth of industry in areas that had been previously impoverished. Although not of very great interest, visitors are likely to pass through this town while exploring the province. The Provincial Museum has some interesting exhibits including bricks from Han-dynasty tombs, a cranium belonging to Homo erectus discovered in Anhui, and an exhibition on the “Four Treasures of the Study” (see p219), mainly ink sticks, ink stones, brushes, and paper, for which the province is known. Baohe Park, set around a pretty tree flanked by a lake, has a Memorial Hall devoted to the great Song dynasty administrator, Lord Bao. The 16th-century Mingjiao Si temple stands 16 ft (5 m) above the ground, while nearby Xiaoyaojin Park has a 3rd-century well and is a good place for walks.

🏛️ Provincial Museum

268 Anqing Lu. ☐ Tue–Sun. 📖

🏛️ Lord Bao Memorial Hall

58 Wuhu Lu. ☐ 8am–5:30pm daily.

🏛️ Mingjiao Si

Wuhu ⑬

芜湖

78 miles (125 km) SE of Hefei. 🚗 🚝

THE PROVINCE'S main ferry port has little to offer, and its few sights include the Guangji Si on Zhe Shan, founded in AD 894, and the nearby Zhe Pagoda, from where there are views over the town. Some streets in the town's center are lined with old houses with thatched roofs and mud walls, and make for a pleasant stroll. Wuhu is also a good base for visiting Li Bai's Tomb at Caishiji, 4 miles (7 km) from Ma'an Shan, the first stop south of Wuhu on the railway line. Li Bai (AD 701–762), a Tang-dynasty poet, was a famous drunk and is said to have died drowning in the moon's reflection. His tomb stands at the top of a long series of steps behind a Qing-dynasty temple, and overlooks the Yangzi. It may only contain Li Bai's clothes, as his final resting place is still the subject of debate.

Li Bai's Tomb, Caishiji

🏛️ Li Bai's Tomb

Caishiji. 🚗 to Ma'an Shan, then bus or taxi. ☐ daily.

ENVIRONS: Located 37 miles (60 km) southeast of Wuhu, Xuancheng is the site of the Alligator Breeding Center, which has successfully increased the population of this endangered species. Found only in Anhui, the wild population remains small, but the captive population now runs into thousands, and it may soon be possible to reintroduce these reptiles back into the wild.

Alligators sunning themselves in Xuancheng's breeding center

Jiuhua Shan 14

九华山

100 miles (160 km) SE of Hefei.
135 Baima Xincun, Jiuhua Jie.

 (0566) 501 1588.

ONE OF THE four mountains holy to Chinese Buddhists, Jiuhua Shan has been sacred since the Korean monk Jin Qiaojué – thought to be a reincarnation of Bodhisattva Ksitigarbha – died here in AD 794. It is also an important place of pilgrimage for the recently bereaved, who come to hold services for those who have passed on.

Over 60 temples linked by paths from Jiuhua village dot the mountain. The first is the Qing-dynasty Zhiyuan Si, with a honeycomb of halls. Farther up is the oldest temple, Huacheng Si, a part of which possibly dates to the Tang era. Beyond, an ornamental gate marks the path up the mountain. From here, one option is an hour-long walk that passes Ying Ke Song (Welcoming Pine), and bears left past a series of temples until Baisui Gong, where the preserved body of the priest, Wu Xia, sits at prayer. Visitors can either walk back or take the funicular railway. The other option is the path leading right at Yingke Song, which passes Feng Huang Song (Phoenix Pine) to the summit at Tiantai Zhengding (Heavenly Terrace), where a huge Buddha statue is due to be built. The four-hour walk to the summit can be curtailed by taking the cable car from Fenghuang Song, and returning by taxi.

The serene Jiuhua Shan or Nine Glorious Mountains

A restored Ming-dynasty shop, Lao Jie (Old Street), Tunxi

Tunxi 15

屯溪

44 miles (70 km) SE of Huang Shan.

   3/4F, 99 Fushang Lu.

 (0559) 231 0616.

AN IMPORTANT transport hub for visiting the popular Huang Shan (see pp236–7), Tunxi has numerous fine examples of traditional classical architecture. In certain areas such as along Lao Jie (Old Street), restored houses dating to the Ming dynasty have been converted into shops selling souvenirs and antiques, while others serve as restaurants. The high standard of restoration gives visitors a clear picture of a typical Ming-era town. Many of the houses bear the decorative “horse head gables” (see opposite), which originally had a practical use as fire baffles.

Shexian 16

歙县

16 miles (25 km) E of Tunxi.  buses to Tunxi.

FORMERLY KNOWN as Huizhou, Shexian is renowned for its wealth of well-preserved Ming-dynasty houses, once owned by wealthy salt merchants. Many of these houses lie along the lanes off Jiefang Jie and along Doushan Jie, still occupied exactly as they were as far back as the 14th century.

The wealthy Huizhou tradesmen also erected many memorial archways (paifang) in Shexian county but the most famous is the complex of seven Ming and Qing arches at Tangyue, a village about 4 miles (7 km) west of Shexian. The arches acknowledge the political career, filial piety, chastity, and charity of a successful local family.

Yixian 17

黟县

22 miles (35 km) NW of Tunxi.

 Minibus to Tunxi. Permit required, available at Tunxi.

THE UNESCO World Heritage Sites of Hongcun and Xidi, known for their Ming and Qing houses, lie in the vicinity of Yixian. About 7 miles (11 km) to the north-east, Hongcun dates to 1131. Picturesquely ringed by mountains, it is known as “a village in a Chinese painting.” The village is laid out in the shape of a water-buffalo, and is watered by a network of canals that feed the Moon Pond and South Lake, representing the buffalo’s stomach, while the canals represent its intestines.

Xidi, 5 miles (8 km) north of Yixian, has a maze of lanes flanked by over 100 houses, dating mainly from the late Ming and early Qing eras. Some have charming courtyards, while their interiors are often decorated with carved wooden screens and panels. Some houses feature performances of local arts. Nanping, 3 miles (5 km) west of Yixian, also has fine examples of classical architecture.

Huizhou Architecture

SHEXIAN COUNTY is home for the descendants of a group of people who played a key role in the Chinese economy 400 years ago. Today, the people of southern Anhui province are mostly farmers, but from the fourteenth to seventeenth centuries, their forefathers were the wealthy merchants of Huizhou, famous the length and breadth of China for their commercial acumen and integrity.

Huizhou memorial archway (paifang)

They used their money to build large family houses, with whitewashed exteriors and beautiful wood interiors. The distinctive features of these houses are a result of social and environmental factors, and are attempts to deal with the weather, earthquakes and the risk of attack by bandits. Many of these houses still remain, sometimes a little run down, but still a testament to the enterprise of the Huizhou traders.

Carved wood panels

The delicate tracery of the wood panels was both decorative and functional – allowing light in while keeping the heat out.

Wooden columns could withstand an earthquake better than brick walls.

Sloping roofs collected rain – good qi (see pp32-3) – into the pond.

The walls were not load bearing at all – they were known as curtain walls.

High windows made the houses secure from attack by bandits.

Fishponds in the courtyard keep the house cool and are decorative.

Horsehead gables

These walls were intended to prevent fire (and burglars) jumping from one building to another but also developed into a means of decorating the buildings.

Pailou doorway

These elaborate constructions known as pailou or paifang were built of stone rather than wood as this made them all the more difficult to break through.

Huang Shan 18

黄山

West gate detail

REPUTED TO BE THE MOST BEAUTIFUL mountain range in the country, the startling, cloud-cloaked peaks of Huang Shan (Yellow Mountain) have for centuries been celebrated by poets and painters. Although the main peak is under 6,200 ft (1,900 m), the 70 sheer rock cliffs are spectacular to hike, and the winding concrete steps are usually very crowded. Even when shrouded in mist as is the norm, the scenery of precipitous peaks, bamboo groves, and ancient, twisted pines is unusually beautiful. Accommodation is available in pretty Wenquan or nearby Tangkou. Consider spending a night at the top for spectacular, but not solitary, sunsets and sunrises.

★ Feilai Shi

The “Rock Flown From Afar,” a massive, rectangular boulder poised at an unlikely angle, overlooks the “Western Sea,” an endless vista of mountain peaks and cascading clouds.

Western Trail

This path, more physically demanding than the eastern route, cuts through splendid rock formations, along narrow, and very steep, flights of steps.

Welcoming Guest Pine

Huan Ke Song, featured on endless postage stamps, appears to beckon the visitor up the mountain and is said to be over a thousand years old.

Qingliang Tai

(Refreshing Terrace) is a popular spot for watching the sunrise.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Feilai Shi
- ★ Shixin Feng
- ★ Aoyu Bei

View from the Top

The summit with its stunning views takes about three hours to explore. Head to Paiyun Ting, “Cloud Dispelling Pavilion,” at the top of the Taiping cable car, for the best views of the sunset.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

125 miles (200 km) S of Hefei. at Tunxi. to Tunxi. from Nanjing or Hefei to Tangkou (5 hr); from Tunxi to Tangkou (1.5 hr); bus to main gate. daily. www.huangshanguide.com

KEY

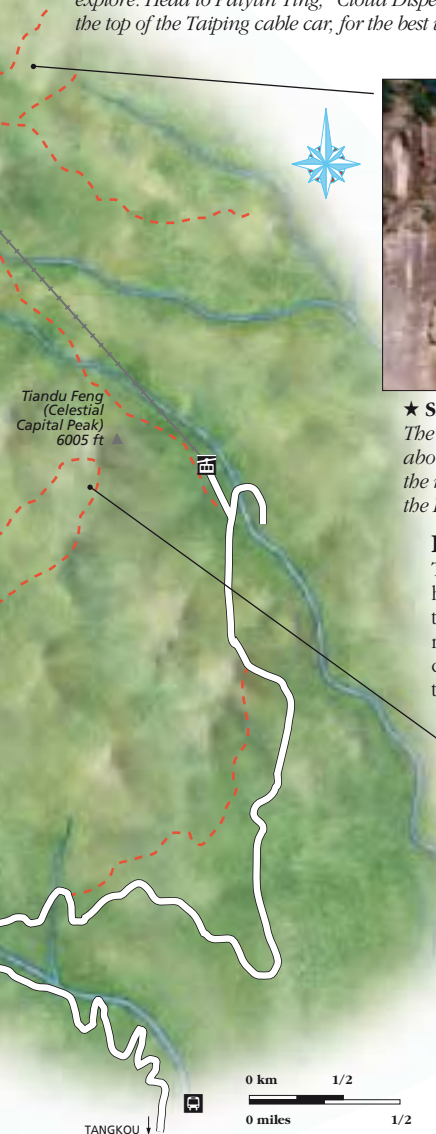

Minibus stop

Cable car

Temple

Path

Road

★ Shixin Feng

The shard-like “Beginning to Believe” peaks, rising above woodland and glistening streams, offer one of the most spectacular views at Huang Shan. Access is via the Immortals’ Bridge at the eastern end of the summit.

EXPLORING HUANG SHAN

The eastern route (5 miles/8 km) takes about three hours; the western route (9 miles/15 km) up to twice that. Some hikers choose to take the eastern route up and the western route down. Two cable cars allow you to bypass much of the walking, but the line-ups are usually very long.

★ Aoyu Bei

On the approach to Tiandu Feng, Aoyu Bei, the Carp’s Backbone, is a disconcertingly exposed and narrow 30-ft (9-m) arch with sheer drops down both sides.

ZHEJIANG & JIANGXI

LYING IMMEDIATELY to the south of Shanghai, Zhejiang is bordered by Jiangxi to its southwest. Northern Zhejiang is a vast region of fertile farmland, with canal towns such as the provincial capital of Hangzhou, and lovely Shaoxing. Hangzhou and the great port of Ningbo are the region's chief industrial and commercial centers. Just off Zhejiang's coastline are some 18,000 islands, among them the holy shrine of Putuo Shan. The south of the province is rugged and mountainous, with superb scenery at Yandang Shan.

Landlocked Jiangxi is sparsely populated compared to the rest of Central China. Its northern reaches are a fertile plain watered by Poyang Hu, the largest freshwater lake in China, and the rivers that feed it. Nanchang, the provincial capital, prospered in the 7th century, following the construction of the Grand Canal. With the growth of coastal treaty ports in the mid-19th century, Jiangxi's economy declined. Later, in the early 20th century, civil strife forced millions into exile. The rugged Jinggang Shan mountains in southern Jiangxi, where most of the fighting took place, are rich in revolutionary associations. To the province's northeast lie the porcelain town of Jingdezhen and the charming mountain resort of Lu Shan.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

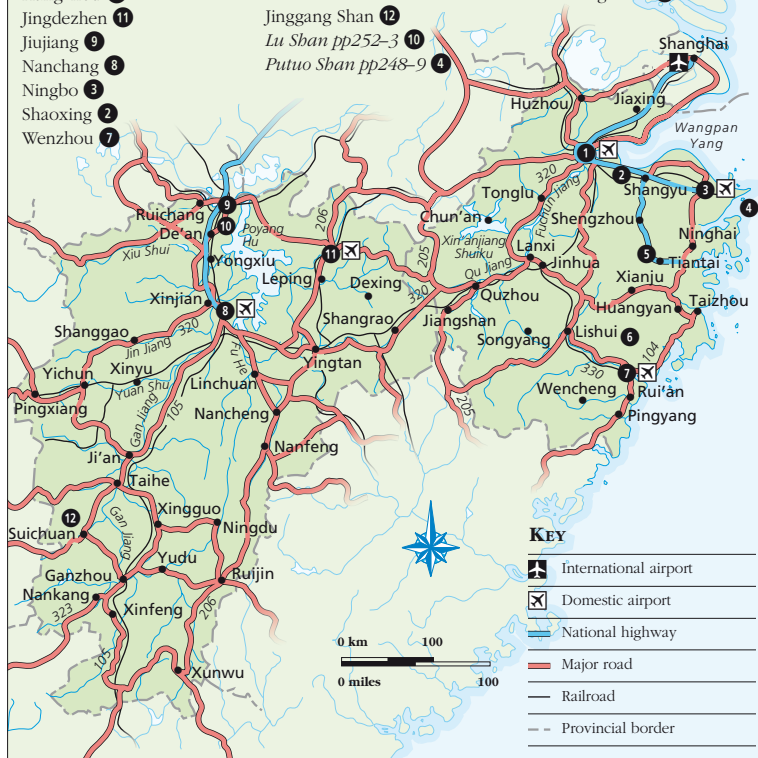

Towns & Cities

- Hangzhou ①
- Jingdezhen ⑪
- Jiujiang ⑨
- Nanchang ⑧
- Ningbo ③
- Shaoxing ②
- Wenzhou ⑦

Areas of Natural Beauty, Islands & Mountains

- Jinggang Shan ⑫
- Lu Shan pp252-3 ⑩
- Putuo Shan pp248-9 ④

- Tiantai Shan ⑤
- Yandang Shan ⑥

Hangzhou ①

杭州

Statue of Yue Fei

RENOWNED IN MEDIEVAL CHINA as an earthly paradise, Hangzhou became the splendid capital of the Southern Song dynasty between 1138 and 1279. The capital flourished and its glories were extolled by Marco Polo, who allegedly visited Hangzhou at the height of its prosperity and described it as “the City of Heaven, the most magnificent in all the world.” Later, when the conquering Mongols chose what is now Beijing as their new capital, Hangzhou continued to be a thriving commercial city. Although most of the old buildings were destroyed in the Taiping Rebellion, the attractive West Lake and its surrounding area are still worth visiting.

Entrance archway to Yue Fei Mu (Tomb of Yue Fei)

Yue Fei Mu

Beishan Lu. ☎ (0571) 8796 8525.

☑ 7:30am–5:30pm daily. 🎫

Just north of the lake lies the tomb of the Song general, Yue Fei, a popular Chinese hero revered for his patriotism. His campaigns against the invading Jin were so successful that his Song overlords began to worry that he might turn against them. He was falsely charged with sedition and executed, only to become a martyr whose exploits were widely celebrated in drama and painting.

The Yue Fei Temple is a late 19th-century construction, and the tomb lies beside it. Leading to the tomb is a small avenue of stone animals. The central tumulus belongs to Yue Fei, while the smaller one is his son's, who was also executed. The kneeling figures in iron represent his tormentors – the prime minister, his wife, a jealous general, and the prison governor. It was customary to spit on them, but this is no longer encouraged.

Huanglong Dong Park & Qixia Shan

North of West Lake (Xi Hu).

This hilly area, crisscrossed with paths, has several sights of interest. Huanglong Dong Park, nestling in the hills, is very attractive with its teahouses, ponds, and flowers, and a pavilion where musicians perform traditional music in summer. To the east is Baoshu Ta, a 20th-century reconstruction of a Song-era pagoda. Looming close by is Qixia Shan (Lingering Clouds Mountain), with the Baopu Daoist Temple located half-way up its slopes.

This active temple has services on most days. It makes an interesting stopover, where visitors can watch pilgrims, priests, and perhaps even one of the frequent ancestral worship ceremonies.

Wood panel carving at Baopu Daoist Temple

Chinese Medicine Museum

95 Dajing Xiang. ☎ (0571) 8702 7507. ☑ 8:30am–5pm daily. 🎫

The interesting Huqinyu Tang Museum of Chinese Medicine is housed in an old apothecary shop. It was established by the merchant Hu Xueyan during the Qing dynasty and traces the history of traditional Chinese medicine, which goes back thousands of years. It is still an active dispensary and pharmacy.

West Lake

See pp242–3.

Tea Museum

Longjing Lu. ☎ (0571) 8796 4232.

☑ daily. 🎫

Tracing the history of tea production (see p293), the Tea Museum has lots of interesting information regarding the different varieties of tea, its cultivation, and the development of tea-making and tea-drinking vessels. Fortunately, many of the captions are in English.

Longjing Village

SW of Tea Museum. 🎫

The village of Longjing (Dragon Well) produces one of China's most famous varieties of green tea. Visitors can wander around the tea terraces, catching glimpses of the different stages of production – cutting, sorting, and drying – and also buy the tea, which varies in price according to its grade.

Inside the main hall of the Chinese Medicine Museum

🏯 Lingyin Si

Lingyin Lu. 📞 (0571) 8796 8665.

🕒 7:30am–4:30pm daily. 🚶
The hill area known as Feilai Feng (The Peak that Flew Here) is home to some of the city's main sights, including Lingyin Si. Founded in AD 326, this temple once housed 3,000 monks who worshiped in more than 70 halls. Though now much reduced in size, it is still one of China's largest temples. It was damaged in the 19th-century Taiping Rebellion, and then again by fire in the 20th century. It is said to owe its survival to Zhou Enlai (see p250), who prevented its destruction during the Cultural Revolution. Still, some parts of the temple are ancient, such as the stone pagodas on either side of the entrance hall, that date from AD 969. Behind this hall is the Great Buddha Hall, with an impressive 66-ft (20-m) statue of the Buddha carved in 1956 from camphor wood.

The Ligong Pagoda at the entrance was built in honor of the Indian monk, Hui Li, who gave the mountain its

Buddha sculptures at Feilai Feng

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

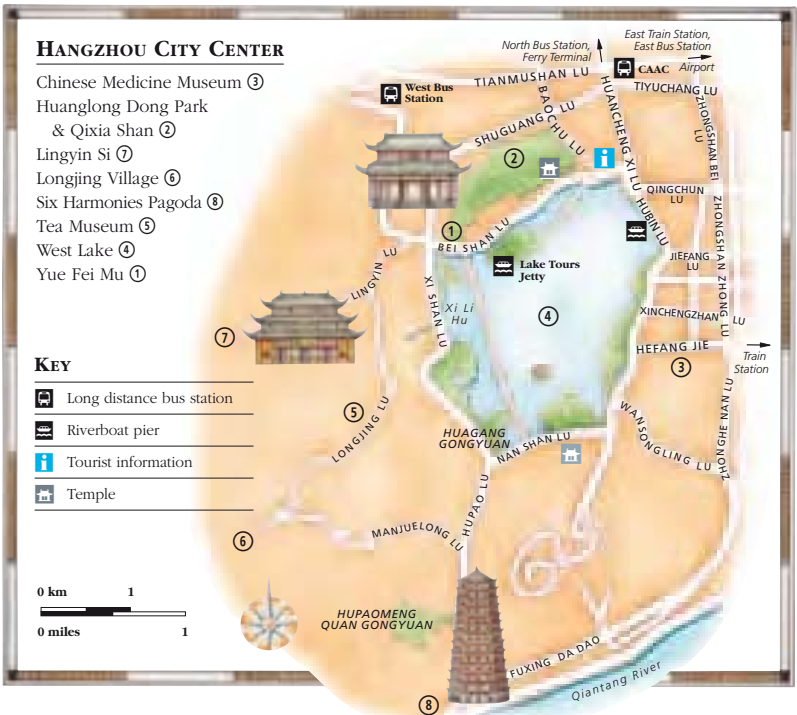

75 miles (120 km) SW of Shanghai. 📞 6,115,000. 🚶 🚶
Train Station, East Train Station.
🚶 East Bus Station, North Bus Station, West Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport). 🚶 Ferry Terminal (to Suzhou & Wuxi). 📞
1 Beishan Lu, (0571) 8521 5525.

eccentric name. Hui Li thought it was the spitting image of a hill in India and asked whether it had flown here. Feilai Feng is known for the dozens of Buddhist sculptures carved into the rock, many dating from the 10th century.

🏯 Six Harmonies Pagoda

16 Zhijiang Lu. 📞 (0571) 8659 1401.

🕒 6:30am–5:30pm daily. 🚶
Standing beside the railway bridge on the northern shore of the Qiantang River, Liuhe Ta is all that is left of an octagonal temple first built in AD 970 to placate the tidal bore, a massive wall of water that rushes upstream during high tide. Over 197-ft (60-m) high, it served as a lighthouse up until the Ming dynasty.

West Lake

西湖

Metal work,
Xiaoying Island

LONG CONSIDERED one of the scenic wonders of China, covering over three square miles (8 sq km), West Lake (Xi Hu) is situated at the heart of Hangzhou. Surrounded by gentle green hills, the lake's willow-shaded causeways and fragrant cover of lotus blossoms have long been an inspiration for artists.

Originally the lake was an inlet off the estuary of the Qiantang River, becoming a lake when the river began to silt up in the 4th century. The lake had a tendency to flood, so several dykes were built, including the Bai and Su Causeways. Hiring a private boat from the eastern shore for an afternoon on the water is highly recommended, as is a leisurely stroll along the shady causeways.

Huagang Garden

This garden is intended as a place for viewing fish. Designed by a Song-dynasty eunuch, its pools are filled with shimmering goldfish in a restful setting of grasses and trees.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Xiaoying Island
- ★ Three Pools Reflecting the Moon
- ★ Su Causeway

★ Three Pools Reflecting the Moon

Three small stone pagodas rise from the waters near Xiaoying Island. At full moon candles are placed within and their openings are covered in paper to create reflections resembling the moon.

★ Xiaoying Island

Often called San Tan Yin Yue Island, referring to the three moon-reflecting pagodas off its shores, Xiaoying Island consists of four enclosed pools fringed by pavilions first built in 1611. The zig-zagging Nine Bend Bridge was built in 1727.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Hangzhou. 🚢 regularly from eastern shore near Hubin Lu. Boats for hire on Gu Shan Island.

Zhejiang Provincial Museum 22 Gushan Lu. ☎ (0571) 8798 0281. 🕒 1pm–4pm Mon, 9am–4pm Tue–Sun. 🎫

★ Su Causeway

The longer of the two causeways takes its name from the Song-dynasty poet, Su Dongpo, who also served as governor. Linked by six stone bridges, the causeway is a peaceful thoroughfare running along the lake's western edge.

Bridge to Quyuan Garden

This bridge leads to a stunning garden surrounded by lotus flowers. It is considered one of the ten prospects from where the lake can be seen to best advantage.

The Seal Engravers Society is open in the summer months.

Zhejiang Provincial Museum

MARCO POLO

Whether Marco Polo ever visited China is much disputed. However, according to the book he dictated to a ghost writer who embroidered it substantially, Polo became governor of Yangzhou for three years during the Yuan dynasty. He describes Hangzhou as paradise and the finest city in the world, with fascinating markets, pleasure boats, and prostitutes. Hangzhou was indeed a cosmopolitan city, ever since the Southern Song dynasty made it their capital; The Travels of Marco Polo, however, may be based on earlier journeys by his father and uncle, and stories from other merchants.

Engraving of Marco Polo, 1254–1324

Bai Causeway

Named after the 9th-century poet-governor Bai Juyi, this dyke leads to Gu Shan, an island first landscaped during the Tang dynasty, and now containing a tea house and the provincial museum.

Lu Xun's Former Residence, Shaoxing

Shaoxing ②

绍兴

47 miles (67 km) SE of Hangzhou.

¥ 4,300,000. ☒ ☒ ☒ ☒

f 3F, 288 Zhongxing Zhong Lu.

www.sx.gov.cn

DESPITE THE proliferation of new buildings, this canal town has retained its charm, with its narrow streets, arched bridges, and whitewashed houses. Ancient Shaoxing was the capital of the Yue kingdom during 770–221 BC. It remained important over the years even when Hangzhou became the Song capital. Today, it is a scenic place to explore for its waterways.

The Qing Teng Shu Wu (Green Vine Study), former home of the 16th-century writer and artist Xu Wei, lies off Dacheng Long, an alley not far from Jiefang Nan Lu.

Regarded as the best example of traditional domestic architecture in China, the house has a simple ornamental garden, while one of its rooms displays Xu's expressive art.

There are also several houses associated with Lu Xun, perhaps the best known modern Chinese writer, born here in 1881. Most of them are clustered together on Lu Xun Lu. The Lu Xun Memorial Hall has no English captions, but Lu Xun's Former Residence is a fine example of domestic architecture, with photographs, furniture, and personal items. Opposite is Sanwei Sushi, the school where he studied.

Shaoxing's most famous bridge, the 13th-century Bazi

Qiao, resembles the Chinese character for number 8, and lies in a charming area of old streets off Baziqiao Zhi Jie, north of Lu Xun Lu.

The town makes a good base for several excursions. The scenic Dong Hu (East Lake) is nearby. Visitors can also take a boat to Yu Ling, allegedly the tomb of Yu the Great, founder of the Xia kingdom (2200 BC). Farther out is Lan Ting (Orchid Pavilion), where China's greatest calligrapher, Wang Xizhi (AD 321–79), threw a party where, so one story goes, guests had to drink cups of wine as they floated past and compose a poem, recorded by the host.

☒ Qing Teng Shu Wu

Houguan Xiang. ☐ daily. ☒

☒ Lu Xun's Former Residence

429 Lu Xun Zhong Lu. ☐ daily. ☒

Stone lion,
Tianye Ge

Ningbo ③

宁波

90 miles (145 km) SE of Hangzhou.

¥ 5,400,000. ☒ ☒ ☒ ☒

f 61 Dashan Jie, (0574) 8731 0467.

CHINA'S GREATEST port between the Song and Ming eras, Ningbo is located upstream from the coast on the Yong River. It was later eclipsed by Shanghai, but has recently regained some importance due to its deep natural harbor. The town has had a long association with commerce. When Shanghai and Guangzhou prospered in the 19th and early 20th centuries, Ningbo's residents were employed as "compradors," agents or mediators by the foreign companies.

Ningbo's main sight is the Tianye Ge, a 16th-century private library, the oldest in China. It resembles a traditional garden with bamboo groves, rockeries, and pavilions, one of which exhibits ancient books and scrolls. To the southeast off Kaiming Jie, is the 14th-century Tianfeng Pagoda. The former foreign concession lies at the northern end of Xinjiang Bridge, with a 17th-century Portuguese church and a French-built hospital. Outside the city, Baoguo Si temple's Mahavira Hall is the oldest surviving wooden building in the Yangzi delta region.

☒ Tianyi Ge

5 Tianyi Jie. ☐ 8:30am–5pm daily. ☒

Charming narrow streets around Tianye Ge, Ningbo

Putuo Shan ④

See pp248–9.

The Guoqing Si Monastery, at the foot of Tiantai Shan

Tiantai Shan ⑤

天台山

118 miles (190 km) SE of Hangzhou. 🚗

THE HEAVENLY Terrace Mountain – Tiantai Shan – is the seat of the Tiantai Buddhist sect, which also has strong links with Daoism (see pp30–31). A pilgrimage site since the Eastern Jin, today it is especially popular with Japanese Buddhists, who regard China as the Buddhist motherland. The sect's founder, the monk Zhiyi, spent most of his life on the mountain, where the imperial court helped him to construct a temple. This wonderfully scenic spot, with its paths, streams, and woodlands, is ideal for walking. Several famous plants such as huading cloud, mist tea, the Tiantai mandarin orange, as well as a variety of medicinal plants, were discovered here.

The first of Tiantai Shan's monasteries, Guoqing Si, lies at its foot, 2 miles (3 km) from Tiantai village. From here, a road leads to the 3,609 ft (1,100 m) Huading Peak. Visitors can then walk to Baijingtai Si (Prayer Terrace Temple) on the summit or to Shiliang (Stone Beam) Waterfall, near the Upper Fanguang Monastery, where there are a number of inscriptions, including one by the famous Song artist, Mi Fu.

The Zhenjue Si (Monastery of True Enlightenment) houses Zhiyi's mummified body in a pagoda in its main hall.

🏯 Huading Peak

🕒 daily. 📷

Yandang Shan ⑥

雁荡山

50 miles (80 km) NE of Wenzhou. 🚗 from Wenzhou to terminus at Baixi.

THIS IS A BEAUTIFUL area of sheer hills, luxuriant slopes, and monasteries. Its highest peak, Baigang Shan reaches 3,773 ft (1,150 m). The Big Dragon Pool Falls (Dalongqiu Pubu) cascade 623 ft (190 m), making them one of China's highest. The path leading to them weaves among towering columns of rock, where, on the hour, a cyclist performs a high-wire act. The largest area is Divine Peaks (Ling Feng), excellent for hiking among caves and strangely shaped peaks. The Divine Cliffs area (Ling Yan), reached by cable car, has walkways and a suspension bridge. From the bus terminus at Baixi, there are several walking trails.

🏯 Big Dragon Pool Falls

🕒 daily. 📷

🏯 Divine Peaks

🕒 daily. 📷

Wenzhou ⑦

温州

124 miles (200 km) S of Ningbo.

👤 7,120,000. 📞 🚗 🏠 🕒 107–1
Xiaonan Lu, (0577) 8825 3137.

LOCATED ON THE southeast coast of Zhejiang province, Wenzhou has always been a seafaring city. It is still a busy port and its booming economy is mainly due to heavy investment by overseas Chinese. A good base for visiting nearby Yandang Shan, the city also offers a few sights of its own. The most popular, Jiangxin Park, is situated on an island in the Ou River and can easily be reached by the regular ferry service from Maxingseng Jie. Completely devoid of traffic, the park's pretty gardens, pavilions, pagodas, and footbridges make it a pleasant place to spend a few hours. It also has a working lighthouse. Stretching between Jiefang Lu and Xinhe Lu to the south of the Ou River is what is left of the old town. Here and there are a few particular buildings of interest such as the 18th-century British-built Protestant church, the 19th-century Catholic church, and the Miaoguo Temple, whose origins are Tang-dynasty.

🏯 Jiangxin Park

Jiangxin Dao. 🚗 from Jiangxin Matou, Wenzhou. 🕒 8am–10pm daily. 📷

Walkway with panoramic views, Yandang Shan

Putuo Shan 4

普陀山

Detail of an incense burner

NESTLED AMONGST numerous islands in the Zhou Shan archipelago, Putuo Shan is one of the four sacred Buddhist mountains, having strong associations with the goddess of compassion and mercy, Guanyin. It has been considered holy since the 10th century, and although the temples suffered greatly at the hands of the Red Guards during the Cultural Revolution, they are still impressive and full of fascination. A small, attractive island, fringed with bright blue waters and sandy beaches, Putuo Shan has become a very popular place of pilgrimage. Minibuses ply the roads between the major temples and sights, but the island's hills, caves and beaches are best explored on foot.

To the summit

A cable car links a minibus stop with the summit of Foding Shan from where there are wonderful views across the island and out to sea.

★ Puji Si

Surrounded by beautiful camphor trees, this extensive temple is located at the island's tourist center. The first temple was built here in the 11th century, although the current temple is far newer.

★ Guanyin Colossus

At the southern tip of the island a massive 108-ft (33-m) statue of Guanyin stands near the shore. A pavilion at its base exhibits a collection of some 400 statues representing the goddess in her numerous incarnations.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Guanyin Colossus
- ★ Puji Si
- ★ Fayu Si

0 meters 500
0 yards 500

Huiji Si

Close to the top of Foding Shan, Huiji Temple, dating back to 1793, stands resplendent amid tea bushes and bamboo groves.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

50 miles (80 km) east of Ningbo, off coast of Zhejiang. ☒ at Zhou Shan. 🚗 from Shanghai (fast ferry: 4 hrs; slow ferry: 14 hrs), Ningbo (fast ferry: 2.5 hrs; slow ferry: 5 hrs), and Zhou Shan (half hour). 🎫 for island access, plus minimal fees for separate sights.

🗓 Guanyin Festival (early Apr).
🌐 www.putuoshan.net

KEY

🚗 Minibus stop

🚢 Ferry

🚠 Cable car

🕒 Cave

--- Paths

== Road

Qian Bu Sha

The loveliest of Putuo Shan's beaches, Qian Bu Sha (Thousand Step Beach) stretches along the eastern coast and is separated from Bai Bu Sha (Hundred Step Beach) by a headland and cave, Chaoyang Dong, concealing a teabouse.

★ Fayu Si

The 200 balls of this charming temple pile up against the flank of a hill overlooking the sea. The Dayuan Hall, unusual for its domed roof and beamless arched ceiling, was brought here from Nanjing in the late 17th century.

THE LEGEND OF HUI'E

Hui'e, a Japanese monk who had purloined a Guanyin figure from the holy Buddhist mountain Wutai Shan, was sailing home when his ship was caught in a violent storm. Fearing for his life, he vowed to build a temple to Guanyin if he were saved. The seas suddenly calmed, and the ship floated gently towards the nearby shores of Putuo Shan. Believing that Guanyin was choosing the island, Hui'e built the promised temple and became a devoted hermit spending the rest of his life on Putuo Shan.

Frieze of Hui'e sailing near Putuo Shan

Nanchang 南昌

南昌

Detail of façade,
Youmin Si

FOUNDED DURING THE HAN ERA, this provincial capital flourished under the Ming dynasty as a center of trade. However, it is best remembered as the scene of a significant uprising led by the Communist leader Zhou Enlai, who took control of the city for a few days in 1927. Although Nanchang was soon recaptured by the Nationalists, the incident started a chain of events that ultimately led to the formation of the People's Republic of China. Despite being largely an industrial city, Nanchang has numerous sights including a good museum and several sites with revolutionary associations.

Offering incense sticks in front of the Youmin Si

Renmin Square

Memorial Hall to the Martyrs of the Revolution 399 Bayi Dadao. ☎ (0791) 626 2566. ☐ 2:30–5pm Sun–Fri. 📺 The huge, open space of Renmin (People's) Square is surrounded by some impressive, if slightly chilling, examples of Soviet-inspired revolutionary architecture. At the southern end is the Monument to the Martyrs, a theatrical sculpture of revolutionary fervor topped by a rifle, while the vast Exhibition Hall is decorated with a glittering red star. Just north of the square is the Memorial Hall to the Martyrs of the Revolution, which exhibits archival photographs of events in China between the 1920s and 1940s.

Zhu De's Former Residence

Near Bayi Dao Dao. ☐ daily. This attractive wooden house dates from 1927, when it housed the fledgling revolutionaries, Zhu De and Zhou Enlai, who led the uprising that briefly captured the city on August 1 of that year. Their army, consisting of about 30,000 rebels, held the city until the Kuomintang forces drove them out. Although the operation was a failure, it is considered a defining moment in 20th-century Chinese history, and celebrated as the day of the birth of the Red Army.

ZHOU ENLAI (1898–1976)

Premier Zhou Enlai
in 1973

Zhou Enlai, one of the early members of the Chinese Communist Party, became the nation's prime minister in 1949. His pragmatism and diplomacy helped him survive the constant upheavals of Mao Zedong's chairmanship. To the West, he represented the reasonable and affable side of the Chinese people, while to his countrymen, he was the only member of the government to understand their problems. He is credited with curbing some of the excesses of the Cultural Revolution. When he died, the outpouring of grief in China was spontaneous and heartfelt.

Youmin Si

177 Minde Lu. ☐ 5am–5pm daily. 📺 Bayi Park ☐ 5am–11:30pm daily. 📺 This Buddhist temple founded in the Liang era in the 6th century is one of Jiangxi's principal shrines. It was damaged during the Cultural Revolution, and has now been restored. One of its three halls has a 33-ft (10-m) high Buddha statue standing on a lotus. The temple also houses a Ming-dynasty bronze bell and another cast during the Tang era in AD 967.

Just south of the temple is Bayi Park (August 1st Park), formerly the site of the imperial examination halls. It is a pleasant expanse of water and greenery, with an enclosed garden known as Old Man Su's Vegetable Plot, after its Song-dynasty owner.

Revolutionary Museum

380 Zhongshan Lu. ☐ daily. 📺 Housed in a striking building that was once a hotel, the August 1 Uprising Museum was the headquarters of the Communist forces led by Zhou Enlai, that captured the city in 1927. Its three floors are filled with period furniture and weaponry.

Teng Wang Pavilion

7 Yanjiang Lu. ☎ (0791) 670 2055. ☐ daily. 📺 The impressive Teng Wang Pavilion was first built in 653, during the early Tang-era and immortalized by the poet Tang Bo. There have been about 26 versions of the pavilion since then – the latest was erected in 1989 to replace the one destroyed by fire in 1926. The 197-ft (60-m) high structure is in the Southern Song style. Visitors can take a lift to the top for views of the city. Occasional performances of dance and music or local opera are also held in the tiny theater.

The stately Teng Wang Pavilion, on the banks of the Gan Jiang

🏛️ The Provincial Museum

1 Xinzhou Lu. 🕒 Tue–Sun. 🚏
Located near the river in the west of the city, this museum's exhibition space still needs to be filled. However, the existing exhibits are interesting, and include fossils found in Jiangxi, and a range of porcelain from the kilns at Jingdezhen, dating from the 4th century to the Qing era. There are also several funeral items from the Spring & Autumn period and the Ming era, including statuary, jade belts, and jewelry, some of which was discovered in the tomb of the son of Hongwu, founder of the Ming dynasty.

🗼 Shengjin Ta

Zhishi Jie. 🕒 entry is often closed. 🚏
Formerly part of a temple, this 194-ft (59-m) high brick pagoda was first built in the late Tang dynasty, but was entirely rebuilt in the 18th century. Like many pagodas,

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

312 miles (500 km) SW of Hangzhou. 🚗 4,100,000. 🛩️ Xiangtan Airport. 🚉 Train Station. 🚌 Long Distance Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport). 🚢 Ferry Terminal. 📞 169 Fuzhou Lu, (0791) 638 2245.

its construction was said to avert disaster, while its destruction heralded the fall of the city. The pagoda is located in a quaint neighborhood with a handful of tea-houses, barber shops, and grocery stores.

🏞️ Qingyun Pu

Dingshan Qiao. 🕒 Tue–Sun. 🚏
The Blue Cloud Garden or Ba Da Shan Ren Museum was the retreat of one of China's great painters, Zhu Da, who flourished at the end of the Ming era and the early Qing dynasty. He was a descendant of the Ming imperial family who went into hiding here after their fall, in what was originally designed as a Taoist retreat. His paintings, strikingly spare and direct, are reproduced here.

NANCHANG CITY CENTER

- The Provincial Museum ⑥
- Renmin Square ①
- Revolutionary Museum ④
- Shengjin Ta ⑦
- Teng Wang Pavilion ⑤
- Youmin Si ③
- Zhu De's Former Residence ②

KEY

- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 🚢 Ferry terminal
- 📧 Post office

0 meters 800

0 yards 800

Xunyang Lou, an impressive re-creation of a Tang-era tavern

Jiujiang ⑨

九江

115 miles (184 km) N of Nanchang.
 4,380,000. 6 Lufeng Lu, (0792) 856 0600.

THE GATEWAY to Lu Shan, the ancient port of Jiujiang, was used for shipping rice and tea and, during the Ming dynasty, porcelain from Jingdezhen. Badly damaged during the Taiping insurrection, it was later opened to foreign trade in 1861 and became noted for its tea bricks.

The older and livelier part of town lies close to the river, separated from the industrial section by two lakes. Yanshui Ting, the Misty Water Pavilion, is located on a small island on Gantang Hu. It was most recently rebuilt in the Qing dynasty and contains a museum showing old photos of Jiujiang. Nengren Si was founded in AD 502. Closed during the Cultural Revolution, it now houses a flourishing community of monks.

The Xunyang Lou is a modern reincarnation of a Tang-dynasty wooden tavern, which was the setting for a raucous scene in the Chinese classic, The Water Margin (see pp28–9).

Nengren Si

168 Yuliang Nan Lu. ☐ daily. 📷

Xunyang Lou

Binjiang Lu. ☐ 8am–7pm daily. 📷

Lu Shan ⑩

庐山

Circular gateway at Lu Shan

DURING THE 19TH CENTURY, this beautiful area of highland scenery was developed by Edward Little, a Methodist minister and property speculator, as a resort area for Europeans. Later it became a favorite retreat among Chinese politicians; Chiang Kai Shek had a summer residence here and from 1949 Lu Shan was popular with Mao and his ministers. Today, despite the summer crowds, Lu Shan remains a refreshing place for walks among lakes, hills, and waterfalls.

★ Floral Path

This walk skirts the edge of the western cliffs, giving marvelous views over the Jinxui Valley. The path leads to the Immortal's Cave, once inhabited by a Daoist monk.

★ Dragon's Head Cliff

Magnificent views combine with the sound of the wind in the pine forest and the roaring of waterfalls in the Stone Gate Ravine.

STAR FEATURES

- ★ Dragon's Head Cliff
- ★ Floral Path
- ★ Meilu Villa

Suspension Bridge

0 meters 500
 0 yards 500

KEY

-  Bus station
-  Cable car
-  Tourist information
-  Path
-  Built-up area

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Guling, 22 miles (35 km) S of Jiujiang.  from Jiujiang Bus Station; minibus from ferry car park.  daily.  entry to scenic area and for each site.

★ Meilu Villa

Named after his wife Song Meiling, this is the former villa of Chiang Kai Shek and one of the few places in China that commemorates his period of rule.

People's Hall

The site of the 1959 Central Committee Congress during which Peng Dehuai criticized Mao's Great Leap Forward is now a museum.

Lu Shan Museum

is housed in Mao's former villa.

Black Dragon Pool

Five streams plunge over a huge stone into a pool, which is said to be inhabited by a dark dragon, although the water is limpid and clean.

Porcelain

DESPITE CHINESE POTTERY'S long history, it was not until the Bronze Age (between about 1500 and 400 BC) that special clays and hotter kilns resulted in a harder, sometimes glazed stoneware. True porcelain, however, did not appear until the Sui dynasty. A far finer type of ceramic, true porcelain is smooth and polished, and produces an almost crystalline ring when struck; at its most delicate, it is even translucent. Porcelain became popular in Europe during the 16th century, and the Portuguese, and later the Dutch and English, set up a lucrative trade between China and the rest of the world.

Blue and White Ming porcelain is seen by some as the epitome of Chinese style. The elegance of the designs and the depth of color are astounding.

Jingdezhen clay is the key to the quality of the porcelain and is a mixture of fine white kaolin and "petuntse" (a crushed feldspar rock). The resulting fine powder is washed, strained through silk, and dried.

As on a production line, each artisan performs a single task in the porcelain-making process. The clay is centered on a wheel and thrown into a rough shape, sculpted into a finer piece with scrapers, and brushed with water to create a smooth surface.

A cobalt blue underglaze may be added before coating with a clear glaze of limestone ash, the finest petuntse, and water. The glaze absorbs the blue dye and fuses into the original clay to form a hard glassy porcelain.

Firing is a crucial stage in making porcelain—fluctuations in temperature can ruin thousands of pieces in one go. The best porcelain is fired inside clay "saggars"—cases that protect them from dust and sudden variations in heat.

Rose medallion porcelain was made specially for export. Often these pieces were made to Western designs in terms of shape and decoration. Sometimes dinner sets displaying a family or even a royal crest were produced, and designs were sent from Europe to be reproduced by the Chinese.

Characters for Emperor Hongzhi

Reign mark starts here and reads top to bottom, right to left

Reign marks show the reign name of the emperor when the piece was made. However, the ease with which they can be faked renders accurate dating the task of experts.

PORCELAIN TIMELINE

HAN

A key development during this period was the art of glazing. Simple pots began changing from everyday items to works of art.

TANG

Technical advances during the Tang dynasty saw the production of new types of porcelain, most famously the sancai (tri-colored) pieces illustrating figures from the Silk Road.

SONG

Beautiful Song porcelain is characterized by simple shapes glazed in a single, rich color. New shapes were developed, as well as the cracked glazing technique.

YUAN

Porcelain from the Mongol dynasty absorbed foreign influences. Cobalt blue underglaze was introduced, and later perfected during the Ming period.

MING

The Ming dynasty was the era of imperial patronage of Jingdezhen and large-scale exportation to the West. The kilns flourished and the artisans returned to a richer palette of colors and pictorial design.

QING

The latter part of this dynasty was often characterized by overly elaborate design and poor quality, but the early part of the Qing saw the production of delicate famille rose porcelain.

One of Jingdezhen's many pottery shops

Jingdezhen ①

景德镇

90 miles (145 km) NE of Nanchang.

📍 1,500,000. 🏠 🏢 🏠 🏠 CITS, 8 Lianhuatang Lu, (0798) 822 2939.

FOR CENTURIES the ceramic capital of China, Jingdezhen is still one of the country's major porcelain producers. Although pottery kilns were operating here as far back as the Han dynasty, it was the discovery of real porcelain, during the Five Dynasties era (907–79 AD), which depended on locally found clay rich in feldspar, that brought Jingdezhen its pre-eminence. During the Ming dynasty, its location near the imperial capital of Nanjing increased its importance and it became famous for fine porcelain with a blue underglaze. Although the quality of the porcelain is lower than in the past, the main reason for visiting Jingdezhen is still ceramic production. Visiting a factory or one of the ancient kiln sites will need to be arranged though CITS but there are also several places of interest that can be visited independently.

The Museum of Ceramic History (Taoci Lishi Bowuguan) is located in a rural setting on the western edge of town. Displays of items taken from ancient kiln sites around Jingdezhen and of potters at work effectively make this museum interactive. The museum is housed in an elegant Ming house, a rare survivor among the many that would once have graced the town. The adjacent Ancient Pottery Factory (Guyao Cichang) gives demonstrations of the ancient techniques used in the making of porcelain.

The Porcelain Museum (Taoci Guan) houses a collection of beautiful porcelain from the Song, Ming, and Qing dynasties, as well as some of the finer creations produced since the establishment of the PRC in 1949.

The main porcelain market is on Jiefang Lu. Porcelain in all shapes and sizes is sold here, from classical-period reproductions to garden ornaments and sentimental reproductions of dogs and cats. For a view across the roofs of town, visitors can climb the wooden four-story Longzhu Ge (Dragon Pearl Pavilion).

Detail from museum entrance

🏠 Museum of Ceramic History

Zhonghua Bei Lu. ☐ daily. 🎫

🏠 Porcelain Museum

21 Lianshe Beilu Lu. ☐ daily. 🎫

The wooden Longzhu Ge, with views across Jingdezhen

The Long March

DURING THE 1920s THE outlawed Communist leaders sought refuge from the Kuomintang (KMT) at remote rural bases, or “soviets,” in Sichuan, Hunan, and, in Jiangxi province, at Jinggang Shan, the headquarters run by Mao Zedong and Zhu De. In October 1934, with the KMT closing in, the Jiangxi Soviet was forced to break out and join thousands of revolutionaries on a tactical retreat. Covering, largely at night, an average of 20 miles (32 km) a day, the Communists marched 5,900 miles (9,500 km) in a year. The march, though not a strategic success, was a psychological victory.

⑧ Yan'an was the end point of the march on 19 October 1935. Mao arrived with 5000 marchers and established the Yan'an Soviet as an independent communist state.

⑦ Crossing the remote, boggy and freezing Aba Grasslands brought enormous losses. A subsequent meeting with rival, Zhang Guotao, firmly established Mao's primacy.

KEY

— Long March

0 kilometers 300
0 miles 300

⑥ Daxue Shan, the Great Snowy Mountains, are some of the highest in the country. Crossing the passes was the most challenging episode of the Long March, and led to the death, through altitude sickness, exhaustion, and exposure, of many Red Army soldiers.

③ The Luding Chain Bridge (see p371) was the only means of crossing the Dadu River. Blocked by KMT troops who had removed most of the bridge's planks, 22 Red Army soldiers took the bridge by crawling along the remaining chains, with the loss of 7 men.

④ At Lu Shan Pass, the Red Army reached the pass just ahead of the KMT, deceived their pursuers, and gained an unexpected victory.

⑤ Zunyi was taken despite heavy losses in January 1935. Mao emerged from the ensuing conference as leader of the Communist Party and commander of the Red Army; the Soviet-supported general was expelled.

The Red Army—outlawed, barred and hungry—had to fight battles, outwit their better equipped enemy, and cross inhospitable terrain in all seasons.

Many prominent Long Marchers became China's future leaders, including (from left) Bo Gu (Communist leader until 1935), Zou Enlai, Zhu De, and Mao Zedong.

① Jinggang Shan was the base of the Jiangxi Soviet whose position was steadily being eroded by advancing KMT troops. Led by Mao Zedong, the Long March started from here on 16 October 1934.

② The crossing of the Xiang river was the marchers' first major battle. Accounted a disaster, huge amounts of equipment were lost in the waters.

The thickly-wooded slopes of Jinggang Shan

Jinggang Shan ⑫ 井冈山

Ciping, 200 miles (320 km) S of Nanchang. 🚗 🚶 2 Tianjie Lu, (0792) 655 6788. 🏠 for most revolutionary and scenic sights. 🌐 www.jgstour.com

THERE ARE TWO reasons for visiting Jinggang Shan: its scenery, which has been featured on Chinese bank notes, and its revolutionary associations. The mountain range, of which the main peak is Jinggang Shan, sometimes known as Wuzhi Feng (Five Fingers Peak), reaches to 5,200 ft (1,586 m). There are magnificent views, especially at sunrise, as well as a great variety of plants, birds, butterflies and other insects.

The village of Ciping was completely destroyed during the civil war of the 1930s but was rebuilt after 1949 as a sort of shrine to the communist struggle and to the Long March in particular. There are a number of buildings commemorating the way of life of the early revolutionaries, forced here in the late 1920s by Chiang Kai Shek's obsessive persecution, which culminated in a massacre of striking workers in Shanghai in 1927. It is possible here to gain some idea of what life was like for the revolutionaries, as they developed their strategy before the epic walk to Shaanxi. A short distance away is the watching post at Huangyang Jie, where the Red Army repulsed

Kuomintang troops in 1928.

Located at about 3,300 ft (1,000 m), Ciping was the centre of the Jinggang Shan revolutionary base during the 1920s and 1930s and is now the site of local government. Its location at the center of the mountain range and growing collection of hotels make it a good base for exploring the area. The beauty of the area is a startling contrast with its image as a gritty, revolutionary stronghold. There are the beautiful 33-ft (100-m) Shuikou waterfalls, located in a luxuriant valley surrounded by rocks amid bamboo, azaleas and pine forest. Wulong Tan, a few miles north of Ciping, is composed of several limpid pools into which stream a number of rapids and waterfalls. A cable car can take you to the top and give you magnificent views over the whole area, whilst for those with the inclination and energy, much of the area can be enjoyed on foot.

Monument outside Wulong Tan

Pearl Pool, one of the five waterfalls at Wulong Tan

HUNAN & HUBEI

HUNAN AND HUBEI are Central China's westernmost provinces.

Hubei is dominated by the mighty Yangzi River, and its capital Wuhan is a great industrial city on the river. The mountainous Three Gorges in western Hubei near Yichang is now the site of the world's largest dam, due for completion in 2009. The scenic Shennongjia Forest Reserve, home of the legendary Wild Man, and Wudang Shan, known for its martial arts school, are spectacular sights definitely worth visiting, although remote and difficult to access.

Hunan's fertile farmlands lured millions of migrants during the political upheavals in North China between the 8th and 11th centuries. An important grain producer during the Ming and Qing dynasties, by the 19th century the population had outgrown the land, and the ensuing unrest was exploited by the Taiping Heavenly Kingdom Rebellion (see p422). The region's poverty also had a great impact on China's history in the 20th century. As the birthplace of Mao Zedong, Hunan's revolutionary credentials are still one of its principal attractions, both in Changsha, the capital, and in Mao's birthplace at Shaoshan. Other popular sights include Dongting Hu, China's second-largest lake, in the northeast, the temples at scenic Heng Shan in the south, and the wonderful mountain scenery of Wulingyuan in the northwest.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Changsha 1
- Furongzhen 4
- Jingzhou 8
- Wuhan 7
- Yueyang 6

Historic Sites

- Shaoshan 2

Temples & Holy Mountains

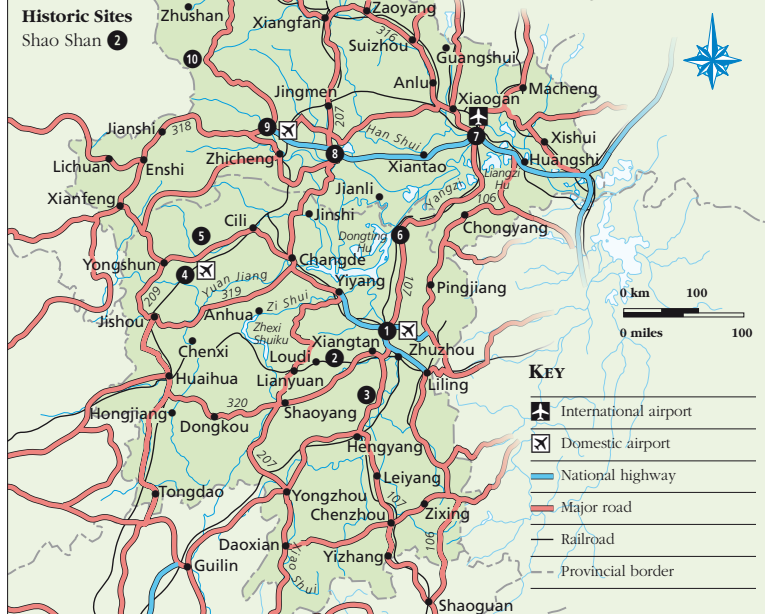

- Heng Shan 3
- Wudang Shan 11

Nature Reserves & Areas of Natural Beauty

- Shennongjia 10
- Wulingyuan pp264-5 5

Dams

- Yichang 9

No. 1 Teachers' Training College, Changsha

Changsha ①

长沙

180 miles (290 km) S of Wuhan.

⚠ 5,750,000. 🚗 🚝 🚆

📍 59, 2 Duan, Furong Zhong Lu.

AN IMPORTANT ancient city, Changsha was the capital of the Chu kingdom until the unification of China under the Qin in 280 BC. Much later, the city's profile was raised once more when in 1903 it became a treaty port, open to foreign trade. During the Sino-Japanese war in 1938, it was damaged by the Kuomintang. The town is associated with Mao Zedong, who attended college here from 1912 to 1918.

The excellent Hunan Provincial Museum houses many items of interest, including a collection of painted neolithic pottery and bronzes from the Shang and Zhou eras. However, the principal displays were excavated from three Han-dynasty tombs at Mawangdui, to the east of the city. The first tomb belonged to the wife of the Marquis of Dai, the second was that of the Marquis himself, while the third contained their son. The Marquis, Li Cang, became prime minister in 193 BC, and died in 186. The tombs contained a wooden outer coffin, surrounded by a protective layer of clay and charcoal, within which were four other coffins, lacquered and hand-somely painted. The bodies had been dressed in several layers of silk. His wife's body (on display in a liquid-filled tank) was so well preserved that her skin retained a certain amount of elasticity. Amazingly scientists were able to determine that she died at 50, and was suffering from tuberculosis and arthritis. According to the customs at the time, the tombs were filled with foods and furnishings to comfort that part of the soul that remains on earth, and a silk banner that mapped the Han belief system. Close by is the pleasantly landscaped Martyrs' Park.

Among the numerous sites related to Mao Zedong, the most interesting is the Hunan No. 1 Teachers' Training College, where he studied from 1913, when he was 19, until 1918. Although he famously failed his art exam, by drawing a circle and calling it an egg, he was declared student of the year in 1917. At college, he devoted much of his time in organizing student societies, a useful practise for his future role as leader. Mao returned as a teacher between 1920 and 1922. Visitors can follow a self-guided route through the rebuilt college, which is still active, visiting the dormitories, the well where Mao bathed in cold water, and the halls where he held political meetings.

🏛️ Hunan Provincial Museum & Martyrs' Park

3 Dongfeng Lu. 🕒 9am–5pm daily. 🚗

🎓 Hunan No. 1 Teachers' Training College

207 Shuyuan Lu. 🕒 daily. 🚗

Shao Shan ②

韶山

80 miles (130 km) SW of Changsha.

🚗 daily from Changsha. 🚗

THE BIRTHPLACE OF Mao Zedong, China's leader from 1949 until his death in 1976, Shao Shan is really two towns. The newer one is near the railway station, while the village of Shao Shan Dong, where the "Great Helmsman" spent his early years is 4 miles (6 km) away. At the height of the Mao phenomenon during the Cultural Revolution, special pilgrimage trains, crowded with Red Guards, brought almost 8,000 worshippers a day. Shao Shan is still popular and any buildings connected with Mao are now preserved as museums.

Mao's Family House, where he was born in 1893, is typically rural, except for its displays of memorabilia. Next to it lies the Mao Zedong Exhibition Hall and nearby to that sits the Mao Ancestral Temple.

Mao statue, No. 1 Teachers' Training College

Overlooking the village is Shao Peak, accessed by cable car. About 2 miles (3 km) from the village is Dripping Water Cave, where, legend has it, Mao pondered over the Cultural Revolution in 1966.

🏠 Mao's Family House & Mao Zedong Exhibition Hall

Shao Shan Chong. 📞 (0732) 568 5157. 🕒 8am–5:30pm daily. 🚗

Stone tablets engraved with Mao's poems, Shao Peak, Shao Shan

Grand gateway of the Zhusheng Si Monastery, Nanyue

Heng Shan ③

衡山

75 miles (120 km) S of Changsha.

☎ (0734) 566 2571. 🚌 from Changsha to Nanyue. 🕒 daily. 🏯

ONE OF THE FIVE holy Daoist mountains, Heng Shan at 4,232 ft (1,290 m) is a cluster of wooded peaks, dotted with temples that were established some 1,300 years ago. The gateway to Heng Shan is Nanyue, a five-hour bus journey from Changsha. It is a pleasant little town with two main streets, and a couple of significant temples. Nanyue Damiao has been a place of worship for both Buddhist and Daoists since the early 8th century AD, although the current buildings, modeled on Beijing's Forbidden City, date from the 19th century. The other, Zhusheng Si, is an 8th-century Buddhist monastery, rebuilt in the 18th century.

The mountain can be explored on foot or by minibus, but it is a 9-mile (15-km) walk to the top. There is a cable car to the summit from about halfway. A number of monasteries and temples lie along the path that meanders through lush countryside before reaching the Martyrs' Memorial Hall, honoring those who died in the 1911 revolution. Next is the 7th-century Xuandu Si, Hunan's main Daoist temple. The route finally leads to Shangfeng Si, also the minibus terminus. Just beyond is the summit marked by Zhurong Gong, a tiny stone temple. Visitors can stay at a hotel near the top for views from the Terrace for Watching the Sunrise.

Furongzhen ④

芙蓉镇

249 miles (400 km) NW of Changsha.

🚗 to Mengdonghe, then bus or boat. 🚢 from Mengdonghe.

MENG DONG HE is the jumping-off point to Furongzhen (Wang Cun), the location of the eponymous 1986 film. Wang Cun, meaning Hibiscus Town, was an adaptation of the novel A Town Called Hibiscus by Gu Hua. It was one of the first books to show how the political upheavals of the 1950s and 1960s affected people in rural China. Furongzhen is an attractive town with stone streets and old wooden buildings. Its Tujia Museum on Hepan Jie is devoted to the culture of the indigenous Tujia people. Visitors can also go rafting near Furongzhen, on the Yuan Jiang River.

Wulingyuan ⑤

See pp264-5.

Yueyang ⑥

岳阳

62 miles (100 km) N of Changsha.

🏯 5,104,000. 🚗 at Chenglingji. 📞 25 Yunmeng Lu, (0730) 821 8922.

SITUATED ON THE banks of the Yangzi and the shores of Dongting Hu, China's second largest freshwater lake, Yueyang is an important stopping point for river ferries and trains on the Beijing to Guangzhou line. Its main sight, Yueyang Tower, was once part of a Tang-era temple. The current structure, dating from the Qing era, is an impressive sight, with its glazed yellow-tiled roofs overlooking the lake. Nearby are two pavilions, Xianmei Ting and Sanzui Ting; the latter was where Lu Dongbin, one of the Daoist Eight Immortals (see pp30-31), came to drink wine. To the south is Cishi Ta, a pagoda built in 1242 to propitiate flood-causing demons.

A 30-minute boat ride from Yueyang is the small island of Junshan Dao, a former Daoist retreat that is now famous for its silver needle tea.

🏯 Yueyang Tower

Dongting Beilu. ☎ (0730) 831 5588.

🕒 daily. 🏯

A river boat at the scenic Junshan Dao (Junshan Island)

Cult of Mao

1960s Mao
lapel badge

WHEN HE BECAME Chairman in 1949, Mao Zedong was already a figure of almost mystical stature, having led the Red Army since 1934. He was an ideologue and whilst his impatience at the pace of reform led to decisions that often brought disaster, skillful maneuvering by the party meant that he remained a heroic figurehead. The Cultural Revolution (see pp64–5) 1966–76, was, at the expense of millions of lives, a calculated attempt to make Mao a deity. The years after his death saw a diminution of his status, but since the 1990s his popularity has revived. Once again Mao is considered by millions to be weida – Great.

Mao's portrayal not only as a deity but as a man of the people, was part of the ambiguity of the cult. Nonetheless, Mao remains at the center of the image surrounded by adoring women.

POSTER ART

In the 1960s the Chinese propaganda machine turned out posters featuring Mao by the million. He was often portrayed as a benevolent avatar, a god come among the people to transform their lives.

A Mao study group discusses Mao's philosophy in the late 1960s. His thought briefly became a modern substitute for the Confucian philosophy that had dominated Chinese intellectual life for millennia.

"Celebrate the birth and life of Chairman Mao for 10,000 years."

Mao's face was always a ruddy red, as artists were told to avoid grey and to imbue him with cherub-like youth.

The thoughts of Chairman Mao were collected in 1961 in a volume, known as the "Little Red Book," which was distributed to all Red Guards.

Pilgrims at Shao Shan, Mao's birthplace (see p 260), pay their respects. At the height of the Cultural Revolution, several trains a day pulled into Shao Shan to disgorge thousands of fervent pilgrims. In the 1980s this traffic all but ceased but has revived in recent years.

"Chairman Mao is the red sun in our hearts" according to this poster. The uppermost characters say "the East is Red," the name of a piece of music that became an anthem of the Cultural Revolution.

Early poster art was slightly different in character from later propaganda. Although this poster asks people to march forward under the banner of Mao Zedong, revolutionary Soviet-endorsed communism, rather than Maoism, is celebrated on the flags.

Light always radiates from behind Mao, just as a halo might appear behind a god in a temple.

Mao memorabilia is widely available in China, although many of the pieces on sale at markets today have been produced specifically for the tourist market.

Since Mao's death the Party has had to tread a delicate line between condemnation of his excesses and praise for his achievements. His portrait still hangs at the north end of Tian'an Men Square; perhaps his posthumous function is as a symbol of a united China.

Domestic shrines with a figure of Mao to whom family members would address their revolutionary prayers started replacing Daoist and Buddhist shrines during the 1960s. Mao shrines are still seen, although the Party disapproves.

MAO ATTACKED

In 1994 Mao's private physician, Li Zhisui, wrote The Private Life of Chairman Mao, in which Mao is portrayed as vain, cold, and contemptuous of his colleagues and of the suffering of the Chinese people. The book was instantly banned by the Chinese government. At the time of publication, Li was living in the United States and so escaped persecution. The book provides some surprising insights into Mao's habits and opinions. However, many critics, even those unsympathetic to Mao's politics, claim that the book is simply opportunistic.

The jacket of Li's biography

Wulingyuan ⑤

武陵源

Sedan chair for tired tourists

OFTEN CALLED ZHANGJIAJIE, this 243-square-mile (391-sq-km) scenic preserve is a karst landscape (see pp412-13) of enormous beauty, with rocky pinnacles rising from a coverlet of dense sub-tropical vegetation. Wulingyuan covers three natural reserves – Zhangjiajie, Tianzi Shan, and Suoxi Yu – and contains well over 500 species of tree, including the dawn redwood, which was believed to be extinct until it was re-identified in 1948. It is also a haven for fauna, including giant salamanders, rhesus monkeys, and a wide variety of birds. The park is often cloaked in fog, adding atmosphere but obscuring most views. Summers are excessively humid.

★ Huang Shi Zhai

At 3,450 ft (1,050 m), Huang Shi Zhai is the highest area in Wulingyuan. The climb up the 3,878 steps requires a good two hours; there is also a cable car if the stairway sounds too daunting.

Kongzhong Tianyuan

The Heavenly Garden is an isolated outcrop covered in a mantle of green and surrounded by clusters of slender pinnacles and towering peaks.

★ Xianren Qiao

The Bridge of the Immortals is a spectacular, narrow and unenclosed span of rock over a deep chasm.

TIANZI SHAN
ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

ZHEN

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Huang Shi Zhai
- ★ Xianren Qiao
- ★ Huanglong Dong

Tianzi Ge

In the northern part of the preserve, the pinnacle of this bill allows views of a valley forested with dozens of fine, splinter-like tors. Numerous underground caverns are found throughout the surrounding area.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

155 miles (250 km) NW of Changsha. ☒ at Zhangjiajie Shi (Zhangjiajie City). 🚏 to Zhangjiajie Shi. 🚗 to Zhangjiajie Shi; 1 hour minibus to Zhangjiajie Cun (Zhangjiajie Village). 🕒 daily. 🎫 26 Ziwu Zhong Lu, Zhangjiajie Shi, (0744) 822 2301. 📄 valid for 2 days. 🌐 www.zhangjiajie.com.cn

KEY

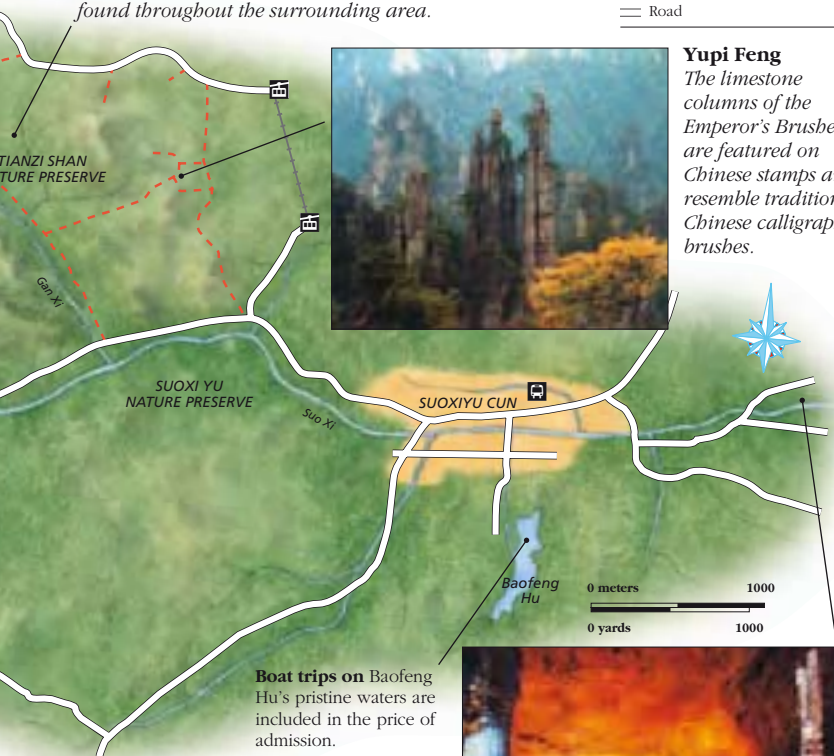

🚏 Bus station

🚗 Cable car

--- Path

🏠 Built-up area

== Road

Yupi Feng

The limestone columns of the Emperor's Brushes are featured on Chinese stamps and resemble traditional Chinese calligraphy brushes.

Boat trips on Baofeng Hu's pristine waters are included in the price of admission.

EXPLORING WULINGYUAN

The main entrance is just past Zhangjiajie Cun. Follow the left path for a four-hour walk that includes Huang Shi Zhai. The right path presents several options, taking you, eventually, away from the crowds. Accommodations are available in Zhangjiajie Cun, as well as Suoxiyu Cun, which is a good base for exploring the east and north of the park. Simple inns are scattered throughout the reserve.

★ Huanglong Dong

Although illuminated garishly, 7 mile (11 km) Yellow Dragon Cave loses none of its impact. Boat tours drift down its subterranean river.

Wuhan 7

武汉

Daoist statue,
Changchun
Guan

AN IMPORTANT PORT ON THE YANGZI, Hubei's capital is an amalgamation of three older cities. Wuchang, capital of the State of Wu (770–221 BC), and Hanyang, founded in the Sui era (AD 581–618), are ancient settlements, while Hankou was founded in 1861 when it became a treaty port for foreign trade. As a result the city was a center for early Chinese industrialization, when iron and steel works were built here in the 19th century. It was also the site of the first uprising of the 1911

Revolution that led to the fall of the Qing dynasty and the formation of Republican China.

Ancestral musical instruments at the Hubei Provincial Museum

Hubei Provincial Museum

156 Donghu Lu. ☎ (027) 8679 4127.

🕒 8:30am–5pm daily. 🎫

Located on the shore of Dong Hu, this is one of China's best museums. Among its highlights are items excavated in 1978 from the tomb of the Marquis of Yi, an eminent figure from the Warring States period. He died in 433 BC and was buried in a lacquered coffin, accompanied by his concubines, his dog, and thousands of bronze, stone, and woodem items. Many of these are on display, but the most impressive is the panoply of bronze bells which produce two notes each when struck.

Ferry rides are available to explore the scenic area around Dong Hu, with its many pavilions and gardens.

Mao's Villa

Donghu Lu. ☎ (027) 6888 1918.

🕒 8am–5pm daily. 🎫

This pleasant villa (Mao Zedong Bieshu) was Mao's hideaway between 1960 and 1974, where he stayed for prolonged periods during the first years of the Cultural Revolution. It is set in a spacious garden, and visitors can see his living quarters, conference room, bomb shelter, and swimming pool.

Yellow Crane Pavilion

Wuluo Lu. 🕒 daily. 🎫

The Yellow Crane Pavilion on She Shan, south of the Yangzi in Wuchang district, is a reconstruction of a 3rd-century edifice that burned down in 1884. According to legend, it was built to honor one of the Daoist Eight Immortals, who paid his tavern bills by drawing cranes on the walls, which would fly down to entertain the other guests. The 164-ft (50-m) high pavilion is a handsome Qing-style building. It can be climbed for fine views across the city. On the eastern part of the hill is Changchun Guan, a Daoist temple with a pharmacy, where a doctor dispenses locally collected herbs. To the south is Hong Ge, a red-brick building that housed the Former Headquarters of the Hubei Military Government (Hong Lou) during the 1911 uprising. Provoked by Sun Yat Sen (see p297), the uprising led to the fall of the last Qing government. Sun Yat Sen's statue stands in front of the building.

Old bronze pinnacle at the Yellow Crane Pavilion

Yangzi Bridge

This impressive 361-ft (110-m) long bridge was built in 1957 by the Communists. Before its construction, all road and rail traffic crossed the river by ferry. A second bridge was built a short way downriver in 1995.

0 meters 800
0 yards 800

WUHAN CITY CENTER

- Gui Shan ⑤
- Guiyuan Si ⑥
- Hankou ⑦
- Hubei Provincial Museum ①
- Mao's Villa ②
- Yangzi Bridge ④
- Yellow Crane Pavilion ③

Daoist priests depicted in a wall painting at Changchun Guan

Gui Shan

Wuhan's industrial quarter of Hanyang has a few sights of interest most of which lie on or around Gui Shan or Turtle Hill. This was named after a magic turtle that defeated a threatening water demon and prevented the Han and Yangzi rivers from flooding. The Guqin Tai (Lute Terrace) was where the legendary musician, Bo Ya, would come to play his lute. After the death of his friend, the woodcutter who could understand his music, Bo Ya destroyed his lute and vowed never to play again. A couple of tombs survive in the eastern part of the mountain. Near the tomb of He Jingyu (1895–1928), one of the first women leaders in Communist China, lies that of a semi-mythical hero from a much earlier era – Lu Su, a Wu general from the Three Kingdoms period.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

470 miles (750 km) W of Shanghai. ¥ 7,950,000. ✈ 🚆 🚌 🚢 📍 Hankou Train Station, Wuchang Train Station. 🚌 CAAC (buses to airport), Hankou Bus Station, Hanyang Bus Station, Wuchang Bus Station. 🚢 Yangzi Ferry Terminal. 📍 26 Taibei Yilu, Hankou, (027) 8578 4125.

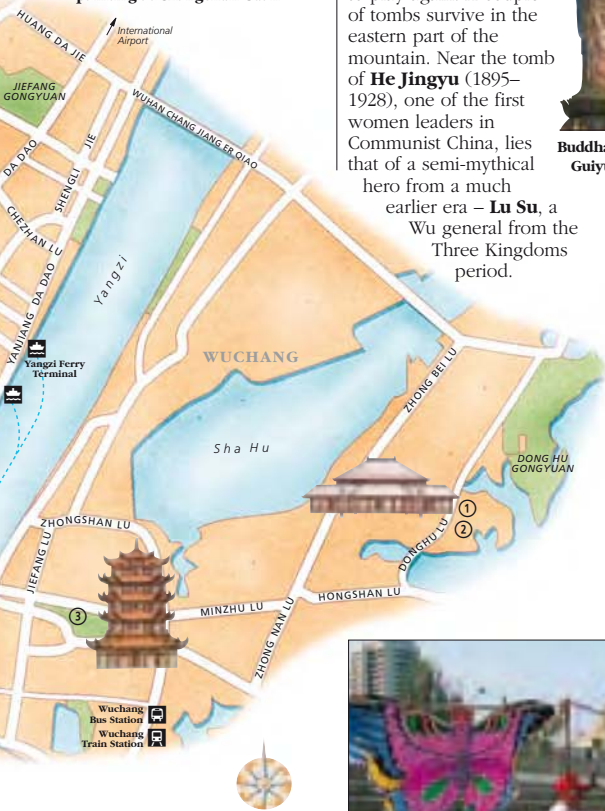

Buddha statue, Guiyuan Si

Guiyuan Si

20 Cuiweiheng Lu. 📍 (027) 8484 4756. 🕒 daily. 🚶 This Buddhist temple in western Hanyang was founded in the early Qing era (1644–62), although the current buildings are late Qing and early Republican. It has a few ancient relics including a Northern Wei Buddha statue, but is most famous for its hall of 500 arbat statues sculpted in the 1820s. The main hall has a statue of Buddha carved from a single piece of jade.

Hankou

From 1861, the district of Hankou was the site of the former foreign concession. This area has several fine examples of European-style colonial architecture. The best are located between the river and Zhongshan Dadao, particularly along Yanjiang Dadao and Jiangnan Lu. The old Customs House looking over the river is a vast Renaissance-style building with a striking grey-stone portico and Corinthian capitals.

KEY

- 🚆 Train station
- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 🚢 Ferry terminal
- 📍 Tourist information
- ✉ Post office

Colorful kites on sale on the Yangzi riverfront

Jingzhou Museum, part of the Taoist Kaiyuan Temple

Jingzhou 8

荆州

Jingzhou Municipality. 150 miles (240 km) W of Wuhan. 1,600,000.

📞 📧 📍 📌 52 Jingding Lu.

A WORTHWHILE short stop if cruising the river, the ancient town of Jingzhou is about 8 kms to the west of its modern counterpart Shashi. The old town is ringed by walls 20 ft (7 m) in height, which were constructed by General Guan Yu of the State of Shu (AD 221–63). Within the walls stands the Jingzhou Museum. This has a large collection of ancient silk and fabrics and, more notably, finds from a Western Han tomb of a court official called Sui including his gory but well-preserved corpse complete with organs.

Yichang 9

宜昌

Yichang District. 155 miles (250 km) W of Wuhan. 0717 624 1875.

📞 📧 📍 📌 52 Jiefang Lu, (0717) 676 0392.

YICHANG, once a treaty port for foreign traders, is now associated with the Gezhou Dam, completed in 1986 and the huge and controversial Three Gorges Dam, due to be finished by 2009. It is possible to visit the site of the Three Gorges Dam at Sandouping, which lies 24 miles (38 km) upstream. The town is also a starting point for a visit to Shennongjia scenic area.

The Three Gorges Dam

长江三峡

Observation
Station Statue

THE CONSTRUCTION of the Three Gorges Dam, at over 600 ft (180 m) high and more than a mile (2 km) across, was intended to provide a significant amount of China's energy, curb the Yangzi's tendency to flood, and channel some of the country's wealth, for long concentrated along the coastal regions, into China's heartland. However, creating a 400-mile (645-km) long reservoir has also meant the relocation of many thousands of people, the obliteration of important cultural sites, and long-term environmental damage.

Three Gorges Dam seen from the high-water side

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

Hundreds of miles downstream, the rapidly growing municipality of Chongqing has been pumping untreated waste and chemicals into the Yangzi. With the river no longer able to flush this away, the fear is that it could all collect in a 400-mile (645-km) long cesspool. Additionally, the reduced flow of the water could substantially increase the silting up of subsidiary waterways, further harming the fragile ecosystem and closing the migration routes of many fish species and rare freshwater dolphins.

Part of the Three Gorges before the water levels rose 575 ft (175-m)

★ Jar Hill Observation Platform

This highpoint provides an excellent bird's eye view of the dam as well as a museum showing the history of the construction.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Sandouping, 22 miles (35 km) W of Yichang. H CITS, 72 Yiling Dajie, (0717) 622 0848.
bus 4 from Yichang train station or hire a minibus or taxi for a couple of hours. Visitor Center
 daily. map

The Yangzi Sculpture is a large lump of eroded rock that is said to be from the Yangzi River.

The Ship Lifting Tower is simply a large and very powerful elevator for ships less than 80-ft (25-m) long – faster than using the 5-level lock.

STAR SIGHTS

★ Jar Hill Observation Platform

★ 5-Level Ship Lock

★ 5-Level Double Ship Lock

At over a mile long (1600 m) this lock can raise or lower ships a total vertical distance of 370 ft (113 m) and is, not surprisingly, the largest lock system in the world. It takes nearly three hours to pass through the lock gates.

Dense virgin forests lining a gorge at Shennongjia

Shennongjia 10

神农架

124 miles (200 km) NW of Yichang.
 🚗 from Yichang to entrance at Muyu, then hire a car. 📍 18 Longkang Lu, Yichang, (0717) 868 6799. 📍 from Yichang tourist office & Forestry Office Travel Service, Muyu, (0719) 345 2303.

THIS REMOTE and little-visited forest reserve has some remarkable scenery. It is covered with rare trees and several hundred species of plants used in traditional medicine, samples of which were introduced to the West by the botanist Ernest Wilson in the early 20th century. It is also home to many of China's rarest animals, including the splendid golden monkey.

Inside the reserve, at Xiaolong Tan, is a museum dedicated to the legendary Chinese Wild Man (ye ren), who is like the Himalayan Yeti and just as hard to find. The first reported sighting was in 1924. Walking trails around Xiaolong Tan lead into the heart of the reserve, providing an excellent opportunity to see the rare golden monkeys, giant salamanders, and golden pheasants. Some trails follow forest roads, others meander gently across meadows, while the crudest lead to mountain tops. Foreign visitors can explore the Muyu area, where peaks reach 10,187 ft (3,105 m). It may be possible to visit the main town of Songbai, but only if accompanied by a tour guide.

Wudang Shan 11

武当山

218 miles (350 km) NW of Wuhan. 🚗 from Wuhan or Xiangfan to Wudang Shan town. 🚗 from Shiyan, Xiangfan or Liuliping to Wudang Shan town. 📍

THE MANY PEAKS of Wudang Shan – the highest reaching 5,289 ft (1,612 m) at Tianzhu (Heavenly Pillar) Peak – have been associated with Daoism since the Tang era. Wudang Shan has also been known for its martial arts since the Song-dynasty monk, Zhang Sanfeng, created a style called Wudang boxing from which tai ji quan later developed. After years of neglect, the many temples here have been refurbished and are now flourishing. The entry point is the town of Wudang Shan, which has little to offer except the temple museum of Tai Shan Miao and the ruins of Yuxu Gong temple.

The Ming-era Zixiao Gong (Purple Cloud Palace), Wudang Shan

Wudang Shan lies to the south of town, and there are several ways of reaching it. A path near the railway station takes eight hours to reach the summit at Tianzhu Peak.

Minibuses go about three-quarters of the way up, from where it is another two hours on foot to the top. Other options are sedan chairs and a cable car that runs between a point called Qiongtai and the summit. Going up by minibus, visitors first pass the Martial Arts School and then the Zixiao Gong (Purple Cloud Palace), an impressive Ming temple that has become the busiest in the area. Inside the main hall is a beautiful spiral cupola. From the minibus terminus, a short diversion leads to the Nanyan Gong temple at the very edge of the cliff. Nearby is Dragon Head Rock that projects horizontally from the edge, and is covered in sculpted designs. The main path goes past Lang Mei

Xian Ci, a shrine dedicated to the monk Zhang Sanfeng. The path eventually divides into two at Huanglong Dong. Of the two paths, it is easier to take the one leading straight on to the group of temples at Tianzhu Peak. At the summit, the peak is surmounted by Jindian Gong (Golden Hall), built of gilded copper and bronze in 1416. It has a statue of the Ming emperor Zhen Wu, who retreated to Wudang Shan in the 15th century. The views from Tianzhu, of razor-edge cliffs covered in mist, are magnificent.

Tai Ji Quan (Tai Chi)

PRACTICED DAILY by millions of Chinese, tai ji quan, or "Supreme Ultimate Fist," is a slow-moving, graceful form of kung fu (see p159). Developed over a thousand years ago by Daoist recluses and monks, tai ji quan is based on the movements of birds and animals and the Daoist concept of yin and yang or equal opposites. All of the movements, each with their own names and prescribed patterns, have elements of yin and yang; movements contract and expand, sink and rise, move inwards and outwards. The movements follow one another fluidly and sets can involve anywhere from 12 to 108 moves, and take up to an hour to complete. Tai ji quan does have martial aspects, but is utilized chiefly to improve the flow of qi (see pp32-3), or vital energy, through the body. The exercises leave the practitioner feeling revitalized and relaxed.

Daoist bagua

Zhang Sanfeng, an official, retired in disgust at the Court to Wudang Shan. Inspired by a battle between a crane and a snake, he came up with the basis for tai ji quan, combining knowledge of kung fu and Daoist health principles.

The Sword set involves the use of a weapon to aid balance and concentration. The simple sword form, with some 50 movements, is related to the water element, whilst the sabre is related to fire.

MOVEMENTS OF THE TAI JI QUAN SET

Tai ji quan's numerous schools have different sets and movements. "Whip to one side" is a common move often repeated in a set.

Exercising in public squares is a feature of daily life in China. Early in the morning crowds of mostly elderly people perform tai ji quan in large groups executing the movements in graceful unison.

THE SOUTH

INTRODUCING THE SOUTH 276-283

FUJIAN 284-293

GUANGDONG & HAINAN 294-305

HONG KONG & MACAU 306-337

The South at a Glance

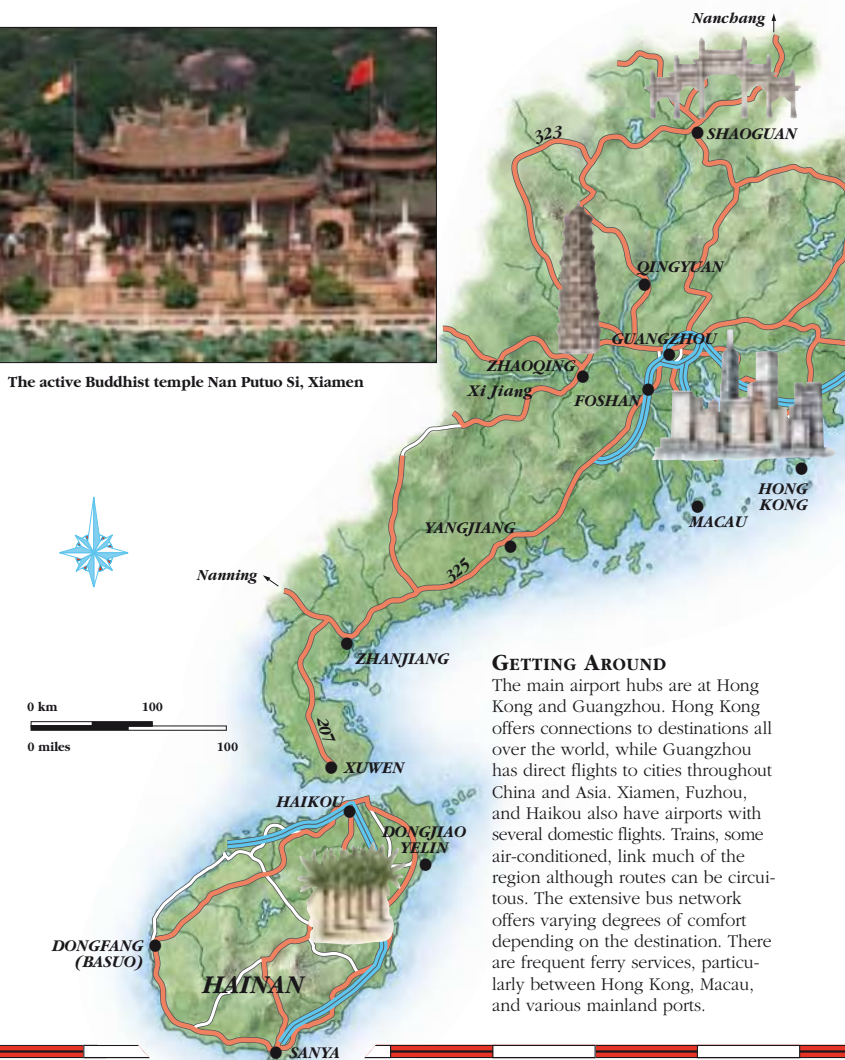

ENCOMPASSING THE PROVINCES of Fujian, Guangdong, and Hainan, as well as Macau and Hong Kong, the South is China's most familiar region, mainly because millions of immigrants from the area have moved overseas, taking their cooking and traditions with them. Yet, with the exception of Hong Kong and Guangzhou, the area rarely features on travelers' itineraries. There is much to enjoy, however, from the ancient Ming city of Chaozhou and Wuyi Shan's superb scenery, to the historic ports of Quanzhou, Xiamen, and Shantou along the coasts of Guangdong and Fujian, and the tropical beaches of Hainan.

Fishermen laboring on the beach at Meizhou Island

The active Buddhist temple Nan Putuo Si, Xiamen

GETTING AROUND

The main airport hubs are at Hong Kong and Guangzhou. Hong Kong offers connections to destinations all over the world, while Guangzhou has direct flights to cities throughout China and Asia. Xiamen, Fuzhou, and Haikou also have airports with several domestic flights. Trains, some air-conditioned, link much of the region although routes can be circuitous. The extensive bus network offers varying degrees of comfort depending on the destination. There are frequent ferry services, particularly between Hong Kong, Macau, and various mainland ports.

Women of the Hui'an minority, Chongwu

Traffic and advertisements along the bustling Gloucester Road in Wan Chai, Hong Kong

KEY

-  National highway
-  Major road
-  Minor road
-  Mountain

SEE ALSO

- Where to Stay pp564-7
- Where to Eat pp590-93

A PORTRAIT OF THE SOUTH

AN ENDURING MARITIME TRADITION has influenced life and culture in the South. The long coastline along the South China Sea gave the ports of Fujian and Guangdong easy access to trade routes leading East and West. Trade also brought the British and Portuguese to the South, ultimately leading to the colonization of Hong Kong and Macau. Only Hainan Island remained isolated from the developments that took place across the sea on mainland China.

Guangdong and Fujian are particularly mountainous, and although the mountains are not especially high, they have isolated the provinces from the political mainstream of the center and north of the country. Consequently, the South has tended to look outwards, across the sea, and over the centuries has been far more inclined than much of China to deal with foreigners – either by design or default.

From the 7th century onwards, Arab traders introduced Islam to China through ports such as Guangzhou (Canton) and Quanzhou, and took silk, porcelain, and tea away with them. It was from these ports that China launched its overseas naval expeditions. The Ming emperors sponsored the great voyages of Admiral Zheng He, a Muslim eunuch, who crossed the Indian Ocean from Fuzhou to Africa in the early 1400s. Almost a century later, Portuguese vessels ventured up the Pearl River to Guangzhou; an expedition that eventually led to the colonization of Macau in 1557. The British soon followed, but their nefarious policy of flooding the Chinese market with opium led to the two Opium Wars (1839–42, 1856–60), after which China ceded Hong Kong and the tip of the Kowloon Peninsula to Britain.

Picking tea leaves,
Fujian

Over the centuries, waves of Southern Chinese migrated overseas, first to Southeast Asia, and later westward as far as North America, as indentured labor. Their global presence

Hong Kong Island's glittering skyline, seen from Kowloon across Victoria Harbour

Tiled-roofs above the harbor at Meizhou Island is one of reasons why visitors consider this the most familiar region in China.

The Cantonese culinary tradition is distinct and known the world over. The local cuisine, however, may encompass outlandish ingredients not used in overseas restaurants; it is said, with some justification, that the Cantonese will eat anything.

Teas from the south are exported throughout the world and Fujian produces some of China's finest, including oolong. The area has cultivated the arts of tea brewing and tasting, and so-called "tea art halls," where resident brew masters demonstrate techniques associated with particular varieties of tea, are still found in Fuzhou, the province's capital.

The South's largely subtropical climate has encouraged a gregarious lifestyle, which tends to manifest itself in an active, open-air streetlife. The local language of Cantonese is quite different from Mandarin, the national language. The sound is distinctive, even to the untrained ear. The region's other major dialect is Fujianese (Minnan hua).

The South is home to several ethnic communities, including the Hakka and the Li. The Hakka migrated to south and central China from the north. The impressive round mansions of the Fujianese Hakka are a highlight of a trip to the interior. The Li are Hainan's original people, who settled here almost 2,000 years ago and lived a primeval existence until the 1930s. The Central Highlands around Tongshi offer glimpses into their unique culture.

Strong overseas connections have meant that in the last 20 years, money has poured back into the South. China's more flexible modern economy as well as large investments from Hong Kong have also enhanced the region's affluence. Development has been rapid, propelling the growth of new cities, such as Shenzhen, helped by their status as Special Economic Zones. Inspired by Hong Kong's sleek, contemporary architecture, construction has been frantic and the proliferation of high-rise buildings has transformed the skyline of historic cities.

There are still many hidden gems to explore among the region's skyscrapers and new developments. Chief among these are Guangzhou's

Nan Yue Tomb, the rarely-visited Chaozhou with its still-intact Ming city wall, and one of China's oldest mosques in Quanzhou. Some of the finest examples of colonial architecture can be seen in Macau and on the islet of Gulang Yu in Xiamen. Tropical Hainan's main appeal lies in its beaches, but the mountainous center is worth exploring as well. Finally, there is always Hong Kong, a frenetic, cosmopolitan city that vibrates day and night with an energy that is in keeping with its status as a global financial center.

A traditional Hakka dwelling

Women of the Hui'an minority, Chongwu

Rice

A bottle of rice wine

RICE HAS LONG BEEN vital to the Chinese as both a food staple and a cash crop. So intrinsic to life is the grain that “Chi fam le ma?” (Have you eaten rice today?) is one of the most common greetings in China. Rice-growing is thought to have its origins in southern China around 10,000 BC, although the flooded-field method that allowed larger yields and required massive irrigation projects was not perfected until thousands of years later. Today, rice is grown throughout much of China and accounts for 35 percent of the world’s total.

Rice plants, like most other cereals, produce dense flower heads, with the grains tightly packed inside protective husks.

An endless chain of wooden pallets pulls water from a lower source to the fields by the pedaling power of laborers. Although much irrigation is now mechanized, numerous ingenious devices, many of them ancient technology once fashioned from bamboo, are still used to water the fields.

Japonica rice

Glutinous rice

Japonica, a sub-species of Oryza sativa, is the most common rice in China, and is generally short grained and slightly sticky. Glutinous rice, grown in the south-east, becomes a sticky mass when cooked. It is often served wrapped in bamboo leaves.

RICE PRODUCTS

The Chinese have found many uses for their pervasive staple. During the Ming dynasty, builders used water in which glutinous rice had been cooked as mortar mix to strengthen defensive walls. Rice straw, the leaves of the plant left after harvest, is pulped to produce a fine white paper, perfect for paintings and kites. Husks are used as fertilizer, packing material, or simply fed to animals. Rice is ground to produce rice flour which can be rolled and pulled to create a huge range of noodles. Numerous rice wines are sold in China, some of them quite palatable, including sweet Shaoxing, made from glutinous rice.

Extracting juice from rice to ferment and make into jiu (wine or spirits)

Water buffalo pull plows, barrows, and other agricultural implements. These sturdy animals thrive in the waterlogged conditions, produce valuable manure, and require less maintenance than tractors.

TERRACED HILLSIDES

Vast areas of China are dominated by rice cultivation, and paddy fields have transformed the landscape, especially in the subtropical regions of the south, where cascades of terraces clothe many hillsides. Low mudbanks trap the water as it trickles down the slopes, creating an attractive sequence of narrow, contour-hugging fields which are worked mainly by hand. Farmers are not completely reliant on rainfall because the water flow is carefully controlled, as is the depth, which is typically 6 in (15 cm). Ever resourceful, some farmers raise edible fish such as grass carp in the paddy waters.

CULTIVATING RICE

In much of rural China, rice growing is very much a hands-on activity, and traditional methods are still used, especially in hilly country. The work is labor-intensive, but the two or three harvests a year that are possible in the south make the efforts worthwhile.

Rice seedlings are grown in special protected beds. After about 40 days they are transplanted by hand to the paddies.

Planting is tiring, back-breaking work, and in some areas is now mechanized. Teams of workers wade through the paddy fields planting the seedlings one by one.

At harvest time, the fields are drained before the rice plants are cut either by hand-held sickle or by machine.

To dry the rice, mounds of freshly harvested grain are raked out in a thin layer and left to warm in the sun.

Winnowing, tossing or pouring the rice from a basket, separates the dried rice grains from their husks – the wind carries away the chaff.

Regional Food: The South

THE SOUTHERN SCHOOL of Chinese cooking, called by the generic name Cantonese, is centered around Guangzhou, where the Pearl River delta runs into the South China Sea. Situated at the mouth of this estuary lies Hong Kong, another culinary center of China. Fish, of course, plays a major role in this coastal economy and rice is the dominant food grain. Other food crops include tea, peanuts, sugar cane, and subtropical fruits such as bananas, pineapples, oranges, and lychees. Large-scale emigration from the south has meant that Chinese food served outside China is likely to be southern Chinese cooking.

Bitter melon and water spinach

Lush and colorful vegetables on display in the market and spring; there is no winter. As a result crops grow luxuriantly all year round and supplement the abundance of fish. Despite this fecundity, the size of the population the land has to support means that it has always struggled to provide enough food. Therefore the Cantonese also eat less expensive "delicacies" not popular in other provinces such as frogs' legs, turtles, dogs, snakes, and nearly every kind of animal there is. Food has become almost a religion to the Cantonese and the locals claim that in Guangzhou "there is a restaurant every five steps."

GUANGZHOU (CANTON)

THE EPICENTER of Chinese cuisine, Guangzhou owes its culinary primacy to its geography. As a port it had a well-off, cosmopolitan merchant class who could afford expensive foods. It also has a subtropical climate and a summer that lasts for almost six months, with the rest of the year divided into autumn

A selection of dim sum dishes

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Most people probably associate Cantonese cuisine with dim sum (meaning "dot on the heart" or "snack"), delectable, dainty bites of steamed or fried food: dumplings with prawn or pork fillings, miniature spareribs, deep-fried spring rolls, paper-wrapped prawns, chicken feet, or glossy custard-filled tarts. These snacks are to be eaten during the day for lunch with pots of tea, never as dinner. Other famous specialties are the fish and shellfish dishes, and roast meats – duck, cha shao (roast pork), and suckling pig. Key to the southern school of cuisine are its various sauces. Although such fresh food is often quickly steamed with a few simple aromatics, sauces such as oyster, hoi sin (sweet soy bean and garlic), mushroom, lemon, black bean and chu bou (soy bean, garlic and ginger) are also used to add flavor.

Soy-cured bacon and sausages

Steamed Seabass: steamed with scallions and ginger, and seasoned with light soy sauce, rice wine and sesame oil.

CHAOZHOU & DONGJIANG

Chaozhou (also known as Swatow) is a richer cuisine than Cantonese. Because this cuisine specializes in shellfish and seafood, freshness is vital – hence the emphasis on buying live animals or fish, be it at a market or restaurant. They like to use stocks flavoured with fish sauce, hot sauce, or red rice vinegar. Dongjiang is a more rustic and salty cooking – soy-cured bacon and air-dried sausages are a specialty – and it also uses more poultry. This cooking is also sometimes known as Hakka, meaning “family of guests,” which refers to the immigrants from northern China who settled in the south some time after the invasion by Mongols in the thirteenth century. Later there were other large-scale migrations overseas, one of the reasons why most Chinese restaurants in the West serve only southern Chinese (Cantonese) food.

Dried vegetable and spices stall

Fish drying in a shop in Hong Kong

HONG KONG

ALTHOUGH MAINLY Chinese, Hong Kong is a unique city in China: as an international port, it has been open to outside influences. So, while most of the restaurants are Cantonese, you will also find all the regional Chinese cuisines here alongside those from other Asian countries and Europe. A gastromomic supermarket, Hong Kong doesn't really have a specialty dish although some claim that “smelly beancurd” (a pungent type of fermented tofu) fulfils that role. Hong Kong is a 24-hour city and, all day every day, all the food places, from the humble street stands to the luxury banqueting halls are filled with people eating. The story goes that you could visit a different restaurant each day for a year, and never eat the same dish twice.

ON THE MENU

Seafood with Vegetables A popular dish of prawns, squid, and scallops stir-fried with whatever vegetables are available and noodles.

“White-cut” Chicken A whole chicken blanched in boiling water or stock, then left to cool in the liquid under cover for 6–8 hours. Tender and moist.

Stir-fried Squid with Black Bean Sauce In fact any seafood such as crab, lobster, or prawns may be substituted for the squid. This can also be made with chillies for a more spicy alternative.

Eight-treasure Stuffed Beancurd The stuffing is pork and prawn – vegetarians should stick with the Eight-treasure Buddha's Special (see p180–1).

Steamed Chicken with Dried Mushrooms Chicken pieces steamed with Chinese mushrooms – simple but great.

Lobster with Ginger & Scallions: lobster braised with aromatics and served on a bed of soft noodles.

Oyster Sauce Beef: stir-fried beef with mushrooms and vegetables, all cut to the same size, in oyster sauce.

Roast Meats: choice cuts of suckling pig, duck, pork, and chicken served cold with tasty dipping sauces.

FUJIAN

THE SEA AND MOUNTAINS form the essential features of the province of Fujian. Its major cities thrive as coastal ports, while inland there is the spectacular, rugged beauty of Wuyi Shan.

Fujian's historical importance dates back almost as far as the Warring States period (475–221 BC), when the Yue people, defeated by the State of Chu (today's Hubei and Hunan), migrated southwards to settle in this part of China and Vietnam. Those who came to what is now Fujian were called Min Yue, later known as the Min people. Even today the Fujianese are sometimes referred to as Min and the southern Fujian language as Minnan Hua. The native people who preceded them are thus called the Ancient Min. Very little survives from this period, apart from the mysterious boat-shaped coffins, found lodged high above the river in the Wuyi Mountains. The main attractions are strung along the busy coastline and include the historic ports of Xiamen and Quanzhou, as well as Fuzhou, the capital, which was a major maritime center for over 1,000 years. Other attractions are the stone town of Chongwu, and Meizhou Island, birthplace of the important Goddess of the Sea. Inland, Fujian's hinterland is wild and unspoiled enough to protect the last remaining South China tigers. It is also the home of the Hakka people, whose traditional dwellings can be seen at the rural settlements around Yongding.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

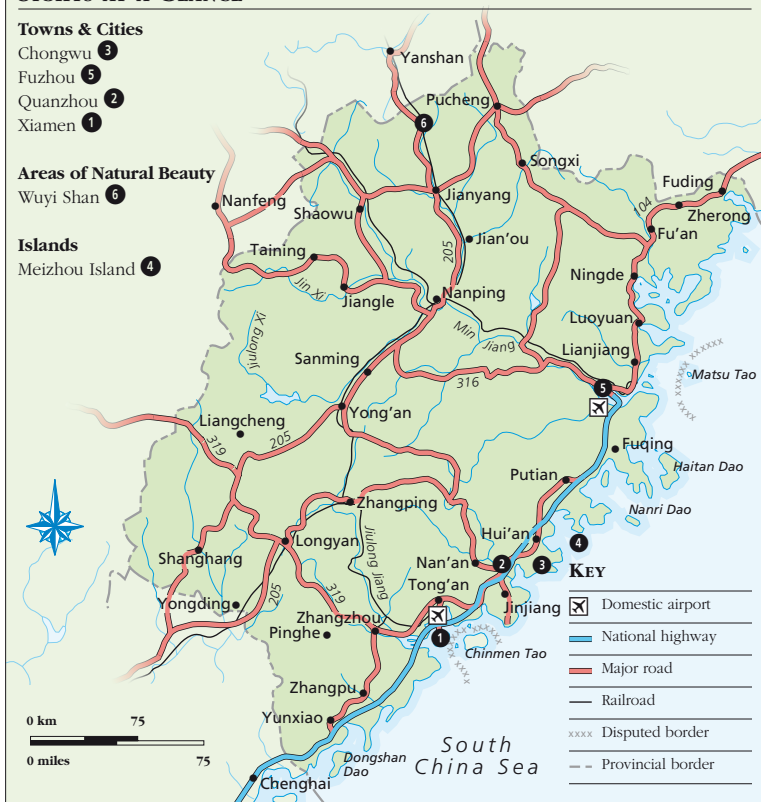

- Chongwu ③
- Fuzhou ⑤
- Quanzhou ②
- Xiamen ①

Areas of Natural Beauty

- Wuyi Shan ⑥

Islands

- Meizhou Island ④

Xiamen ❶

厦门

AN ATTRACTIVE CITY WITH A BUSTLING nautical atmosphere, Xiamen was known as Amoy in the 19th century. A relatively new settlement by Chinese standards, it was founded in the 14th century and became a significant port during the Ming dynasty. It also served as an important stronghold against the Manchus when they invaded in the 17th century. The resistance was led by the legendary pirate and Ming loyalist Zheng Chenggong, also known as Koxinga, who is commemorated in the city. Xiamen became an early treaty port in the 19th century, when the foreign community established itself on Gulang Yu. The city was also declared one of China's first Special Economic Zones in the 1980s.

Colorful rooftop dragon,
Nan Putuo Si

⌘ Nan Putuo Si

Siming Nan Lu. ☎ (0592) 208 6586.

☉ 4am–6pm daily. 🚶

This busy temple was founded in the Tang era in the extravagant southern style (see p300). Its three halls hold a wealth of Buddhist statuary. The Heavenly King Hall has an image of Wei Tuo, Protector of Buddhist Doctrine, who holds a stick pointing down to signify that the temple offers lodging to pilgrims.

⌘ Huxiyan

A quaint little temple lies high on a rocky outcrop at Huxiyan (Tiger Stream Rock). Another temple, Bailu Dong (White Deer Cave), is located even higher up the hill. Built in the Ming era, its main draw is the fine view across the city.

⌘ Wanshi Botanical Garden

Huyuan Lu. ☉ 6:30am–6pm daily. 🚶

This large scenic area houses over 4,000 species of plants, especially from South China and Southeast Asia. These include eucalyptus, bamboo, and a redwood tree planted by the former US President Richard Nixon. A bullet-scarred rock marks the spot where Koxinga killed his cousin.

⌘ Overseas Chinese Museum

Siming Nan Lu. ☉ Tue–Sun 8:30am–11:30am & 2:30pm–5pm. 🚶

This museum is divided into two sections. The first focuses on the history of Fujianese emigration, illustrated by photographs, paintings, and mementoes. The second houses bronzes, pottery, and artworks that once belonged to non-resident Chinese. The bronze collection is remarkable, spanning the period from the Shang (16th century BC) to the Republican era.

⌘ Huli Shan Paotai

Daxue Lu. ☉ daily. 🚶

Situated in the Huli Shan Fort along the coast, this huge cannon was made for the Qing government by a German manufacturer in 1891.

Cannons guard the ramparts at Huli Shan Fort

Almost 46-ft (14-m) long and weighing 49 tons (50,000 kg), it had a firing range of 6 miles (10 km). Taiwan's islands are visible from the ramparts – a fascination for locals, who were forbidden entry to the site until 1984.

⌘ Jimei School Village

☉ daily. 🚶

Located 9 miles (15 km) north of the city, Jimei School Village was founded by the philanthropist Tan Kah Kee (Chen Jiageng) in 1913. A successful Singapore businessman, he returned to China in 1950 and held various government posts. Built in Chinese-Gothic style, the college is set in a beautiful park filled with pagodas and close to the sea. Tan Kah Kee's former residence, also here, is open to the public.

⌘ Gulang Yu

Xiamen Seaworld ☎ (0592) 206 7668. ☉ 24 hrs. 🚶 Shuzhuang

Garden ☉ daily. 🚶 Sunlight Rock

☉ daily. 🚶 Koxinga Memorial Hall

☉ 8am–4:50pm daily.

The tranquil island of Gulang Yu lies only a ten-minute boat ride from Xiamen, with Gulang Yu's tiny streets and elegant colonial houses attractive buildings, and no traffic apart from battery-powered buggies. The island first became important in 1860, when the resident representatives of the foreign powers established themselves here. It soon grew into a European-style town with churches, consulates, and spacious villas. In 1903, it was designated an International Settlement for Europeans and Japanese, complete with a municipal council and Sikh police force, and it retained this status until the end of World War II. The island still retains an atmosphere reminiscent of Southern Europe.

Spread over one square mile (2.5 sq km), Gulang Yu is very pleasant to explore on foot, with its tiny streets and elegant houses, fronted by pretty flower gardens. Close to the ferry terminal is Xiamen Seaworld, which houses an interesting collection of sharks, seals, dolphins, penguins, and tropical fish. To the southeast is the Statue of Koxinga, which commemorates Xiamen's

Statue of the legendary rebel commander, Koxinga, Gulang Yu famous rebel. Koxinga and his fleet held out against the encroaching Manchus for years. He is also credited with ousting the Dutch from Taiwan. Farther south along the coast is Shuzhuang Garden, filled with numerous tropical plants and flowers, while next door is the attractive, but usually crowded

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

155 miles (250 km) SW of Fuzhou.
 1,250,000. Hubin Nan Lu Bus Station, Xiahe Lu Bus Station, Siming Bus Station.
 weekly from Hong Kong to the Heping Ferry Terminal; to Gulang Yu from the ferry terminal near Lujiang Hotel.
 Zhongshan Lu, (0592) 212 6917.

Ganzaihou Beach. Close by to its north is Sunlight Rock, the island's highest point that can easily be reached by cable car. At the foot of the rock is the Koxinga Memorial Hall, which houses a handful of Koxinga's personal possessions, such as his jade belt and parts of his robe, as well as other historical items.

Farther toward the southwestern coast is Yingxiong Shan, with an unusual open-air aviary at the top of the building. It is filled with colorful parrots, egrets, and tropical pigeons.

Earthen Dwellings of Yongding

THE HAKKA ARE a people who were driven south from the Yellow River plains by war in the late Tang and early Song dynasties. It is perhaps due to their past experiences of persecution, and to their presence in a new land (their official minority name is Kejia, which means “guest people”) that they adopted a fortress-like style of rammed earth buildings called tulou.

Lucky emblem on dwelling

Capable of housing several hundred people, these round or square buildings are constructed around a courtyard, containing a maze of storage sheds and public meeting rooms. Hukeng is one of the more accessible towns in the Yongding area with several Hakka dwellings. Buses run from Xiamen to Longyan (4 hours), from where it is a two-hour bus ride to Hukeng.

Numerous tulou are located in the countryside surrounding Yongding. Although the round houses are the most celebrated, other styles are found in the vicinity: massive square dwellings similar in scale to the round houses and smaller rammed-earth residences facing onto a central courtyard.

Thick fire walls divide the building into eight segments, echoing the Daoist octagonal symbol, the bagua (see pp32–3).

Living quarters

Grain storage

Outward-facing windows are small and trapezoidal and only located in the upper stories for security.

Outer walls are thick for defense, often as wide as 5 feet (1.5 m) at the base, tapering towards the top.

An ancestral hall at the center of the inner buildings may be used for ceremonies, such as weddings.

The lower level is dedicated to communal Hakka life. Outdoor sculleries for washing and food preparation are located before the kitchens and dining rooms.

Entrance to Qingjing Mosque, one of China's oldest extant mosques

Quanzhou ②

泉州

45 miles (72 km) N of Xiamen. 崇 7,500,000. 厦 厦 厦 Fengze Jie, (0595) 2217 7719.

LOCATED ON THE Jin Jiang, Quanzhou was China's principal port during the Song and Yuan dynasties. The city's trade with India and elsewhere resulted in a permanent community of foreign residents. It was known to Arab geographers as Zaitun, from which the word "satin" is derived. Although Quanzhou's importance declined during the Ming dynasty, the town still offers insights into its maritime past.

Currently roofless, the Qingjing Mosque was first built in 1009, with extensive repairs in 1309, 1350, and 1609. Unlike other mosques in southern China which follow the traditional Chinese architectural style, this one is an elegant stone structure with an obvious Arabian influence. The surviving gate is supposedly modeled on a mosque in medieval Damascus. Its museum details the port's significance as a trade center.

In the north of the city, the Kaiyuan Si was built in AD 686 and called Lianhua Si (Lotus Temple), after a lotus miraculously grew on a mulberry bush that still exists to the west of the Great Hall. In the Song period, 1,000 monks worshipped here. Among the temple's three halls, the Sweet Dew Vinaya Hall has a splendid ceiling and a throne on which sits Bodhisattva Kisitigarbha, Guardian of the Domain of Death. On each side of the halls are two ancient pagodas with carvings. The eastern part of the temple houses the Museum of Overseas Trade. One of its highlights is a Song trading vessel dating to 1274. Found in 1973, it was made of cedar wood and would have had sails of bamboo and hemp. At that time, such ships traveled to Arabia, Africa, and Asia, exporting porcelain and silks and importing spices, ivory, and glass. The museum also has stone carvings relating to Nestorian Christianity and to the Arab presence in the city.

North of Kaiyung Si is the Qingyuan Shan scenic area with the enormous Laojun Yan, a Song-dynasty sculpture of the Daoist Laozi (see p31).

☑ Qingjing Mosque 113 Tumen Jie. ☎ (0595) 2219 3553. ☑ daily. 厦

☑ Kaiyuan Si & Museum of Overseas Trade 176 Xi Jie.

☎ (0595) 2238 3036.

☑ 7:30am–5:30 pm daily. 厦

Statue of Mazu, Goddess of the Sea and Protector of Sailors a bastion against pirates. As part of its defense, the granite houses had flat roofs, making them almost invisible from beyond the forbidding 22-foot (6.6-m) high boundary wall. The main inhabitants are the Hui'an people, whose women wear distinctive cropped blue tops and wide black trousers. Fishing and stone carving are the main industries today, but the walls and old streets of Chongwu's fortress days still make a striking impression.

Meizhou Island ④

梅州岛

35 miles (56 km) NE of Quanzhou. 厦 from Putian to Wenjia, then ferry.

FOR THE FUJIANESE, this island near Putian is associated with Mazu, Goddess of the Sea and Protector of Sailors (see p149). Mazu is the deification of a 10th-century girl, whose powers enabled her to make maritime predictions, and her birthday is the island's main festival, celebrated on the 23rd day of the third lunar month. Numerous temples to the goddess dot the island, all the way up the hillside where her statue proudly stands on the summit. The main temple, Mazu Miao, is a short walk uphill from the pier. Rebuilt many times, it now resembles Beijing's Forbidden City. Due to the effort involved in getting here, it may be worthwhile staying overnight in one of the island's numerous hotels.

Chongwu ③

崇武

20 miles (32 km) E of Quanzhou.

厦 from Quanzhou to Hui'an, then minibus to Chongwu.

THE CHONGWU Peninsula's importance as a defensive stronghold was bolstered by the construction of the stone town of Chongwu in 1387, as

Flat-roofed houses below the level of the wall, Chongwu

Elegant European architecture on Zhongzhou Island, Fuzhou

Fuzhou ⑤

福州

155 miles (250 km) N of Xiamen. 福州
6,500,000. ☒ ☑ ☒ ☒ ☒ ☒ 128 Wusi
Lu, (0591) 8763 6250.

WITH ITS SCENIC location on the Min Jiang, Fujian's capital was a major maritime port for more than 1,000 years. It was the center of a lucrative trade first in tea and sugar, and later in cotton, lacquer, and ceramics. When the legendary explorer Marco Polo visited Fuzhou in the 13th century, he recorded that the city was garrisoned by imperial troops. The city still has large numbers of troops due to its proximity to Taiwan.

Wuyi Square, with its statue of Mao Zedong, marks the city center. Just north is the 10th-century Bai Ta (White Pagoda), while to the west is Wu Ta, a black granite pagoda from the same era. North of Wu Ta, the Lin Zexu Memorial Hall commemorates Lin Zexu, a Qing-dynasty official who destroyed an opium shipment in protest at the British trade, an act that led to the First Opium War (see p67). Farther north is the Kaiyuan Si, which has a Tang-dynasty iron Buddha. To its west lies Xi Hu Gongyuan (West Lake Park), where the Provincial Museum contains a 3,500-year-old boat coffin.

Zhongzhou Island, south of the river, was once the site of the Foreign Concession Area. About 6 miles (10 km) east of the city is Gu Shan, a wooded area with pleasant walks. The much-restored Yongquan Si, built in AD 908, is located here.

☒ Provincial Museum

92 Hutou Jie. ☎ (0591) 8375 7627.

☑ 9am–5pm daily.

☒ Yongquan Si

☑ daily. ☎

Wuyi Shan ⑥

武夷山

144 miles (230 km) NW of Fuzhou.

☒ ☒ then bus 6. ☒ to Wuyi Shan City (Wuyi Shan Shi), then bus 6 to park.

☎ 35 Guanjing Lu, (0599) 525 0380.

MAGICAL WUYI SHAN, a hilly area renowned for its oolong tea, offers some of the most stunning scenery in southern China. Its sheer, mist-shrouded sandstone mountains, known as the Thirty-six Peaks, are threaded by the Jiuqu Jiang and covered in lush vegetation. First visited by the Han emperor Wudi (r.141–87 BC), Wuyi Shan came to be regarded as a sacred place by subsequent emperors.

The best way to enjoy the landscape is to take a raft along the river, as it meanders through gorges known collectively as Jin Qu Xi (Nine Bend Creek). Above the fourth bend, mysterious 3,000-year-old coffins are lodged high in the cliffs. Made of nanmu (cedar), they are about 16 ft (5 m) long; each contains a single individual wrapped in silk and hemp. How they got here, however, remains a mystery.

Several trails lead to the summits. The table-top shaped Da Wang Feng is the most difficult, while an easier climb is Tianyou Shan, the traditional spot from where to watch the sunrise. The highest peak is Sanyang Feng at 2,356 ft (718 m). A path also leads to the Shuilian Dong, with a teahouse next to a waterfall.

LACQUERWARE – A CHINESE CRAFT

Made from the sap of the “lac” tree (Rhus verniciflua), lacquer was used long before the Han dynasty as a timber preservative – it hardens easily, even in damp conditions. It was later used in making plates and cups by applying layers of sap on wood or cloth, and painting the final layer. The modern craft, which appeared in the Yuan dynasty, uses the same basic method of applying layers on a wooden base, but before the lacquer completely hardens, it is deeply and intricately carved. The surface is then inlaid with gold, silver, or tortoiseshell, and usually painted red.

A lacquered screen

The Story of Tea

TEA (CHA) IS ASSOCIATED with China more than with any other country. Its legendary origins in China date back over 5,000 years although some believe that it was introduced from India about 1,800 years ago. At first it was drunk as a tonic; now it is simply an indispensable part of daily life for almost all Chinese. It is widely grown throughout the warmer and wetter southern areas of China, particularly in Fujian, Yunnan, and Zhejiang. Although tea comes in many forms, all tea comes from the same species, Camellia sinensis. The most common Chinese teas – green, black, and oolong – have differing appearance and taste due to the process of fermentation, although the flavor of the tea does vary depending on where it is grown, and whether other ingredients have been added such as chrysanthemums in buacha.

German ad for tea, 1908

Tea is always drunk clear, never with milk or lemon. Sugar is added only in the north western Muslim areas, while the Tibetans drink theirs with butter.

Shen Nong was the mythological emperor who according to Chinese lore discovered tea. A wise ruler, he pronounced that all drinking water should be boiled. One day, tea leaves fell from a tree into a pot of boiling water and the resulting brew delighted him.

By the Tang dynasty, tea was drunk throughout the empire. Before the 8th century, tea merchants commissioned Lu Yu to explain the advantages of the drink. He produced the Cha Jing, a compendium of tea, which systemized its production and traditions.

The tea trade was a key element in Britain's interest in China. The Portuguese were the first Europeans to enjoy tea, and the Dutch the first Europeans to deal in tea commercially, but it was the British who became the greatest tea traders as the fashion for tea spread from Holland to England in the late 17th century.

Tea plantations, many of them terraced, cover the hillsides of the southern interior. Up to five harvests can take place in a year. Picking is still done mostly by hand – an experienced picker can harvest 70 lb (32 kg) in a day – but mechanical methods are becoming common.

Upscale tea shops abound in the larger city centers. Highly prized specialty teas such as the Fujianese oolong tie guanyin can be purchased and sometimes sampled.

GUANGDONG & HAINAN

LOCATED AT THE southernmost tip of continental China are the province of Guangdong and the island of Hainan, just off its coast in the South China Sea. Guangdong's capital, the great city and port of Guangzhou (Canton), stands on one of China's longest rivers, the Pearl (Zhu Jiang), while Haikou, the capital of Hainan, is on the island's north coast, about 30 miles (50 km) to the south of the mainland.

Guangdong is perhaps the most familiar part of China, since a large proportion of expatriates around the world are of Cantonese origin. The province also lies very close to Hong Kong, whose inhabitants are mostly Cantonese. Given its long-standing contacts with the outside world, it is not surprising that Guangdong was only fully integrated into China in the 12th century, when large numbers of Han settlers migrated here from the north. Today, it is a key area of China's economic development, most evident in Guangzhou and the new cities of Shenzhen and Zhuhai. Despite the recent development, there are several places of historical interest, as well as some beautiful inland countryside.

Formerly administered as part of Guangdong, the tropical island of Hainan is now a separate province. A place of exile for centuries, its superb beaches on the southern coast have only recently been developed as thriving tourist resorts. There are still vestiges of the indigenous Li culture to seek out, and some wild mountains to explore at the island's center.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Chaozhou 2
- Foshan 6
- Guangzhou 4
- Shantou 1
- Shenzhen 3

Historic Sites

- Cuiheng 5

Temples

- Feilai & Feixia 8

Areas of Natural Beauty

- Shaoguan 9
- Zhaoqing 7

Islands

- Hainan Island 10

The dramatic Shipaotai Gongyuan fortress and moat, Shantou

Shantou ①

汕头

225 miles (360 km) E of Guangzhou.

☰ 4,130,000. ☒ ☓ ☑ ☒

📞 41 Shanzhang Lu, (0754) 862 6646.

THIS CITY WAS originally a fishing village, whose strategic location on the Han Jiang estuary was exploited by foreign traders from 1858. Known then as Swatow, it soon became a major center for trade. In 1980, it was declared a Special Economic Zone and today it is essentially a modern city. The old quarter still has a few sights of interest such as the restored 1879

Tianhou Gong, a temple with vibrant carvings. Nearby along Anping Lu are the remains of old colonial houses and warehouses. East of Anping Lu at the waterfront is Shipaotai Gongyuan, a fortified gun emplacement that was built in the 1870s.

Shipaotai Gongyuan Haibin Lu. ☐ 7:30am–11pm daily. 📷
Tianhou Gong Shengping Lu. ☐ daily. 📷

Chaozhou ②

潮州

220 miles (350 km) E of Guangzhou.

☰ 2,360,000. ☒ ☓ ☑ ☒

THIS ANCIENT CITY was the seat of a highly cultured civilization during the Ming dynasty. Its fortunes declined rapidly in the 17th century, when almost 100,000 people were massacred for opposing the Manchu regime. Later, during the 19th century, terrible famines and poverty led to mass emigration.

Today, the remains of the 23-ft (7-m) high Ming City Walls run along the banks of the Han Jiang, defining the eastern boundary of the old city center. Extending up to Huangcheng Lu in the west, the old city is Chaozhou's most fascinating quarter, where its historic past is visible on streets such as Zhongshan Lu and Jiadi Xiang with its well-preserved Qing-dynasty architecture. To the north of Jiadi Xiang is Kaiyuan Si, an active Buddhist temple founded in AD 738, with pretty courtyards and several colorful halls, one of which has a gorgeous vaulted ceiling. The grand Guangji Men along the city wall has steps leading up to a trail along the top of the wall. Across the river is the 10th-century temple Hanwen Gong Ci, and downstream is the slowly crumbling Ming dynasty pagoda Fenghuang Ta.

Guangji Men, Chaozhou

☑ Kaiyuan Si

Kaiyuan Lu. ☐ daily. 📷

Shenzhen ③

深圳

62 miles (100 km) SE of Guangzhou.

☰ 1,100,000. ☒ ☓ ☑ ☒ from Hong Kong & Macau. 📞 1064 Yanhe Lu, (0755) 8232 6437.

SHENZHEN WAS one of the first towns to become a Special Economic Zone as part of Deng Xiaoping's economic reforms of the late 1980s. SEZ status transformed this tiny village bordering Hong Kong into a booming metropolis in just a few years. Today, it is an important, although rather soulless, business center and transport hub. On its western outskirts are a host of strange theme parks. Splendid

China and Window on the World have scale models of famous monuments such as the Eiffel Tower in Paris and the Great Wall, as well as plenty of souvenir shops. The Folk Culture Village displays China's folk traditions, and has paintings, pavilions, and shows of traditional dances. East of Shenzhen, at Shatoujiao, Minsk World displays an entire Soviet aircraft carrier, complete with aircraft.

📷 Shenzhen Theme Parks

Guangshen Expressway, Shenzhen Bay. ☐ daily. 📷 Minsk World ☐ daily. 📷

Aircraft on the Russian carrier at Minsk World, Shenzhen

Sun Yat Sen

FOR MANY, SUN YAT SEN, who planned the overthrow of the last Chinese dynasty and the establishment of a republic, is the father of modern China. Born in Guangdong in 1860, he studied medicine and was greatly influenced by the leader of the Taiping Rebellion, and fellow Cantonese, Hong Xiuquan (see p422). A failed uprising in Canton in 1895 forced him abroad, where he spent fifteen years raising money in support of his cause (in London he was abducted and held in the Chinese legation). Abroad when the Qing dynasty fell in 1911, he was made president of the new republic in 1912. Power struggles soon forced him from office. He died in 1925 before he was able to establish an independent government, with the aim of uniting the country.

Sun marries Song Qingling, 1915

"The World Belongs to All" is a slogan reflecting Sun's democratic notions: the right to vote, the right to recall, and the powers of legislation and amendment.

Sun Yat Sen working in the office of his Guangzhou headquarters, from where he strove to create the circumstances that would lead to a democratic and united China.

Chiang Kai Shek (standing), who also married a Song sister (see p198), used Sun's theories of political tutelage to justify military dictatorship.

Discussing the organization of a new government in 1911, before Sun Yat Sen (second from left) became president. He then installed Yuan Shikai in his own place, who declared himself emperor in 1913, plunging China back into civil war.

Seen here as Generalissimo in 1922, Sun Yat Sen established a military government in Guangzhou, the base of the Nationalist Revolution.

On National Day portraits of Sun Yat Sen are brandished together with those of Marx and Engels in Tian'an Men Square. Sun Yat Sen, despite his Kuomintang connections and his antipathy to class war, is seen as a revolutionary who paved the way for communism.

Guangzhou 4

广州

Bronze luoban,
Hualin Si

GUANGDONG'S CAPITAL, known as Canton to its 19th-century foreign residents, is an ancient and significant port. During the Tang dynasty, the city's trade links throughout Asia gave it a sizable Muslim community. Later, Western merchants made their first contact with China through this port. Today, Guangzhou is an affluent, bustling city, with a handful of interesting sights including the 2,000-year-old tomb and excavated palace gardens of the Nanyue kings. Recent developments have greatly improved the infrastructure, with new metro lines, and the restoration of old buildings. South of the city, Shamian Island was the site of the foreign concession and is filled with charming colonial-style buildings.

A variety of foodstuffs, grains, and spices on sale, Qingping Market

Qingping Market

Qingping Lu. M Huang Sha. ☐ daily. Just across the road from Shamian Island (see pp300-1) is one of China's largest and most famous markets, devoted to all types of produce. On sale are medicines, spices, vegetables, dried seafood, grains, fish, meat, and live animals, including cats, dogs, and endangered species. Fortunately, the numbers of endangered animals on sale have drastically reduced in recent years. For some visitors, the atmosphere is too gory, while for others it is exhilaratingly Chinese.

Hualin Si

Near Changshou Lu. M Changshou Lu. ☐ daily. The city's liveliest Buddhist temple, founded in AD 526, was one of the many shrines visited by Bodhidharma, the Indian founder of Chan Buddhism (see p159). Hualin

Si is notable for its main hall with 500 images of luoban or arbat (those freed from the cycle of rebirth); one of them, sporting a broad-brimmed hat, is supposed to be the merchant Marco Polo.

Devotees lighting incense sticks, Hualin Si

Sacred Heart Church

56 Yide Lu. M Haizhu Guangchang. A Gothic-style Roman Catholic church, the Sacred Heart Church (Shi Shi Jiaotang) was built by the French between 1860 and 1880. The land was granted to France as compensation for its losses during the Second Opium War. The church's twin spires rise to a height of 190 ft (58 m), and its bell tower contains four bronze bells cast in France.

Peasant Movement Institute

42 Zhongshan Lu. M Nongjiang Suo.

☐ 9am-4pm daily. **📶

The city's revolutionary past is on display in this former Ming Confucian temple. In 1924, the building became a training school for peasant revolutionaries, who were taught by leaders such as Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai (see p250). The school closed in 1927, after the Guangdong Communist uprising, when 5,000 people were killed under the orders of General Chiang Kai Shek (see p66).

Nan Yue Palace Gardens

Zhongshan Lu. M Nongjiang Suo.

☐ 9am-noon & 2:30pm-5:30pm daily. **📶

This extraordinary site contains the excavated gardens that surrounded the palace of Zhao Tuo, the founder of the ancient Nan Yue Kingdom (see p300). A Qin general from Hebei province, he founded an independent kingdom after the fall of the Qin dynasty. The site is covered by a corrugated roof, and a raised pathway leads past the main sights. To the northeast, a paved lake and an ornamental stream are clearly visible, while in the southwestern corner are the remains of an even older Qindynasty shipyard. The site's small museum exhibits stone slabs, pillars, and roof-tiles, many of which bear the inscription "Panyu," Guangzhou's original name.

C Huaisheng Mosque

56 Guangta Lu. M Xi Men Kou.
 ☐ to Muslims only.
 Said to have been founded during the Tang dynasty by Abu Waqas (see p300), this is one of China's oldest mosques. Although much of the mosque has been recently constructed, it contains an ancient Islamic-style minaret and numerous stone stelae.

Guangxiao Si

109 Guangzhou Lu.
M Xi Men Kou. ☐ daily. Thought to have been founded during the Han dynasty, the Guangxiao Si (Temple of Glorious Filial Piety) is one of the city's most attractive sights. Built over the palace of the last Nan Yue king, it became a temple in the 5th century and was later visited by Bodhidharma, the founder of Chan Buddhism. None of the original buildings survive, and most of the current halls date to the 19th century. The pillared main hall in particular is impressive, and has several Buddha images, while the three pagodas behind it are of great antiquity. Of these, one was built in AD 676 over a hair of Hui Neng, the Sixth Zen Patriarch (AD 638–713) who came from Guangzhou, while the other two are 10th-century structures.

Ancient pagoda, Guangxiao Si

Liu Rong Si

Liu rong Lu. M Gongyuan Qian. ☐ 8am–5pm daily. Liu Rong Si, the Six Banyan Temple, was established in AD 537 to house a portion of the Buddha's ashes, which were brought from India and enshrined in the Flower Pagoda (Hua Ta). Rebuilt in 1097, the 187-ft (57-m) octagonal pagoda appears to have nine stories from the outside, but in fact has a total of 17 – they are well worth a climb. The pagoda's wooden eaves are covered in intricate carvings of birds, insects, and lions. At the top is an enormous bronze pillar with reliefs of meditating figures.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

94 miles (150 km) NW of Hong Kong. 6,660,000. Guangzhou Station & East Train Station. Provincial Bus Station, Liuhua Station & Tianhe Bus Station. to Hong Kong from Nanhai Port. f 179 Huanshi Xi Lu, (020) 8666 6889.

Little remains of the original temple, which was associated with Hui Neng. The Hall of the Sixth Patriarch contains a bronze figure of him, cast in AD 989. The temple was named by the exiled Song dynasty poet Su Dongpo (see p304) in appreciation of the trees in the temple. His calligraphic characters that read "Liu Rong" are engraved into stone over the gateway.

GUANGZHOU CITY CENTER

- Chen Jia Ci ⑨
- Guangxiao Si ⑦
- Huaisheng Mosque ⑥
- Hualin Si ②
- Liu Rong Si ⑧
- Nan Yue Palace Gardens ⑤
- Nan Yue Tomb ⑩
- Orchid Garden & Islamic Cemetery ⑪
- Peasant Movement Institute ④
- Qingping Market ①
- Sacred Heart Church ③
- Shamian Island ⑬
- Yuexiu
- Gongyuan ⑫

KEY

- Train station
- Long distance bus station
- M Subway station
- i Tourist information
- Post office

Chen Jia Ci

34 Enlongji Lu. M Chen Jia Ci.

☉ 8:30am–5:30pm daily. 📞

This temple, in the gloriously colorful southern style, was built in 1890 with funds donated by members of the Chen clan. It was to act as a temple of ancestor worship and as a school. Though obviously Chinese, these southern temples are quite different from their northern counterparts. Less severely classical, their halls are generally lower and broader, and they are somehow more casual. Roofs, and as in the case of the first hall here, façades, are often smothered in fantastic designs and sculpted figures from operas.

Nan Yue Tomb

867 Jiefang Bei Lu. ☎ (020) 8666

4920. M Yuexiu Gongyuan. ☉ 9am–

5:30pm, last entry 4:45pm daily. 📞

This is the site of the 2,000-year-old tomb of Zhao Mo, grandson of Zhao Tuo. Zhao Tuo, a Qin general from Hebei province, was sent here in 214 BC to control southern China. After the fall of the Qin, Zhao Tuo established the Nan Yue Kingdom. Shortly after his grandson's death, it was reclaimed by the Han kings.

The tomb contains magnificent burial items made of gold and precious stones, including a jade burial suit. Many of the captions are in English, and a video recounts the story of the excavation that took place in 1983.

Orchid Garden & Islamic Cemetery

Jiefang Bei Lu. M Yuexiu Gongyuan.

☉ 8am–6pm daily. 📞

This charming garden has bamboo groves and ponds overhung with palms. The orchids are in greenhouses, and the best time to see them is late winter to early spring. Along the garden's western edge, the cemetery contains

Brick relief of a traditional opera on the façade of Chen Jia Ci

Shamian Island

沙面岛

LEASED TO THE FRENCH and British after the Chinese were defeated during the Second Opium War (1856–60), this island is really little more than a sandbank about half a mile (800 m) long. Before being allowed to settle on Shamian Island, foreigners had previously been compelled to remain in their warehouses. Soon after the French settled at the east end and the British at the west, the streets filled with European-style villas, banks, and churches. Chinese people were long forbidden to enter the island, so an exclusively European way of life prevailed on this strange outpost.

Christ Church served the Protestants among the British community at the west end of the island.

Cannon in Shamian Park

The two cannons found in Shamian Park were manufactured in the neighboring city of Foshan for use during the mid-19th century Opium Wars.

what is said to be the tomb of Abu Waqas, the uncle of the Prophet, credited with bringing Islam to China. Though closed to non-Muslims, it can be viewed through a screen.

Yuexiu Gongyuan

Jiefang Bei Lu. M Yuexiu Gongyuan. Spread over 222 acres (90 ha), Yuexiu Park is one of the largest municipal parks in China. It is split into several parts by Huanshi Zhong Lu and Qingyuan Lu. The most striking building, the Sun Yat Sen Memorial Hall, is in the southernmost section off Dongfeng Zhong Lu. Built in 1931 in traditional style with a blue tiled roof, it marks the spot where Dr. Sun Yat Sen (see p297) was proclaimed head of government in 1923.

Most of the other sights lie in the middle of the park, including the Five Rams Statue – the city symbol that commemorates the myth that Guangzhou was founded by

Sun Yat Sen Memorial Hall, Yuexiu Gongyuan

Five Immortals riding five rams, who planted sheaves of corn to ensure that famine would never strike.

Nearby, the Municipal Museum is housed in the Zhenhai Lou, a Ming watchtower. It has 1,200 exhibits dating from 4000 BC to the present, and includes a Christian tract that inspired the Taiping Rebellion (see p422).

Art Museum

13 Luhu Lu. T (020) 8365 9337.

O 9am–5pm Mon–Fri, 9:30am–4:30pm Sat–Sun daily. W

This contemporary museum exhibits shows by major Chinese artists. On permanent display is an exhibition of the works of political cartoonist Liao Bingxiong, who was criticized in 1958 for his Rightist leanings.

Façade on Da Jie

This bank's façade is in typical European colonial style. A number of restored buildings along Shamian Dajie have plaques describing their former occupants.

Our Lady of Lourdes

This Catholic church was primarily where the French community, which occupied the island's eastern end, would attend services.

KEY

..... Suggested route

The bedroom at Sun Yat Sen's residence, Cuiheng

Cuiheng 5

翠亨

19 miles (30 km) E of Zhongshan town. 🚗 from Zhongshan & Zhuhai.

ZHONGSHAN county, located 56 miles (90 km) south of Guangzhou, is the birthplace of Sun Yat Sen (see p297), whose name is Sun Zhongshan in Mandarin. This revolutionary leader was born in Cuiheng village on the outskirts of Zhongshan town in 1866. The Portuguese-style house in which he lived with his parents between 1892 and 1895 is now part of a memorial garden devoted to his life. Nearby, other houses belonging to the same period have been restored and are also open to the public.

🏠 Sun Yat Sen's Residence

Cuiheng Dadao. ☎ (0760) 550 1878.

🕒 9am–5pm daily. 📷

Foshan 6

佛山

17 miles (28 km) SW of Guangzhou.

👤 3,210,000. 🚗 minibuses from Guangzhou. 📍 14 Zumiao Lu, (0757) 8222 3828.

FOSHAN HAS been known since the Song dynasty for its fine ceramics, particularly figurines with a pale blue glaze. Visits to factories can be arranged through the tourist office. To view the town's other crafts, it is worth visiting the Foshan Folk Art Studio, housed in a former Ming temple, the Renshou Si, in the southern part of town. Nearby, the Zuci Miao was founded in AD 1080 as a Daoist temple.

It is lavishly decorated with ceramic figures, made in nearby Shiwan, representing scenes from traditional opera and folk stories. Near the entrance is a garden displaying the cannons that were used against the British in the Opium Wars.

🏠 Foshan Folk Art Studio

Zumiao Lu. 🕒 daily. 📷

🏠 Zuci Miao

21 Zumiao Lu. 🕒 8:30am–7:30pm daily. 📷

Elaborate stone roof of Zuci Miao, Foshan

Zhaoqing 7

肇庆

68 miles (110 km) W of Guangzhou.

👤 3,680,000. 🚗 to Hong Kong. 📍 Duanzhou Wu Lu, (0758) 222 9908.

THIS ATTRACTIVE CITY was the home of the Italian Jesuit priest Matteo Ricci in the late 16th century, before he was summoned to Beijing by the Ming emperor, Wanli. Today, it is famous for the scenery at Qixing Yan (Seven Star Crag), 1 mile (2 km) to the north. Located beside a lake, the mist-covered peaks lie in the shape of the Big Bear constellation, and are thought to be fallen stars. They can be explored via a network of bridges and causeways.

The city's sights include the Chongxi Ta, a pagoda overlooking the Xi Jiang. Built in the Ming period, it is the tallest pagoda in Guangdong. The old City Walls still stand on Jianshe Lu, while in the western suburbs, the Plum Monastery is associated with Huineng, the Sixth Chan Buddhist Patriarch.

A short bus ride northeast of the city is the forested reserve of Dinghu Shan, which offers numerous scenic walking trails.

🏞️ Qixing Yan

☎ (0758) 227 7724.

🕒 7:30am–5:30pm daily. 📷

The Piyun Tower perched atop Zhaoqing's ancient city walls

The grand gateway of Feilai Gusi along the banks of Bei Jiang

Feilai & Feixia 8

飞来和飞霞

52 miles (85 km) NW of Guangzhou.

🚢 to Qingyuan. Feilai & Feixia

Temples 🚢 depart daily at 8am from Qingyuan.

THE BUSY MARKET TOWN of Qingyuan is the access point for two picturesque temples located at Feilai and Feixia on Bei Jiang, that can only be reached by ferry. The ferries, which depart early in the morning and return in the afternoon, pass fishermen whose cormorants – trained to fish for them – sit patiently on the prows of sampans. The first temple, Feilai Gusi, was founded about 1,400 years ago and is situated on the steep riverbank of a gorge. Steps lead up from the river to its ornate gateway. Its current buildings are mainly from the Ming dynasty. A short walk through the various buildings leads to a modern pavilion, from where there are superb views along the river.

Located a short distance farther along the gorge is Feixia Gusi comprising two late 19th-century Daoist temples, Feixia and Cangxia. Feixia is much larger than Feilai, and its stone halls and temples are surrounded by a fine set of walls. Cangxia, located up the hillside, was severely damaged during the Cultural Revolution. It is currently being refurbished, and there are some impressive frescoes worth seeking out.

Shaoguan 9

韶关

125 miles (200 km) N of Guangzhou.

SHAOGUAN TOWN HAS only a handful of sights such as the Fengcai Lou, a reconstruction of an ancient city gate, and the Dajian Chan Monastery founded in AD 660, but there are three worthwhile places of interest in the vicinity. The Nanhua Si (Southern Flower Temple) 16 miles (25 km) to the southeast, was founded in AD 502 and became renowned for its connection with Bodhidharma, the founder of Chan (Zen) Buddhism who meditated here for 36 years. One of the halls contains a statue of him, said to have been cast from his corpse; another has a statue of a monk walking on stilts. The bell tower has a large, 700-year-old bronze bell cast in the Song dynasty.

Statue of a monk walking on "improbable stilts," Nanhua Si

About 31 miles (50 km) northeast of town, Danxia Shan is a 112-sq-mile (290-sq-km) park on the banks of the Jin. It has a number of rocky outcrops in fascinating shapes, with trails leading to their summits. A boat or bus takes visitors farther along the river to Danxia Shan itself. Meaning "Red Cloud," it has brilliant red sandstone cliffs, with paths leading past hillside monasteries.

About 11 miles (18 km) south of Shaoguan is Shizi Yan, a cave where the prehistoric remains of Homo erectus, our immediate ancestor, were found. The museum displays arrowheads, pottery, and artifacts from local prehistoric sites.

🚢 Nanhua Si

🕒 7:30am–5:30pm daily. 🚢

🏯 Danxia Shan

🕒 daily. 🚢

🏯 Shizi Yan

🕒 daily. 🚢

Hainan Island 10

海南

ALTHOUGH CHINA'S LARGEST ISLAND became a part of the Chinese empire during the Han dynasty, it remained a backwater and place of exile until the mid-20th century. It was so remote that its ethnic Li people still lived a primitive hunter-gatherer existence until as late as the 1930s. In 1988, it became a Special Economic Zone, but a decline in investments has left behind unfinished construction sites all over. Despite this, Hainan is today an independent province with much to offer. Its attractions include the tropical beaches around the southern city of Sanya, impressive mountain scenery in the southwest, and coffee plantations on its east coast.

Fish being laid out to dry in Xincun on the East Coast

Haikou

300 miles (480 km) N of Sanya.

🏠 515,000. 🚗 🚢 🚆 mainland ferries from Xingang pier.

The island's capital is a busy port and transport hub, with the ambience of a tropical Asian city. To its southeast, Wugong Ci (Five Officials Memorial Temple) was built in 1889 to honor a group of scholars who were banished here during the Tang dynasty for criticizing their government. One of its halls commemorates the Song-era poet, Su Dongpo, who was also exiled here between 1097 and 1100.

To the west of the city center is a massive fortification at Xiuyang, constructed by the Chinese in the 19th century to resist the French. It is surrounded by thick stone walls concealing six large cannons, that are connected by subterranean passages. Farther southwest is the tomb of Hai Rui, an upright Ming dynasty official who was exiled to Hainan for criticism.

Tongshi & the Central Highlands

Tongshi 260 miles (416 km) SW of Haikou. 🚗 from Sanya & Haikou.

Nationality Museum ☞ daily. 📷

The central mountainous region is worth visiting for its spectacular landscape as well as for the chance to explore the island's ethnic culture.

The main town is the pleasant

Tongshi, which is the capital of the autonomous Li & Miao governments. The Nationality Museum offers an excellent insight into all aspects of Hainan's history and culture. Tongshi's surrounding countryside has remnants of traditional Li houses and barns. About 31 miles (50 km) north-east of town is the 6,125-ft (1,867-m) high Wuzhi Shan, which is sacred to the Li people. It is a pleasant hike to the mountain's summit. Also northeast of Tongshi, the town of Qiongzong is surrounded by some beautiful scenery, including the impressive 984-ft (300-m) high waterfall at Baihua Shan.

The East Coast

Wenchang 68 miles (109 km) SE of Haikou. 📷

Overseas Chinese Tropical Farm

☞ (0898) 6362 6257. ☞ daily. 📷

The town of Wenchang is the ancestral home of the Song sisters (see p198), two of whom, Qingling and Meiling, married the revolutionary leaders Sun Yat Sen and Chiang Kai Shek. Its main attractions are the beaches and coconut groves at Dongjiao Yelin. About 62 miles (100 km) south on the outskirts of Wanning town, Dongshan Ling has curiously shaped natural rock formations. Farther south, Xinglong is known throughout China for its coffee, and the Xinglong Tropical Botanical Gardens, 2 miles (3 km) south of town offer coffee and tea tastings.

Xinglong's Overseas Chinese

Tropical Farm is home to over 20,000 overseas Chinese, who emigrated from Vietnam and other countries in Southeast Asia to make their living through the production of coffee and rubber. South of Xinglong is Lingshui, the principal town of the Lingshui Li Autonomous County, that is home to a large number of Li people who have lived on Hainan since 200 BC. The

Calligraphy at Dongshan Ling Ridge

The pristine, palm-fringed beach at Yalong Bay

Communist Museum commemorates China's first Communist government that was formed in Hainan in 1928. Many of Lingshui's narrow streets remain unchanged since the early 1900s, and are lined with quaint shops and houses. Just 6 miles (10 km) south of Lingshui is Xincun with a large Hakka population (see p290). Close by and accessible only by boat, Monkey Island has a sizable colony of Guangxi macaques, and is a popular day trip from Xincun.

Sanya & the South Coast

300 miles (480 km) S of Haikou. 440,000. Hainan's main attractions are the tropical beaches near the town of Sanya. The busiest beach is Dadonghai, just south of town, with hotels, restaurants, and shops. The area's best beach is to the east of town at Yalong Bay, with a 4-mile (7-km) stretch of pristine sand. The beach at Tianya Haijiao, 16 miles

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

15 miles (25 km) S of Guangdong. 8,250,000. train-ferry shuttle from Guangzhou. from Beihai, Shenzhen & Guangzhou. 17 Datong Lu, Haikou, (0898) 6675 7455. Li People San Yue San Festival (the 3rd day of the 3rd lunar month).

(25 km) northwest, is known for its famous rock that appears on the two-yuan note. The other attraction is Ximao Zhou Island, a two-hour boat ride off the coast. It is popular for snorkeling and hiking.

Jianfeng Ling Nature Reserve

65 miles (115 km) NW of Sanya. to Dongfang (Basuo) from Sanya, then local bus. daily. Pleasantly situated in the mountains, this highland rainforest, with its huge trees, ferns, and vines as well as species of birds and butterflies, offers great walks and hikes.

HONG KONG & MACAU

ALTHOUGH TINY AND RELATIVELY recently developed, Hong Kong and Macau are rich and fascinating oddities. They owe their unique identities as administrative regions separate from China to the trade that flourished between East and West from the 16th century onwards, and to the British and Portuguese powers that annexed and held them until 1997 and 1999 respectively.

The Portuguese were the first Europeans to settle at “A-Ma Gau” or the Bay of A-Ma – the region’s patron goddess – in 1557. Today, Macau, as it came to be known, is a charming haven of pastel-colored colonial mansions and glitzy casinos, the proceeds of which, along with tourism, keep this tiny region financially afloat.

In the 1800s, China’s attempt to destroy Britain’s lucrative opium trade drove the British to blockade Chinese ports and eventually secure Hong Kong as their own trading enclave in 1841. The area, hitherto inhabited by farmers and fisherfolk, quickly flourished. After World War II and the four-year Japanese occupation, trade resumed and Hong Kong’s manufacturing industry boomed. It soon grew into a densely packed, high-rise city built by ambitious colonial administrators and millions of Chinese migrants escaping the turmoil convulsing their Communist homeland. In its final years as a British territory, Hong Kong’s status as a major financial center was established. Despite the 1997 Asian financial crisis, it retains its sleek international gloss, its enterprise, and its breathtaking visual impact. Standing in Kowloon and gazing at the skyscrapers scaling Hong Kong Island’s hills, writer Pico Iyer’s description sums it up succinctly: “a dream of Manhattan, arising from the South China Sea.”

Spirals of fragrant incense hanging in Daoist Man Mo Temple, Hong Kong

Exploring Hong Kong & Macau

THE BUSTLING HEART OF Hong Kong is broken in two and divided by Victoria Harbour. Its key sights, cultural attractions, shopping, and eating spots are found along the northern shore of Hong Kong Island, and at, or close to, Kowloon's southern tip. Between Kowloon and the border with the rest of China lie the New Territories, with their rugged mountains and most of Hong Kong's modern, high-rise dormitory towns. The other major islands – Lamma, Cheung Chau, and Lantau – are west of Hong Kong Island, and beyond these is Macau. A passport is necessary to leave or arrive in both Macau and Hong Kong, as they are still administered as autonomous regions of China.

LOCATOR MAP

See Map pp276–7

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Historic Sites, Neighborhoods

& Towns

- Aberdeen 27
- Causeway Bay 3
- Central 1
- The Escalator 8
- Hollywood Road 9
- Lan Kwai Fong 7
- Macau pp326–9 35
- Nathan Road 15
- Stanley 31
- Tsim Sha Tsui Waterfront 13
- Walled Villages 24
- Wan Chai 2

Museums

- Hong Kong Heritage Museum 21
- Hong Kong Museum of Art 14
- Hong Kong Museum of History 17
- Hong Kong Science Museum 16

Parks, Gardens & Areas of Natural Beauty

- Deep Water & Repulse Bays 29
- Hong Kong Zoological & Botanical Gardens 5
- Maclehose Trail 26
- Mai Po Marshes 25
- Sai Kung Town & Peninsula Beaches 23
- Victoria Peak pp312–13 6

Temples & Monasteries

- 10,000 Buddhas Monastery 22
- Hong Kong Life Saving Society 30
- Man Mo Temple 10
- Wong Tai Sin Temple 20

Other Attractions

- Happy Valley Racecourse 4
- Ocean Park 28
- Star Ferry 12

Shops & Markets

- Bird & Flower Markets 19
- Sheung Wan's Markets 11
- Temple Street & Jade Markets 18

Islands

- Cheung Chau Island 33
- Lamma Island 32
- Lantau Island 34

GETTING AROUND

The best way to get around Hong Kong's closely packed central areas is on foot. The efficient MTR (Mass Transit Railway), which is the city's subway system, serves the central districts, and has a fast, modern airport line, while the KCR (Kowloon-Canton Railway) links the center with the New Territories and China (see p632). Buses, trams, and taxis operate from all major nodes and are cheap by international standards. The Star Ferry (see p315), shuttles between Hong Kong Island and Kowloon, while regular inter-island ferries link Hong Kong with the main islands. The fast, sleek Macau-bound ferries leave from their own terminal just west of the inter-island ferry terminal.

SEE ALSO

- Where to Stay pp566-7
- Where to Eat pp592-3

KEY

- International airport
- Ferry terminal
- Train station
- National highway
- Major road
- Minor road
- KCR East Rail
- Walking trail
- Ferry route
- Special Administrative Region

The Two IFC Tower near the Star Ferry Terminal

Central ①

中環

Hong Kong Island. Map 2 C3.

M Central. Star Ferry from Kowloon.

THE SLEEK, corporate cathedrals of local banks and businesses tower over the ever-teeming streets of Hong Kong's financial and administrative epicenter. Apart from Statue Square, which is at the heart of the area, there are few cultural sights in Central, as many colonial buildings have long since disappeared, making way for high-rise development. The desire for real estate has always been strong, and land reclamation started almost as soon as the British took over in 1841. This continuous reclamation has made Hong Kong Island and Kowloon creep even closer. Central is easily explored on foot, allowing visitors a close view of some of the most interesting buildings, especially in Statue Square.

The elegant Neo-Classical Legislative Building, surmounted by the blind-folded figure of Themis, the Greek goddess of justice, is the sole surviving colonial structure in the square. Completed in 1911, it originally served as Hong Kong's Supreme Court and today houses the Legislative Council (Legco), the legislative arm of the region's government.

Beyond the Legislative Building, the municipal-style architecture of the square's center is rather disappointing.

However, not all the structures lack imagination. The modernistic, but feng shui-friendly girders of the HSBC (Hong Kong & Shanghai Banking Corporation) Headquarters loom over the square. Designed by British architect Sir Norman Foster and completed in 1985, it was at that time one of the most expensive buildings, costing more than HK$5 billion. Be sure to take the escalators up to its impressive lobby, and rub the paws of the regal-looking lions outside for luck. The stark spike of the Bank of China headquarters rises behind the HSBC Headquarters. Designed by the renowned Chinese-born architect I.M. Pei, its harsh, angular lines go against all feng shui guidelines, and it is seen as an aggressive statement that offsets the benign energies of the HSBC Headquarters.

Northwest of Statue Square near the Star Ferry Terminal is Hong Kong's tallest building and currently the world's third tallest high-rise, the 88-story, 1,362-ft (415-m) Two International Finance Centre (IFC), built in 2003. Work is also underway on two towers that will house a prestigious 1,000 room hotel.

HSBC building (right) on Statue Square and Bank of China (left)

The IFC Mall at the tower's base is one of Hong Kong's largest malls, adding to Central's several upmarket shopping malls, such as The Landmark. There are plans to build a tower even taller than IFC across the water in Kowloon.

Hong Kong's history is now showcased during the winter holiday season in a sound and light show, where the Victoria Harbour skyline is lit with festive lights that create giant pictures on the buildings.

The roof of the Convention & Exhibition Centre

Wan Chai ②

灣仔

Hong Kong Island. Map 3 F3.

M Wan Chai. Star Ferry from Kowloon. MTR

MADE FAMOUS IN Richard Mason's 1957 novel The World of Suzy Wong, Wan Chai's colorful 1950s and 60s red light district has given way to new development, fancy bars, restaurants, and hotels. The Wan Chai MTR is a good starting point for a walking tour. A trip down Lockhart Road, just around the corner from the MTR, reveals the area's few remaining ties with its past in the form of a handful of go-go bars.

A five-minute walk north of the MTR across Gloucester Road is Central Plaza, at one time the tallest, and still one of Hong Kong's grandest skyscrapers. There are splendid views from the 46th floor. Facing Central Plaza across Harbour Road is the HK$4.8 billion Convention & Exhibition Centre. The sweeping lines of the extension at its northern end are intended to create the impression of a bird taking flight. This was the venue for the 1997 ceremony during which Britain handed Hong Kong back to China. The glass walls offer fine harbor views, and outside are a large promenade and a pleasant sitting area.

Causeway Bay ③

銅鑼灣

Hong Kong Island. M Causeway Bay. T Eastbound (to Shau Kei Wan) trams.

A NEON-LIT CRUSH of giant department stores, such as Sogo and Mitsukoshi, and the ever-present crowds of shoppers is the first view of Causeway Bay when emerging from the MTR. East of the MTR sprawls Victoria Park, Hong Kong's largest public park and a serene place to swim, play tennis, or practice tai ji quan. Close to the harbor, also known as the typhoon shelter, is the Noonday Gun, fired daily since the 1840s and retained as a charity fund-raising event. The enclosure housing the gun opens for half an hour after noon, where a small plaque explains the origins of the tradition,

The historic Noonday Gun, fired daily at noon, Causeway Bay celebrated in Noel Coward's song "Mad Dogs and Englishmen."

Most of the land that Causeway Bay stands on is reclaimed. The old shoreline used to skirt the temple to Tin Hau (Guanyin) near Tin Hau MTR and was edged with British-owned warehouses.

Happy Valley Racecourse ④

快活谷馬場 / 跑馬地馬場

Hong Kong Island. T Happy Valley. F For race night details, call 1817. W www.hkjc.com/english

THE RACECOURSE at Happy Valley crackles with nervous energy during the Wednesday race nights, as tens of thousands of eager gamblers shout their way through the evening. Horse racing is a passion in Hong Kong; it's one of the only legal gambling opportunities available to local people. The industry is carefully controlled, with only the Hong Kong Jockey Club allowed to run the betting.

Formerly a malaria-ridden marsh, Happy Valley was turned into a racecourse as it was the widest stretch of flat land on Hong Kong Island. The first race was held here in 1846. Today, the huge stand holds more than 55,000 spectators. Racing is open all year except in July and August. Happy Valley's small Racing Museum details Hong Kong's racing history.

Hong Kong Zoological & Botanical Gardens ⑤

香港動植物園

Albany Road. Map 2 B4. C (0852) 2530 0154. M Central. Bus 3B, 12, 12A, 12M. Zoo ☐ 6am–7pm daily. Gardens ☐ 6am–10pm daily.

OPPPOSITE Hong Kong Park, just across Cotton Tree Drive, lie the Zoological and Botanical Gardens established in 1864. The gardens house dozens of exotic animals such as lemurs, orangutans, and the world's largest collection of red-cheeked gibbons, while its aviaries have a colorful collection of birds. Hundreds of plants, including some ancient trees, provide welcome shade in this oasis of quiet. There is also a playground, some sculptures and fountains.

HAPPY VALLEY RACES

Hong Kong's punters are crazy about horse racing. A single race at Happy Valley or at Sha Tin in the New Territories, often attracts more bets than an entire week of racing in Britain, and in 2003, the turnover totalled HK$71,000 million, an incredible sum by any standard. The government collects significant tax revenues from the races, and although revenue has always been lost to illegal betting syndicates, the advent of internet gambling increased losses by almost 10 percent.

A thrilling finish at Happy Valley Race Course

Victoria Peak 6

維多利亞公園

COOLING SEA BREEZES, shaded woodland walks and spectacular views of the city, harbor and outlying islands make the Peak an unmissable Hong Kong experience. Ever since colonial days, the Peak has been the place to live in the city. Governors and rich merchants built houses here in the mid-1800s to escape the worst of the summer heat and humidity. The Peak's inhabitants were hauled up the sheer slopes in sedan chairs and numerous Chinese had to be employed to lug supplies to the mansions. When the Peak Tram (actually a funicular railway) was built in 1888, the trip was slashed from an hour's slog to a pleasant, if alarmingly steep, 10-minute ride. Despite the new accessibility, Chinese were excluded from buying real estate on the Peak well into modern times. Today, anyone with the means can acquire these properties – among the world's most expensive.

Victoria Peak Garden

A steep trudge towards the summit leads to these well-manicured gardens, which were once part of the Governor's Lodge (destroyed after World War II). Sadly, the summit is fenced off and houses telephone masts.

★ Peak Circuit

This flat 2-mile (3-km) circuit offers breathtaking views over Victoria Harbour to the north, and Aberdeen and Lamma Island to the south.

Governor's Walk

winds from the garden to Harlech Road. It tends to be overgrown and slippery.

Pok Fu Lam Reservoir

This 3 mile (5 km) path descends through the peaceful woods of the Country Park and past the reservoir. It emerges on Pok Fu Lam Road, where frequent buses head back to the city center.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Peak Circuit
- ★ The View
- ★ The Peak Tram

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

The Peak Tower, 128 Peak Road.
Map 2 A5. ☎ (0852) 2849 0668.
 🚊 Lower Peak Tram Terminal, Garden Road. 🚏 15 from Exchange Square; minibus 1 from PLA Central Barracks on Harcourt Road. 🌐 www.thepeak.com.hk

KEY

- To Victoria Peak Garden
- Peak Circuit
- To Pok Fu Lam Reservoir
- Old Peak Road to Central
- Peak Tram

★ The View

Equally stunning by day or night, the panorama of harbor activity and high-rises is endlessly fascinating. Clouds and smoggy haze, however, often obscure the views; early mornings tend to be clearer.

This old route to Central is pleasantly shaded but unrelentingly steep. To avoid the busy traffic near the bottom, detour onto Tregunter Path.

The Peak Tower

This imposing mall at the tram terminus contains several shops, Madame Tussauds, the Ripley's Believe It or Not! Odditorium (see p333), as well as many cafés with views.

Peak Galleria houses pleasant shops and cafés.

★ The Peak Tram

A commuter line with one of the best safety records in the world, the Peak Tram has been trundling up the hair-raisingly steep 27° incline between St. John's Cathedral and Victoria Gap for over a century.

Lan Kwai Fong 7

蘭桂坊

Central. Map 2 B3. M Central.

IT IS ONLY AT NIGHT that Lan Kwai Fong (“Orchid Square”) really starts to buzz, attracting office workers, including plenty of city suits, to its many bars, clubs, and restaurants. It houses some of the trendiest pubs and entertainment hangouts in Hong Kong, and the street is especially packed with revelers on Fridays and Saturdays, although most places remain open until late throughout the week. The partying spills across D’Aguilar Street to tiny Wing Wah Lane’s bars and good-value Thai, Malay, and Indian restaurants, most of which have outdoor dining spaces.

Crowds outside Lan Kwai Fong’s many bars and clubs

The Escalator 8

中環半山自動扶手電梯

Central. Map 2 B3. M Central.
Q 6am–midnight.

ALL THE ROADS between Queen’s Road and Conduit Road are linked by a 2,598-ft (792-m) long string of escalators. This is the longest covered outdoor escalator system in the world, and took two-and-a-half years and more than HK$205 million to build. It is the best way to commute between Central, the Mid-Levels, and SoHo (South of Hollywood Road). Several bars, cafés, restaurants, and market stalls cluster round the Entrance to The Escalator – an easy way to commute from Central Escalator. Good Spring Company, just beneath the Escalator on Cochrane Street, sells foul-tasting health tonics from a brass urn. Inside, its herbalist consultants, some of whom speak English, can tailor-make a brew for those who are curious.

In the last few years, partly following the completion of the Escalator, SoHo has been transformed from a sleepy district into a thriving entertainment area. Elgin, Shelley, and Staunton Streets are excellent places to find food and drink. A plaque on Staunton Street marks the site of the house in which Dr. Sun Yat Sen (see p297), seen by many as China’s revolutionary forefather, met with fellow members of his society in the late 1890s. It also marks a historical trail of 13 sites connected with him.

Lion, Man Mo Temple

Hollywood Road 9

荷李活道

Central. Map 2 B3. M Central, then Escalator.

THE MANY antique shops here no longer offer the bargains they once did, but Hollywood Road still has shops selling ancient ceramics, mammoth ivory carvings, and delicate snuff bottles. The stalls on Upper Lascar Row are a good hunting ground for antiques, old coins, and kitsch. Haggling is acceptable here. Some home furnishings shops, located at the eastern end, sell traditional items such as teardrop-shaped silk lampshades.

Man Mo Temple 10

文武廟

126 Hollywood Rd. Map 2 A2.

C (0852) 2540 0350. M Central, then Escalator.

ATMOSPHERIC Man Mo Temple stands at the corner of Ladder Street.

Inside its red and gold interior, smoke curls from giant incense spirals hanging from the ceiling, and flames in large brass urns devour paper offerings to the dead, such as the ubiquitous Hell bank notes. Built in 1847, the temple was dedicated to two deities, Man and Mo (the Gods of Literature and War), believed to be real men – the 3rd-century administrator Cheung Ah Tse and the 2nd-century soldier

Lighting a joss stick at Man Mo Temple

The city's Star Ferry service – an unmistakable sight in Hong Kong

Kwan Wan Chung – who were deified by the emperors. Their statues can be seen at the back of the main chamber. The temple served as a courthouse and community center to the Chinese in the 19th century, as an alternative to adopting the alien policies followed by the British.

Sheung Wan's Markets 11

上環街市

Hong Kong Island. Map 2 A1.

M Sheung Wan.

THE SHORT stroll from Central's slick modernity into the western district of Sheung Wan feels like entering a different city. Beneath the scruffy 1950s tenement blocks, the area around Queen's Road West and Wing Lok Street teems with Chinese medicine and dried seafood wholesalers. This is probably the world's largest center for the shark's fin trade, an exorbitantly priced delicacy, usually used in soups. The piles of fins on view explain why the world shark population is fast declining.

Apart from dried goods, fresh produce is available in the many fruit, vegetable, and "wet" markets dotted along the area between the Escalator and Morrison Street. Live produce, of the feathered, finned or webbed kind, is usually sold in the wet markets, while the fruit and vegetable markets sell a wonderful selection of fruit and typical Chinese fare, including fresh, still-steaming bean curd and tangy "1,000 year eggs," which are not, in fact, that old, but given an aged look by the mineral earth they are stored in. These places are not to be missed, although the squeamish may want to avoid the "wet" markets.

Fresh fruit piled high at a market in Sheung Wan

Star Ferry 12

天星小輪

Star Ferry Terminals: Central, Wan Chai & Kowloon. Map 2 C2, 3 F3, 3 E1. T (0852) 2367 7065. W

FEW ACTIVITIES IN Hong Kong can compete with the sheer excitement and romance of jumping on these portly old 1960s ferries that chug ponderously between Kowloon and Hong Kong Island. They are by far the best and cheapest way to view the city skyline by day or night. The main route links the Kowloon peninsula (just near the Clock Tower) with the Star Ferry Terminal at Central, but it is also possible to reach the Convention Centre and Wan Chai from Kowloon aboard these jolly green boats. Touted as Hong Kong Island's most dependable sight, the Star Ferry service was started by Mr. Dorabjee Nowrojee, a Parsi gentleman, way back in 1898. At that time, the only people allowed on first-class decks were Europeans, and a collar and tie were obligatory.

Forecourt of the Hong Kong Cultural Centre

Tsim Sha Tsui Waterfront 13

尖沙咀沿岸

Kowloon. Map 1 B5. M Tsim Sha Tsui. SF Star Ferry. F Star Ferry Concourse. Hong Kong Cultural Centre 10 Salisbury Rd, (0852) 2734 2009.

THE TSIM SHA TSUI waterfront is a popular tourist destination with some of the ritziest arcades, museums, and hotels in the city. The Star Ferry (see p315) docks are also located here. East of the pier is the Hong Kong Cultural Centre, which houses halls, theaters, and galleries. Adjacent to the Centre is the Space Museum, ideal for children with its interactive exhibits beneath a golf-ball dome. There are new attractions – the Avenue of Stars honoring the city's film greats and an Observation Wheel for views of its skyline.

Hong Kong Museum of Art 14

香港藝術館

10 Salisbury Road, Tsim Sha Tsui. Map 1 B5. F (0852) 2721 0116. M Tsim Sha Tsui. SF Star Ferry. C 10am–6pm Fri–Wed. SF free Wed. W www.lcsd.gov.hk/hkma

THE MUSEUM OF ART is renowned for its exhibitions of traditional Chinese watercolors and calligraphy. Exquisite craftware from Southern China and Asia fills the second floor. Also on display are more than 3,000 objects in ceramics, jade, bronze, lacquer, enamel, glass, ivory, as well as furniture and fine porcelain.

Nathan Road 15

彌敦道

Kowloon. Map 1 B4. M Tsim Sha Tsui.

ALSO KNOWN AS the Golden Mile on its lower reaches, Nathan Road is Kowloon's main transport artery. Running north through the center of the peninsula, it is bright, busy, and packed with hotels and shops. The term Golden Mile, however, flatters the area – far more glitzier enclaves can be found in Central. Nonetheless, a stroll along Nathan Road is one of the essential

Hong Kong experiences for its crowds of shoppers and workers, the tangle of neon signage, the ever-present tailoring shops, and the mixture of smart hotels, Cantonese canteens, and grim guest-house tenement blocks, such as the notorious Chungking Mansions, nightmare of many a backpacker. The road's far northern end offers glimpses of the past. Here, the ramrod straight Boundary Street still marks the line of the 1860 border, the year Britain forced China to cede Kowloon to accommodate the burgeoning island colony.

Neon sign, Nathan Road

Hong Kong Science Museum 16

科學館

2 Science Museum Rd, Tsim Sha Tsui East. Map 1 C3. F (0852) 2732 3232. M Tsim Sha Tsui. C 1pm–9pm Mon–Wed & Fri, Sat, 10am–7pm Sun & public hols. SF free Wed. W www.lcsd.gov.hk/CE/Museum/Science

A GREAT destination for children, the Science Museum is packed with fun interactive displays on its four floors that detail basic scientific principles, including electricity and gravity, and how weather systems such as tornados are formed. There are also good displays on technology, which demonstrate the workings of various types of machinery ranging from the combustion engine to computer chips, as well as robotics and virtual reality.

Model of a DNA molecule at the Hong Kong Museum of Science

Hong Kong Museum of History 17

香港歷史博物館

100 Chatham Road South, Tsim Sha Tsui East. Map 1 C3. F (0852) 2724 9042. M Tsim Sha Tsui. C 10am–6pm Mon & Wed–Sat, 1pm–6pm Sun & most public hols. SF free Wed. W www.lcsd.gov.hk/hkma

THE PURSUIT OF profit and the resulting change of pace in much of Hong Kong has eroded most of its historical and cultural heritage. The excellent Museum of History shows what the region looked like before the skyscrapers arrived. Walk around replicas of traditional villages, street blocks, and shops or linger over fascinating displays of old photographs. There is also a display of Bronze Age daggers, pottery, and arrowheads found on Lamma and Lantau Islands (see pp324–5), and a fun exhibit on toys made in Hong Kong.

Temple Street & Jade Markets 18

廟街及玉石市場

Yau Ma Tei. Map 1 B2. M Jordan or Yau Ma Tei.

HAGGLING IS AN essential skill at the Temple Street night market, which only livens up after 8pm. Although cheaper bargains are available elsewhere, the atmosphere and range of items, including fake designer labels, shoes, Mao memorabilia, and pirated DVDs, are unbeatable. Adding to the experience are fortune tellers, Cantonese operas, and food vendors. The market snakes north from Ning Po Street to Man Ming Lane. The day-time Jade Market is a good place to pick up inexpensive trinkets, although cheaper jade can be found in Guangzhou (see pp298–9), and elsewhere in China.

Caged song birds for sale at the Bird Market in Mong Kok

Bird & Flower Markets 19

雀仔街及花園街

Flower Market Road, Mong Kok, Kowloon. M Prince Edward.

THE BIRD AND FLOWER markets are less frenetic and more remote than Temple Street, but they are well worth a visit. Colorful blooms and clever bamboo creations line Flower Market Road, just north of Prince Edward Road West. Located at the end of Flower Market Road is the small Bird Market with a few stalls selling elegant cages, food, and song birds. Some bird lovers can be seen feeding their birds grasshoppers through the cage with chopsticks.

Wong Tai Sin Temple 20

黃大仙祠

Wong Tai Sin, Kowloon. C (0852) 2328 0270. M Wong Tai Sin. ☐ 7am–5:30pm daily.

THE TEMPLE AT Wong Tai Sin is one of Hong Kong's largest, busiest, and most interesting places of worship. The complex contains altars and shrines to Buddhist, Confucian, and Daoist deities. It is primarily dedicated to the god Wong Tai Sin, a shepherd reputed to have performed healing miracles. Beside the main temple are fortune tellers, some of whom can reveal your fortune for a hefty fee in English, mostly through palm and face reading. Some worshippers try to divine what lies in store for them by shaking small canisters of bamboo sticks, until one emerges from the stack. Each is marked with a numeral and a corresponding meaning. Also used are bui or "Buddha's lips," two pieces of wood shaped like orange-segments. A question is asked, the bui are thrown, and the "lips" answer yes or no, depending on which way they land.

Wong Tai Sin Temple, one of Hong Kong's busiest places of worship

Life-size Buddhas, 10,000 Buddhas Monastery

Heritage Museum 21

香港文化博物館

1 Man Lam Rd, Sha Tin, New Territories. 🚏 Sha Tin KCR, then free shuttle bus or bus 68A. 📞 (0852) 2180 8188. 🕒 10am–6pm Tue–Sun. 🌐 📄 www.heritagemuseum.gov.hk

THIS EXCELLENT, modern museum tells the story of Hong Kong's 6,000 year-old human history. The largest of the city's museums, it has six permanent exhibitions and plenty of space for special temporary shows. The New Territories Heritage Hall illustrates prehistoric human life, the rise of village society, colonial rule and the large-scale development of the New Territories towns. There is also a display on Cantonese opera, which explains the elaborate ritual and color symbolism involved and contains exquisitely-crafted costumes. Beautiful calligraphy scrolls hang from the second floor. The Children's Discovery Gallery on the ground floor is a colorful, fun look at Hong Kong's natural habitat.

10,000 Buddhas Monastery 22

萬佛寺

Sha Tin, New Territories. 🚏 Sha Tin KCR. 🕒 9am–5pm daily.

RUBY-LIPPED, life-size golden Buddhas line the steep path up to the Temple of the 10,000 Buddhas, a 15-minute walk from the northern exit of the Sha Tin

KCR station. Cross the road and follow the clear signposts to the temple, which is at the top of the wooded hill. The main temple houses hundreds of tiny golden Buddhas which line shelves reaching up to the ceiling. There are more Buddha images outside, including one astride a giant white elephant and another on top of a huge dog. Still more statues peep from the monastery's bright-red, nine-story pagoda. The small annex above the main temple contains the embalmed body of the temple's founding monk, covered in gold leaf and placed in a glass case.

Pagoda, 10,000 Buddhas

Sai Kung Town & Peninsula Beaches 23

西貢海灘

New Territories. 🚇 M to Choi Hung station then taxi or bus 92 to Sai Kung Town.

IT MAY SEEM incredible, but just a few miles from Kowloon's bustling streets, it is possible to find empty beaches, clear surf, and seclusion on the shores of the rugged Sai Kung Peninsula.

The area is best accessed via Sai Kung Town, a pleasant place to wander among the stalls selling fish near the seafront, and to eat at the profusion of seafood restaurants.

Some of the most pristine beaches on the peninsula can be found at Tai Long Wan, where there is a small village and a couple of cafés and shops. The best way to reach this secluded spot is to take bus 94 from Sai Kung Town to Pak Tam Au, part of the Maclehoose Trail (see p321), and then hike to Tai Long Wan. A reasonable level of fitness is required and remember to take along a good map and plenty of fluids.

Much shorter and flatter woodland walks start at

The emerald waters and beaches of the Sai Kung Peninsula

◀ Central's glittering skyscrapers, with Wan Chai and Causeway Bay beyond

Pak Tam Chung Visitor Centre. Maps are available here for numerous walks, including a worthwhile nature trail. Take a taxi or bus 94.

Alternatively, hire a kaido, a small ferry, from Sai Kung Town for a tour of the many small islands. It is easy to find eager operators near the jetty, although without speaking Cantonese, travelers will need a map to point out where they would like to go, as most of the operators don't speak English.

Walled Villages 24

圍村

Fanling, New Territories. 🚗 Fanling KCR, then 54K minibus.

ONE OF THE BEST ways to get a flavor of pre-colonial times in the New Territories area is to walk along the Lung Yuek Tau Heritage Trail near Fanling, beginning at the Tang Chung Ling Ancestral Hall. One of the largest in the region, this well-maintained building has an ornate roof and dates back to 1525.

Owned by the Tangs, one of the five great New Territories clans, members still worship, pay respects to ancestors, and hold celebrations at the hall.

The Heritage Trail passes the five wais (walled villages) and six tsuens (villages) built by clan members within a mile of each other. They are in various states of repair, from dilapidated ruin to pristine walled compound. Keep in mind that some wais are still home to several clan families. One of the better-preserved wais is Lo Wai Far. Another interesting wai, Tong Kok, is just a couple of minutes' walk north of the Ancestral Hall and has dozens of houses including modern buildings. The entire trail can be covered in an hour or two. Signposting is rather patchy, but there is a detailed map of the trail outside the ancestral hall.

A short walk west of the Fanling KCR station is the modern Daoist temple of Fung Ying Sin Koon, dedicated to the deities representing the Chinese Zodiac signs. People make offerings of incense and fruit to their chosen deity. Another chamber contains the ashes of the dead, stored in letterbox-sized holes in the wall. Given the sombre mood of this temple, it is best to keep cameras packed away.

Interior shrine, Fung Ying Sin Koon Temple

🚗 Fung Ying Sin Koon

Fanling, New Territories. 🚗 Fanling KCR. ☐ 9am–5pm daily. 📞

Mai Po Marshes 25

米埔自然保護區

New Territories. 📞 (0852) 2471 6306. 🚗 Sheung Shui KCR then 76K bus or taxi. Permits deposit & advanced booking required. 📞 on weekends. 📞

WEDGED BETWEEN Hong Kong and the urban sprawl of Shenzhen, this globally important wetland is home to a range of wildlife species. Pollution has taken its toll elsewhere along the Pearl River Delta, making this 940-acre (380-ha) park the last refuge for many species. Apart from herons and egrets, otters and the very rare black-faced spoonbills can be seen. There are numerous bird hides for keen bird-watchers. Contact HKTB (see p333) for details on guided weekend tours. A 158-acre (64-ha) area has been set aside for the Hong Kong Wetland Park, slated to open at the end of 2005.

Maclehose Trail 26

麥理浩徑

New Territories. Tai Mo Shan taxi from Tsuen Wan MTR.

Government Publications Centre

📞 (0852) 2537 1910.

STRUNG EAST–WEST across the middle of the New Territories, this 62-mile (100-km) route takes in huge, wild and high areas from Tuen Mun in the west to the lovely Sai Kung Peninsula in the east. Divided into 10 manageable stages, it is possible to walk for long stretches without seeing a soul. One of the most scenic sections takes in Tai Mo Shan, Hong Kong's highest peak with views, on a clear day, down to the distant city. The far eastern stage is also very beautiful, concluding at Tai Long Wan's lovely beaches (see p320). Sturdy shoes, fluids, and maps (from the Government Publications Centre) are essential. The record for completing the trail is under 13 hours as part of the Annual Trailwalker Charity Race.

A scenic waterway in Mai Po Marshes

A traditional fishing boat moored in Aberdeen's bustling harbor

Aberdeen 27

香港仔

Hong Kong Island. 🚏 7 or 70 from Central.

ONCE A QUIET fishing village, Aberdeen is today the largest separate town on Hong Kong Island with a population of more than 60,000. Named in 1845 after the British Colonial Secretary, the Earl of Aberdeen, the harbor housed Hong Kong's first dockyard, which was built in the 1860s.

A short bus ride from Central (see p310), the Aberdeen district has a rather unattractive town center, edged by massive, high-rise apartment blocks, commercial towers, and factories. What it lacks in aesthetic appeal, however, it makes up for in bustle and atmosphere. The boat-filled harbor is the big attraction in Aberdeen as it is the center of all activity. Many of the boats found here are actually part-time residences for Hong Kong's fishermen and their families; so much so that the district still has the characteristics of a traditional fishing village. Tiny sampans dodge among the wooden fishing fleet and the large, palatial floating restaurants. Pushy operators on the waterfront offer tours by sampan that take visitors past the fishing boats, the houseboats, and small harbor-side shipyards.

Alternatively, for a quicker (and free) tour, jump aboard the shuttles to the floating restaurants moored here, such as the Jumbo Floating Restaurant. The first and most famous of the floating restaurants, it is a massive, palatial hulk that is part Las Vegas-style casino and part Chinese temple. Eating here is a fun experience, although the restaurants on the islands of Lamma and Cheung Chau (see p324) offer better seafood.

Ocean Park 28

海洋公園

180 Wong Chuk Road, Aberdeen.

☎ (0852) 2552 0291. 🚏 Ocean Park City Bus from Central's Star Ferry Pier or 6A, 6X, 70, 75, 90, 97, or 260. 🚏

🕒 10am–6pm daily.

🌐 www.oceanpark.com.hk

WITH THE ARRIVAL of a mega competitor in the shape of Lantau Island's Disneyland (see p325), Ocean Park, Hong Kong's first amusement park, has fought back with new attractions. It is much better than it ever was, although it will be hard pressed to compete with the might of Disney. There is plenty to do for adults and children alike, and it's easy to spend a day exploring the seven themed areas of this pleasant complex. The Lowland Gardens area is one of the most enjoyable sections, with a butterfly house, and, the theme park's pride, two giant pandas, An An and Jia Jia.

The garish Jumbo Floating Restaurant lights up Aberdeen Harbour

A scenic cable car skirts the edge of Deepwater Bay, dropping passengers in Marine Land. Here, a large and impressive aquarium captivates visitors with close-up views of schools of fish and an underwater tunnel through a tank of sharks. Bird Paradise has over 1,000 birds in its aviaries, including flocks of flamingos. Numerous thrilling rides are found throughout the grounds, with Kids World supplying tamer rides for youngsters.

Deep Water & Repulse Bays 29

深水灣及淺水灣

Hong Kong Island.

6, 6A, 61, 260, 262 from Exchange Square bus station.

SEVERAL GOOD beaches line these two scenic bays located along the road from Aberdeen to Stanley. Deep Water Bay is a pretty spot favored by the wealthy, with many luxurious houses. The long stretch of beach lined by cypress-like trees is reminiscent of the French Riviera.

Colossal statue of goddess Guanyin, Repulse Bay

The popular beach at the seaside town of Stanley

Up-market apartment blocks, inhabited by Hong Kong's business elite, surround the long, well-tended beach at Repulse Bay. The beach is a popular summer destination and gets very crowded in season and on weekends. The pricey Verandah Restaurant – the only surviving section of the stately Repulse Bay Hotel, which was torn down in the 1980s – is a good place for a drink or afternoon tea. Just behind the Verandah is a supermarket for picnic supplies, and a few cafés.

Hong Kong Life Saving Society 30

香港拯溺協會

Repulse Bay, Hong Kong Island.

7am–7pm daily.

AT THE FAR southern end of Repulse Bay is the Hong Kong Lifeguards' Club. The building also serves as a temple, and is a great place for children to explore. Garish statues – a menagerie of gods, animals, and mythical beasts – are scattered across the grounds in amongst the life-saving equipment. Among the gods is a large statue of Guanyin, the Bodhisattva of Mercy, to whom the temple is dedicated. Several other gods are represented, including a number of smiling bronze Buddhas. Rubbing their bald heads is said to bring good luck. Some believe that crossing the Bridge of Longevity also adds three days to a person's life.

Stanley 31

赤柱

Hong Kong Island. 6, 6A, 6X, 260 from Exchange Square bus station.

10am–6:30pm daily.

THIS PRE-COLONIAL fishing village today resembles a British seaside town, complete with English-style pubs. The extensive sprawl of market stalls selling clothes, beachwear, silk, jade, trinkets, and furniture draws weekend crowds. The area also has a good selection of Thai, Italian, Spanish, Vietnamese, and Chinese restaurants.

Beside the square is Murray House, a large, Neo-Classical building, housing some fine restaurants with bay views. Dismantled and rebuilt here in 1998, it originally stood on the site now occupied by the Bank of China tower in Central. Next to it Tin Hau Temple, built in 1767, is one of the island's oldest and most evocative shrines. The festival of Tin Hau (see p45) is celebrated in late April or early May with dances and boat races.

On the other side of town is the beautifully kept Stanley Cemetery, dating to the earliest colonial days. It contains the gravestones of early residents and soldiers killed in World Wars I and II, including those who died in the Japanese concentration camp built nearby. Stanley Beach, on the other side of the peninsula, is a long stretch of sand and the venue for the local dragon boat races.

Lamma Island, with hilltop views of the sea and Hong Kong Island

Lamma Island 32

南丫島

🚢 from Central (pier 4).

GOOD SEAFOOD restaurants and pubs, a relaxed atmosphere, pleasant hilltop walks, and the absence of cars make leafy, low-key Lamma the perfect escape from the city bustle. Its two main villages, Yung Shue Wan on the west coast and restaurant-packed Sok Kwu Wan on the east coast, are a half-hour ferry ride from Central. Yung Shue Wan is an expat stronghold with two or three English-style pubs and some good Chinese and Western restaurants. A steep climb leads to the hills above Yung Shue Wan, where there are fine views of the sea and Hong Kong Island. Visitors can hike on the path between the two villages, but should plan their walk around the infrequent return ferry from Sok Kwu Wan. En route are signposts to the Kamikaze Caves, on the outskirts of Sok Kwu Wan, where, during World War II, a fleet of speed-boats packed with explosives intended for British ships was hidden, but never used.

Cheung Chau Island 33

長洲

🚢 from Central (pier 5). 🏮 Bun Festival (May).

THIS CHARMING island, just a half-hour by ferry from Hong Kong Island, has plenty to offer, from paddling near its beaches to exploring the traditional shops and shrines along its narrow lanes and eating at the many seafood places at the harbor's edge on Pak She Praya Road. The squid with shrimp paste is a local speciality. The southern coast offers the best walks, with fine sea views and woodland pathways threading past colonial mansions.

The island's earliest settlers lived here some 2,500 years ago; their only surviving relics are the geometric etchings on the rocks below Warwick Hotel (see pXXX). In the 19th-century, the island was a haven for pirates, where the notorious Cheung Po-Tsai supposedly hid plunder. The fishing community is depleted today due to excessive fishing over the past 50 years.

Close to the harbor, the 1783 Pak Tai Temple is dedicated to the island's patron deity, who is credited with saving islanders from the plague in 1777. The annual Bun Festival (see p333) is celebrated here in May, when young men scale 26-ft (8-m) towers made entirely of buns.

Colorful sampans and fishing boats in Cheung Chau harbor

Lantau Island 34

大嶼山

🚢 from Central (pier 6) to Mui Wo (Silvermine Bay).

TWICE THE size of Hong Kong Island, Lantau was ceded to the British in 1898 along with the other islands and the New Territories. Despite the recent addition of a new bridge and the huge Chek Lap Kok airport, large tracts of the island still remain largely uninhabited, including two country parks in which are the peaks that form the island's backbone and numerous hiking trails.

Lantau's seclusion has made it a popular place for religious retreats. The most striking of these is Po Lin Monastery, located on a hilltop on the Ngong Ping plateau. The

Tai O Fishing Village

Traditional stilt houses cluster on the muddy banks of the small estuary at this rural fishing settlement.

0 kilometers 2
0 miles 2

monastery grounds are grand and colorful, and the over-the-top, gaudy main temple is well worth a visit. The Big Buddha, an 85-ft (26-m) statue perched at the top of a 268-step flight of stairs, is the monastery's biggest draw. Since the Buddha's consecration in 1993, the monastery has been overrun with tourists. There are also bauhinia and orchid gardens and basic vegetarian food in two canteens.

The area around Ngong Ping is also a great place for walks and picnics. Keen hikers stay at the SG Davis Youth Hostel before making a pre-dawn hike up Lantau Peak to watch the spectacular sunrise.

At the island's western end, the sleepy fishing village of Tai O has narrow streets and tiny residences reminiscent of rural China. Once a major salt

The Big Buddha at Po Lin Monastery

trading center, today the old salt pans are being used as fish-breeding ponds. Tai O has a few temples and many shops selling live seafood and dried fish, the local speciality.

To the west of the island, Discovery Bay is the starting point for a gentle walk to a Trappist Monastery. Its chapel is open to visitors willing to observe the vow of silence taken by the monks.

Lantau's newest attraction, the multi-billion dollar Hong Kong Disneyland, is modeled after the original Disneyland in California, and the 311-acre (126-ha) area includes a park featuring Mickey Mouse and his friends, as well as original attractions designed especially for Hong Kong, themed-hotels, and a retail and dining center.

Ngong Ping & The Big Buddha

 Bus 2. Also taxi or (from end 2005), cable car from Tung Chung MTR.

Disneyland

 Yam O MTR to Penny's Bay station.

By 2006, Tung Chung should be connected to Po Lin Monastery by a 4-mile (6-km) cable car.

Hong Kong Disneyland is built on reclaimed land, which was once Penny's Bay.

Discovery Bay is a slightly surreal dormitory community, where residents get about in golf buggies. A jet ferry connects to Central.

Mui Wo, the island's main pier, has several restaurants and bars as well as a beach.

Cheung Sha's clean, sandy and often deserted beach, is one of Hong Kong's best.

Lantau Peak

The only way up this 3,065-ft (934-m) high peak is via a steep path through tea gardens. It is an ideal spot for watching the sunrise.

KEY

 International airport

 Ferry

 National highway

 Major road

 Minor road

 Railroad

Macau ㊦

澳门

AN HOUR BY FERRY FROM Hong Kong, Macau is a perfect place to spend a day strolling around the old town and dining in one of its many excellent restaurants. Its main draws are 24-hour gambling and its indigenous cuisine, a fusion of Chinese and Portuguese flavors. Macau owes its unique heritage to Western colonial influences. Predating Hong Kong by 200 years, it became the first European enclave in China when Portuguese traders and Jesuits arrived here in the 1500s. The colony remained under Portuguese rule for 450 years until it was handed back to China in 1999. The adjacent islands of Taipa and Coloane, linked by bridges to Macau, also feature some fine restaurants. The local currency, the pataca, is worth roughly the same as the Hong Kong dollar, which is also widely accepted here.

Historic cannons on the ramparts of Fortaleza do Monte

Fortaleza do Monte

Rua de Monte. ☉ May–Sep: 6am–7pm; Oct–Apr: 7am–6pm daily.

Macau Museum Praceta do Museu de Macao, No 112. ☎ (0853) 357 911. ☉ 10am–6pm Tue–Sun. 📺

Built in 1616, this fortress housed the original Portuguese settlement at Macau. Its thick ramparts, surmounted by ancient cannons, still occupy a commanding position and appear as invincible as they did in 1622, when the invading Dutch forces were defeated.

Dug into the hill beneath the fort is the impressively informative Macau Museum. Its escalators and stairs provide an air-conditioned route to the hill-top fortress passing through entertaining re-creations of Portuguese and Chinese life. Beginning with the arrival of Portuguese traders and Jesuit missionaries, the chronological exhibitions compare the two cultures at the time of contact and go on to cover the development of Macau and its unique traditions.

Ruínas de São Paulo

Rua de São Paulo. ☎ (0853) 358 444. ☉ 9am–6pm daily.

All that is left of this once grand cathedral, built by the Jesuits and perched precariously atop a steep flight of steps, is its magnificent, crumbling façade. Its most outstanding features are the ornate figures on the façade, comprising a “sermon in stone” that records some of the main events from the Christian scriptures.

The cathedral was built by Japanese Christian converts, who fled to Macau in the 16th century following religious repression. In the 18th century, Macau also expelled the Jesuits, and the building was converted into barracks until it was destroyed by a fire in 1835. Only extensive structural work in the 1990s stopped the façade from crumbling. The attached museum houses paintings, sculptures, and relics from Macau’s churches.

The magnificent façade of the Ruínas de São Paulo

The Old Protestant Cemetery

Praca Luis de Camões.

☉ 9am–6pm daily.

The gravestones at this cemetery at the corner of the Camões Gardens are crammed with fascinating historical details that give some wonderful insights into the lives led by early colonists. Many of them were Britons, who traded, married, or fought in and around Macau before Hong Kong was established as a British territory. Among the notable people buried here are Robert Morrison, the first Protestant missionary to venture to China, and the artist George Chinnery. The gravestones speak of short but heroic lives, such as that of the brave Lieutenant Fitzgerald killed after “gallantly storming” a gun battery at Canton (now Guangzhou). The inscription on Robert Morrison’s tomb states that he produced the first Chinese version of the Old and New Testaments. The adjoining Camões Gardens are named after the renowned Portuguese poet Luis Vaz de Camões, the author of the 16th-century epic The Lusíads.

Guia Fort & Lighthouse

Estrada de Cacilhas.

☉ 9am–5:30pm.

The Guia Lighthouse was built in 1637, and offers great views over the town. Initially it served as a fort to defend the border with China, but in 1865 a lighthouse was added. A pleasant way to get here is to take the cable car to the hilltop. A small chapel stands next door and there are several gentle walking trails around the hill.

Gravestone, Old Protestant Cemetery

Colonial façade on Largo do Senado

Hotel Lisboa

2-4 Avenida de Lisboa.

T (0853) 577 666.

Resembling an architect's rendition of a pineapple on the outside and a 1970s nightclub on the inside, the Lisboa includes a large complex of casinos, restaurants, and the semi-riské "Crazy Paris" cabaret show. There is the usual array of slot machines, blackjack, baccarat, roulette, and keno (bingo), as well as some Chinese games, including the dice game dai sui and the mahjong-style pai kao.

Gambling is Macau's lifeblood, contributing more than half the government's revenue. Much of it is controlled by the business tycoon Dr. Stanley Ho, owner of the Lisboa and much of Macau. Macau also hosts horse racing, held twice a week, and greyhound racing, four times a week (see p332).

Largo do Senado

The symbolic heart of Macau, the Largo do Senado or Senate Square has numerous stately colonial buildings set around it, including the Leal Senado or Loyal Senate, which now houses the municipal government, the General Post Office, and the Santa Casa de Misericórdia, an old refuge for orphans and prostitutes. There are also numerous restaurants and the tourist office. The striking, wavy black and white tile patterns snaking across the square make it a great place to take photographs by day or floodlit by night.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

- P 448,000. I Taipa Island, about a mile (2 km) South.
- F Macau Ferry Terminal, Avenida Amizade (ferries to Hong Kong); Pier 14, off Rua das Lorchas (ferries to Shenzhen & Guanzhou).
- T 9 Largo de Senado, (0853) 315 566.
- A Macau Arts Festival (Mar).
- W www.macautourism.gov.mo

Praia Grande

Perhaps the best way to get a flavor of Macau's colonial architecture is to take a stroll on the Avenida de Praia Grande. Although land reclamation has encroached on the waterfront and robbed the Praia Grande of some of its elegance, it is still a charming place with many grand houses still in excellent condition. The monument to Jorge Alvares, the first Portuguese explorer to reach China, stands near the corner of Avenida do Dr. Mario Soares. One of the most handsome buildings is the old Governor's Residence. Although it is not open to the public as it is a private residence, a good view can be had from the road.

☞ Rua da Felicidade

A variety of sweet scents waft from the Rua da Felicidade or “Street of Happiness,” where tasty and colorful Macanese biscuits and cakes are baked and sold. The area once teemed with brothels, hence its somewhat ironically bestowed name. Today, it is a charming, cobbled street lined with small eateries, which makes it a good place for a quick lunch stop.

☞ Maritime Museum

Largo do Pagode da Barra 1.

☎ (0853) 595 481.

🕒 10am–5:30pm Wed–Mon. 📺 Small-scale but interesting exhibits make this museum worth a visit for insights into Macau’s maritime past upon which its wealth was built. Displays include models of Chinese junks, Portuguese ships and fishing boats, a mock Hakka village (see p290), a dragon boat, and a small aquarium. There are also motorized junk rides around the harbor.

☞ Pousada São Tiago

Avenida da Republica Fortaleza de São Tiago da Barra. ☎ (0853) 378

111. 🌐 www.saotiago.com.mo

Well worth a visit for a drink on the terrace, a night’s stay, or a meal at its restaurant, this tiny but enchanting hotel (see p567) was once a fortress hewn from the rock on which it stood in the 17th century.

Avenida da Republica, near the Pousada São Tiago

A scale model of a Chinese junk, Maritime Museum

The chapel to São Tiago, Portugal’s patron saint of soldiers, remains to this day. The structure is more a rocky grotto than a smart hotel, which only adds to its charm. A natural spring runs through the lobby and the corridors are paved with flagstones. Its rooms are traditionally decorated in Portuguese style, with dark wooden furniture and attractive tiles. The hotel also runs a good restaurant, Os Gatos.

☞ Macau Tower

Largo da Torre de Macau.

☎ (0853) 933 339.

🕒 10am–9pm Mon–Fri, 9am–9pm Sat.

🌐 www.macautower.mo

The Macau Tower, the peninsula’s most visible attraction, is 1,107 ft (338 m) high. The tower provides a great view; in fact, visitors can see Hong Kong’s surrounding islands on a clear day. It is, however, not the ideal place for those who don’t like heights. Glass-sided elevators rocket visitors skywards, and the restaurants and viewing galleries at the top are also partially glass-bottomed. For the truly adventurous, it is possible to don overalls and a harness, and explore parts of the tower’s exterior with the adventure sports company, A.J. Hackett, which runs a number of activities around the tower. These range from the relatively sedate bungee trampolining to a dizzying skywalk around the tower’s outer rim at a height of over 764 ft (233 m).

The modern Macau Tower

☞ Fisherman’s Wharf

🕒 24 hours daily.

As themed complexes go, this is one of the newest, largest, and most technicolor in the region. It occupies a total of 1 million sq ft (92,900 sq m) at the outer harbor. The complex, brainchild of tycoon Stanley Ho, is built on newly reclaimed land and is divided into three areas. Dynasty Wharf, built in Tang-dynasty style, is a massive food mall. At East Meets West, an artificial volcano erupts in pyrotechnic display at night, while inside are thrilling rides in mine carts (think Indiana Jones). The adjacent Children’s Fort is specifically for families. To see replicas of different areas of the world with themed restaurants and shops, go to Legend Wharf. It also has a marina for luxury yachts.

Regional Food: Macau

WHEN THE PORTUGUESE arrived in Macau 450 years ago, the peninsula was virtually uninhabited. They cooked using Portuguese methods, but with local Chinese ingredients and southeast Asian herbs and spices picked up from their other outposts in Africa, Goa, Malacca, Indonesia, and Japan. As the years went by, and links home were established, some of the grander families stuck with Portuguese recipes made with the traditionally correct ingredients, while the less well-off incorporated more Cantonese-style dishes and ingredients, and over time the two cuisines fused together to form a separate Macanese cuisine.

Flowering choi sum

A selection of Cantonese sweetmeats in a Macau shop

PORTUGUESE

BACALHAU is the most famous Portuguese ingredient. This dried and salted cod is integral to Iberian cookery and in Macau is cooked in every way possible. Distinguishing other Portuguese influences is difficult but good signs include the liberal use of olive oil, almonds, chorizo (paprika sausage), rabbit, and saffron. Other non-Chinese foods that are available are bread, cakes, cheese, olives, and coffee. Macau is also home to a well-developed wine culture, and naturally almost all the wines on offer are Portuguese. These are generally better quality than on the mainland and even better value.

OTHER INFLUENCES

THE OTHER OBVIOUS change to Cantonese cuisine is the more generous use of herbs and spices: coriander and chillies in peri-peri dishes from Africa; fish sauce from SE Asia; hot and spicy curries from Goa; feijoada and sweet potatoes from Brazil; tamarind from Malacca.

A selection of typical Macanese ingredients

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

There are very few totally Cantonese-inspired dishes in the Macanese cuisine. Tacho – a winter casserole of beef, pork, chicken and Chinese sausage is perhaps the most Cantonese of all Macanese dishes. As expected, bacalbau dishes feature prominently.

There are Bacalbau Guisado (Salted Cod Stew), Bacalbau a Gomes de Sa (Salted Cod in Gomes de Sa Style), and Pasteis de Bacalbau (Salted Cod Cake) to name just a few. Other popular dishes include Caril de Camarao (Shrimp Curry). There are traditional Portuguese dishes like Caldo Verde (Cabbage and Potato Stew) and Carne de Porco a Algarvia (Braised Pork with Clams). At first sight, Pasteis de Nata (Egg Tartlets) look the same as the Cantonese ones in Hong Kong, but they taste quite different.

Saffron strands bacalbau dishes feature prominently. There are Bacalbau Guisado (Salted Cod Stew), Bacalbau a Gomes de Sa (Salted Galinha Africana (African Chicken) is so called perhaps because of its blackened coloring. It is marinated in garlic, chillies, and coconut milk, then roasted in a hot oven.

Shopping in Hong Kong & Macau

Ceramic art,
Tsim Sha Tsui

LABEL-MAD HONG KONG is a paradise for shoppers, and is jammed with opportunities to buy from swanky designer boutiques in modern shopping malls to inexpensive street markets. It is a competitive destination for some electronic and computing items as well as good-quality, custom-made suits, shirts and cheongsams – the tight-fitting, traditional Chinese silk dresses. Visitors are unlikely to find good bargains, however, especially if comparing prices with those in China.

Hong Kong's main advantage, though, is the sheer, unrivaled profusion of items on sale. Don't be afraid to haggle in markets and smaller stores, though prices are usually fixed in smarter shops and department stores.

MARKETS

STREET MARKETS are one of the best bargain-hunting grounds in Hong Kong, as long as you're prepared to sift through the ever-present fake designer goods. The Temple Street Night Market (see p317) in Tsim Sha Tsui is perhaps the most celebrated for its atmosphere, its prices and the range of accessories, clothes, trinkets, and other memorabilia. The Jade Market, near the night market, sells exactly what it advertises. The market at Stanley (see p323), on Hong Kong Island's southern coast, is as much fun for the trip out on the dramatic winding roads across the island. It is a good place to shop for arts, crafts, clothes, and accessories.

Western Market is a more sedate place, located in the western district of Sheung Wan. Inside the handsome colonial-era building are dozens of small stalls selling antiques, watches, chinoiserie, and jade. The middle floor spills over with huge bolts of fabric in every color and stripe. Upstairs there is a good café serving excellent dim sum.

SHOPPING CENTERS, MALLS & DEPARTMENT STORES

EVEN SEASONED department store junkies can overdose on the huge variety available in Hong Kong's sprawling shopping malls. Harbour City, with its massive and recently extended malls containing hundreds of individual shops, even dwarfs the big liners that dock near the Star Ferry at Tsim Sha Tsui in Kowloon. Across Victoria Harbour on Hong Kong Island, The Landmark in Central and Pacific Place in Admiralty are the places to go to for designer clothing labels such as Prada, Versace, and Zegna, and super-chic consumables from Vuitton, Bulgari, and Tiffany. Sogo at Causeway Bay (see p311) is another mammoth department store, while Island Beverley, nearby, crams hundreds of small outlets into its dozen or so floors, and sells modish street fashion.

ANTIQUES & JEWELRY

HOLLYWOOD ROAD (see p314) in Central is best for antiques, and is full of emporia selling everything from huge terracotta tomb guards to delicate little snuff bottles. Established names include Honeychurch Antiques specializing in wooden carvings, bracelets, and necklaces, Gorgeous Arts & Crafts, which stocks reasonable antique furniture, and Dragon Culture, offering a good selection of pottery, bamboo carvings, and snuff bottles. Gallery One is another good place to browse for antique jewelry. There are also some good antique shops in Macau (see pp326–9), immediately to the south of the Ruínas de São Paulo.

ELECTRONICS, CAMERAS & COMPUTERS

TSIM SHA TSUI as well as the rest of Kowloon are generally the places to head to for electronics and gadgetry. Once the bargain basement of international electronics retail, Nathan Road is still packed with camera and electronics outlets, but prices aren't as competitive as they once were. Be wary, as there are numerous tales of less-than-honest vendors. If you plan to shop here anyway, do your homework, make sure you compare like for like, ask questions (ensuring that your purchase is compatible with your home country's voltage), and you may find a bargain.

Star House, opposite the bus terminal and the Star Ferry at Tsim Sha Tsui, is convenient and contains about 20 computer boutiques on its second floor. Farther north, the Mongkok Computer Center houses more retailers. Its prices are generally lower than other stores, and visitors can try bargaining. However, if you would like to keep your shopping more straightforward, the Fortress chain stores are reasonably-priced and a safe bet for cameras and handhelds. They will provide warranties and guidance on foreign voltages.

CHINESE ARTS & CRAFTS

THERE'S LITTLE DOUBT that the wares on offer in Chinese Arts & Crafts can be found at a much cheaper price over the border, but it is a convenient place to go to when buying last-minute presents. The store in Tsim Sha Tsui is packed with silk goods, carvings, ceramics, jade, and teapots. The Lok Cha Tea Shop, just below Hollywood Road in Central, is a cosy, friendly place, where visitors can sample delicate green and jasmine teas and buy some exquisite traditional teapots. Bargain teapots can also be found at Macau's Culture Club. For a modern take on Chinese style, the upmarket G.O.D. (Goods of Desire) chain offers smart interior goods at reasonable prices.

CLOTHES

NEEDLESS TO SAY, the malls and department stores are the best places for clothes. However, Joyce is also a good destination for shoppers seeking a large range of smart labels under one roof. Great value Gap-style clothing can be found at one of the many Giordano stores in town.

Shanghai Tang in Central offers traditional Chinese clothes and home decor with a contemporary twist. For Europeans who despair of finding essentials in their size, there is always the well-known British Marks & Spencer chain of stores.

Party-goers may want to sift through the stylish, modern and retro street fashion offerings at the independent boutiques in King Wah Building. Legendary for its tailors and shirt makers, Hong Kong is still the place to come. Take a chance with the ever-present street stores in Tsim Sha Tsui or go for established names such as David's Shirts at the Mandarin Oriental or the renowned Sam's Tailor, who has made elegant outfits for an illustrious clientele. For end-of-line designer bargains, the small boutiques at the top of the Pedder Building (floors four and above), may yield some big savings.

Hong Kong's markets are awash with fake designer wear, whose quality and cut are often far inferior to the real thing. If looking for authentic labels, it is best to avoid the street markets altogether, and shop only at the larger department stores and boutiques.

DIRECTORY

MARKETS

Jade Market

Kansu & Shanghai Sts, Yau Ma Tei. Map 1 B1.
 10am-3:30pm daily.

Stanley Market

Stanley, Hong Kong Island.
 11am-6pm daily.

Temple Street Night Market

Temple St, Yau Ma Tei.
Map 1 B2.
 6pm-midnight daily.

Western Market

Des Voeux Rd Central, Sheung Wan. Map 2 A2.
 10am-7pm daily.

DEPARTMENT STORES

Harbour City

3 Canton Rd, Tsim Sha Tsui. Map 1 A4.
 (0852) 2118 8666.

Island Beverley

1 Great George St, Causeway Bay.
 Causeway Bay.

The Landmark

12-16 Des Voeux Rd Central. Map 2 C3.
 (0852) 2526 4416.

Pacific Place

88 Queensway. Map 3 D4.
 (0852) 2844 8988.

Sogo

555 Hennessy Rd, Causeway Bay.
 (0852) 2833 8338.
 Causeway Bay.

ANTIQUES & JEWELRY

Dragon Culture

231 Hollywood Rd, Central.
Map 2 A2.
 (0852) 2545 8098.

Gallery One

31-33 Hollywood Rd, Central. Map 2 B3.
 (0852) 2545 6436.

Gorgeous Arts & Crafts

Upper Ground Floor, 30 Hollywood Rd, Central. Map 2 B3.
 (0852) 2973 0034.

Honeychurch Antiques

29 Hollywood Rd, Central.
Map 2 B3.
 (0852) 2543 2433.

ELECTRONICS, CAMERAS & COMPUTERS

Fortress

Shop 3320, The Gateway, Harbour City, Canton Rd, Tsim Sha Tsui.
Map 1 A4.
 (0852) 2116 1022.

Mongkok

Computer Centre
 8a Nelson St, Mongkok.
 Mongkok.
 (0852) 2384 6823.

Star House

3 Salisbury Rd. Map 1 A5.

TRADITIONAL ARTS & CRAFTS

Chinese Arts & Crafts

Star House, 3 Salisbury Rd, Tsim Sha Tsui. Map 1 A5.
 (0852) 2735 4061.

Culture Club

390 & 398 Avenida Almeida Ribeiro, Macau.
 (0853) 921 811.

G.O.D.

Sharp St, Leighton Centre, Causeway Bay.
 (0852) 2890 5555.

Causeway Bay.
 Hong Kong Hotel, Harbour City, Canton Rd.
Map 1 A4.
 (0852) 2784 5555.

Lok Cha Tea Shop

290b Queen's Rd Central, Sheung Wan. Map 2 A2.
 (0852) 2805 1360.

CLOTHES

David's Shirts

M17, Mandarin Oriental, Queen's Rd Central.
Map 2 C3.
 (0852) 2524 2979.

Giordano

Shop 4, Grd Floor, China Building, 29 Queen's Rd Central.
Map 2 C3.
 (0852) 2921 2028.

Joyce

18 Queen's Rd Central.
Map 2 C3.
 (0852) 2810 1120.

King Wah Building

628 Nathan Rd, Mongkok.
 Mongkok.

Marks & Spencer

Ocean Terminal, Canton Rd. Map 1 A4.
 (0852) 2926 3331.
 Central Tower, 24-28 Queen's Rd Central.
Map 2 C3.
 (0852) 2921 8365.

Pedder Building

12 Pedder St, Central.
Map 2 C3.

Sam's Tailor

Burlington Arcade, Shop K, 94 Nathan Rd, Tsim Sha Tsui.
Map 1 B4.
 (0852) 2367 9423.

Shanghai Tang

Pedder Building, 12 Pedder St, Central.
Map 2 C3.
 (0852) 2525 7333.

Entertainment in Hong Kong & Macau

Fruity cocktails

HONG KONG'S ENTERTAINMENT options are incredible. There are several good venues attracting local and international musicians, Chinese opera groups, and theater and comedy shows, particularly during the arts festival in February and March. In recent years, the city's nightlife has begun to boom, and bars, dance venues, pubs, and music clubs are plentiful. The younger crowd have discovered an appetite for house and techno music, although they retain their liking for Cantopop, the older pop genre. Karaoke bars are also a favorite with locals.

Macau, although a lot quieter, is the place to go to for serious gambling or to eat at its excellent restaurants.

ENTERTAINMENT GUIDES

VISITORS WILL be spoiled for choice in terms of good listings in Hong Kong. Perhaps the best is the free, weekly HK Magazine, available in most cafés and bars, that offers a thorough guide to eating, drinking, shopping, and entertainment. The Friday edition of the South China Morning Post is another good listings guide. The free BC Magazine is a glossy fortnightly, with listings of clubs aimed at the young.

BARs & PUBS

THE PLACES TO find many of the best clubs, bars and pubs in Hong Kong are in Lan Kwai Fong (see p314) near Central, the streets around the Escalator, and SoHo. Club 64 in Central, though nothing special to look at, is a friendly place with an alternative crowd. Le Jardin, around the corner, is less frenetic than nearby Lan Kwai Fong, and quiet enough to have a conversation in. If you want to drink with the jet-set, there are a number of super-smart bars including Felix above the Peninsula Hotel with sensational harbor views. Alternatively, try the pricey Tango Martini in Wan Chai, C Bar in Central, or the fashionable Drop in SoHo, which turns into a club later in the evening. For a more laid-back drink in a pleasant organic café, go to Life, just off the Escalator in SoHo.

NIGHTCLUBS

NIGHTCLUBS VARY hugely from down-at-heel, free-to-enter clubs that just play music to slick, cutting edge venues for the rich and famous. Cover prices vary but a typical mid-range fee would be around HK$100. In Lan Kwai Fong, Club 97 is small and smart with an exclusive reputation. Its disc jockeys spin fine jazz, funk, and house tunes. C Club just round the corner below C Bar, is a great place for house music. The Drop, Home and the exclusive Dragon I are a few of the other popular clubs.

MUSIC & ARTS VENUES

THERE'S NO shortage of venues for large musical, operatic, and dramatic productions. These include the Cultural Centre, that sometimes offers free concerts, the Hong Kong Convention & Exhibition Centre in Wan Chai and the Hong Kong Coliseum in Hung Hom. Close to the Coliseum, the Ko Shan Theatre is the place to go for Chinese opera and orchestral music performances. The Hong Kong Arts Centre, The Fringe Club, and The Hong Kong Academy of the Performing Arts all offer more intimate venues for an excellent and diverse range of arts from dance to stand-up comedy. The Wanch is a tiny place that hosts local folk and indie acts, while The Music Room Live, which hosted some huge international legends, is the venue for salsa, Cuban, R&B, and jazz.

The Macau Cultural Centre is also worth a visit. It houses art, history and architecture exhibitions and runs a busy calendar of music, theater, opera, and dance, particularly in March during Macau's arts festival.

SPORTS

SPRING HERALDS the start of the dragon boating season check the HKTB for event details. The Rugby Sevens tournament in March is a huge, boisterous event for Hong Kong's expats, many of whom see its main purpose as an opportunity to drink large quantities of beer. For those interested in the actual game, 50 matches are played by the assembled internationals in 72 hours. Hong Kong is also host to a number of professional tennis tournaments from October to December.

GAMBLING

HORSE RACING at the tracks in Sha Tin and Happy Valley (see p311) is the only spectator sport where you can gamble legally in Hong Kong. It is the biggest such spectator event in the region and race days or nights are well worth attending for the sheer atmosphere alone. Macau also has its own, less fevered horse racing nights as well as an excellent greyhound racing track, the rather grandly titled Canidrome. Macau, of course, is best known for its glitzy casinos, running all day and night, most notably at Hotel Lisboa (see p327).

CHILDREN'S ENTERTAINMENT

HONG KONG'S recent attractions are two state-of-the-art amusement parks: Ocean Park (see p322), the region's oldest amusement park, and more recently built Disneyland (see p325), offering a massive range of rides, attractions and entertainment. At the top of Victoria Peak (see pp312-13), Ripley's Believe It or Not! Odditorium is a slightly macabre collection of the bizarre from around the world. A little more educational, and certainly more charming, is the enchanting Edward Youde Aviary in Hong Kong Park, which is built to resemble a tropical rainforest.

TRADITIONAL FESTIVALS

ONE OF Hong Kong's grandest annual celebrations is the Chinese New Year. Victoria Park

becomes a huge open-air market and there are spectacular harbor fireworks that rival any display in the world. The Birthdays of Tin Hau, the Goddess of the Sea, is more low key. Parades and lion dances take place at the larger temples, including the one at Joss House Bay in the New Territories, and temples and fishing boats are decorated all over Hong Kong. The Cheung Chau Bun Festival in May is a fun three-day event on Cheung Chau Island (see p324). It culminates in the eating of huge piles of buns offered, some say, to the unhappy spirits of victims of the island's pirate past, and a procession of "floating" children, carried aloft on hidden poles. The Dragon Boat Festival in June is marked with a great flourish, making it one of the region's most exciting events. Other traditional festivals celebrated in Hong Kong include the Hungry Ghost Festival in mid/late August and the Mid-Autumn Festival in late September/early October.

DIRECTORY

Hong Kong Tourist Board (HKTB)

Hong Kong Island: The Centre, 99 Queen's Road Central. Map 2 C3.
Kowloon: Star Ferry Concourse. Map 1 5A.
☎ (0852) 2508 1234.
www.discoverhongkong.com

BARS & PUBS

C Bar

30–32 D'Aguilar St, Central. Map 2 B3.
☎ (0852) 2530 3695.

Drop

Basement, On Lok Mansion, 39–43 Hollywood Rd, Central (entrance on Cochrane St). Map 3 B3.
☎ (0852) 2543 8856.

Felix

Peninsula Hotel, Salisbury Road. Map 1 B4.
☎ (0852) 2315 3188.

Life

10 Shelley Street, SoHo. Map 2 B3.
☎ (0852) 2810 9777.

Le Jardin

10 Wing Wah Lane, Central. Map 2 B3.
☎ (0852) 2526 2717.

Tango Martini

3rd Floor, Empire Land Commercial Centre, 81–85 Lockhart Rd, Wan Chai. Map 3 F4.
☎ (0852) 2528 0855.

NIGHTCLUBS

C Club

30–32 D'Aguilar St, California Tower. Map 2 B3.
☎ (0852) 2526 1139.

Club 97

9 Lan Kwai Fong. Map 2 B3. ☎ (0852) 2810 9333.

Dragon I

The Centrium, 60 Wyndham St. Map 2 B3.
☎ (0852) 3110 1222.

Home

2nd Floor, 23 Hollywood Rd, Central. Map 2 B3.
☎ (0852) 2545 0023.

MUSIC & ARTS VENUES

Hong Kong Cultural Centre

L5, Auditoria Building, 10 Salisbury Rd. Map 1 B5.
☎ (0852) 2734 2009.
www.lcsd.gov.hk/en/cs.php

The Fringe Club

2 Lower Albert Rd, Central. Map 2 C3.
☎ (0852) 2521 7251.
www.hkfringe.com.hk

Hong Kong Academy for Performing Arts

1 Gloucester Rd, Wan Chai. Map 3 E3.
☎ (0852) 2584 8500.
www.hkapa.edu

Hong Kong Arts Centre

2 Harbour Rd, Wan Chai. Map 3 E3.
☎ (0852) 2582 0200.
www.hkac.org.hk

Hong Kong Coliseum

9 Cheong Wan Rd, Hung Hom, Kowloon.
☎ (0852) 2355 7233.
Hung Hom KCR.
www.lcsd.gov.hk/CE/Entertainment/Stadia/HKC

Hong Kong Convention & Exhibition Centre

1 Expo Drive. Map 3 F3.
☎ (0852) 2582 8888.
www.hkcec.com.hk

Ko Shan Theatre

77 Ko Shan Road, Hung Hom.
☎ (0852) 2740 9212.
www.lcsd.gov.hk/CE/CulturalService/KST/

Macau Cultural Centre

Av. Xian Xing Hai S/N NAPE, Macau.
☎ (0853) 700 699.
www.ccm.gov.mo/

The Music Room Live

2nd Floor, California Tower, 34–36 D'Aguilar Street. Map 2 B3.
☎ (0852) 2845 8477.

The Wanch

54 Jaffe Road, Wan Chai. Map 3 F4.
☎ (0852) 2861 1621.

GAMBLING

The Canidrome

Avenida General Castelo Branco, Macau.
☎ (0853) 333 399.
www.macaudog.com

Happy Valley Racecourse

Happy Valley, Hong Kong Island.
☎ 1817.
www.hkjc.com/english

Sha Tin Racecourse

☎ 1817. www.hkjc.com/english

CHILDREN'S ENTERTAINMENT

Disneyland

Penny's Bay, Lantau Island.
☎ (0852) 2203 2000.
Penny's Bay.
www.hongkongdisneyland.com/english

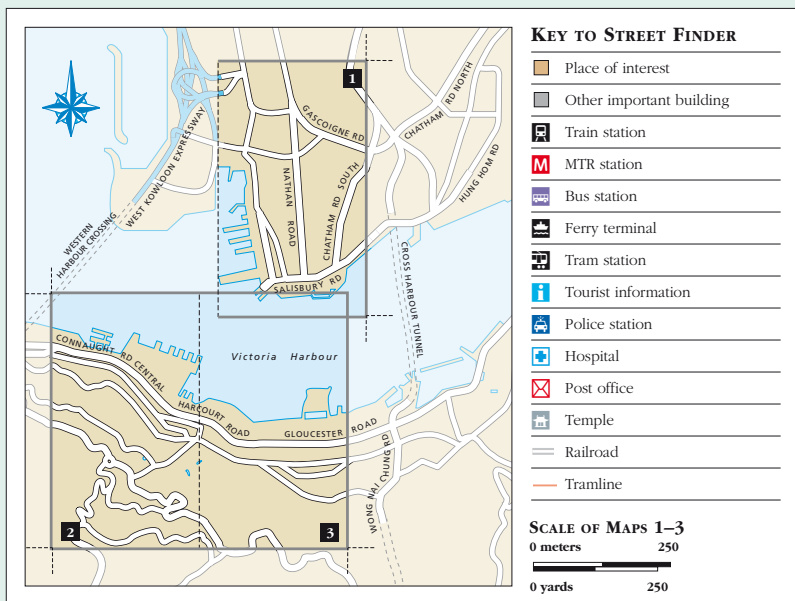

Edward Youde Aviary

Hong Kong Park, Cotton Tree Drive, Central. Map 2 C4.
☎ (0852) 2521 5041.
www.lcsd.gov.hk/parks

Ripley's Believe It or Not! Odditorium

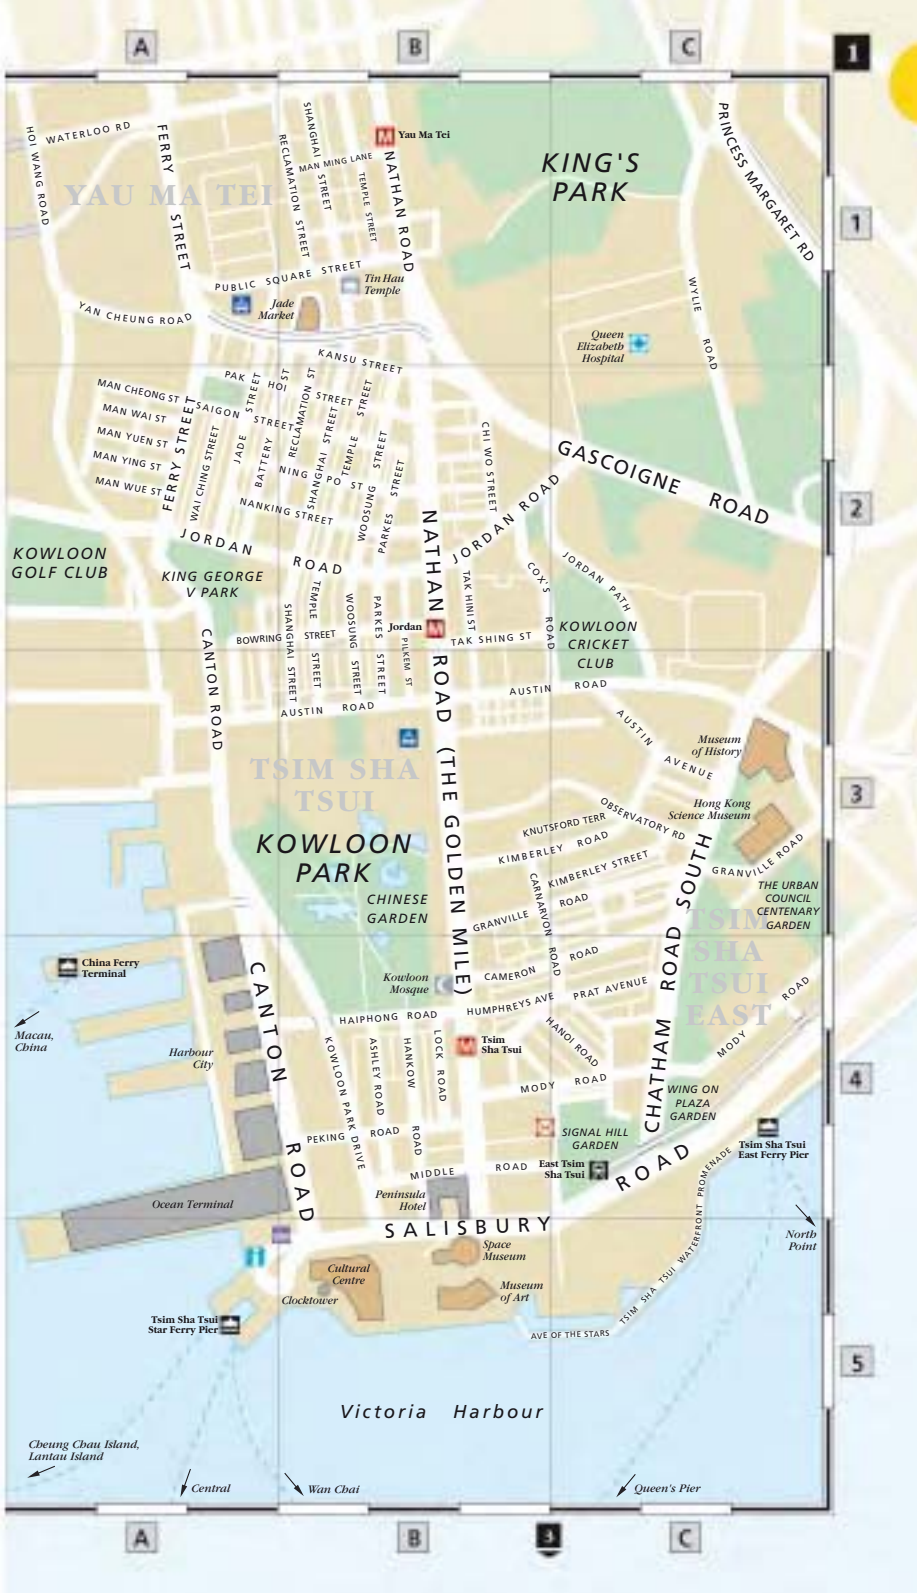

3rd Floor, Peak Tower, 128 Peak Rd, The Peak. Map 2 A5.
☎ (0852) 2849 0668.
www.thepeak.com.hk/tower/ripleys.html

HONG KONG STREET FINDER

Street Finder Index

A	Aberdeen St continues	2A3 2B3	D	D'Aguiar St Des Voeux Rd Central Drake St	2B3 2B2, 2C3 3D3, 3D4	J	Jade St Jaffe Rd Jervois St Johnston Rd Jordan Path Jordan Rd Jubilee St	1A2 3F4 2A2 3E4, 3F4 1C2 1A2, 1B2 2B2	Modry Rd Morrison St	1B4, 1C4 2A2	S	Saigon St Salisbury Rd Severn Rd Seymour Rd Shanghai St continues Shelley St Ship St Spring Garden Lane Stanley St Star St Stamton St Stone Nullah Lane Swatow St	1A2 1B5, 1C4 2B5 2A5 1B1, 1B2 1B2 2A3, 2B3 3E4 3F4 2B3 3E4 2B3 3F4 3F4
B	Barker Rd Battery St Bonham Strand East Bonham Strand West Borrett Rd Bowen Rd Bowring St continues Bridges St	2B5, 2C5 1A2 2A2, 2B2 2A2 3D5 2C4 1A2 1B2 2A3	E	Edinburgh Place Elgin St	3D3 2B3	K	Kansu St Kennedy Rd continues Kimberley Rd Kimberley St Knutsford Terrace continues Kowloon Park Drive	1B1 2C4 3D4, 3E4 1B3, 1C3 1C3 1B3 1C3 1B4	O	Observatory Rd Old Peak Rd continues	1C3 2B4 2A5	T	Tai Pang Shan St Tak Hini St Tak Shing St Tamar St Temple St continues Thomson Rd Tiu Yuen St Tregunter Path Rd	2A2 1B2 1B2 3D3 1B1 1B3, 1B3 3F4 3F4 2B5
C	Caine Rd continues Cameron Rd continues Canton Rd continues Carnarvon Rd continues Castle Rd Chater Rd Chatham Rd South continues Chi Wo St Cochrane St Conduit Rd Connaught Rd Central Cotton Tree Drive Cox's Rd Cross St	2A3 2B3 1B4 1C4 1A3 1A4 1B3 1C4 2A3 2C3 1C3 1C4 1A1 1A1 2B3 2A4 2B2, 2C2 2C4 1B2 3F4	F	Fenwick St continues Ferry St Findlay Rd Fleming Rd	3E3 3E4 1A2 2A5, 2B5 3F3, 3F4	L	Ladder St Lan Kwai Fong Lee Tung St Lock Rd Lockhart Rd Lok Ku Rd Lower Albert Rd continues Luard Rd Lugard Rd Lung Wui Rd Lyndhurst Terrace	2A2, 2A3 2B3 3F4 1B4 3F4 2A2 2C3 2C4 3F4 2A4 3D3 2B3	P	Prak Hoi St continues Parkes St Peak Rd Peddler St Peel St Peking Rd Pier Rd Pilkem St Plantation Rd Pottinger St Prat Ave Promenade Public Square St	1A2 1B2 1B2, 1B3 2A5 2C3 2B3 1B4 2B2 1B3 2B5 2B3 2C4 1C4 1C4, 1C5 1A1, 1B1	U	Upper Albert Rd continues Upper Lascar Rd	2B4 2C4 2A2
G	Gage St Garden Rd Gascoigne Rd Gloucester Rd continues Graham St Granville Rd continues Gresson St	2B3 2C3, 2C4 1C2 3E3 3F3 2B3 1B3 1C3 3E4	H	Haiphong Rd Hankow Rd Hanoi Rd Harbour Rd Harbour View St Harcourt Rd Hennessy Rd continues Hoi Wang Rd Hollywood Rd continues Hornsey Rd Humphreys Ave	1B4 1B4 1C4 3F3 2C2 3D3 3E4 3F4 1A1 2A2 2B3 2B4 1B4	M	Macdonnell Rd Magazine Gap Rd continues Man Cheong St Man Ming Lane Man Wai St Man Wue St Man Ying St Man Yuen St Middle Rd	2C4 2B4 2C4, 3D5 1A2 1B1 1A2 1A2 1A2 1A2 1A2 1A2 1B4	Q	Queen Victoria St Queen's Rd Central Queen's Rd East Queen's Rd West Queensway	2B2 2A2, 2B2 3E4 2A2 3D4	R	Reclamation St continues Robinson Rd	1B1 1B2 2A3
I	Ice House St	2C3	M	Middle Rd	1B4	W	Wai Ching St Wan Chai Rd Waterloo Rd Wellington St Wing Fung St Wing Lok St Woosung St Wylie Rd Wyndham St	1A2 3F4 1A1 2B2, 2B3 3E4 2A2, 2B2 1B2, 1B3 1C1 2B3	Y	Yan Cheung Rd	1A1

A

B

C

1

1

2

3

4

5

WATERLOO RD

FERRY STREET

RECLAMATION STREET

SHANGHAI STREET
MAN MING LANE
TEMPLE STREET

NATHAN ROAD

KING'S PARK

PRINCESS MARGARET RD

WHITE ROAD

YAN CHEUNG ROAD

PUBLIC SQUARE STREET

KANSU STREET

MAN CHEONG ST

MAN WAI ST

MAN YUEN ST

MAN YING ST

MAN WUE ST

PAK HOI STREET

SAIGON STREET

JADE STREET

BATTERY STREET

RECLAMATION ST

SHANGHAI STREET

NING PO ST

NANKING STREET

WOOSEUNG STREET

TEMPLE STREET

RECLAMATION ST

SHANGHAI STREET

WOOSEUNG STREET

TEMPLE STREET

SHANGHAI STREET

AUSTIN ROAD

BOWRING STREET

SHANGHAI STREET

NATHAN ROAD (THE GOLDEN MILE)

JORDAN ROAD
TAK HING ST
TAK SHING ST

GASCOIGNE ROAD

JORDAN ROAD
COX'S ROAD

JORDAN PATH
AUSTIN ROAD

KOWLOON GOLF CLUB

KING GEORGE V PARK

TSIM SHA TSUI

KOWLOON PARK

CHINESE GARDEN

KOWLOON CRICKET CLUB

AUSTIN ROAD

Museum of History

Hong Kong Science Museum

KNUTSFORD TERR

KIMBERLEY ROAD

KIMBERLEY STREET

GRANVILLE ROAD

CARMON ROAD

CAMERON ROAD

HUMPHREYS AVE

HANOI ROAD

MODY ROAD

CHATHAM ROAD SOUTH

GRANVILLE ROAD

PRAT AVENUE

MODY ROAD

WING ON PLAZA GARDEN

THE URBAN COUNCIL CENTENARY GARDEN

GRANVILLE ROAD

MODY ROAD

WING ON PLAZA GARDEN

MODY ROAD

WING ON PLAZA GARDEN

MODY ROAD

WING ON PLAZA GARDEN

MODY ROAD

WING ON PLAZA GARDEN

MODY ROAD

WING ON PLAZA GARDEN

MODY ROAD

WING ON PLAZA GARDEN

MODY ROAD

China Ferry Terminal

Macau, China

Harbour City

Ocean Terminal

Tsim Sha Tsui Star Ferry Pier

SALISBURY

Space Museum

Museum of Art

Clocktower

Cultural Centre

Peninsula Hotel

Kowloon Mosque

CHINESE GARDEN

HAIPHONG ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

HANKOW ROAD

LOCK ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

ASHLEY ROAD

MIDDLE ROAD

North Point

Cheung Chau Island, Lantau Island

Central

Wan Chai

Queen's Pier

A

B

C

2

A

B

C

Macau ← Ma Wan ← Discovery Bay, Lantau Island ← Lamma Island ← Cheung Chau Island ← Mui Wo, Peng Chau & Lantau Island

Western Harbour Crossing
 Hong Kong-Macau Ferry Terminal
 Government Pier
 Pier 2
 Pier 3
 Pier 4
 Pier 5
 Pier 6

1

WING LOK ST
 BONHAM STRAND WEST
 SHEUNG WAN
 SHEUNG WAN
 CONNAUGHT ROAD CENTRAL DES VOEUX ROAD CENTRAL WING LOK STREET
 BONHAM STRAND EAST
 MORRISON ST
 JERVOIS STREET
 PIER ROAD
 Airport Express Hong Kong Station
 Two International Finance Centre
 Harbour View St
 Central Star Ferry Pier

2

QUEEN'S RD W
 BONHAM STRAND EAST
 TAI PANG SHAN STREET
 BLAKE GARDEN
 LOK KU RD
 UPPER LASCAR ROAD
 HOLLYWOOD ROAD
 MAN MO TEMPLE
 LADDER BRIDGES STREET
 QUEEN'S ROAD CENTRAL WELINGTON ST
 COCHRANE ST
 QUEEN VICTORIA ST
 POTTINGER ST
 JUBILEE ST
 Central Market
 CHATER

3

SOHO
 ROBINSON ROAD
 CAINE ROAD
 SEYMOUR ROAD
 CASTLE ROAD
 ABERDEEN STREET
 STAUNTON ST
 GRAHAM ST
 HOLLYWOOD ROAD
 PEEL STREET
 WELLS STREET
 WYNDHAM STREET
 LYNDHURST TERRACE
 CHATER
 PRINCE'S BUILDING
 STATUE SQUARE
 LEGISLATIVE BUILDING
 CHATER GARDEN
 THE LANDMARK
 HSBC TOWER
 QUEEN'S RD CENTRAL
 SOHO
 CHUNG WAI (CENTRAL)

4

PUN SHAN KUI (MID LEVELS)
 ROBINSON ROAD
 CONDUIT ROAD
 UPPER ALBERT ROAD
 LOWER ALBERT ROAD
 GARDEN ROAD
 COTTON TREE DRIVE
 HONG KONG
 EDWARD YOUDE AVIARY
 KENNEDY ROAD
 MACDONNELL ROAD
 BOWEN ROAD GAP MAGAZINE ROAD
 ZOOLOGICAL & BOTANICAL GARDENS
 FORMER GOVERNMENT HOUSE
 PEAK TRAM STATION
 PEAK TRAMWAY

5

SHAN TING (THE PEAK)
 MOUNT AUSTIN ROAD
 LUGARD ROAD
 HORNSEY ROAD
 OLD PEAK ROAD
 MAY ROAD
 TREGUNTER PATH ROAD
 TREGUNTER PATH
 PEAK ROAD
 FINDLAY ROAD
 BARKER ROAD
 SEVERN ROAD PLANTATION ROAD
 PEAK TOWER

A

B

C

D

E

F

3

Tsim Sha Tsui Star Ferry Pier

Cultural Centre

Museum of Art

Hung Hom

Tsim Sha Tsui East

1

Pier 7

Victoria Harbour

Hung Hom

2

Queen's Pier

Wan Chai Ferry Pier

Hong Kong Convention & Exhibition Centre

3

WATERFRONT

GLOUCESTER ROAD

WAN CHAI

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

PARK ROAD

CONSERVATORY

JUSTICE DRIVE

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

LUNG WUI ROAD

TIM WA AVE

TIM WAI AVENUE

TAMAR ST

DRAKE STREET

HARCOURT GARDEN

QUEENSWAY

JUSTICE DRIVE

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

ADMIRALTY

BANK OF CHINA TOWER

FLAGSTAFF HOUSE

SUPREME COURT

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

ADMIRALTY

BANK OF CHINA TOWER

FLAGSTAFF HOUSE

SUPREME COURT

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

ADMIRALTY

BANK OF CHINA TOWER

FLAGSTAFF HOUSE

SUPREME COURT

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

ADMIRALTY

BANK OF CHINA TOWER

FLAGSTAFF HOUSE

SUPREME COURT

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

ADMIRALTY

BANK OF CHINA TOWER

FLAGSTAFF HOUSE

SUPREME COURT

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

ADMIRALTY

BANK OF CHINA TOWER

FLAGSTAFF HOUSE

SUPREME COURT

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

HARCOURT ROAD

QUEENSWAY

ADMIRALTY

BANK OF CHINA TOWER

FLAGSTAFF HOUSE

SUPREME COURT

PACIFIC PLACE

CONSERVATORY

SOBRET ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

STAR STREET

WING ST

FUNG ST

QUEEN'S ROAD

D

E

F

5

4

3

2

1

THE SOUTHWEST

INTRODUCING THE SOUTHWEST 340-347

SICHUAN & CHONGQING 348-371

YUNNAN 372-395

GUIZHOU & GUANGXI 396-425

The Southwest at a Glance

SOME OF CHINA'S MOST EVOCATIVE LANDSCAPES are found in the Southwest: the fertile Red Basin of eastern Sichuan, deep gorges along the Yangzi River, the mountainous fringes of the Tibetan Plateau, Xishuangbanna's tropical forests, and the karst hills of Guizhou and Guangxi. Cultural highlights include the sites of Buddhist art at Le Shan and Dazu, and the remains of Ming city walls at Dali and Songpan. Ethnic minority communities include Tibetans in the west, Miao and Dong in Guizhou and Guangxi, Dali's Bai, Lijiang's Naxi, and the Dai of Xishuangbanna. There are wildlife preserves for giant pandas near Chengdu, waterfowl at Cao Hai, and elephants in Xishuangbanna; and trekking opportunities at Tiger Leaping Gorge, Emei Shan, and along the Lao border in southern Yunnan.

The stepped and calcified Mirror Pools in Huanglong, Sichuan

The Miao village of Xijiang nestled into a terraced valley near Kaili, Guizhou

GETTING AROUND

The major cities and destinations, such as Chengdu, Chongqing, Kunming, Guiyang, Guilin, Lijiang, and Jinghong, are all served by air. Train lines, though more restricted, offer fairly direct services connecting the provincial capitals with most of the larger cities. A comprehensive network of buses covers much of the region, with comfortable express coaches and surfaced roads linking key sites, though travel through remoter areas on local buses can be rough and slow going, particularly in Guizhou and Guangxi. It is also possible to spend a few days taking a ferry down the Yangzi from Chongqing, or to take a scenic day trip along the Li River between Guilin and Yangshuo in Guangxi province.

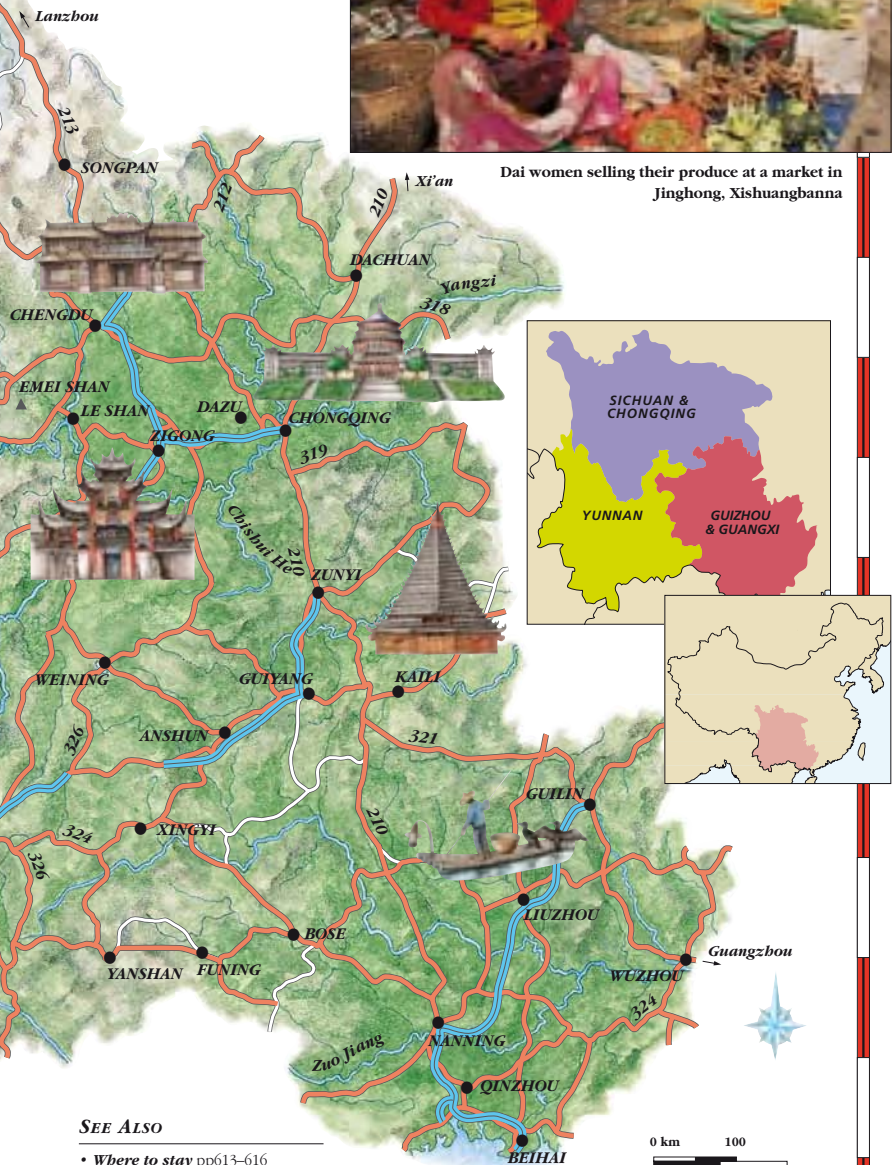

KEY

-  National highway
-  Major road
-  Minor road
-  Mountain

Dai women selling their produce at a market in Jinghong, Xishuangbanna

SEE ALSO

- Where to stay pp613–616
- Where to eat pp593–5

A PORTRAIT OF THE SOUTHWEST

THE SOUTHWEST'S stunning landscapes, from the impossibly steep limestone hillocks along the Li River, to the deep gorges cut by the upper reaches of the Yangzi, make it one of China's most picturesque regions. The area's ethnic diversity, evident in the traditional culture and lifestyles of its numerous minority communities, also adds to its attraction as an exotic tourist destination.

The Southwest's isolation has meant that for much of its past it has forged its own path. The area roughly covered by today's Yunnan has always had closer ties with its neighbors to the south and east than with China's traditional dynastic centers. During the period of the Warring States (771–221 BC), Zhuang Qiao, a Chu general, was sent here to subdue the tribes, but after a long campaign, he was impelled to stay, establishing the Kingdom of Dian at what is now Kunming in around 300 BC. For the next 500 years, the kingdom existed as a loose conglomerate of tribute-paying tribal chiefs.

In the 8th century, the Kingdom of Nanzhao emerged in Dali, extending its territory into Vietnam and Myanmar. The dynasty grew wealthy on trade along the

The endangered panda, indigenous to Sichuan

Southern Silk Route, until it was conquered by the Yuan emperor Kublai Khan in the 13th century. Through much of the Ming and Qing eras, the area that is now Yunnan, Guizhou, and Guangxi was ruled as a colonized outpost, dominated by tribal chieftains.

During the 1800s, the dispossessed, ground down by merciless warlords and extra imperial taxes, revolted in two major uprisings: the Muslim Uprising of 1856, centered on Kunming, and the Taiping Rebellion begun in Guangxi (see p422). Both uprisings were brutally suppressed by the Qing and colonizing forces, sending the region into a downward spiral of provincial obscurity and abject poverty. The Miao minority revolted again in 1870. When the Communists marched through during the Long March in 1934,

Fishing boats on the banks of peaceful Er Hai (Ear Lake) near Dali

Worshippers wreathed in incense smoke at Chengdu's main Daoist temple, Qingyang Gong they encountered a population ready for revolution and took on many recruits.

Sichuan, the region's largest province, has long been a part of China – the enigmatic bronze-working Ba culture flourished here around 1000 BC, with its capital at Sanxingdui, north of modern Chengdu. After the fall of the Han dynasty in AD 220, the province's fertile eastern part became the agriculturally self-sufficient Kingdom of Shu during the Three Kingdoms period (AD 221–63), whose wealth sponsored great religious works under the Tang and Song dynasties such as the huge Buddha at Le Shan. Sichuan remained a crucial outpost during the ensuing eras. Chongqing, its major city, was targeted for heavy industry under the Communists and is today the world's largest municipality, breaking away from Sichuan in 1997. It's from Chongqing that the Three Gorges Cruise down the Yangzi begins (see pp352–4), still the main reason to visit the city.

Sichuan's heavily populated eastern plains give way to the sparsely populated foothills and Aba Grasslands plateau, inhabited mainly by ethnic Tibetans. On the fringes of this frontier, the last few remaining pandas live in what is left of Sichuan's bamboo groves. For a fashionable metropolis, the capital of Chengdu is surprisingly laid-back, a characteristic that is best seen in the many teahouses found in parks, temples, and old courtyards.

Yunnan stretches from the Tibetan foothills in the north, where the headwaters of the Yangzi gather strength, to Xishuangbanna and the Laotian border in the south, through which the Mekong languidly flows. Today, Yunnan is quickly becoming one of the country's foremost tourist destinations. North of Kunming lie the pretty towns of Dali and Lijiang, surrounded by villages inhabited by the indigenous Bai and Naxi peoples. Xishuangbanna's landscape and culture, on the other hand, are reminiscent of Vietnam, Laos, and Myanmar. The regular markets, where minority people gather, are always full of color.

Bai women in traditional dress, Shaping

Most tourists head to Guangxi for the stunning karst landscapes surrounding Guilin and Yangshuo. The charms of Guizhou and Guangxi lie, however, in the less visited areas of hilly rural landscape, peppered with wooden villages and inhabited by minority peoples – the Miao in particular are renowned for their ultra-social festivals. The region's poverty, due to its poor farmland, has allowed natural sights such as the magnificent Detian Falls, and the lush Maling Canyon to remain beautifully untouched.

Limestone peaks coated in vegetation, Li River area

The Flora of Southwest China

Colorful bracts of bougainvillea

SOUTHWEST CHINA HAS the greatest variety of flora in the whole country, and Yunnan Province in particular can claim the diversity prize, having some 15,000 species of plant, or about half the country's total. Many garden plants originate from this part of China, including the ubiquitous rhododendron and magnolia. The reason for this richness lies in its unique geography: in a very short distance the environment changes from high altitude mountain plateau to moist subtropical jungle on the Tropic of Cancer in the south, with isolated valleys that restrict access and cross-pollination in between.

MOUNTAINS AND VALLEYS

The landscapes of this region are dominated by seemingly endless vistas of mountain ranges and deep valleys. In northern Yunnan, western Sichuan and southwest Tibet lie the headwaters of three of the world's great rivers: from west to east, the Nu Jiang (Salween), the Lancang Jiang (Mekong), and the Jiansha Jiang (Yangzi). All originate high in the mountains of Tibet and Qinghai.

Magnolia (Magnolia campbellii), with its showy pink flowers, is native to the Himalayas and China. It was discovered by George Forrest, a Scottish plant hunter, in 1904 but was not brought into cultivation until 1924.

Wild rhododendrons grow in this region, a center of diversity for many plants. Most of the modern hybrid garden forms originate from wild species introduced from southwest China.

Many slipper orchid species thrive in the alpine meadows of the Sichuan mountains above 7,800 ft (2,400 m) and Cypripedium tibeticum is one of the most attractive.

Camellias, of which there are many beautiful garden species, are grown mainly for their lovely flowers. Also, more than 200 kinds of tea in China are based on Camellia sinensis.

A major tourist site, the Tropical Botanical Gardens at Xishuangbanna are also where research into tropical forest ecosystems takes place.

Mountain slopes, lush with beautiful plants such as rhododendrons and magnolias.

Poppy (Meconopsis integrifolia) grows high in the mountains of southwest China at 8,850–16,730 ft (2,700–5,100 m), its foliage protected by soft silky hairs. First collected by renowned botanist E.H. Wilson, the poppy is used in traditional medicine.

TROPICAL FOREST OR JUNGLE

A rare habitat in China, jungle covers only about 0.5 per cent of the country, but it contains 25 per cent of the species. One of the largest remaining areas lies in the southwest, in Xishuangbanna Prefecture, Yunnan Province. Here, there is a rainy season between April and October, the annual rainfall is about 60 in (1,500 mm), and both humidity and temperatures are high. Jungle is also found on Hainan Island, and in southern Guangxi Province.

Pomelo or Chinese grapefruit (Citrus maxima) has been cultivated in southern China for thousands of years. The flowers are followed by very large fruits with green rind and sweet, juicy flesh.

Typically dense patch of natural tropical forest in Jinghong, southern Yunnan Dragon's blood (Dracaena cochinchinensis) plays an important role in traditional Chinese medicine. Its red, blood-like sap is collected and used in a variety of preparations to improve the circulation of the blood. Endangered in the wild, it is now being planted to ensure supplies continue.

Musella (Musella lasiocarpa), closely related to the banana, is a beautiful but rare plant in Yunnan and Guizhou Provinces. It is low-growing and has a dense yellow flowerhead, reminiscent of a globe artichoke.

The jungle floor is carpeted with ferns and shrubs while above, lianas and figs drape and strangle tree branches. Mists and monsoon rains constantly dampen the air, so epiphytes (plants growing on trees) flourish.

The red dwarf banana, (Musa coccinea), is one of the prettiest banana plants and is popular in gardens. About 6.5 ft (2m) tall, it has bright red flowers that last up to two months. It is now scarce because of over-collection and habitat destruction.

FAMOUS PLANT HUNTERS

The beginning of the 20th century saw a number of intrepid botanists and explorers set out to discover and bring back new and exotic plants from around the world. Among the most famous were George Forrest (1873–1932), E.H. Wilson (1876–1930), Joseph Rock (1884–1962), and Frank Kingdon Ward (1885–1958). Although not one of the early pioneers, Kingdon Ward achieved renown exploring and collecting botanical specimens in Yunnan Province just before and after World War I, and also later in Tibet. Among his most celebrated discoveries are several rhododendron species. In the 1920s he brought back seeds of the beautiful blue poppy Meconopsis betonicifolia, which inspired the title of the most famous of his many books: The Land of the Blue Poppy.

Frank Kingdon Ward, explorer and collector

Regional Food: The Southwest

SUBJECT TO HOT SUMMERS and mild winters with plenty of rain, the Southwest enjoys year-round crop growth, making it one of China's "rice bowls." The Sichuan basin also yields a wealth of subtropical products such as fruits, tea, and herbal medicines and its spicy cooking has become the region's dominant cuisine. By contrast, the cooking of Yunnan is underrated despite some wonderful produce; while the cuisines of Guizhou and Guangxi lie somewhere between Sichuanese spiciness and the subtle, delicate flavors of the Cantonese kitchen.

Eggplants and yard-long beans

Fruits and deep-fried snacks on sticks, typical of the Southwest not paralyze the tastebuds, but stimulate the palate. Each dish should be a balance of flavors such as sweet, sour, bitter, hot, salty, aromatic, and fragrant. When the palate is stimulated by the heat of the chili, it becomes sensitized and can appreciate even more flavors at the same time.

The most famous regional spice is the Sichuan peppercorn (bua jiao). This dried flowerbud has an aromatic, lemony heat that makes the mouth tingle, even numbing it against the chilies' heat. The final secret of Sichuan food is the purity of the salt collected from the mines of Zigong.

SICHUAN

THE CUISINE of Sichuan has the reputation of being richly flavored and peppery hot but, in fact, a lot of Sichuanese dishes are not hot at all. After all the chili is a relatively recent import from the Americas that was not widely cultivated here until the 19th century. According to Sichuanese chefs, chilies do

Fresh green & red chilies (sharp, hot)

Large dried chilies (smoky, warm)

Chili bean paste (rich deep heat)

"Red oil" (mild heat)

"Towards the sky" chilies (very hot)

Sichuan peppercorns (aromatic spicy)

Small dried chilies (hot)

A selection of Sichuan spices

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Fresh water chestnuts

Most visitors to China will at some time come across versions of Kung-Po Chicken and Ma Po Doufu. However, outside Sichuan it is likely to lack the depth of flavors and balance of textures of the original. Each region of China has its own "preserved vegetables" but Sichuan's is among the best – a pickled mustard root in a spicy sauce. Yunnan's "Crossing the Bridge Noodles" is said to have been created by the wife of a Qing-dynasty scholar to prevent the noodles cooling on the way to her husband studying in an island pavilion. This consists of a chicken broth with a hot, insulating layer of oil on top served with noodles, slices of ham, vegetables, and egg to be added to it at the table. Another specialty is Steam Pot Chicken cooked with vegetables and often medicinal herbs; as it steams a flavorful broth is created in the pot.

Kung-Po Chicken: the best-known Sichuan dish; Kung-Po was an official from Guizhou, but his chef was Sichuanese.

YUNNAN

Yunnan's tropical climate means the province is a haven for vegetable lovers – lotus roots, bamboo shoots, beans and garlic shoots. Several products distinguish Yunnan on the map of gastronomy – firstly the highly-prized pu'er tea. Dried into bricks, this is strong and black and often taken as a medicine. Just as famous is Yunnan ham, which rivals the ham from Jinhua in Zhejiang. Unusually for China, Yunnan is also known for its milk products especially a type of goat's cheese.

When the rain finally stops, a profusion of mushrooms fills the hills and forests of Vegetables on sale in a street market in Guizhou

the region, sending the locals out to collect these delicacies. Finally, the tropical climate means that all sorts of exotic fruits grow here and many turn up in the area's dishes.

Stall selling zongzi, parcels of sticky rice wrapped in bamboo leaves

GUIZHOU & GUANGXI

RELATIVELY POOR provinces, Guizhou and Guangxi are known for their famine cuisine especially among the minorities, but despite the stories the average visitor will be hard pressed to find bee grub stir-fries and the like.

Fiery hotpots are a specialty of Guizhou, including those made with dog but these can easily be avoided (see p399) if not wanted. The cooking here is spicy and sour. The province's most distinguished product is Maotai. A strong spirit distilled from sorghum and other grains, it is drunk at formal occasions.

Guangxi cuisine includes Cantonese-style sweet and sour dishes along with more rustic Zhuang minority food. Zongzi are also a favorite and the pyramids of sticky rice can be savory or sweet.

ON THE MENU

Aromatic & Crispy Duck

Quite different to Peking Duck, this is marinated, steamed, and then deep-fried. A special version – Tea Smoked Duck – is created when it is smoked with tea, cypress and camphor wood chips.

Twice-cooked Pork Another traditional Sichuan dish that is extremely popular. The secret is that the pork is first boiled, then stir-fried till tender.

Steamed Beef in a Basket

Spicy beef coated with ground rice and steamed – served in the bamboo steamer basket.

Toban Fish A whole fish deep-fried then braised with chilli, garlic, ginger, scallions, soy, sugar, wine, chili bean paste (toban jiang), and vinegar.

Ants Climbing Trees Minced pork with rice vermicelli – the minced pork forms the “ants” and the vermicelli the “trees”.

Ma Po Doufu: pock marked tofu – is a classic dish that combines ground meat, tofu, and chilies in a ginger broth.

Hot & Sour Soup: this dish, when made properly, derives its pungency solely from the use of ground white pepper.

Fish-fragrant Aubergine: “fish-fragrant” is a cookery term indicating that the dish used to be a recipe for fish.

SICHUAN & CHONGQING

THE PROVINCE of Sichuan and the neighboring municipality of Chongqing cover 220,078 sq miles (570,000 sq km) and are home to over 110 million people. This vast region can be divided into three distinct geographical zones. In the east is Chongqing, a municipality based around the heavily industrialized Chongqing city, with a rural strip running east along the Yangzi River and its famous Three Gorges (see pp352-4). In the center lies the hugely fertile Red Basin, whose laid-back capital Chengdu sits surrounded by checkerboard fields and well-irrigated plains.

The wealth generated by this fertile land helped sponsor the temples on Emei Shan's forested slopes and the startling Buddhist sculptures at Dazu and Le Shan. In contrast, Northern and Western Sichuan are covered by the snow-capped foothills of the Himalayan range, rising well over 16,400 ft (5,000 m), a thinly settled region whose culture is predominantly Tibetan. Northwest of Chengdu is the Wolong Nature Preserve, home to the critically endangered giant panda, while to the far north is the beautiful alpine scenery around Songpan and Jiuzhai Gou.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Chengdu 4
- Chongqing 1
- Huanglong Xi 10
- Kangding 19
- Songpan 14
- Zigong 2

Historic Sites

- Dafo, Le Shan pp364-5* 9
- Dujiangyan 12
- Luding 17
- Sanxingdui Museum 7

Temples & Monasteries

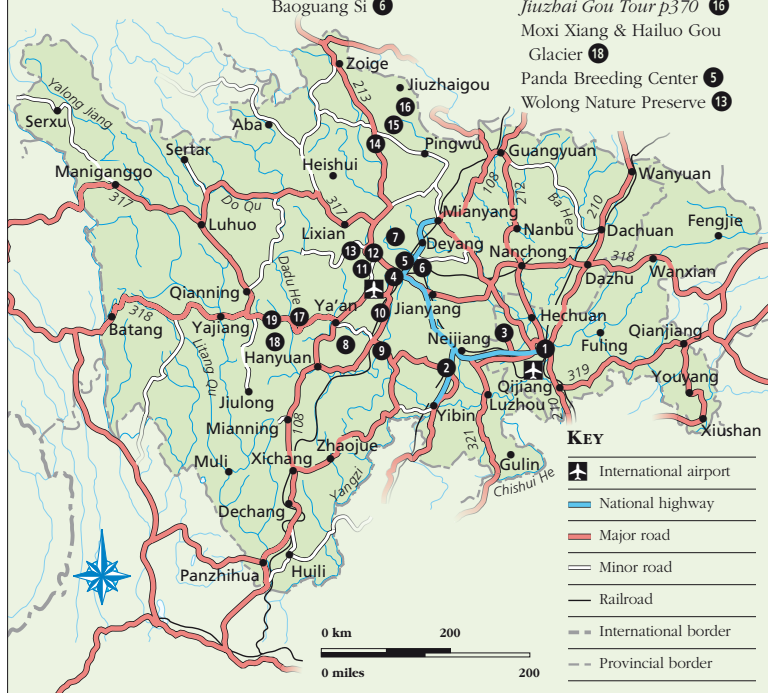

- Baoguang Si 6

Mountains, Grottoes & Caves

- Baoding Shan pp356-7* 3
- Emei Shan pp362-3* 8
- Qingcheng Shan 11

National Parks & Zoos

- Huanglong 15
- Jiuzhai Gou Tour p370* 16
- Moxi Xiang & Hailuo Gou Glacier 18
- Panda Breeding Center 5
- Wolong Nature Preserve 13

Chongqing ①

重庆

Calligraphy,
Luohan Si

BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN founded as the capital of the shadowy State of Ba in 1000 BC, this port is situated on a peninsula at the junction of the Yangzi and Jialing rivers. Also known as Shan Cheng (Mountain City), due to the hills covering the peninsula, it is one of the Yangzi valley's "three furnaces" owing to its stifling summer humidity, made even worse by pollution. The main reason to visit Chongqing, a lively, rapidly modernizing city with few historic sights, is to catch a Yangzi ferry downstream through the Three Gorges (see pp352–4). In 1997, Chongqing became the administrative center of the new city-province of Chongqing Shi, which stretches 311 miles (500 km) east to Hubei.

People and goods coming off river-ferries,
Chaotian Men Wharf

Chaotian Men

Chaotian Men (Gate Facing Heaven) is Chongqing's wharf district right at the tip of the peninsula, where cruise boats line the muddy banks, readying themselves for their journey into Eastern China. A viewing platform overlooking the river junction was built in 2000, and offers splendid views on a windy day, though often visibility is impaired by the heavy fogs caused by intense pollution.

Luohan Si

South off Cangbai Lu.

☐ daily. 📷 🚫

This Ming-era temple is famed for its hall crowded with luohan (those freed from the cycle of rebirth). The Indian Buddhist pantheon has just 18 luohan, but the Chinese have added hundreds of their own, including Buddhist figures, folk heroes, and even Daoists. The hall has 524 life-sized statues; some sit serenely, while others have grotesque faces. The most easily identifiable figure is Ji Gong, a comic peasant hero near the exit.

Victory Monument

Situated in the heart of downtown Chongqing, the Victory Monument is a plain-looking clocktower that commemorates

The Victory Monument (Jiefangbei) in downtown Chongqing

the Communists' defeat of Kuomintang forces in 1949. It is surrounded by a busy shopping district.

Chongqing Museum

Opposite Great Hall of the People.

☐ daily. 📷

This museum houses a superb collection of Eastern Han tomb relics (AD 25–220) from sites around Sichuan. Peculiar to the region are 20-in (50-cm) long mausoleum bricks, illustrated with figures depicting religious and secular themes. A recurrent image is that of the dragon-bodied sun god, Rishen, associated with Fuxi, legendary ancestor of the Chinese. The highlight is a 39-ft (12-m) long frieze of soldiers and chariots passing a nobleman being entertained. Upstairs is a display of Ba-era (500 BC) boat coffins.

Great Hall of the People

173 Renmin Lu. ☐ daily.

This 213-ft (65-m) high rotunda, seating 4,200 people, was built in 1954 as a conference hall to commemorate Chongqing's important wartime role. Inspired by

The extravagant Great Hall of the People, now the Renmin Hotel

Beijing's Temple of Heaven (see pp96–7), it is now a part of the Renmin Hotel and is occasionally used for concerts. Its striking exterior, with three tiers of red-pillared eaves beneath a blue canopied roof, stands out from the modern high-rises that are slowly encircling it.

Stilwell Museum

3 miles (5 km) SE of city center. ☎
This is the former home of General Stilwell (1883–1946), who was based here between 1942 and 1944 as Commander of the US forces and Chiang Kai Shek's Chief of Staff. The US was instrumental in helping China overthrow the Japanese, and Stilwell led the effort. Exhibits include maps and photographs, as well as a display on the legendary Flying Tigers, a volunteer group of US fighter pilots who held off the Japanese along the China-Burma border between 1941 and 1942. The museum also sells T-shirts emblazoned with the Tigers' logo.

Hongyan Cun

52 Hongyan Cun. 3 miles (5 km) W of Chongqing. ☐ 8:30am–5pm daily. ☎
This group of whitewashed buildings was the base of the Nationalist-Communist “United Front” government during World War II. Among the prominent people based here were the Communist leader Zhou Enlai and his wife, Deng Yingchao. Chairman Mao briefly visited Hongyan Cun (Red Crag Village) after Japan surrendered in 1945, to attend the US-sponsored talks with the Kuomintang forces led by Chiang Kai Shek. The buildings now house a collection of sparsely-captioned wartime photographs. More appealing is the hilly parkland surrounding the site.

A colorful snack and fast food stall in town

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

160 miles (258 km) SE of Chengdu.
✈ 7,500,000. 🚁 Jiangbei Airport.
🚏 Caiyuanba Bus Station, Hongyan Bus Station, CAAC (to airport). 🚏 Chaotian Men docks. 📍 8th fl, Zourong Plaza, 69 Linjiang Lu, (023) 6389 4055.

Ciqi Kou

9 miles (14 km) W of Chongqing.
🚏 from Chongqing Hotel.
Founded 1,700 years ago on the banks of Jialing Jiang, Ciqi Kou (Porcelain Port) was a famous porcelain production center during the Ming era, and is something of a museum piece. Its riverfront lanes, preserved in their original flagstoned state, are flanked by old timber, adobe, and split-stone buildings with carved stonework, latticed windows, and gray-tiled roofs. Teahouses are the town's main feature, and there are about 100 to choose from. A couple of the more traditional ones overlook the river and occasionally host opera performances. Porcelain isn't made here any more, but Ciqi Kou has become the haunt of painters in both modern and traditional styles.

CHONGQING CITY CENTER

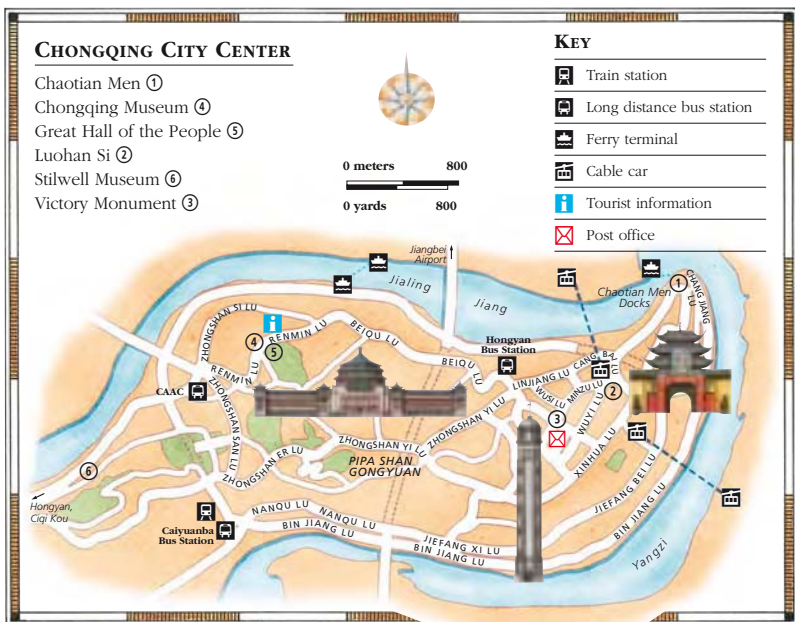

- Chaotian Men ①
- Chongqing Museum ④
- Great Hall of the People ③
- Luohan Si ②
- Stilwell Museum ⑥
- Victory Monument ⑤

0 meters 800
0 yards 800

KEY

- 🚏 Train station
- 🚏 Long distance bus station
- 🚏 Ferry terminal
- 🚏 Cable car
- 📍 Tourist information
- 📧 Post office

Yangzi Cruise

长江

BEFORE THE 20TH CENTURY, rugged mountains would have virtually isolated Sichuan from eastern China if it hadn't been for the 400 mile (650 km) stretch of the Yangzi linking Chongqing with Yichang in Hubei Province. The journey was a perilous one, the river tearing through the sheer-sided Three Gorges. Today, with the shoals cleared, the journey makes a popular cruise through spectacular scenery, with regular stops at famous sights. The landscape has been irrevocably changed by the filling of the Three Gorges Dam, due for completion in 2009, gradually making the cruise even more leisurely and extending the cruising season.

Landscape near Chongqing

The gentle farmland around Chongqing, fascinating for its depiction of day-to-day life, does little to prepare you for the wild, spectacular gorge scenery downstream.

Ancient Ba Kingdom Tombs

have been inundated by the rising waters.

LOCATOR MAP

Area illustrated below

★ Shibao Zhai

This outstanding monastery (see p354) sits on an island, with Lanruo Dian (Orchid Palace) built into the cliff above.

KEY

--- Provincial border

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Shibao Zhai
- ★ Mini Three Gorges
- ★ Qutang Xia

The City of Ghosts

Ming Shan, a mountain dedicated to the afterworld and its ruler, Tianzi, is scattered with temples, shrines, and waxworks depicting the gorie sides of hell, including various tortures awaiting sinners.

The Three Gorges

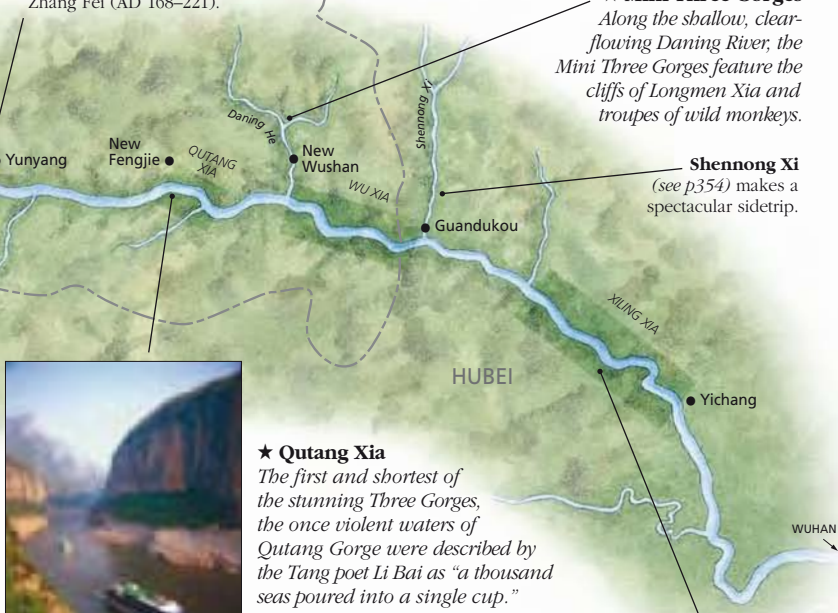

Though the river is no longer the vicious torrent described by countless travelers, the steep walls and tight channels of Qutang Xia, Wu Xia, and Xiling Xia still present an awesome spectacle.

Zhang Fei Miao (see p354) is dedicated to the Shu warrior Zhang Fei (AD 168–221).

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Chongqing to Yichang or Wuhan.
f 120 Zaozi Lanya Zheng Jie, Chongqing, (023) 6385 0693 (CITS for bookings). excursions extra.
 www.travelchinaguide.com/river/index.htm

Three Gorges Dam
 Before reaching Yichang, there's a chance to witness one of the world's largest construction projects (see pp268–9), as the boat passes through a complex system of locks.

Cruising the Yangzi

ONCE COMPLETE, the Three Gorges Dam will have raised water levels upstream by up to 575 feet (175 m); even now the water is rising, making each cruise unique. Millions of people have been relocated, several towns have been rebuilt above the new waterline, and some archeological sites have been drowned. Some buildings have been relocated; where this isn't feasible, protective dikes are under construction. The drama of the landscape will undoubtedly be lessened, but the new reservoir is so large that the impression of being on a river will remain, as will the key elements of history and scenery.

Tour sailing up the narrows of Shennong Xi in a sampan

Shennong Xi

One of the highlights of the whole Yangzi cruise is detouring up the ever-narrowing, ever-more shallow waters of Shennong Stream. The cliffs are pocked with post-holes marking the route of a Han-dynasty plank road, built for military access. There are also at least three hanging coffins here, which the now-vanished Bai people mortised into the gorge walls over a thousand years ago. Burial goods and cliffside paintings link the Bai with both Sichuan's earliest known civilization, the Ba, and also the local Tujia nationality (see pp24–5).

If the waters are too low to navigate this stream, most cruises will ensure a trip up Daning He is included instead (see p353).

Zhang Fei Miao

Zhang Fei (AD 168–221) was a sworn brother and general of Liu Bei, leader of the State of Shu during the Three Kingdoms era. Violent, tactless, courageous, and prone to drink, he once famously defended a strategically-placed bridge single-handed, roaring out a challenge to the advancing enemy horde with such blood-curdling ferocity that one of their leaders dropped dead on the spot. After his brother Guan Yu was killed, Zhang Fei became morose and overworked his troops, who eventually assassinated him in his sleep. This temple – due to be relocated as water levels rise – is full of colorful statues recounting scenes of his life.

CHOOSING A CRUISE

Which itinerary: Some cruises sail to Shanghai, but scenery is bleak east of Wuhan. Book Chongqing to Yichang or Wuhan (extra day). Cruises upstream (west) are cheaper, but may sail through the night.

Cruises: Some English spoken, accommodation varies (dorm to 4-star), check excursions on itinerary, book privately (cheaper than CITS).

Public ferries: No English, very basic conditions, food is bad (bring some), no excursions, tickets from Chaotian Men Dock, Chongqing.

When: Sep & Oct are best; May & Nov riskier; rainy season in summer.

Shibao Zhai

The most striking aspect of Shibao Zhai (meaning Precious Stone Fortress) is the beautiful 12-story Lanruo Dian, whose curly eaves are said to resemble an orchid, built in 1750 and rising 184 feet (56 m) up the rock wall above the small temple. The “Precious Stone” of the name relates to a legend about a rock in the monastery with a hole, through which every day trickled just enough rice to feed all the monks. But when one of them greedily enlarged the hole, hoping to sell the surplus, the rice stopped flowing. Shibao Zhai will be protected from rising waters by a large dike, but sadly, the medieval village at its base has been drowned.

TRACKERS

Before the rapids were cleared in the 1950s, boats could only make it upstream with the help of trackers, teams of barely-paid men who were harnessed together to literally pull the boat, inch by inch, through the Three Gorges' torrents. Paths cut into the bank to make their work easier and slightly less hazardous – or copies of them above the new maximum waterline – can be seen in several places through the gorges.

Present-day trackers heaving a boat up Shennong Xi

Gateway to a teahouse in former Guildhall

Zigong ②

自贡

106 miles (170 km) SW of Chongqing. 人口 477,000. 电话 81 220 7313. 3 Tanmu Binyuan, (0813) 220 7313.

SALT HAS BEEN MINED in Sichuan for at least 2,500 years, and for much of that time Zigong has been at the center of its production, luring traders from all over China. Brine is drawn from artesian wells beneath the city, along with natural gas used in the evaporation process. Chinese well-drilling techniques, mainly the use of bamboo cables and heavy iron drill-bits, were borrowed by the West during the 1850s, and later adapted for mining oil reserves. Until the 1960s, Zigong was full of bamboo pipelines and 328-ft (100-m) high wooden derricks. Even today one can visit some of these older mines and vintage architecture built to display the salt-merchants' wealth.

The Zigong Salt Museum was built in 1736 as the Xiqing Guildhall, a meeting place for salt merchants from Shaanxi province. This lavish building features elaborate flying eaves, and a gilded, wood-carved interior based around a large galleried atrium, where plays were once performed. Exhibits cover the entire history of salt mining, from Han dynasty illustrations, to huge metal drill-bits and cutaways showing the drilling process. Other contemporary buildings of interest are two teahouses with charming antique interiors, where locals sit and chat. The most attractive of these is the 19th-century Wangye Miao, a smaller version of the Xiqing Guildhall, which perches castle-like on a rocky outcrop overlooking the Fuxi Jiang on Binjiang Lu. The other is a former City Storekeepers'

Guildhall on Zhonghua Road, whose carved entrance-way opens into a sloping, flagstoned courtyard surrounded by private wood-paneled booths.

The Xinhai Well, just east of the center, was easily the deepest in the world when drilling reached a depth of 3,285 ft (1,001 m) in 1835, producing a daily output of 494 cubic ft (14 cubic m) of brine and 300,175 cubic ft (8,500 cubic m) of natural gas. The 59-ft (18-m) high timber derrick, bamboo pipes, cables, and buffalo-powered winches used in the drilling and retrieving processes are on show, along with gas-powered evaporation pans used to refine salt, which is still produced and packed on site. Zigong's other forms of subterranean wealth are its fossils, found at a major Jurassic site in the north-eastern suburb of Dashanpu, that has now been roofed over as a Dinosaur Museum. In 1985, extensive excavations were carried out with British assistance, unearthing hundreds of skeletons, including the stegosaur-like Gigantospinosaurus sichuanensis, and the 30-ft (9-m) long, carnivorous Yangchuanosaurus hepingensis. Assembled skeletons are displayed in the main hall, along with partially excavated remains in the original diggings.

🏛️ Zigong Salt Museum

Jiefang Lu. ☎ (0813) 230 1247.

🕒 8am–6pm daily. 🚗

🏛️ Xinhai Well

Da'an Jie. ☎ 8am–6pm daily. 🚗

🏛️ Dinosaur Museum

Dashanpu. ☎ (0813) 580 1234.

🕒 9am–2:30pm daily. 🚗

The main entrance of the Zigong Salt Museum

MINING SALT IN SICHUAN

An essential part of imperial tax since the Western Han era, salt was extracted from salt-water pools on the coasts. In Sichuan, however, mining from briny grounds (using an ingenious method that far pre-dated Western techniques), was cheaper than importing heavily taxed salt from the coast. With deep drilling and the installation of bamboo pipes in the 11th century, production peaked. Entrepreneurs opened up mines and workers flocked to the area, leading a bureaucracy alarmed at the tax losses to ban deep drilling – although they were soon opened again. By the 17th century, the Sichuanese had devised a method of capturing the natural gas that escapes from briny deposits to fuel their stoves.

Salt mine model, Xiqing Guildhall

Carvings of Dazu

Figure in meditation

COMBINING ELEMENTS from Confucianism, Daoism, and Indian Tantric Buddhism, the carvings at Baoding Shan, Dazu are a unique example of the harmonious synthesis of these philosophies and religions. Though most are religious in theme, the carvings vary greatly in style. A few are naturalistic depictions of daily life, but most of them are monumental and even surreal, with fanged guardian gods and serene Buddhas at the point of Enlightenment surrounded by cartoon-like details of Buddhist parables. The main colors used are reds, blues, and greens.

1000-armed Guanyin ⑧ In fact it has 1007 gilded arms that seem to flicker like flames from the central figure of Guanyin, each palm holding a different symbol of the bodhisattva.

Filial Duty ⑪ A Confucian theme of honoring parents for the sacrifices they make for their children illustrates the flexible nature of Chinese belief at this predominantly Buddhist site.

Dao Sages ⑫ These ancient figures of wise old men appear to be representatives of Daoist philosophy.

Wheel of Transmigration ⑬ A giant, toothy demon holds a segmented disc depicting the possible states of reincarnation, from Buddhahood down to animals and ghosts.

Reclining Buddha ⑭ This 50-ft (15-m) long Buddha lies on his side, his stylized face making the life-like busts of officials and donors arranged in front appear even more striking. The adjacent Nine-dragon Spring refers to the legend of Buddha being washed at birth by dragons.

Buddhist Hell ⑮

Buddha and bodhisattvas gaze down at drunken sinners, while animal-beaded demons mutilate others on Knife Mountain and in Knee-chopping Hall.

Stone Lion ⑯ The lion is assigned to Wenshu, the incarnation of Wisdom in Buddhist teaching. Here, this twice life-sized statue guards the entrance to the Cave of Full Enlightenment.

The Three Sages ④ Three serene figures sit in eternal contemplation of life, the infinite, and everything. The Chinese characters declare the site as Baoding Shan.

Parental Care ⑮ This expression of the Confucian theme of the duty of parental love at this Buddhist site is an illustration of how religious philosophies could co-exist during the Tang dynasty.

Enlightenment Buddha ⑳ The centerpiece of Baoding Shan's only true cave, this represents the reward of perfecting the self through cycles of reincarnation.

BAODING SHAN

There are 30 caves in total so be sure to allow enough time to explore the site fully.

0 meters 30
0 yards 30

The bullet numbers refer to the most significant caves

Baoding Shan, Dazu ③

宝顶山

9 miles (15 km) NE of Dazu. 🚗 from Caiyuanba Station, Chongqing (2hrs) to Dazu; minibus to caves (half hr). 🚗
🕒 8:30am-5pm. 🎫 includes Bei Shan. 📺 fee required for video.

THE HILLS AROUND Dazu are riddled with caves and grottoes decorated with more than 50,000 carvings dating as far back as the Tang dynasty in the 7th century. The best collection of statuary with the finest craftsmanship and richest content can be found at Baoding Shan; the monk Zhao Zhifeng oversaw the work between 1179 and 1245. The bulk of these carvings decorate thirty separate niches carved into the soft limestone walls of a 28-ft (8-m) high, horseshoe-shaped gully known as Dafo Wan (Big Buddha Bend) after the large sculpture of the reclining Sakyamuni Buddha.

Other carvings worth noting at Baoding Shan are the pastoral scenes of buffalo herding in Cave 5, a whole tableau of activity that stands as a beautiful allegory of the search for enlightenment. The Cat and Mouse between Caves 3 and 4 is a light-hearted carving with a wonderfully naturalistic cat looking up at a mouse climbing a bamboo stalk. The Dazu grottoes are more secular and real to life than other grottoes – that is to say, they relate the abstract Buddhist doctrines through the lives of ordinary people. The realistic carvings include not only the statues of Buddha and bodhisattvas, but also monarchs, ministers, military officers, officials, monks, the rich, and even the poor.

In December 1999, the site was listed as a World Cultural Heritage Site by UNESCO.

ENVIRONS: Bei Shan, situated just over a mile (2 km) north of Dazu, was originally a military camp whose carvings were commissioned by the general in AD 892. The caves are somewhat dark and few sculptures stand out. The most outstanding sculpture is in Cave 136 which houses a Wheel of Life carving, Puxian the patron Saint of Emei Shan, and the androgynous Sun and Moon Guanyin.

One of the sculptures Bei Shan grottoes, Dazu

Chengdu 4

成都

Statue, Liu Bei's Tomb

THE CAPITAL OF SICHUAN, Chengdu is a modern city with a relaxed culture, typified by its pleasant gardens and teahouses. A distinct part of city life, teahouses are found in parks and other spaces, and are often no more than a collection of rickety chairs and tables. The city's roots go as far back as the enigmatic Ba-Shu era (see p360), though it first became a capital during the Three Kingdoms (AD 221), later gaining a reputation for its silk brocade and for being the first place that printed paper money. By Chinese standards, Chengdu is a fairly compact city, stretching 4 miles (6 km) across, with most sights within its central area.

Business as usual at the bustling teahouse in Wenshu Yuan

Wenshu Yuan

Wenshu Yuan Jie. ☐ daily. 📍
Down a small alley, this is the headquarters of Sichuan's Chan Buddhist sect and is dedicated to Wenshu, God of Wisdom – usually depicted riding a blue lion. The temple was founded around AD 700, although the current arrangement of five halls dates to the Ming era.

The austere flagstoned buildings are filled with stately and the courtyards with bronze incense burners. The temple's importance is reflected not in its opulence but in its activity and constant chanting of prayers. After a visit, people relax at the teahouse or vegetarian restaurant.

Incense for sale at Wenshu Yuan

the Tomb of Wang Jian, self-appointed emperor of Sichuan, who fought his way to power in AD 907 and died in 918. The relics include a 20-ft (6-m) long stone platform which formed the base for a multi-layered wooden sarcophagus, carved with a 22-figure female orchestra. Life-sized busts of warriors, sunk up to their waists in the floor, support the platform. A simple statue of Wang Jian and faint traces of floral frescoes enforce the impression of a cultured, modest man, though his self-indulgent son lost the empire to the Late Tang in AD 925.

Du Fu's Thatched Cottage

38 Qinghua Lu. ☐ daily. 📍
The Tang dynasty's most celebrated poet, Du Fu, arrived in Chengdu during a nationwide uprising in AD 759. He spent the next five years living in poverty in a tumble-down thatched cottage on the outskirts of the city, where he wrote around 240 soulful poems contrasting the forces of nature with the turmoil of contemporary life, such as when his roof blew off during a storm. Admirers first founded gardens here in the 10th century, although the traditional arrangement of pools, bridges, trees, and pavilions dates from 1811. Simple whitewashed halls display antique collections of Du Fu's poems, and a museum gives an outline of his life in models and paintings.

Qingyang Gong

9 Xi Er Duan. ☐ daily. 📍

Founded in the ninth century, Qingyang is Chengdu's main Daoist temple. Its name, meaning Green Goat, refers to the obscure final words of Daoism's mythical founder, Laozi, that those who understood his teachings could find him at the Green Goat market. The most distinctive building is the 1882 Bagua Pavilion, whose stone pillars carved with 81 dragons enclose a life-sized statue of Laozi riding his buffalo. Inside the Three Purities Hall, three massive bearded statues representing the deities Original Nature, Virtue, and Wisdom, loom over two bronze statues of what are supposedly goats, although the right-hand animal has tiger paws, a unicorn's horn, a snake's tail, and other attributes of animals in the Chinese zodiac. Around the back of the next hall, crowds line up to touch one of the three auspicious characters painted on a wall, and thus receive good fortune.

Worshippers outside the Daoist Qingyang Gong

Yong Ling Museum

Yong Ling Lu. 📍 42, 48, 54.

☐ daily. 📍

A large mound in the northwest of town was excavated in 1942 to uncover Yong Ling,

Detail from monument at Renmin Park

Bei's Tomb. The Three Kingdoms Hall has statues of Liu Bei, robed in gold along with his grandson, while another room has statues of Zhuge Liang. The last hall is used for performances of Sichuan theater.

Renmin Park

12 Xiao Cheng Lu. ☐ 7am–9pm daily. 📷
This is the best of Chengdu's parks, with year-round floral displays, ponds, terraces draped in wisteria, and a hall hosting weekend shows of shadow-puppetry. The Martyrs' Monument, commemorates the 1911 rail dispute that mobilized opposition to the Qing and eventually led to their demise.

Wuhou Ci

231 Wuhou Ci Dajie. ☐ daily. 📷
Meaning "Shrine to the Minister of War," Wuhou Ci commemorates Zhuge Liang (AD 181–234), a brilliant military strategist from the Three Kingdoms period. The site dates to AD 223, when Liu Bei, Zhuge's commander was buried here. In 1672, the complex was expanded to include its series of temple-like halls, filled with statuary of Three Kingdoms' characters, all guarding Liu

Sichuan University Museum

Liberal Arts Bldg near University's east gate off Wangjiang Lu. 📷 ☐ daily. 📷
Founded in the 1920s by the American scholar D.S. Dye, this Sichuanese ethnographic museum was recently torn down and rebuilt. It displays cultural artifacts such as embroidery, leather armor, and

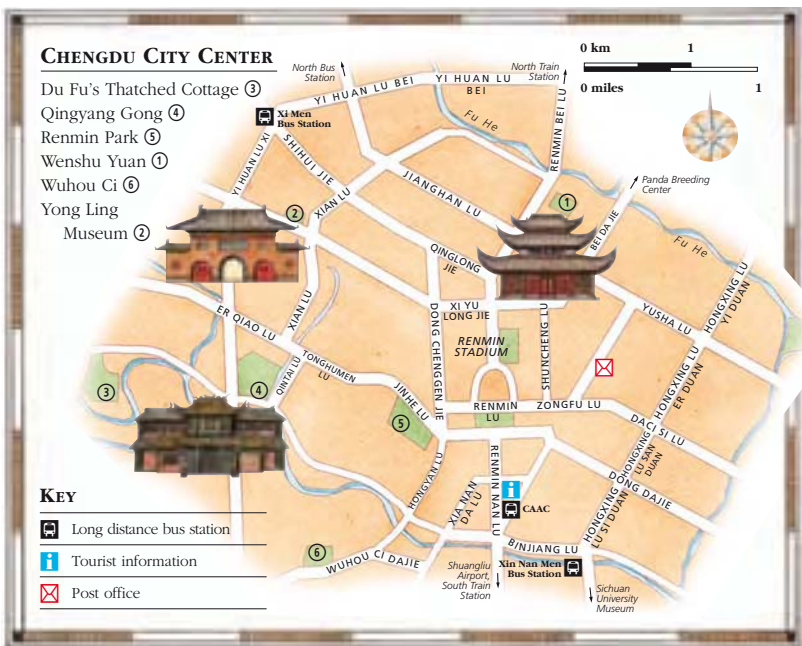

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

160 miles (258 km) NW of Chongqing. 📍 3,620,000. 📍
Shangliu Airport. 📍 North Train Station, South Train Station. 📍
North Bus Station, Xi Men Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport), Xin Nan Men Bus Station.
📍 Room 320, 65 Renmin Nan Lu, (028) 8665 9708.

Tibetan religious items. Antique paintings, stone carvings, and texts are also on show. Nearby, Wangjiang Lou Park is set along the river and has a tall pagoda dedicated to the 9th-century poetess Xue Tao.

A striking moon gate at Wuhou Ci

A bizarre yet exquisitely crafted Sanxingdui mask

Panda Breeding Center 5

熊猫繁殖中心

6 miles (10 km) NE of Chengdu.

☎ or taxi. 🕒 8:30–5pm daily. 📶

THIS RESEARCH BASE set up in 1987 has bred and raised over 27 giant panda cubs, scoring well over the usual captive survival rate. While so far this has been for the benefit of zoos, the center's main aim is to start returning pandas to the wild. One of the best places to see pandas in China, the center currently displays around 20 red and 21 giant pandas. Mostly inactive, they can be seen chewing piles of arrow bamboo or sleeping.

Baoguang Si 6

宝光寺

12 miles (19 km) NE of Chengdu. ☎

or taxi. 🕒 8am–5pm daily. 📶

A PLACE OF WORSHIP since the Han dynasty, Baoguang Si owes its current name and reputation to the Tang emperor Xizong, who took refuge here in AD 881, during a rebellion. He called the temple Baoguang, or Shining Treasure, after he saw a light underneath a wooden pagoda in the temple, which was supposedly emanating from the buried holy relics. The pagoda, which he ordered to be rebuilt in stone, still stands as the 13-story, 98-ft (30-m) high Sheli Ta, just inside the entrance. Its top, however, broke off during an earthquake. The temple has well-tended gardens planted with ginkgos, besides a dozen or more halls filled with holy relics, including a room dedicated to the Tsongkhapa sect of Tibetan lamaism, and a stone stele carved with Buddha images from AD 540. Baoguang Si's biggest draw is its Qing-era Luohan Hall, where 518 brightly painted, life-sized sculptures of Buddhist saints are joined by 59 Buddhas and Bodhidharma – the Indian founder of Zen Buddhism – along with a huge phoenix statue. Among the statues are the emperors Kangxi and Qianlong, with their distinctive beards, boots, and capes. Also within the compound is a little restaurant offering vegetarian fare.

Sanxingdui Museum 7

三星堆博物馆

15 miles (24 km) N of Chengdu in Guangshan. ☎ (0838) 550 0349.

☎ from Chengdu to Guangshan. 📶

🕒 9am–5:30pm daily.

IN THE 1980s archeologists began excavating at Sanxingdui, where farmers had been finding ancient pieces since 1929. They unexpectedly uncovered traces of an ancient city, over 3,000 years old, tentatively believed to have been the capital of the Ba-Shu culture. Numerous sacrificial pits were found containing an extraordinary trove of bronze, gold, and jade artifacts. Key pieces in the museum include a 7-ft (2-m) high bronze figure with huge, coiled hands, a giant “spirit tree” hung with mystical animals, and several leering, 3-ft (1-m) wide masks whose eyes protrude on stalks. Also on display are smaller, finely detailed pieces, along with accounts of the excavations. Highly individual in style, though evoking the contemporary Shang bronzes of eastern China, the Sanxingdui artifacts reveal a very high degree of craftsmanship. The finds perhaps challenge the popular theory that China evolved from a single culture living by the Yellow River.

SICHUAN OPERA

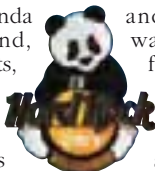

Elaborately costumed actors at an opera performance

Sung in the Sichuanese dialect, this 300-year-old tradition is immensely popular. Lacking the formality of Beijing Opera, but filled with wit and dynamism, the Sichuan style portrays local legends, while its high-pitched singing is accompanied by percussion and wind instruments. Acrobatics are a major part of the performance. Bianlian, the Sichuanese trick of face-changing, allows each actor to portray many characters; with a swift move of the hand, makeup is added, or a layer of mask removed. Sichuan Opera is usually performed in small, casual theaters, even teahouses. In Chengdu, tickets are available at Jinjiang Theater on Xianlong Jie and Shudu Theater down Yushuang Lu. Many tour operators run excursions to theaters, giving an explanation of the plot and a fascinating glimpse backstage.

Giant Pandas

THE FAMOUSLY RARE giant panda occurs only in China, and, according to recent genetic tests, is distantly related to the bear. The wild panda population of around 1,200 seems to be increasing, though with perhaps only another 120 in zoos worldwide, they remain seriously endangered, despite recently successful breeding programs in China. The animals feed primarily on bamboo. They have developed large molars for grinding up the stalks, but are not well adapted to digesting them

Hard Rock Café
logo

and so spend almost all their waking hours eating. Bamboo flowers and dies off simultaneously over huge areas, periodically depriving giant pandas of their local food source. In the past, they could simply travel to other regions to find more bamboo to eat, but now their habitat has been carved up by development. Some 12 reserves are dedicated to panda preservation in Shaanxi, Guizhou, and Sichuan, including the Wolong reserve near Chengdu (see p369).

Pandas eat between 35 and 65 pounds (15 and 30 kg) of bamboo a day, despite having a carnivore's digestive tract. They only digest 20 per cent of the nutrients, so spend the rest of the day asleep, conserving energy.

The panda's paw is adapted to its special diet. The wrist is modified into a sort of opposable "thumb" that helps it to grasp delicate bamboo stems.

Pandas are not prolific breeders, even in the best equipped zoos, as they only have a brief breeding window (once a year in spring) and they are extremely choosy about whom they mate with.

Pandas in the wild are occasionally seen in family groups, but mostly they live a solitary existence for much of their 25 years in a clearly defined territory marked out by scent. One theory for their striking coloration is that it helps them recognize each other in the forests.

Breeding programs in Sichuan saw a record ten births in 2004. Artificial insemination was usually used. Incubators help to reduce the high infant mortality found in the wild.

A panda baby weighs just 3½ oz (100 g) at birth – compared to the adult's 440 lb (200 kg). The cub is carried by the mother for 90 days and stays on with her for up to three years.

Emei Shan 8

峨眉山

Puxian on his elephant

RIISING TO 10,167 feet (3,099 m), Emei Shan has been considered holy by both Daoists and Buddhists since the Eastern Han dynasty. Many of the temples nestled on the mountain's lush slopes are dedicated to the Bodhisattva of Universal Benevolence, Puxian, who is said to have ascended the mountain during the 6th century atop a six-tusked elephant. Emei Shan is also a storehouse of botanic diversity, with over 3,200 plant species found on the mountain – 10 per cent of China's total. Many can be seen in monastery gardens, including the white-petalled handkerchief tree; the ginkgo, which is extinct in the wild; and the straight-trunked nanmu, a favored wood for temple pillars. The most visible of Emei's animals are the aggressive monkeys, who pester hikers for handouts – keep food packed away.

★ The summit

Emei's three main peaks are the crests of an undulating ridge, with a sheer drop of over 3,000 feet (1,000 m) on the front face.

Hikers

Hawkers hoist sedan chairs for those who have had enough of walking. To cut down some of the trekking, take a bus from Baoguo to the cable car leading to Wannian Si, or, easiest of all, to the cable car going all the way to the summit at Jieyin Dian.

Baoguo Si

One of the most important temples on Emei, Baoguo Si contains a massive bronze bell. Cast during the Ming dynasty, it is rung with a large swinging tree trunk and is said to be audible for 10 miles (16 km).

0 kilometers 3
0 miles 3

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ The summit
- ★ Wannian Si
- ★ Qingyin Ge

← EMEI TOWN

Hong Chun Ping

Leiyin Si

Fuhu Si

Baoguo

Emei Jie

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

89 miles (143 km) SW of Chengdu. I near Baoguo Si, (0833) 552 0444. B to Emei Town. C from Chengdu or Le Shan to Emei Town or Baoguo; Emei Town to Baoguo (20 min). D daily. E

KEY

B Bus stop

C Cable car

I Temple

- - - Path

== Road

Jin Ding Si

The terrace in front of this temple is a favorite spot for watching the sunrise, cloud seas, and other atmospheric phenomena.

Xixiang Chi (Elephant Bathing Pool) is at the spot where Puxian is said to have stopped to wash his elephant.

★ Wannian Si

The oldest surviving building on Emei dates to 1611 and houses a famed golden statue of Puxian.

EXPLORING EMEI SHAN

It takes about three days to climb and descend Emei Shan; basic accommodations and food are available at numerous temples. Pack rain gear and wear stout footwear as the flagstone paths can be slippery, particularly from October to April when hawkers sell straw soles and metal crampons to attach to boots. Warm clothing is essential at the summit year round.

★ Qingyin Ge

Reached over a pair of arched bridges, the Pure Music Pavilion is set in lowland forest at the junction of two streams. The nearby temple is the most romantic place to spend a night on Emei Shan.

▲ Wanfo Ding
10,167 ft

▲ Qianfo Ding
9,990 ft

▲ Jin Ding
10,095

Jieyin Dian

Xianfeng Si

THE SUMMIT

Dafo, Le Shan 9

乐山

Heavenly King,
Dafo Temple

THE ENORMOUS 230-ft (71-m) high Dafo (Great Buddha) is carved into the red sandstone face of Lingyun Hill overlooking the treacherous confluence of the Min, Dadu, and Qingyi rivers below. In AD 713 a monk, Haitong, decided to safeguard passing boats by creating a protective icon in the cliffs – though he was also practical enough to realize that the resultant rubble would fill in the shoals. By the time Dafo was completed, other temples had been built around it and on the adjacent Wuyou Hill, and today a network of paths links this UNESCO World Heritage site.

★ Dafo (Great Buddha)

Up close, the remains of a drainage system can be seen. The statue must be restored every decade to survive plant invasion and pollution.

Nine Turns Staircase is a steep, narrow set of steps down to the toes.

STAR SIGHTS

★ Buddha's Feet

★ Dafo (Great Buddha)

★ Haoshang Bridge

Jiazhou Huayuan

This museum, located in a pretty temple, gives a full account of Dafo's history and construction, with interesting models.

★ Buddha's Feet

At his huge 26-ft (8-m) feet you can really appreciate one of the world's biggest Buddhas. His other statistics are equally impressive: each ear droops 23 ft (7 m), his shoulders span 92 ft (28 m), while his nose measures 18 ft (5.6m).

HAITONG, SCULPTOR AND MONK

When Haitong's idea was accepted, funds were raised by public subscription and regional government contributions from the salt revenue (see p355). The monk lived in a cave behind Dafo's head and when a local official threatened to blind Haitong unless he could take a cut of the funds, the monk gouged his own eyes out to prove his sincerity. However, the project was only completed in AD 803 after his death, and after Wei Gao, the regional governor, donated his own salary to finish off the legs and feet.

Haitong, a pious monk devoted to his project

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Le Shan, 96 miles (154 km) SW of Chengdu. 🚌 from Chengdu Bus Station to Le Shan, then bus no. 3 to Dafo. 🚶 from Le Shan to Wuyou Si, then walk to Dafo. 🕒 7:30am–7:30pm May–Sep; 8am–6pm Oct–Apr. 📶 📶

Ancient shrines and temples close by

★ Haoshang Bridge

This elegant, part-covered structure is built in an "antique" style and links the Great Buddha with outlying temples on the adjacent hills.

Guardian figures flank the Buddha was cut off from Lingyun Hill around 250 BC to reduce the river's currents. Wuyou's Buddhist temple was founded in AD 742.

Wuyou Hill

Mahao Cave Tombs

Dating from the Eastern Han dynasty (AD 25–220), these grottoes were built to house the remains of local nobles, with carved scenes of cavalry and some early Buddha figures.

Dafo or Great Buddha, best seen from a river boat, hired from Le Shan

Qingcheng Shan's ornate front gateway, with sharply upturned eaves

Huanglong Xi ⑩

黄龙溪

31 miles (50 km) SW of Chengdu. 🚗

CONSISTING OF just seven narrow lanes on a quiet riverbank surrounded by fields, the delightfully dated village of Huanglong Xi served as one of the sets in the martial-arts romance, Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. Most of its timber-framed, stone buildings date from the Ming or Qing eras. Of its three temples, Gulong Si is the largest, with a few slightly shabby halls and a low entrance guarded by two stone lions, above which is a theater stage used during temple fairs. At the other end of the village, Nanwu Chaoxi Si is a tiny nunnery with a painted stone carving of the dragon spirit Nanwu in human form, with red hair and a mustache. Zhenjiang Si is mostly closed to the public, but does have a pleasant, relaxed riverfront teahouse.

Qingcheng Shan ⑪

青城山

43 miles (70 km) NW of Chengdu.

🚗 to Dujiangyan then taxi. 🚗

AS ITS NAME “Green City Mountain” suggests, this renowned Daoist retreat is beautifully forested. Its two separate sections are dotted with Daoist temples linked by stone paths, ideal for rambling. The front face is reached from the main entrance in town, while the wilder rear face, with steeper gradients and narrower paths, lies 9 miles (15 km) farther west. Jianfu Gong, outside the entrance, is the best-preserved shrine. The main temple on the mountain's front face lies halfway up at Tianshi Dong. Ming-dynasty panels decorate its main hall, where the Han-era Daoist master Zhang Daolin once taught. Situated on the 4,134-ft (1,260-m) summit, two hours on foot and accessible by cable car, Shangqing Gong was first built in the 4th century AD and houses a teahouse. From here, it is a short climb to the Laojun Pavilion. On the lower slopes of the peak's rear face, the huge Tai'an Temple is surrounded by fortress-like walls.

Dujiangyan ⑫

都江堰

37 miles (60 km) NW of Chengdu.

🚗 from Xi Men Station, Chengdu.

🕒 8am–5pm daily. 🚗 for Irrigation Scheme Area.

THE VAST TOWN of Dujiangyan is primarily known for the Dujiangyan Irrigation Scheme, built in 256 BC by the Sichuanese governor Li Bing. He organized the building of an artificial island to tame and divide the flood-prone Min Jiang into two channels which could be regulated and tapped to provide a steady flow for crop irrigation. As proof of the technological skills of the ancient Chinese, Li Bing's project is still fully functional, though likely to be rendered irrelevant by the soon to be constructed Zipingpu Dam, 9 miles (15 km) north. Lidui Park now encloses the Irrigation Scheme

A ferry on the scenic Yuechang Hu (Moon Wall Lake) at Qingcheng Shan

◁ Crowds viewing Le Shan's Dafo (Great Buddha) from Nine Turn Staircase and upper platforms

Songpan's east gate and impressive stone wall and has viewing platforms overlooking key aspects, as well as Erwang Miao (Two Kings Temple) dedicated to Li Bing and his son.

Wolong Nature Preserve 13

卧龙自然保护区

93 miles (150 km) NW of Chengdu.

to panda breeding center.

CHINA'S FIRST SERIOUS attempt to protect the giant panda and its habitat, the Wolong Preserve was founded in 1975, enclosing about 775 sq miles (2,000 sq km) of snowy mountains and forests along the 6,560-ft (2,000-m) Qionglai range. The preserve's headquarters are at Wolong town, a knot of buildings that includes a research base and a panda breeding center, with accommodations right at the foot of the mountain ranges where wild pandas are said to roam. Pandas are, however, more likely to be seen in the outdoor pens at the center, housing the 60-odd captive animals which have been either brought in sick or raised here.

Wolong's two hiking trails, at Yingxiong and Yinchang Canyons, are meant strictly for competent hikers. Ask for local advice on conditions, and consider hiring a guide from the preserve headquarters. Although visitors may not see any pandas – rare even on these trails – they may get acquainted with the pandas' habitat, besides seeing some of Wolong's 40-odd resident bird species.

Songpan 14

松潘

137 miles (220 km) N of Chengdu.

from Xi Men Station, Chengdu.

FOUNDED AS A Ming-dynasty garrison post to guard a 8,200-ft (2,500-m) mountain pass, Songpan is an administrative center and busy marketplace for nearby Tibetan, Qiang, and Hui communities. It derives its ancient character from the surviving original cross-shaped street plan with high stone walls and its north, south, and east gates. Walled-in courtyards in front of the South Gate were once the "customs area" for searching caravans coming into town. Min

Jiang, bisecting Songpan's center, is crossed by the covered Gusong Qiao, the Ancient Pine Bridge whose two-tiered roof is decorated with carved animals. Songpan's two large mosques, one in the center of town and the other along the river outside the north gate, resemble standard Chinese temples except in their use of green and yellow paint and the Arabic script over their doors. Shops sell beaten copper pots, turquoise jewelry, sheepskin coats, yak butter, and wind-dried yak meat. Just outside the north gate, two tour companies organize overnight guided horse treks to nearby villages. Sleeping arrangements are out in the open air or in tents and food is basic. Trekkers should have the itinerary and fees agreed, in writing, before setting off to avoid argument.

Huanglong 15

黄龙

40 miles (65 km) W of Songpan.

from Chengdu or Songpan.

Huanglong Temple Fair (Jull/Aug).

HUANGLONG IS A 5-mile (7.5-km) long valley, 9,845 ft (3,000 m) above sea level in the foothills of the snowcapped Min mountain range. Deposited minerals from the river descending the valley have created 12 terraced pools and calcified cascades, whose yellow rocks give Huanglong (Yellow Dragon) its name. Of the four nearly-ruined temples, the Huanglong Temple, at the valley's upper end, has a statue of Huanglong's patron saint, and hosts an annual temple fair featuring a horse race.

Lantern at the east gate, Songpan

Calcified terraces in Huanglong

Jiuzhai Gou Tour 16

九寨沟

Mandarin duck

ONE OF CHINA'S MOST SCENIC reserves, Jiuzhai Gou (Nine Stockades Gully) covers 240 sq miles (620 sq km) of mountain valleys dotted with Tibetan villages. Beneath the snow-capped mountains, the valley floors are strung with almost 100 extraordinarily blue lakes, said to be the broken slivers of the Tibetan goddess Semo's mirror. Broad waterfalls, heavily encrusted with lime deposits, connect many of the lakes. Aside from herds of yaks, birds are the most evident wildlife, including rare mandarin ducks; a panda sighting is unlikely.

Zharu Temple ①

This small temple, its interior adorned with bright murals, is looked after by just two monks.

Shuzheng Zhai ②

A Tibetan stockaded village, replete with Buddhist shrines and water-powered mills, sits halfway along a string of deep blue pools and reed beds.

0 kilometers 4

0 miles 4

KEY

Tour route

Other road

Long Lake ⑦

This pool is not only the largest, but also the highest in the park, sitting at 10,170 feet (3,100 m).

TIPS FOR WALKERS

Getting around: buses are included in admission. Hiking follows roads and boardwalks. Nuorilang is a convenient base.

When to go: Avoid summer weekends. Sep–Oct has autumnal colors and fewer crowds. Winters are well below freezing with deep snow.

Nuorilang Falls ③

Jiuzhai Gou's most renowned cataract is best seen in full flood in late spring, when the water foams wildly in multiple ribbons over its stony outcrops.

Pearl-Beach Falls ④

Water tumbles down a calcified slope, spraying pearl-like drops on its rocky ridges.

Primeval Forest ⑤

An atmospheric coniferous forest at the far end of the reserve is far from crowds.

Five-colored Pool ⑥

Surrounded by a fringe of ferns and dark woods, this pool's kingfisher-blue depths are enhanced by green algae in the shallows, and milky-white swirls that seep in after rain.

The debris-laden Hailuo Gou Glacier descending the southeastern slopes of Gongga Shan

Luding 17

泸定

143 miles (230 km) W of Chengdu. 📍

THE SMALL MARKET TOWN of Luding is surrounded by mountains above the banks of Dadu Jiang. The 328-ft (100-m) Luding Chain Bridge over the Dadu, comprising 13 iron chains spanned by wooden planks, was built in 1705 to improve transportation through the region. The Luding Chain Bridge became a national icon in May 1935 due to an incident during the Long March (see p256). The Nationalist forces had removed the bridge's planks to trap the Red Army on the south side of the river, but "22 Heroes" clambered along the chains and managed to capture a Nationalist camp on the opposite side. The

The historic Luding Bridge, flanked by two gateways bridge is flanked on either side by gateways, while a museum on the river's far side exhibits contemporary photos.

Moxi Xiang & Hailuo Gou Glacier 18

磨西和海螺沟

28 miles (45 km) SW of Luding. 📍

Treks organized by hotels.

THE TINY TOWN OF Moxi Xiang, with its large Qiang population, is a staging post for trekking up the adjacent Hailuo Gou (Conch Valley) to the Hailuo Gou Glacier, whose tongue, at 12,205 ft (3,720 m), makes it the lowest and most accessible glacier in Asia. Moxi's wooden church sheltered the Red Army in 1935, before they attempted crossing the passes over Daxue Shan – Great Snow Mountain – during which a third of the army died (see p256). The glacier descends the southeastern side of Sichuan's highest peak, the 24,790-ft (7,556-m) Gongga Shan. The three-day return trek passes rhododendron forests before reaching the glacier's snout, blackened by debris. Its upper reaches comprise tumbled blocks of blue-green ice, while a hot spring mixes with icy glacial streams to provide pools for bathing.

Kangding 19

康定

31 miles (50 km) W of Luding. 📍

from Xin Nan Men Station, Chengdu.

LYING BETWEEN China and Tibet, the frontier town of Kangding is a bustling trading depot situated in a valley on the Zhepuo River. During the Qing era, the town developed on the tea trade between Tibet and China and was the place where porters, carrying leaves compressed into "tea bricks," would exchange their wares for Tibetan goods such as wool and copperware. Ethnically, the region is inhabited largely by the Khampa, a Tibetan people whose heavy turquoise jewelry, forward manners, and habit of carrying knives match their traditional reputation for toughness. The central Anjue Lamasery is a focus for the Khampa community. The town also has a handful of Qiang, Hui, and Han Chinese. To the southeast, Paoma Shan (Horse Race Mountain) is the venue for the Buddha Bathing Festival, where the Khampa demonstrate their equestrian skills during horse races. Heading west from Kangding, it is 311 miles (500 km) to the fringes of Tibet, with a worthwhile stop at Dege town and its Scripture Printing Lamasery.

Moxi's early 20th-century church

YUNNAN

LOCATED ALONG China's southwest frontier, Yunnan offers an unmatched diversity of landscapes, climate, and people. The Tibetan highland frames its northwestern fringes; tropical rainforests and volcanic plains lie to its south. In the center are plains and hills, crisscrossed by some of Asia's great rivers – the Yangzi, Salween, and Mekong.

The seat of the pastoral Dian Kingdom founded in the 3rd century BC, Yunnan was for centuries an isolated frontier region that resisted Han influences and upheld local identities. Even today, the province is home to a third of China's ethnic minorities and has much in common with neighboring Myanmar, Laos, and Vietnam.

The province's capital, Kunming, is one of the more relaxed cities in China; nearby are the astonishing rock formations of the Stone Forest (Shi Lin).

Several minority villages dot the tropical forests of Xishuangbanna, while in the north, Dali is home to the indigenous Bai people. Farther north is the UNESCO World Heritage Site of Lijiang, capital of the Naxi Kingdom, with cobbled streets and ancient architecture. Tiger Leaping Gorge, an impressive, steep-sided ravine, offers superb, accessible two-day hikes.

Kunming is well connected to the rest of China, but the bulk of the province has only limited train services. Bus travel is necessary to access most of Yunnan.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

Dali & Er Hai 5
 Jinghong 3
 Kunming 1
 Lijiang pp390-1 9
 Ruili 8
 Zhongdian 11

Areas of Natural Beauty, Islands, & Mountains

Baoshan 6
 The Stone Forest pp378-9 2

Tengchong 7
 Tiger Leaping Gorge pp394-5 10
 Xishuangbanna 4

Kunming ①

昆明

Sutra Pillar,
City Museum

THE CAPITAL OF YUNNAN PROVINCE, Kunming rests at 6,500 ft (2,000 m) above sea level. Its clement weather and floral wealth have earned it the nickname “City of Eternal Spring.” An ancient city that first came to prominence as part of the Nanzhao Kingdom (see p388), Kunming had grown into a thriving city with a cosmopolitan character by the 13th century. Kunming is fast becoming indistinguishable from the redeveloped metropolises found throughout the country, but it is still considered one of China’s more laid-back cities, with lakeside vistas just to the south.

Modern high-rise architecture has come to dominate Kunming’s center

🌿 Cui Hu Gongyuan

67 Cui Hu Nan Lu. ☎ (0871) daily.

Northwest of the city, this park has pavilions and bridges, and its lotus-filled ponds are visited by migrant red-beaked gulls in winter. Just west of the park, the old French Legation now holds temporary exhibitions. To the northwest is the university district, with its student cafés.

🏯 Yuantong Si

30 Yuantong Jie. ☎ (0871) 517 2881.

☉ 8am–5:30pm daily. 🎫

At the foot of Yuantong Hill lies Yunnan’s largest Buddhist complex and a popular pilgrimage spot. Renovated and rebuilt many times, it has an imposing Ming gateway, while a bridge over the central pond crosses through a Qing-era pavilion. Enshrined here is a 6-ft (3-m) golden statue of Maitreya Buddha. Behind the pavilion, the Ming-dynasty Great Hall of the Buddha has two wooden dragons on its main pillars, referring to a legend that the temple was built to pacify a dragon living in the pond. A new Thai-style hall behind holds a marble statue of Sakyamuni, donated by the King of Thailand. At the back of the temple is a cliff cut with steps allowing a view of religious poems and sayings carved into the rock.

🐦 Bird & Flower Market

The many stalls lining the crammed alleyways off Jingxing Jie sell an eclectic variety of goods. Splayed out in colorful rows at the huge pet market are a wealth of bird, fish, and animal species, while the antique and curio booths sell souvenirs such as tai ji quan swords, jewelry, old coins, bamboo pipes, and Cultural Revolution mementos.

🏛️ Provincial Museum

Corner of Dongfeng Xi Lu & Wuyi Lu.

☎ (0871) 361 1548.

☉ 9:30am–5pm daily. 🎫

The second floor of this museum houses splendid bronze drums (see p423) excavated from tombs on the shore of Lake Dian and dating back more than 2,000 years to the Warring States and Western Han periods. The drums are embellished with relief dioramas, largely showing typical scenes of rural life, although there are also wrestling scenes, a dramatic image of an ox battling a tiger, and a strange picture of a bamboo house transformed into a coffin. The most ornate of the drums were used to store cowry shells, then a form of currency. The others served as musical instruments or elements in sacrificial rites. Even today, bronze drums play an important role at weddings, festivals, and funerals for some of Yunnan’s minority groups. Another hall holds bronze and wooden Buddhist statues from various periods. Upstairs, an exhibition on pre-history displays human remains and plaster models of armored fish.

Pavilions on the fish-filled waters of Cui Hu Gongyuan

Muslim Quarter

Kunming's last old street lined with shops selling raisins, pita bread, and wind-dried beef, Shuncheng Jie, constitutes what's left of the old Muslim Quarter. The Nanchang Qingzhen Si, the city's 400-year-old mosque which once stood on Zhengyi Lu, was demolished several years ago, and a garish modern replacement, faced with white tiles and topped with bright green domes, was erected in its place. More interesting than the new mosque are the alleyways that surround it, packed with shops selling religious accoutrements such as skullcaps and images of Mecca. The noodle makers in the small Muslim cafés are fascinating to watch as they toss dough, teasing it out into ever-increasing numbers of strands. Numerous stalls sell mouthwatering lamb kabobs sprinkled with cumin. Nearby another mosque lies between Huguo Lu and Chongyun Jie.

Barbecuing lamb, Muslim Quarter

Xi Si Ta

Dong Si Jie. ☐ 8am–5:30pm 🗨️
The 13-storied Tang-era Xi Si Ta (Western Pagoda) has statues in the niches of each story. Close by, Dong Si Ta (Eastern Pagoda) is a more attractive replica standing in a garden. Although visitors cannot enter the temples associated with both pagodas, a small fee permits entry into Xi Si Ta's courtyard, where people come to relax on sunny afternoons.

City Museum

71 Tuodong Lu. 📞 (0871) 315 3526.
☐ 10am–5pm Tue–Sun. 🗨️
Though less interesting than the Provincial Museum, this museum houses a few relevant artifacts. The most striking is the Song-dynasty Dali Sutra Pillar, a 20-ft (7-m) sculpture in pink sandstone, commissioned by the Dali king, Yuan Douguang, in honor

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

208 miles (335 km) SE of Dali.
🏠 3,900,000. 📍 Kunming Wujiaaba Airport. 🚉 Kunming Train Station, North Train Station. 🚌 Kunming Bus Station, Western Bus Station.
📞 285 Huancheng Nan Lu, (0871) 356 6666.

of General Gao Ming. Seven tiers swarm with lively images of guardian gods and captive demons, and at the top is a ring of Buddhas holding up the universe. On the upper floors are bronze drums, a display on Kunming, and five locally-found dinosaur skeletons, including an allosaur and a Yunnanosaurus robustus.

Skeleton of Dilophosaurus, City Museum

KUNMING CITY CENTER

- Bird & Flower Market ③
- City Museum ⑦
- Cui Hu Gongyuan ①
- Muslim Quarter ⑤
- Provincial Museum ④
- Xi Si Ta ⑥
- Yuantong Si ②

0 meters 800
0 yards 800

KEY

- 🚉 Train station
- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 📞 Tourist information
- ✉ Post office
- 🕌 Temple
- 🕌 Mosque

The double-eaved Jin Dian, entirely made of bronze

🏠 Jin Dian

7 miles (12 km) NE of Kunming.

🚌 No. 6, 71, 76 from Kunming's North Train Station. 🕒 daily. 🎫

Well-kept flower gardens and leafy pine woods are reason enough to visit this secluded spot in the city's northeastern suburbs. However, the park's ostensible focus is the Jin Dian (Golden Temple) located on top of its central hill. Built in 1671 as the summer residence of the Qing rebel general, Wu Sangui, this unusual two-tiered shrine is made entirely of bronze. Its overall construction imitates the more conventional wooden temples, with screens, columns, and flying eaves. Just over 20-ft (6-m) high and weighing nearly 300 tons (272,155 kg), the temple sits atop a base of Dali marble and is almost completely black with the patina of age. In the courtyard stand ancient camellia trees, one of which is 600 years old. The main hall, with bronze lattices, beams, and statues, houses two magical swords used by Daoist warriors. Fragrant with camellias, the gardens here serve as popular picnic spots. Visitors can either take a bus or hire a bike to reach the base of the hill, from where it's an easy hike uphill to the temple.

Situated on the hill behind Jin Dian is another Daoist shrine with a tower that houses a 14-ton (12,700-kg) bronze bell. Dating to 1432, it was retrieved from Kunming's demolished southern gates.

🏠 Qiongzhu Si

7 miles (12 km) NW of Kunming.

🚌 from Kunming's Western bus station. 🕒 10am–10pm daily. 🎫

The Tang-era Qiongzhu Si (Bamboo Temple) was burned down and subsequently rebuilt in the 15th century. Today, this elegant Buddhist structure, with fine black and red woodwork, stands on Yuan-dynasty foundations. Besides housing three impressive Buddha statues, the temple is famous for its dazzling array of life-size clay sculptures, created over ten years toward the end of the 19th century by a supremely talented Sichuan sculptor, Li Guangxiu. The sculptor and his five assistants were commissioned to produce clay figures of the 500 arbat or luoban (those freed from the cycle of birth and death) for the main building. Today, these sculptures are the highlight of the temple, though at that time they were regarded as so distressing that Li Guangxiu was forbidden from ever working again. Along one wall a set of snarling, outlandish figures – one with arms longer than his body, another with eyebrows to his knees – ride foaming waves swarming with sea creatures. Elsewhere, three shelves of figures depict Buddhist virtues and faults. Many aspects of human life and folly are depicted in these beautiful characters: reaching for the moon, playing with a pet monster, yawning, debating, and eating a peach. While Li Guangxiu's skill at rendering facial expressions and gestures makes these figures unique, many are thought to be caricatures of his contemporaries, probably the reason they were so disliked at the time.

Also worth a glance is a 14th-century stone tablet, housed in the main hall. It records imperial China's dealings with Yunnan in Chinese and Mongolian scripts. A good vegetarian restaurant lies within the temple grounds.

An aerial view of the extensive Qiongzhu Si (Bamboo Temple)

Haigeng Park viewed against the expanse of Lake Dian

🏞️ Lake Dian & the Western Hills

📍 from Kunming. ☑ daily. 🚣
The 25-mile (40-km) long Lake Dian (Dian Chi), just south of Kunming, is lined with fishing villages and is very pretty, especially along its hilly western and flat eastern shores. Plying the waters of the elongated lake are fanchuan, traditional junks with bamboo masts and square canvas sails, used for fishing. Daguan Pavilion on the north shore has good views of the area, while a few miles south is Haigeng Park with green willows and eucalyptuses.

The most rewarding way to see the lake is from the Western Hills (Xi Shan), about 10 miles (16 km) southwest of Kunming. The undulating contours of the “Sleeping Beauty Hills” are said to resemble a reclining woman with tresses flowing into the lake. The path leading to the summit holds a treasury of temples. Visitors can either climb up or take a minibus. The first temple, a mile (2 km) from the entrance, is Huating Si. Designed originally as a country retreat for Gao Zhishen, who ruled Kunming in the 11th century, it has been rebuilt several times. The attractive gardens, dotted with stupas and ponds, contain interesting figures, including the four fierce-looking Guardians of the Directions, the gilded, blue-haired Buddhas, and a set of 500 arbat.

From Huating Si, a steep, winding road leads deep into the forest for 1 mile (2 km) to Taihua Si, established by Xuan Jian, a wandering Chan (Zen) Buddhist monk in 1306, and dedicated to Guanyin, the Goddess of Compassion. It is well known for its garden of camellias and magnolias, and excellent views. Another 20-minute walk up the hill leads to Sanqing Si, a complex of temples, halls, and pavilions, which formerly served as a summer palace for a 14th-century Mongolian prince. It was converted to a Daoist shrine in the 18th century.

A picturesque pavilion with a pond and garden, Taihua Si

Just half a mile away is the Dragon Gate Grotto, a set of chambers, steps, and tunnels excavated from the mountain. The mammoth construction task, which involved swinging from ropes and hacking at the rock with chisels, was begun by the late 18th century monk Wu Laiqing, and took 70 years to complete. Worth exploring along the way are niches with several fantastic statues, including those of Guanyin and the Gods of Study and Virtue. A cable car runs from near Sanqing Si to the summit at Grand Dragon Gate, a balcony perched at 8,200 ft (2,500 m), from where there are fine views over Lake Dian.

THE BURMA ROAD

For 1,500 years, the southern Silk Route ran through Yunnan, across Burma, and into India, traversing thick jungle and bandit-ridden mountains. In the 1930s, the Chinese government, driven west by the invading Japanese, reopened the route to use as a supply line into China from Burma. The 684-mile (1,100-km) road was built by 300,000 laborers, with primitive tools, and connected Kunming with the British railhead at Lashio in Burma. After the beginning of World War II, it became a strategic lifeline for the Allied troops, bringing in food, arms, and medical supplies. Provisions arrived by rail from Rangoon, and were then trucked to China on this route. After the Japanese occupied Lashio in 1942, another road, built under the command of US General Stilwell (see p351), linked Ledo in India to the Burma Road at Bhamo.

The Burma Road in the 1930s, snaking through the hills

The Stone Forest ②

石林

CELEBRATED AS A NATURAL wonder, the limestone pillars of the Stone Forest (Shi Lin) are Yunnan's most visited sight. The bizarre, tightly-packed formations, some as tall as 100 feet (30 m), have been given imaginative names such as "Rhinoceros Gazing at the Moon" and "Everlasting Fungus." Resembling a petrified forest, the area is shot through with winding pathways, ponds, and look-out points. So popular is this place that the central paths can get clogged with tour groups. Head to the edges of the forest to find a quiet corner, but keep in mind that it is easy to get lost in this otherworldly landscape. For a more ethereal experience, spend the night and explore when it's deserted and eerily lit.

★ Wangfeng Ting ③

Many of the paths lead to the central Peak Viewing Pavilion, a good meeting point, with views over the forest to help you gain your bearings.

Xiao Shi Lin ①

The Minor Stone Forest, a smaller rock cluster to the north of the main forest, is a little quieter. Each evening Sami minority dances are performed at an amphitheater here.

Fluted shape created by retreating water

Ode to Plum Blossom ②

Many of the rocks are cut with calligraphy, including one of Mao Zedong's most loved poems, executed in his elegant flowing script.

SHI LIN'S FORMATION

Fossils found in the area reveal that Shi Lin was underwater during the Permian period, 270 million years ago. The retreating sea left a limestone seabed that has been eroded since by wind and rain into today's weird, twisted shapes.

THE SAMI

The area around Shi Lin is home to the Sami, one of the many subgroups of the Yi minority. Spread throughout the Southwest, the Yi have their own written language, with six dialects, and numerous tracts on medicine, history, and the genealogy of ruling families. Much of Yi society was feudal well into the 20th century, and some groups still practice shamanism. The Sami are known for their embroidery, widely available at Shi Lin, and many local Sami work at the forest as tour guides and dancers.

A Sami tour guide, posing at Shi Lin

STAR FEATURES

★ Wangfeng Ting

★ Jianfeng Chi

★ Jianfeng Chi ④

This ornamental pool is ringed by jagged ridges. A narrow walkway runs from here across the top of the forest.

Sharp edge or karren

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

75 miles (120 km) SE of Kunming. ☎ (0871) 771 9006.

🚗 🚘 🚚 24 hours daily.

🏮 🏮 🏮 🏮 Torch Festival (end of the sixth lunar month).

Wife Waiting for Husband ⑤

This formation, reminiscent of a woman waiting impatiently, sits in the quiet area right at the back of the forest, on the route of the overhead walkway.

The wavy shapes and thin edges were created by chemicals in standing water dissolving the limestone.

PLAN OF SHI LIN

- ① Xiao Shi Lin
- ② Ode to Plum Blossom
- ③ Wangfeng Ting
- ④ Jianfeng Chi
- ⑤ Wife Waiting for Husband

KEY

- Path
- == Road
- 🏪 Shop
- 🚻 Restrooms

Entrance

Dai women selling vegetables in a busy market, Jinghong

Jinghong ③

景洪

420 miles (690 km) SW of Kunming.

🏠 363,000. 📶 📷 📱 Luandian Lu, (0691) 212 4479.

THE TROPICAL REGION of Xishuangbanna, in the far south of Yunnan, resembles its neighbors, Myanmar and Laos, more than dynamic modern China. Jinghong, its sleepy capital, was founded in the 12th century by the Dai warlord Dazhen. It is today an incongruous mix of concrete architecture and palm-lined streets. With an attractively torpid pace of life, it is an ideal introduction to the region and its indigenous Dai culture (see opposite).

Manting Wat, situated southeast of the city center, is Xishuangbanna's largest Buddhist temple. Built entirely of wood and raised off the ground on stilts, it has a simple interior, with vivid frescoes illustrating Buddhist themes. Next door is a school where Dai boys learn Buddhist lore. Behind the temple, Chunhuan Park, once the quarters for royal slaves, is a lush place with numerous resident peacocks. There are several paths leading across the tiny river to replicas of temples and pagodas. A shop here sells live fish for people to release into the river and thus gain merit.

Budding plant, Tropical Flower & Plant Garden

Located in the west of town, off Jinghong Xi Lu, is the lovely Tropical Flower & Plant Garden, a must-see for anyone interested in the incredibly diverse flora of the region. It is bursting with a wealth of tropical plants – over 1,000 species – quite a few with labels in English. In the early afternoon, tour groups are entertained by vibrant displays of traditional Dai dancing. A prominent statue of Zhou Enlai (see p250) commemorates a summit he held here with the Burmese leader U Nu in 1961 to defuse border tensions.

🏠 Manting Wat

Manting Lu. ☉ 8am–7pm daily. 📷

🌿 Tropical Flower & Plant Garden

28 Jinghong Xi Lu. ☉ daily. 📷

The lush Tropical Flower & Plant Garden, Jinghong

ENVIRONS: Located 20 miles (30 km) southeast of Jinghong, Ganlanba makes a good base for exploring the surrounding area. In the southeast of town, the Dai Minority Park is a collection of refurbished Dai villages, with traditional bamboo and wood houses raised on stilts. Near the park's center stands the 700-year-old, gilded Wat Ben Pagoda. The town's main attraction, however, is its picturesque setting in lush jungle beside the Mekong River. Several cafés here offer advice on walks and bike rental.

The popular Sanchahe Elephant Reserve, 30 miles (50 km) north of Jinghong, is home to a herd of 50-or-so wild elephants. Visitors are not allowed to wander off the paths without a guide. Raised treetop walkways allow for observing the wild elephants, while a chairlift provides a real bird's-eye view. Near the southern entrance is a bird and butterfly zoo. The reserve's frequent elephant displays are best avoided, since the animals are coaxed into performing with spears.

A visit to Banla Village, 24 miles (38 km) west of Jinghong, is the most accessible way to experience Hani culture (one of the four subgroups of Xishuangbanna Dai). The village is attractive with typical Dai houses overlooking rice terraces and tea plantations. Besides dance recitals held at the village hall, visitors can also see the distinctive Hani dress, with embroidered tunics, silver breastplates, and ornate headdresses.

The Dai

IN CHINA, THE DAI people live in the lush lands of Xishuangbanna. Once spread as far north as the Yangzi Valley, the Dai were driven south during the 13th century by Mongol expansion, and are now found throughout Thailand, Laos, Myanmar, and Vietnam. The Dai in all of these countries share a similar culture, following Theravada Buddhism rather than Mahayana, the Buddhist school

Silver elephant-shaped brooch practiced in much of the rest of China, and speaking their own language with its own script.

Known as skillful farmers, the Dai have always flourished in fertile river basins, growing rice, sugar cane, rubber trees, and bananas. Dai cuisine is well worth trying, with sweet flavors not found elsewhere in China. Rice is steamed inside bamboo or pineapple, and exotic specialties include ant eggs and fried moss.

Traditional Dai bomes are made of bamboo and raised on stilts, with the livestock penned underneath and generations of the same family living above. The well outside will likely have a shrine over it, water being sacred to Dai culture.

Many Dai men have impressive tattoos of animals, flowers, geometric patterns, or Dai script. Traditionally, when a boy reaches 12 years, he has his torso and limbs decorated. This rite of passage has largely died out in mainstream Dai culture, but it is still undertaken in some very rural areas.

Dai women traditionally wear a sarong or long skirt, a bodice, and a jacket. Hair is tied up, fixed with a comb, and often ornamented with flowers. Gold-capped teeth are considered attractive and married women wear silver wrist bands.

Markets in rural Dai homelands offer the only opportunity for some to buy products they can not produce themselves. Huge social occasions usually held on a Monday, they attract villagers for miles around. A lot of hard bargaining – as well as gossip and flirting – goes on.

WATER SPLASHING FESTIVAL

Originally a solemn Buddhist rite celebrating the defeat of a demon, Poshui Jie, the Water Splashing Festival, is today a joyous and hedonistic carnival. Water is liberally hurled at friend and stranger alike, and becoming thoroughly drenched is seen as fortuitous. The festival also features a massive market on the first day; dragon boat racing, fireworks, elephant and peacock displays on the second; and the biggest drenching of all, along with much singing and dancing on the third.

Yunnan's Water Splashing Festival a celebration in mid-April, usually the 13th to the 16th

Xishuangbanna ④

西双版纳

Bai woman at market

IN CLIMATE AND CULTURE, the subtropical far south of Yunnan, Xishuangbanna, feels a part of southeast Asia. Much of the area is primeval rainforest, the last left in the country, and home to a huge diversity of flora and fauna, including a third of China's bird population. A third of the population is Dai (see p383); another third is made up of the numerous other minorities. Most of the population lives in small villages and the area's appeal lies in the opportunity to hop between towns, explore the countryside by bike, and trek through the jungle.

Pillar-like palm trees at Menglun's Botanic Gardens

EAST TO LAOS

This route travels through cultivated flat lands and then highland forest to the Laotian border, which you can cross, provided you have the required visa.

The small settlement of Manting, a few miles east of Ganlanba (see p382) is full of traditional wooden Dai houses. The town's Fo Si and Du Ta are excellent reconstructions of 12th-century temples destroyed in the Cultural Revolution.

Three hours east by bus lies Menglun, a dusty couple of streets beside the Luosuo Jiang. The superb Botanic Gardens, across a suspension bridge on the opposite bank, were set up to research medicinal uses of local plants. With over 3,000 different species, there's plenty to see, even for the not-so-botanically minded, including the celebrated Dragons' Blood Trees whose sap is used to heal wounds, as well as bamboo and ancient cycad groves. Stay the night, in the small hotel within the gardens.

Leaving the farms behind, the road to Mengla travels through a great tract of thick tropical jungle, the largest of Xishuangbanna's five wildlife preserves, which gives way to rubber plantations. Mengla itself is a rather drab and unattractive town.

A short taxi ride north of Mengla, the Bupan Aerial Walkway, a chain of slender bridges 130 feet (40 m) in the tree canopy, allows for unrivaled views of the jungle below. It's another 9 miles (15 km) to the Yao minority village of Yaoqu. There's a hostel, and from here it is possible to trek into some very remote regions – you're advised to hire a guide.

Shangyong is the last village before the Laos border and though not really worthy of a trip in itself, it's interesting as Xishuangbanna's Miao center (see pp406–7).

Botanic Gardens

Menglun. ☐ 8:30am–6pm daily. 📍

Bupan Aerial Walkway

19 miles (30 km) N of Mengla.

☐ 8:30am–6pm daily. 📍

WEST TO MYANMAR

Western Xishuangbanna is less developed than the east, with rougher roads and sketchier transport. The many fascinating villages inhabited entirely by minorities, however, make the rigors of travel worthwhile.

Sprawling Menghai is unremarkable, but useful as a base for exploring villages and the countryside by bike. It's renowned for its pu'er tea and hosts a lively Sunday market.

The monastery at Jingzhen is known for its busu, an octagonal pavilion for delivering sermons. The main temple has beautiful decorative wall paintings. A bit farther on at

Mengzhe,

the hilltop

Manlei Si is a bizarre-looking,

frilly octagon built in the 18th century, which holds an important collection of sutras written on palm fiber. Xiding, an attractive Hani village, holds a large Thursday market.

Gelanghe is dominated by the Hani, whose women wear elaborate silver headdresses. A sub-group, the Ake, who wear

Picking pu'er tea, outside Menghai

Life of the Buddha wallpaintings, Jingzhen monastic complex

Manfeilong Ta, supposed to resemble emerging bamboo shoots their long hair in braids, live in a settlement just north of town on the way to the lake.

Heading south towards the border, Menghun is a sleepy town with a huge Sunday market, beginning at dawn and over by noon. Most participants are Dai, but you will also see Hani and Bulang. There's also a rather run-down 19th-century monastery in town.

The border town of Daluo is the end of the line for westerners who are not allowed to travel to Myanmar, unless being met at the border as part of an official tour. The cross-border market, which attracts hill tribes and Burmese traders, makes the trip to this outpost worth it.

DAMENGLONG TO BULANG SHAN

Damenglong, 44 miles (70 km) south of Jinghong, comes alive on market days and is a popular spot for trekking and temple hopping. On the way, it's worth stopping at Gasa to explore Manguanglong Si, a monastery with a lovely dragon-shaped stairway.

Manfeilong Ta is a half-hour walk north of Damenglong and its nine graceful spires make it the most impressive of the local temples. Built in 1204 to enshrine what is purported to be Buddha's footprint, it is popular with Buddhist pilgrims and is the center of festivities during the Tan Ta Festival in late October or early November. Another Buddhist monument, Hei Ta, is rather run-down, but set in a very pleasant location.

The walk to Bulang Shan is a simple, well-established three-day walk along the Nana Jiang and its tributaries, passing through dense jungle and villages of the Dai, Hani, Bulang, and Lahu minorities. Hire a guide and be careful not to stray off the path into Myanmar. From Damenglong it's 6 miles (10 km) to the Dai village of Manguanghan, then a further 8 miles (13 km) to the Bulang village of Manpo, which makes a good place to spend the night. The next day is a 14-mile (22-km) tramp through heavy jungle on winding paths to Weidong. The next day is an easy hike of 6 miles (10 km) along the road to Bulang Shan, which offers rudimentary accommodations and a daily bus to Menghai.

TIPS FOR EXPLORERS

Getting around: Cars with drivers are available in Jinghong. Local buses are frequent along main roads. Bikes can be hired from cafés in the tourist areas.

Trekking: Numerous trekking organizations are based in Jinghong. A guide is recommended for jungle treks. This is a sensitive border region – do not walk unguided near the Myanmar border. Take plenty of water, sunscreen, a raincoat, a hat, and a first aid kit.

Accommodation: Basic accommodation is available in most villages, sometimes in locals' homes.

Dali & Er Hai ⑤

大理 和 洱海湖

"Dali" inscribed at South Gate

SANDWICHED BETWEEN Er Hai to the east and the Cang Shan range to the west, the picturesque little town of Dali draws innumerable visitors. The old town, surrounded by the remains of the Ming city walls, is characterized by cobbled lanes and stone houses. In the nearby countryside, numerous Bai villages offer a glimpse into traditional culture, and are particularly interesting on market days. Other activities include hiking in the mountains, and watching traditional cormorant fishing on Er Hai. The best time to visit is during the Spring Fair, when hundreds of Bai come for five days of bare-back horse racing, wrestling, dancing, and singing.

Looking north over the city's rooftops from Nancheng Men

Exploring Dali

Dali's old town center, just 1.5 sq miles (4 sq km) across, can be explored in a single morning. It takes about half an hour to walk from the South Gate to the North Gate across town. There is plenty to interest visitors, from small souvenir shops to teahouses and traditional masseurs. Crowds of shoppers and farmers also arrive here for the weekly Friday market. The best vantage point is at the top of Nancheng Men (South Gate), from where there are views to Er Hai and Cang Shan.

Huguo Lu & Fuxing Lu

Running east-west through the center of town, Huguo Lu, nicknamed Foreigners' Street, is full of guesthouses and cafés that serve pizzas and cappuccinos. Most of the old town's sights lie along the main north-south artery, Fuxing Lu. The Drum Tower, lying close to the Dali Museum, once signalled the close of the city gates each evening. Farther north along Fuxing Lu, the square outside the library is a popular venue for a game of cards or dominoes. Still farther is the quiet Yu'er Park, full of fruit trees and ponds, while tucked away in the streets to its north is Dali's Catholic church, with a Tang-era tiled roof and painted gables.

The Dali Museum, set in picturesque grounds

Dali Museum

125 Erhe Nan Lu. ☐ daily. 📷
Just inside Nancheng Men, the Dali Museum was originally the mansion of the Qing governor, and later served as the headquarters of Du Wen Xiu, leader of the 1856 Muslim Uprising. It is worth visiting for its tranquil courtyards, filled with bougainvillea and lantana. The huge bronze bell hanging outside in a pavilion came from the old Bell Tower. Inside, the most interesting relics are a collection of Buddhist figurines from the Nanzhao Kingdom (see p388), and statues of serving girls and an orchestra excavated from a Ming-dynasty tomb. A hall at the back houses copies of scroll paintings, including one depicting the founding of the Nanzhao Kingdom.

San Ta

1 mile (2 km) NW of Dali. 📷
The distinctive San Ta (Three Pagodas) that symbolize Dali once stood within the monastery of Chongwen Si, destroyed during the Qing dynasty. A 20-minute walk or short bus ride north of town, the pagodas are best visited early, before the tour buses arrive. The 16-tiered, square-based Qianxun Ta is the tallest of the three at 230 ft (70 m), and is also the oldest, dating to around AD 800. Each tier is embellished with fine marble figures. Buddhist relics including sutras (scriptures), copper mirrors, and gold ornaments were found during a renovation in 1979, and are displayed in a museum behind the pagodas. The two

The splendid San Ta just north of town smaller octagonal pagodas were built in the 11th century, and are 138 ft (42 m) high. As well as serving as reliquaries, they were built to appease the gods and thus gain protection against natural disasters. The characters inscribed in front of the Qianxun Ta read “subdue forever mountains and rivers.”

Zhonghe Si

W of Dali.

Situated an hour’s walk from town, Zhonghe Si can be reached by heading past the small bridge to the north of Dali into the cedar and eucalyptus woods at the foothills of Zhonghe Feng. From here, zigzag paths lead up the mountain to the temple. An easier approach is via the chairlift from the

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

261 miles (420 km) NW of Kunming.  500,000.

 Xiaguan Airport, 18 miles (30 km) from Dali.  to Xiaguan, then 30-min by bus to Dali.

  48 Cangshan Lu, (0872) 213 3197.  Spring Fair (15th day of the 3rd lunar month – April or May).

main road. Originally built in the Ming-era, the temple has been reconstructed and serves both Daoists and Buddhists. The views from here over the lake and town are superb. Locals offer horse trips farther up the mountain, and for the ambitious, there is a 6-mile (9-km) hike along a stone path to Wuwei Si, where monks study tai ji quan. Visitors can stay the night before heading back.

Guanyin Si & Gantong Si

Approx 3 miles (5 km) S of Dali.

Dedicated to the Buddhist Goddess of Compassion, Guanyin Si sits at the foot of Foding Shan. It has a colorful new entrance, and within the grounds are fine wood and stone carvings. At the back of the temple, a 2-mile (3-km) path leads uphill to Gantong Si. Alternatively, you can hike the spectacular 7-mile (11-kilometer) Jade Belt trail from Zhonghe Si. Once Gantong Si was the largest shrine in the area. Today, despite only two partially-restored halls surviving, the temple remains impressive.

A bustling market at one of the many towns around Dali

A fisherman and his cormorants in Er Hai's jade waters, Dali

Er Hai

daily

Located 2 miles (3 km) east of Dali, Er Hai (Ear Lake), a symbol of natural fecundity to the Bai, is named after its shape. The 25-mile (40-km) long lake has numerous ferry services and is home to 50-odd species of fish. Any café in Dali can arrange a tour on the lake; most trips usually involve visits to small temples, or excursions to scenic spots on the eastern shore. Visitors can also accompany a cormorant fisherman (see p418) and watch the trained birds catch fish. A variety of tour boats, from big, virtual floating pagodas for large groups, to smaller craft, leave from Caicun on Er Hai's western shore.

Tours usually take in Jinsuo Dao, across the lake near its eastern shore. Once a summer retreat for Nanzhao royalty, it is now home to a fishing village. Farther north lies Xia Putao, a tiny rocky crag with a Buddhist temple.

At the southern tip of the lake, Er Hai Park was once a royal deer ranch during the Nanzhao Kingdom. A lush path leads up to a peak, which offers splendid views.

Surrounding Villages

Dotting the shore of Er Hai are several villages worth exploring, especially on market days. One of the numerous minibuses, which congregate just outside Dali's North Gate, can easily be flagged down as they hop from village to village.

Lying 12 miles (20 km) north of Dali, Xizhou was an important military outpost during the Nanzhao period. Today, it has about 90 significant Bai mansions with rooms arranged around a courtyard. Most lie northeast of the central square, and one of them has been converted into the pleasant Tianzhuang Hotel.

A few miles northeast of Xizhou is Zhoucheng, the largest lakeside Bai village with several tie-dye cottage industries. Just north of here, Shaping is a sleepy village that transforms into an indigenous metropolis every Monday, when it hosts a huge market. On sale are a variety of local produce and livestock, besides delicious wild honey, condiments, and traditional Bai clothing. The scale, bustle, and color make this one of the great highlights of the area.

A Bai woman from Shaping

On the eastern side of the lake, Wase village is a maze of narrow back lanes. It has a simple government guesthouse and its own Monday market, which is less touristy than the one at Shaping. Boats return to Dali from Haidong, 6 miles (10 km) south of Shaping.

Baoshan 6

保山

75 miles (120 km) SW of Dali.

from Kunming. from Kunming, Tengchong & Ruili.

THE GARRISON TOWN of Baoshan was an important staging post on the southern Silk Road to India, as early as the 5th century BC. Even though it attracts fewer visitors today, the town still retains some of its old charm, visible in its interesting traditional architecture, and its taste for commerce with specialty items ranging from salted duck, coffee, and tea, to leather boots and silk.

Just west of the town center, the scenic Taibao Shan Park is an excellent place for a leisurely stroll. Near the park's entrance is the three-tiered Ming-dynasty Yuhuang Pavilion, with slanted pillars supporting a small octagonal dome. It is

THE NANZHAO KINGDOM

In the 8th century, the Bai unified under a ruthless prince, Pileguo, who vanquished his rivals by inviting them to a banquet and setting fire to the tent. He then founded the Nanzhao Kingdom, with Dali as its capital. The city's strategic location, in a valley shielded by mountains, helped protect it against two attacks by invading Tang armies, and established its control over the southern Silk Road trade. At its zenith, the kingdom stretched across Southwest China and into Burma and parts of Vietnam. It survived until the 13th century, when the Great Mongol Kublai Khan founded the Yuan dynasty.

Nanzhao figurine

Typical tropical forest broadleaf trees, Taibao Shan Park flanked on either side by octagonal bell kiosks. Close by is the Ming-era shrine Yufu Si, housing several jade Buddhas. At the summit, Wuhou Si is a commemorative temple with a huge bearded statue of the Daoist sage and strategist Zhuge Liang (AD 181–234), seated between his ministers.

🌳 Taibao Shan Park
Baoxiu Lu. ☐ daily. 📶

Tengchong 7

腾冲

105 miles (168 km) W of Baoshan. 📶

ATHRIVING SETTLEMENT during the Han era, Tengchong prospered from the Silk Road trade. Today, a remote backwater, it has preserved more of its traditional wooden architecture than neighboring Baoshan. Set amidst jungle, volcanoes, and hot springs, Tengchong is also a major seismic zone, having experienced 70 earthquakes since records began in the 16th century.

In the north of town, on Guanghua Lu, stands the imposing British consulate established in 1899. A mix of Victorian and Chinese architecture, the derelict structure is to be converted into a museum. Along western Guanghua Lu is the main market, held every morning. Tengchong's most charismatic alleys run west off Yinjiang Xi Lu, where Burmese traders, distinctive in their sarongs and sandals, frequent the Burmese Teahouse. Most are involved in the gem and jade trade, but be wary of their goods unless you are an expert. Just west of town, Laifeng Shan Park is a pine forest criss-crossed with paths. Near the top of the hill, Laifeng Monastery is now a museum and holds exhibits on local history.

🌳 Laifeng Shan Park
☐ 8am–7pm daily. 📶

Zhuce Liang's statue, Wuhou Si

ENVIRONS: The sights out of town are best visited on a tour, which can be arranged by any large hotel in Tengchong. Heshun, 2 miles (4 km) west of town, was founded in the Ming dynasty and is as pretty as a postcard. Funds from thousands of former residents now living abroad have kept the traditional courtyard houses, ornate pavilions, and gardens in an excellent state of repair. One of the finest buildings is the wooden library, which was built in 1928.

As a result of its fragile fault-lines, the entire region is dotted with volcanoes, dry lava beds, geysers, and hot springs. The most impressive of the 100-odd small volcanoes lie 12 miles (20 km) north of town.

Dakong Shan is 820-ft (250-m) high, and beside it is the smaller Heikong Shan, only 262-ft (80-m) high, but over 328-ft (100-m) deep. Steps cut into the rock lead into the crater. Just 7 miles (12 km) southwest of Tengchong, Rehai or “Hot Sea” is an area of geothermal springs, popular among the Chinese who throng here for a bath in the mineral-rich water.

🌳 Dakong & Heikong Shan
☐ daily. 📶
🌳 Rehai
☐ 24 hr daily. 📶

Ruili 8

瑞丽

80 miles (125 km) SW of Tengchong.

☑ from Kunming. 📶

RUILI, ON THE Myanmar border, is in every way a frontier town – slightly exotic, with a touch of the illicit.

Although much Burmese hero-in passes through here, and gambling and prostitution are rife, the town should not necessarily be avoided as the presence of Burmese traders, and Dai and Jingpo minorities make it one of the most intriguing places in southwest China. An interesting jade and gem market lies in the north of town, parallel to Nanmao Jie. The town really comes to life at night, when gambling and food stalls are set up in the back streets. Numerous hotels advertise tours into Myanmar, often to watch transvestite shows, but the frontier is closed to all foreign visitors, except those being met by Burmese officials for a pre-arranged tour.

Lush Tengchong countryside, with hills in the background

Street-by-Street: Lijiang 9

丽江

Maize drying

SET IN A PICTURESQUE valley with a stunning mountain backdrop, Lijiang's Old Town, Dayan, is a labyrinth of cobbled alleys lined with wooden houses, cafés, and the workshops of traditional craftsmen. Home to the Naxi people, Dayan is one of the most pleasant urban scenes in China. Lijiang came to international attention in 1996 when an earthquake killed over 300 people and devastated the city. Money poured into Dayan's relatively sensitive reconstruction, and numerous hotels as well as an airport were built. In 1999, Lijiang was made a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

A typical narrow street in the center of the Old Town

Water Wheels

Heralding the entrance to the Old Town, these water wheels are ornamental. Lijiang once had numerous mills.

Nightly performances of Naxi music are held at the Naxi Music Academy.

Kegang Fang

This distinctive tower is the center of celebrations during the Sanduo Festival which honors the Naxi's protector deity Sanduo.

JOSEPH ROCK

An eccentric Austrian botanist, Joseph Rock lived in Lijiang between 1922 and 1949. He gathered over 80,000 plant specimens, pioneered the use of photography in the field, and wrote reports for National Geographic. He was a defender of Naxi culture and compiled the first dictionary of the language. His entourage was huge, and included cooks, hundreds of mercenaries, and servants to carry such dubious necessities as his gramophone, gold dinner service, and collapsible bathtub.

Joseph Rock (right) with the Prince of Choni, 1925

Heilong Tan
Gongyuan

KEY

--- Suggested route

STAR SIGHTS

★ Mishi Xiang

★ Sifang Jie

View of the rooftops of Dayan from Wangu Lou

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

316 miles (527 km) NW of Kunming. 1,100,000. ☒
 ☒ South Bus Station and North Bus Station. ☒ Bangbang Festival (15th day of 1st lunar month), Sanduo Festival (8th day of 2nd & 8th lunar month), Horse Fair (7th lunar month). ☒ CITS, Xianggeli Dadao, Lifang Plaza, 3rd Floor, (0888) 516 0371. ☒ to Dayan.

The canals are helpful if you get lost. Walk against the current to head towards the water wheels.

★ Mishi Xiang

With a canal babbling beside it, this is one of Dayan's most charming streets. Locals stop for a drink from the well here, outside the Blue Page Vegetarian restaurant.

OLD TOWN CENTER

The old town is a cobweb of narrow cobbled alleyways, criss-crossed with canals, and free of traffic. It's extremely pretty, and very popular. If you want to escape the crowds head off into the alleys away from the major tourist routes, where local people still live.

★ Sifang Jie

Though it's always busy with tourists, Market Square is still at the heart of Lijiang. Naxi gather here to play cards and chat. Local men who enjoy falconry often display their hawks.

Yu He runs south from Heilong Tan (Black Dragon Pool), north of Dayan.

Mu Fu Wangu Lou

Exploring Lijiang and Beyond

SHIZI SHAN (LION HILL) DIVIDES the Old Town (Dayan) from the New Town, where most hotels and other amenities can be found. There are a few sights just south of Dayan, on Shizi Shan, and clustered around Heilong Tan (Black Dragon Pool), north of Dayan. The countryside surrounding Lijiang is dotted with Naxi hamlets, many of which have interesting temples. Some of these can be reached by bicycle; otherwise by a short bus trip.

Wangu Lou, a perfect vantage point for viewing Dayan

Wangu Lou

Shizi Shan. ☐ 7:30am–7pm daily. 📷
Standing at the highest point in Lijiang, this 108-ft (33-m) pavilion is accessible from either the old town or from Minzu Lu on the west side of the hill. A recently-built, four-story edifice with huge wooden pillars, it offers superb views overlooking the old town.

Mu Fu

SW of the Old Town. ☐ daily. 📷
The Mu were Lijiang's ruling family up to 1723 and the mansion they built for themselves at the south end of the Old Town contained over 100 buildings. Destroyed by the Qing, the residence was built after the earthquake on the ruins of traditional housing in Han, Naxi, Bai, and Tibetan architectural styles.

Heilong Tan Gongyuan

Xin Dajie. ☐ 7:30am–6pm daily. 📷
On the northern edge of town, Black Dragon Pool Park is stunningly picturesque with the elegant Deyue Lou placed at the center of a carp-filled pool, and backdropped by the peak of Yulong Xue Shan (Jade Dragon Snow Mountain). The Dongba Research Institute, in the southwest corner of the park, is an academic institution for the preservation of Naxi culture – there are about thirty dongba shamans here, studying and translating Naxi religious texts. In the north of the park stands a set of halls transported during the 1970s from what was once Lijiang's biggest monastery, Fuguo Si. The grandest is the 66-ft (20-m), triple-roofed Wufeng Lou (Five Phoenix Hall), built in 1601. The Museum of Naxi Culture, by the park's north gate, holds exhibitions on Naxi dress and customs.

ENVIRONS: Baisha, a sleepy village 6 miles (10 km) north of Lijiang, was, until Kublai Khan's invasion, the capital of the Naxi Kingdom. Today there's little evidence of its past importance except for two grand temples. The first, at the village entrance, stands neglected, but the second, the Liuli, just north of it, holds some well-preserved 14th-century frescoes that exhibit a promiscuous pantheism. Baisha is home to the Daoist physician Dr Ho, made famous by travel writer Bruce Chatwin. He will doubtless track you down and offer his tonic herb tea in exchange for a small donation.

Beiyue Si in the village of Yulong a couple of miles north of Baisha is dedicated to the protector deity Sanduo, depicted with a white hat and spear. The temple has been managed by the same family for almost 1,000 years.

Built in 1756, the small lamasery Yufeng Si is 8 miles (13 km) northwest of Lijiang at the foot of Snow Mountain. A huge ancient camellia tree produces thousands of flowers each spring and is cared for with impressive dedication by the monks. A Naxi orchestra often practice here in the afternoon.

The magnificent mountain range Yulong Xue Shan dominates the countryside surrounding Lijiang. To access this mountain that was first scaled in the 1960s, you'll need to either join an organized tour or hire a taxi. From the entrance of the main scenic area there are two chairlifts to points above the snow line.

The first takes you to the gruesomely named Love Suicide Hill; the second, Asia's highest, takes you 14,750 ft (4,506 m) up to a ridge with amazing views of glaciers. Watch out for altitude sickness, and don't bother if it's foggy.

Red chilies drying

The jagged peaks of Yulong Xue Shan (Jade Dragon Snow Mountain)

The Naxi

THE NAXI MINORITY, numbering about 278,000, live in Sichuan and Yunnan, with Lijiang as their spiritual capital. Descended from Tibetan nomads, the Naxi lived until recently in matriarchal families, though local rulers were always male. There are strong matriarchal influences throughout Naxi society and in particular in the Naxi language. For example, nouns become superlative when the word “female” is added and diminutive with the addition of “male.” A “female stone,” therefore, is a boulder; a “male stone” a pebble. The script, called Dongba, consists of about 1,400 pictograms and is the only hieroglyphic writing system still in use. The Naxi religion, also called Dongba, is polytheistic, and mixes elements of Daoism and Tibetan Lamaism with older animist beliefs. The main Naxi deity is Sanduo, a protector war god depicted in white, carrying a white spear and riding a white horse. He is celebrated twice a year with the sacrifice of a goat and, of course, much singing and dancing.

Dongba pictogram

Naxi society's matriarchal nature results in the women controlling businesses, but also doing most of the work. Inheritance passes through the female line to the eldest daughter. Naxi men are expected to wile away their time as gardeners or musicians.

Dongba sorcerers, are invited to chant scriptures at weddings, funerals, on New Year Day, and at festivals. A few of these shaman survived the purges of the Cultural Revolution and are training a new generation in ancient Naxi ritual.

Traditional sbawls have an upper blue segment which represents night, a lower sheepskin band to represent daylight, and small circles recalling the stars. Two circles on the shoulder areas depict the eyes of a frog, an ancient Naxi deity.

Naxi music is unique – a combination of Daoist rite, Confucian ceremony, and literary lyrics, played on venerable instruments such as the flute, reed pipes, lute, and zither.

This page of pictographic Dongba script is from the Naxi manuscript “Sacrifices to the High Deity.” It is one of numerous Dongba documents translated by Joseph Rock (see p390).

Tiger Leaping Gorge 10

虎跳峡

Arrows mark the upper path

THIS POPULAR TREK follows the roaring Jinsha Jiang's route through one of China's deepest gorges, supposedly named after a tiger escaped hunters by leaping it at its narrowest point. With peaks on either side reaching an average of 13,000 ft (4,000 m), the gorge makes for a thrilling trek. The 18-mile (30-km) trail along the ridge is well marked, though at times arduous, and passes through rustic hamlets which allow visitors to rest up amid beautiful countryside. The walk can easily be completed in two days, but many hikers decide to stay an extra night. If time is tight, daylong bus tours from Lijiang head into the gorge along the lower road, which currently runs as far as Walnut Grove.

Bendiwan

A tiny village with superb views, Bendiwan has numerous guesthouses and is a convenient place to overnight 10 miles (16 km) from Qiaotou.

★ Views of the Gorge

Starting at the Qiaotou end of the gorge provides magnificent views right from the start. The peaks of Jade Dragon Snow Mountain rise far above Jinsha Jiang, the River of Golden Sands.

A short diversion down a steep, winding trail leads to Longdong Waterfall.

The 24 Bends

When coming from Qiaotou, the 24 Bends are the toughest part of the trail and consist of rather more than 24 gruelling switchbacks. Some hire horses at Nuoyu for this part of the trip.

Relatively new lower road

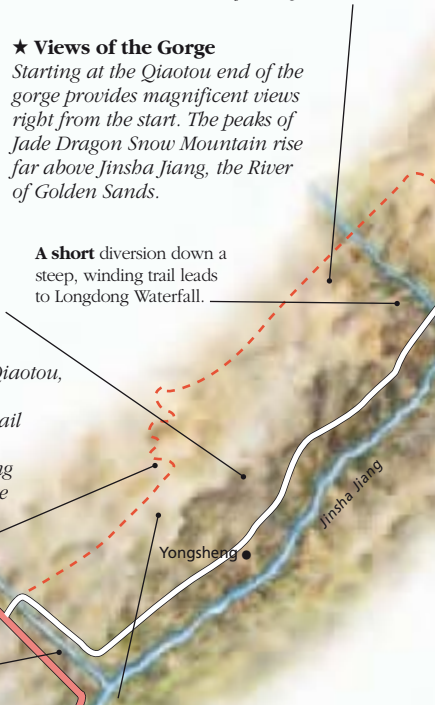

Farms at Nuoyu

The lovely village of Nuoyu is just two hours from Qiaotou. A few guesthouses here offer dorm beds and meals, as well as horses.

STAR SIGHTS

★ Views of the Gorge

★ Walnut Grove

Goat

Flocks of goats have stripped much of the slopes clean of flora.

Original ferry crossing

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

62 miles (100 km) NW of Lijiang.
 from Lijiang to either Daju or Qiaotou; last bus from Daju to Lijiang at 1:30pm. for access via Daju, and ferry crossing.

The "new" ferry crossing is sometimes closed. Check at Walnut Grove or Daju before departing.

Traditional Tibetan buildings at Ganden Sumtseling Gompa

Zhongdian 11

中甸

119 miles (198 km) NW of Lijiang.

3 to 5 hrs from Lijiang.

Changzheng Lu, (0887) 822 5657.

WALKING THE GORGE

The upper trail follows the peaks between Qiaotou and Daju, either of which can be used as a starting point. Both Bendiwan and Walnut Grove are about a day's walk from either end, so make good spots to overnight. Don't attempt the trek on your own, or in heavy rain or thick mist. Landslides do occur in the area so be wary, especially after the rains in July or August.

0 kilometers 3
 0 miles 3

KEY

Ferry crossing

Major road

Minor road

Path

Follow the path down to the Jinsha Jiang to judge for yourself whether any animal could have made this jump.

★ Walnut Grove

This quiet village of terraced fields, walnut trees, and stone and timber houses is 14 miles (23 km) from Qiaotou and a great place to rest up. The views of the gorge's narrowest section are not to be missed.

TOUTED AS THE TRUE Shangri-la (the city's name was officially changed to Xianggelila in 2002), Zhongdian is the capital of Diqing Tibetan Autonomous Region and worth visiting if you're not able to visit Tibet. The ramshackle town filled with blocky architecture does not quite live up to the paradise billing, but there is an interesting section of traditional Tibetan buildings to the south of town. Just north is the largest Tibetan monastery in the Southwest, Ganden Sumtseling Gompa (Songzanlin Si), home to over 600 monks. It was built by the fifth Dalai Lama almost 400 years ago, destroyed during the Cultural Revolution, and re-opened in 1981. Head to the roof for stunning views over Zhongdian.

ENVIRONS: There are plenty of possible trips out into the countryside – geographically, part of the Tibetan plateau – to Baishui Tai, for example, a set of limestone terraces, or to Bitai Hai, an emerald lake and home to many endangered species. These trips are best arranged with local agencies, who can also set up a trip into Tibet – it takes about a week to reach Lhasa by four-by-four.

GUIZHOU & GUANGXI

GUIZHOU AND Guangxi share a dramatic mountainous landscape of weathered limestone (karst) pinnacles, which hide some of China's largest cave systems. Despite the abundant rainfall, the region possesses poor soil, which discouraged Han settlement until the late Ming period. As a result, the area saw little development, and many indigenous groups, especially the Miao and Dong, have retained their traditional customs, including several festivals. Guangxi is also home to the Zhuang, China's largest ethnic minority, and became the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region in 1958.

Still among China's least developed regions, Guizhou and Guangxi do have a few sights that are well-touristed and easily accessible. The city of Guilin in eastern Guangxi is famous for the Li River cruise through astonishing karst landscape, and ending at the backpacker haven of Yangshuo. Kaili, a convenient base for exploring sociable Miao villages, is becoming more accessible and popular with tourists. For determined travelers with time on their hands, long bus journeys are rewarded with beautiful Detian Falls, stunning scenery near the Vietnamese border, the wooden Dong villages around Zhaoxing, and the calm waters of bird sanctuary Cao Hai.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Villages, Towns, & Cities

Anshun 2
Beihai 22
Guilin 11
Guijing 17
Guiyang 1
Longsheng 13
Miao Villages 8
Nanning 18

Pingxiang 20
Sanjiang 14
Wuzhou 16
Zhaoxing 15
Zunyi 9

Waterfalls, Caves, & Areas of Natural Beauty

Chishui 10
Detian Falls 21
Huangguoshu Falls 4
Longgong Dong 3
Weining & Cao Hai 6
Xingyi & Maling Canyon 7
Yangshuo 12
Zhijin Dong 5
Zuo Jiang 19

Guiyang ①

贵阳

Ornamental window, Cuiwei Yuan

FOUNDED DURING THE HAN ERA, Guiyang remained a minor provincial center until it became the capital of Guizhou in the early 20th century. The city is situated in a valley along the little Nanming River, protected from the unlucky northern direction by high hills. Guiyang means “South of the Mountains,” although another translation, “Precious Sun,” reflects the general Chinese opinion of the province’s damp climate. An easy-going place, Guiyang is a steadily modernizing city surrounded by parklands, with a couple of historic relics dotted among its tower blocks. The Huaxi District to its south includes rural parks, a few villages inhabited by the Bouyi minority (see p400), and a well-preserved Ming-era town.

Traditional temple buildings in Cuiwei Yuan

🏯 Jiaxiu Lou & Cuiwei Yuan

2 Cuiwei Xian Nanming Lu. ☑ daily. 📷
The small Jiaxiu Pavilion was constructed in 1598 on a tortoise-shaped rock jutting out of Nanming He. It was built as an inspirational meeting place for scholars studying for the imperial civil service examinations. The pavilion is now a teahouse decorated with antique poetry scrolls. Its upper floor offers views of Guiyang’s modern downtown district. The 95-ft (29-m) high, three-storied wooden tower is connected to the banks by the arched, Fuyu Qiao (Floating Jade Bridge), made of solid stone. On the bridge’s southern side, Cuiwei Garden was originally part of a temple dedicated to Guanyin, the Buddhist Goddess of Compassion. It was founded around 1500, although all that remain today are late Qing-era buildings.

🏯 Qianming Si, Jue Yuan, & Wenchang Ge

City center, N of the river. ☑ daily. 📷
A few examples of Guiyang’s classic architecture survive around the city center. The most interesting is Qianming Si, located on Yangming Lane on the north bank of the river. Its main point of interest is the street market outside, selling bonsai trees, pets, fishing gear, and Cultural Revolution

Jiaxiu Lou & the arched Fuyu Qiao over Nanming He memorabilia. Jue Yuan on Fushui Nan Lu is another temple, whose main attraction is the excellent vegetarian restaurant out front, which uses generous quantities of chilies to spice up the tofu, vegetable, and gluten dishes. Just off Wengchang Bei Lu, Wenchang Ge features an elegant three-story tower with flared and pointed eaves built between 1609 and 1669. It was originally part of the east city wall.

🏛️ Provincial Museum

168 Beijing Lu. ☑ 9am–5pm daily. 📷
The second floor of this dusty building houses an interesting collection of local finds, though there are few captions. The pride of the collection is a 3-ft (1-m) high Han-era bronze horse and chariot, and some glazed clay figurines from a Ming tomb near Zunyi. A document on one wall refers to the 19th-century Miao Uprisings, a series of conflicts against increased taxation in Guizhou. Ethnological displays include silverware, batiks, and embroideries from Guizhou’s many minorities, along with models of their architecture.

Vermillion-red joss sticks & trinkets on sale outside Qianming Si

Stone steps leading up a thickly-forested hill, Qianling Shan Park

Qianling Shan Park

187 Zhaoshan Lu. daily. This scenic park comprises an unexpected patch of forested hills to the north of the city. A flagstoned path leads uphill past several shrines, trees hung with red ribbons, and groups of monkeys to Hongfu Si, the main attraction. Entry to the temple is past a 33-ft (10-m) marble stupa and a tiled screen depicting the infant Buddha being washed by nine colorful dragons. The temple was originally founded in 1672, although its present buildings are of recent construction, including a Luohan Hall with several hundred painted statues of Buddhist saints. On the hilltop above, Kanzhu Pavilion offers fine views of the city.

Huaxi District

11 miles (17 km) S of Guiyang. 16, 25, 47. The small town of Huaxi is the location of Guizhou University and the attractive Huaxi Park, a 2-sq-mile (5-sq-km) stretch of woodland, river, and ornamental gardens. A handful of Bouyi villages lie close by, including Zhenshan, built entirely in stone. The village is known for its Ground Opera, derived from local animistic rituals, where dancers wear stylized wooden masks. Just 8 miles (12 km) to the south is Qingyang, a garrison outpost founded in 1373. Its 33-ft (10-m) high city walls, dating to the 18th century, are still intact, along with watchtowers, carved stone gateways, and 17 temples.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

865 miles (1,394 km) NW of Guangzhou. 1,600,000. Longdong Bao Airport. Guiyang Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport), Tiyu Guan Bus Station. 20 Yan'an Zhong Lu, (0851) 581 6348.

DOG MEAT

One thing to look out for in Guizhou is the locals' fondness for eating dog meat, a habit shared by people in parts of Guangxi and other Southeast Asian countries. Rather like chilies, dog meat is considered "warming" in Chinese medicine, and also a remedy for male impotence. The meat is often served as a hot pot. However, visitors shouldn't worry about being served dog meat by accident, as restaurants specializing in such dishes usually make it very clear by displaying the carcasses outside their establishments.

Characters for "dog meat" on a restaurant sign

GUIYANG CITY CENTER

- Cuiwei Yuan ②
- Jiaxiu Lou ①
- Jue Yuan ④
- Provincial Museum ⑥
- Qianling Shan Park ⑦
- Qianming Si ③
- Wenchang Ge ⑤

0 meters 800
0 yards 800

KEY

- Train station
- Long distance bus station
- Tourist information
- Post office

Traditional houses of the Bouyi community near Anshun

Anshun ②

安顺

62 miles (100 km) SW of Guiyang.
   Tashan Donglu, (0853) 322 3173.

FOUNDED AS A garrison town in the 13th century, Anshun grew into a prosperous trading post, mainly because of its strategic position along the overland trade routes between central and southwestern China. Today's city survives on tourism, subsistence farming, and its traditional batik industry, which capitalizes on the highly-developed textile skills of the local Bouyi minority. The Bouyi number around 3 million and live throughout western Guizhou. A writing system for the Bouyi language was devised in the 1950s and is used to record their rich folk literature.

Surrounded by karst hills, Anshun has one of Guizhou's most scenic landscapes, despite the frequent gusts of coal dust from nearby mines. It also has numerous bustling street markets, and offers easy access to several of the surrounding traditional villages. The busy town center lies at the intersection of Nanhua Lu and Tashan Lu. The Bai Ta (White Pagoda), one of Anshun's two surviving Ming structures, overlooks the center from Xixiu Hill. The other, Wen Miao, is a Confucian temple and lies in the town's northeastern backstreets. The 600-year-old temple was once embellished with superb stone carvings. Today, what survives are its front pillars covered in beautiful spiraling dragons and considered to be the finest in the country.

The area around the city center bustles with rural commerce. Rows and rows of shops selling beautiful batik products, including wall hangings and colorful banners, are displayed outside the Batik Factory on Nanhua Lu.

ENVIRONS: Lying about 9 miles (15 km) east of Anshun, Yunshan is a fortified village, founded by Ming-dynasty troops. It contains a scattering of old structures, including the elegant Qiyao Qiao, a seven-arch bridge. Tiantai Shan, 16 miles (25 km) northeast of town, is a 1,300-ft (400-m) hill with a cluster of thickly-forested crags, whose summit is crowned by a Buddhist temple dating from 1616. Another 16 miles (25 km) southwest of Anshun, Zhenning County has a concentration of traditional Bouyi villages. The houses are built of skillfully-laid drystone walls, with roofs tiled in hand-cut slates, overlapping like fish scales. The village of Shishao, built almost entirely in stone, is known for its Ground Opera, a regional variation of traditional Han opera, brought here by soldiers from Nanjing during the Ming era.

Fruit sellers at the Sunday market, Anshun

Longgong Dong ③

龙宫洞

17 miles (27 km) SW of Anshun.
 from Anshun.  8am-6pm daily.

LONGGONG DONG (Dragon Palace Caves) comprise a 9-mile (15-km) long complex of 90 or more caves,

A strikingly designed, contemporary batik, filled out in red and orange

ANSHUN BATIK

Several ethnic groups across southwestern China have been traditionally involved in creating batik. For almost 1,000 years, the Bouyi around Anshun have been using batik as a background to embroidery on clothing, and since the establishment of a factory in Anshun in the 1950s, have come to monopolize the indigenous textile market. The designs, which were originally of abstract plants and animals, are drawn with wax on cloth. The cloth is then dyed in indigo before being boiled to remove all traces of the wax, leaving the pattern in white on a blue background. The earlier monochromatic batiks have now given way to multi-colored, mass-produced designs, which include stylized representations of zodiac animals, scenes from Bouyi legends, and mythical creatures. Today, Anshun's batik is in great demand across China.

Tour boats used to explore the watery Longgong Dong connected by an underground river. Only six caves, covering 2,800 ft (854 m), are open to exploration, accessed by boat through the flooded entrance, Tian Chi (Heaven's Pool), which is partially concealed by a 130-ft (40-m) high waterfall. Inside, the largest cavern is about 260-ft (80-m) high. The caves are filled with colorfully-lit stalactites and stalagmites, and numerous oddly-shaped rock formations. During the rainy season, the boat ride ends at Tiger Lair, a broad platform from where visitors hike out of the caves and walk back to the entrance through an attractive stone forest of weathered karst spikes.

Huangguoshu Falls 4

黄果树瀑布

31 miles (50 km) SW of Anshun. 🚗

🕒 7am-6pm daily. 📷

IMMENSELY POPULAR in China, the Huangguoshu Da Pubu (Yellow Fruit Tree Falls) on the Sanche River rise to a height of 223 ft (68 m). During the summer rains in June and July the river becomes a torrent, and the 266-ft (81-m) broad curtain of water creates an awesome spectacle as it hits the Rhinoceros Pool below. It does not, however, rank as China's largest cataract; in fact, during drier months, its flow shrinks to a pretty network of streams pouring over the rock face. Low water levels during this time of the year make it possible to wade across the streams. Staircases and bridges connect viewing areas opposite the falls. Shuilian Dong, a 440-ft (134-m) long tunnel, runs behind the falls, where natural "windows" look out through the curtain of water. Visitors should be prepared to get wet.

Of the remaining dozen-or-so water features along the Sanche, the pick of the crop lies upstream at Douputang Falls, which though only a quarter of the height of Huangguoshu, are a staggering 340-ft (105-m) wide. About 3 miles (5 km) downstream at Tianxing are a series of small caves, some karst spires rising 66 ft (20 m), and the Yinlianzhuitan (Silver Chain Cascades), where water tumbles into a network of streams between rocky islets.

Zhijin Dong 5

织金洞

81 miles (130 km) N of Anshun.

📞 (0857) 781 2015. 🚗 from Anshun, via Zhijin town. Taxis also available.

📷 compulsory. 🕒 daily. 📷

EXTENDING FOR OVER 7 miles (12 km) into limestone hills, these 492-ft (150-m) high caves are ranked as the largest in China, and are also among the biggest in the world. They are located 16 miles (25 km) northeast of old, but rather unattractive, Zhijin town, which has a few guesthouses. Paths and stairways link the caves between fossilized waterfalls and elephantine stalactites and stalagmites. The imposing rock formations have each been given descriptive names, such as "Puxian Riding the Elephant," "Goddess and Snake," and the aptly named and impressive "Old Woman and Daughter-in-Law."

The largest cavern, Guanghan Dong is about 1,312-ft (400-m) long. It contains the immensely elegant, 56-ft (17-m) stalagmite, known as the "Silver Rain Tree." The obligatory guided tour, which lasts for more than 2 hours, requires a minimum of 10 people, so smaller groups may have to wait for more sightseers to arrive.

The Huangguoshu Falls, spectacular even during drier periods

Punting on Cao Hai, with low mountains on the horizon

Weining & Cao Hai 6

威宁 / 草海湖

171 miles (275 km) W of Guiyang. to Weining, or to Liupanshui, then bus. Yi Torch Festival (Jun/Jul).

A DESTITUTE AREA with coal mining as the main industry, western Guizhou has a rugged mountain landscape of karst hills and jungle. In the far west, bordering Yunnan, is the 7,200-ft (2,195-m) high Weining Plateau, whose main town is the small, chaotic, and ugly Weining, inhabited by Hui, Yi, and Da Hua Miao. The Muslim Hui, scattered throughout China, are descendants of Arab and Persian traders who came to China along the Silk Road during the Tang and Yuan dynasties. The Yi community number around 6.6 million and are spread through southwestern China. Their torch festival is a major annual event featuring archery contests, bonfires, and wrestling. The Da Hua Miao (see pp406-7) differ from the Miao near Kaili in both language and embroidery patterns, which feature the stylized flower motif, inspired by their name Da Hua, meaning "Big Flower."

Immediately southwest of Weining is Cao Hai, known throughout China as one of the prominent spots for bird-watching. The 17-sq mile (45-sq km) nature reserve was set up in 1992. The shallow, blue, oval-shaped lake is ringed with low mountains and fringed with reedbeds that attract tens of thousands of wintering birds between November and March. Its most important annual visitors include a large flock of 400 endangered black-necked cranes, along with Eurasian cranes, barheaded geese, and several duck species.

It is possible to observe the abundant birdlife by either walking around the shore where the cranes congregate, or hiring a punt to approach flocks of wild fowl out on the lake. Boats can also be rented for a tour of the lake.

Xingyi & Maling Canyon 7

兴义 和 马岭河峡谷

186 miles (300 km) SW of Guiyang. to Xingyi. Maling Canyon White-water rafting arranged by hotels.

IN THE FAR southwestern corner of Guizhou, the small and remote market town of Xingyi is surrounded by low, rounded limestone hills and flat paddy fields. Northeast of Xingyi, just outside the suburbs, lies the 9-mile (15-km) long slash of Maling Canyon.

About 330-ft (100-m) deep in places, the canyon has been carved by a fast-flowing river. Ground-level springs gush down mossy cliffs in miniature waterfalls. The river's currents and cataracts make for exciting white-water rafting trips from Maling's upper section, 16 miles (25 km) northeast of town. The canyon's lower section features several walking tracks and bridges which zigzag down to the water level and then follow the river, sometimes through natural tunnels, for some distance upstream.

River running through the lower section of Maling Canyon

Chinese Cranes

THE LAKES and marshes of China are vital to the survival of eight of the world's 15 species of crane, many of which are highly endangered. Most breed in northern China, in particular at Zhalong Nature Reserve in Heilongjiang province. All are migratory, but several species – including the tropical sarus and China's sole endemic variety, the black-necked crane – occur only in the central and south-western parts of the country. Aside from being naturally elegant birds, cranes have spectacular mating "dances," where they energetically leap and flap around to attract their lifelong partners. As a result of this display, the crane is a Chinese symbol of fidelity and longevity. The Daoist god of longevity, Shou Lao (also known as Shao Xing), is often depicted riding a crane.

Sarus – world's tallest crane

Courting cranes pair for life. They cement the bond with elaborate courtship displays, during which the couple loop necks, toss their heads back, throw around twigs and pebbles, and leap high into the air, parachuting down with wings spread.

The crane is a symbol of good fortune, wisdom, and the quest for spiritual improvement, as well as fidelity – so it is often seen on official and imperial clothing.

Trailing legs

Cranes migrate great distances, with some species covering up to 2,500 miles (4,000 km) between their summer breeding grounds and winter quarters. The younger birds learn the routes in a V-formation behind their elders.

Cruising speed of up to 44 miles per hour (70 km/hour)

Demoiselle cranes are gregarious and have been recorded in flocks several thousand strong. Their diet is mostly frogs, fish, and insects, though they can also eat grain and carrion.

Common cranes are a very vocal species, and their deep booms, loud honks, and raucous croaks are produced by a specially adapted windpipe or trachea.

Miao Festivals and Crafts

Geometric embroidery

THE MIAO PEOPLE, or Hmong as they call themselves, believe they originated on the Himalayan plateau, migrating over the last few thousand years to their current homelands in southwestern China, Laos, Cambodia, Vietnam, and Myanmar. As Miao communities tend to exist in remote mountainous areas, each village has developed its own customs, and can be identified by their distinct ornamentation, such as the fine silverwork and embroidery made and worn by unmarried girls. These are displayed at the many Miao social festivals where mass dancing is featured.

MIAO COMMUNITIES OF ASIA

■ Miao population

Huge horns adorn these fabulous headdresses.

Miao People in the Kaili area call themselves Hei Miao, or Black Hmong, irrespective of their colorful clothing, which identifies the wearer's village or region. This woman is from the Leigong Shan area.

Da Hua Miao, or Big Flower Miao, from western Guizhou, wear wax-resist (batik) dyed skirts, and for festivals, bright red beagear.

SISTERS' MEAL FESTIVAL

Amid three days of drinking and dancing at this important festival, teenage girls choose their husbands. The man offers a packet of sticky rice; she returns it with two chopsticks buried inside if she agrees, or chilies if she refuses.

This Gejia headpiece with orange tassels shows that this Gejia girl is unmarried. These people's designs are unusual in that they embellish their batik work with embroidery.

The Changjiao, or Long-borned, Miao of western Guizhou bundle several pounds of their own and ancestors' hair around horn-like headpieces for festivals.

Embroidery is an integral Miao skill, and girls learn it from an early age. They create elaborate panels for sewing on to their clothes. The finer the design, the better a girl's marriage prospects.

This jacket is typical of dark geometric Gejia pieces. It is heavily embroidered and incorporates batik work of abstract buffalo and plant motifs.

Miao silverwork ranges from simple earrings to twisted, weighty necklace chains and fantastic headpieces with bells, horns, and animal figurines.

Elaborate silverwork, including headpieces, breast-plates, and necklaces, are collected by families of Hei Miao girls from the time they are born.

Dragon-boat races are held in the Kaili region at least twice a year, celebrating a local victory over invading Chinese armies. Villages send a team of rowers and a long, narrow boat with carved wooden dragon-head prows.

Two buffalo going head-to-head is a feature of Miao festivals, but buffalo are cherished creatures, and there is usually no bloodshed.

Traditional long pleated skirt

Only men play the lusheng, usually at festivals. This instrument is made from a gourd with a mouthpiece and a dozen or so bamboo pipes. It produces a nasal humming sound.

Miao Villages ③

凯里苗寨

Window in pagoda,
Kaili

CHINA'S Miao (see pp406–7) look to the area around Kaili and the ancient town of Zhenyuan as their homeland. In between, the terrain rises to rough hills, planted with pine trees and split by river valleys. A few villages maintain traditional wooden houses and cobbled streets; others are not so pretty, but host large festivals. Markets come close to a festival atmosphere and operate on a five-day cycle. Numerous buses run from Kaili, but to reach remoter places, hiring a taxi – or hiking – is necessary.

The traditional village of Langde tucked into a steep valley

Kaili

105 miles (170 km) E of Guiyang. 酒店
Yingpanpo Hotel, 53 Yingpan Dong Lu, (0855) 822 2506.

Kaili is a large town of busy streets and unremarkable architecture. Back-street markets add a bit of color, and there's also a dusty Minorities Museum, displaying local silver and embroidery. Hilltop Dage Park is crowned by a wooden pagoda, unusual in its Daoist iconography and statues ritualistically smeared with bloody chicken feathers.

Minorities Museum

5 Guangchang Lu. 每日. 10:00

LANGDE & XIJIANG

This route includes the most accessible traditional villages covered by buses from Kaili. Possible as a day-trip if you hire a taxi, otherwise, plan to overnight at Xijiang.

Langde is an easy 20-minute walk from the main road. It is entirely traditional, with 50 wooden houses knotted into a fold in the hillside. At Langde's center is a pond and a dancing ground cobbled in concentric rings around a wooden pole adorned with buffalo horns and painted dragons.

Lei Shan is a down-at-heel collection of concrete buildings at the foot of Leigong Shan (7,150 feet, 2,178 m). Some of the region's remotest villages are found on the mountain and it's possible to organize hiking trips between them. From Lei Shan, it's another 18 miles (30 km) on a dirt road to Xijiang, the largest Miao village at around 1,200 wooden homes. The best times to visit are during the autumn New Rice Tasting Festival, or Miao New Year celebrations.

EASTERN ROUTE

There are several buses daily from Kaili via Taijiang and Shidong through to Zhenyuan. Both towns host major festivals, with extra transport during events. Each can be done as a daytrip, but Taijiang does have several hotels, and there's a basic guesthouse in Shidong.

Taijiang is an untidy market town 34 miles (55 km) from Kaili. It transforms during Sisters' Meal Festival, when thousands of villagers descend to watch Miao girls choose their husbands. At other times, the old village of Fanpai is a more photogenic place to spend a day.

Shidong is a partially wooden riverside village of half a dozen lanes. You can shop for beautifully designed silverwork and embroideries on market days, or see them worn during dragon-boat races, held at least twice a year. Afternoon races are accompanied by furious drumming, and the day winds down with a dance in which everyone present – sometimes 10,000 people – joins in.

The terraced slopes of Leigong Shan

WESTERN ROUTE

Frequent buses ply the route from Kaili to Shibing; change here for connections to Zhenyuan. There's some basic accommodations in Chong'an and hotels in Shibing.

Pleasantly rural Matang is home to the majority of Gejia, a Miao sub-group. The road passes close by, but you'll need to hire a taxi from Kaili if you don't want to walk the last 3 miles (5 km). About 6 miles (10 km) west of Matang, Xianglu Shan (4,265 feet/1,300 m) is where Zhang Xiumei, one of the leaders of the Miao Rebellion, was defeated by government troops in 1873. An annual Hill Climbing festival is held here in his honor.

The riverside town of Chong'an uses its old core of wooden shops for a lively market, somewhere to

Miao woman with baby

A battery of old stone water-powered mills, Chong'an experience crowds bargaining for everything from ducklings to home-made spirits.

Right on the roadside, Feiyun Dong is a curious Daoist shrine founded in 1443, whose few moss-covered halls (one contains a museum of Miao artifacts) are built right into a natural arrangement of grottoes and vegetation.

From Shibing, another nondescript place on the south bank of Wuyang

He, it's possible to arrange rafting trips down Shanmu Jiang, or to hike up Yuntai Shan, which features the ruins of a Ming-dynasty temple.

Zhenyuan

62 miles (100 km) NE of Kaili. 🚗 🚝

I 26 Ximen Jie, Wuyangzhen.

An old garrison town, Zhenyuan is squeezed by flanking cliffs into two long streets either side of Wuyang He. In the old town on the north bank, Qing-dynasty buildings with wavy eaves and ornate stonework have been carefully restored. East of the old town, a stone Ming bridge leads to Heilong Dong (Black Dragon Cave).

This Daoist complex is built right into the overhanging cliffs, where water seeps onto shrines dedicated to numerous deities. It's also possible to cruise a stretch of the Wuyang He east of Zhenyuan, through a series of limestone gorges.

FESTIVALS

Jan: Drum festival, Gaowu, near Taijiang

Feb/Mar: Lusheng Festivals across region

Apr/May: Sisters' Meal, Taijiang & Shidong

Jun/Jul: Dragonboat Races at many riverside villages and towns

Jul/Aug: Festival at Xianglu Shan

Aug/Sep: New Rice Tasting Festival in villages around Kaili & Lei Shan; Lusheng Festival, Chong'an

Oct/Nov: Lusheng Festival and horse races, Yongxi, near Zhenyuan

Dec: Miao New Year, Xijiang & villages around Kaili

Steps leading up to the Monument to the Red Army Martyrs, Zunyi

Zunyi 9

遵义

150 km N of Guiyang. 🚗 🚝

THE LARGEST CITY in northern Guizhou, Zunyi is encircled by a gray mass of cement factories and bustling transport terminals that conceal a quiet and clean older quarter, north across the river. The city holds a special place in the history of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP). In January 1935, Zunyi was invaded by the Red Army during the Long March (see p256). Having suffered major defeats at the hands of the Nationalists, Communist leaders including Mao, Zhou Enlai, and Otto Braun, the Soviet advisor, convened the Zunyi Conference. During the three-day meeting, Mao emerged as

Carved detail, Monument to the Red Army Martyrs

the party leader and severed ties with the Russians, a vital step that helped the CCP defeat the Nationalists and eventually emerge as China's ruling party. The Conference Site, a sparsely-designed, gray brick house, displays CCP memorabilia. A similar building, in the lane behind, housed the China Soviet Republic State Bank and Commission of Expropriation & Collection, which printed banknotes and redistributed captured wealth among the peasantry. The adjacent Long March Museum, a former Catholic Church, displays CCP mementos. Up the river, in Fenghuang Shan Park, the Monument to the Red Army Martyrs commemorates the heroes of the Long March.

🏠 Conference Site

Ziyin Lu. ☉ 8:30am–5pm daily. 🚗

ENVIRONS: About 6 miles (10 km) south of Zunyi, Yang Can Mu is the final resting place of the local military official, Yang Can, who died around 1250. The stone reliefs of this well-preserved Song-era mausoleum are beautiful, depicting plants, guardian figures, and dragons curling around an ornamental gateway. There is also a portrait of Yang Can in court robes.

Chishui 10

赤水

112 miles (180 km) NW of Zunyi. 🚗

ON THE BANKS OF Chishui Jiang in northwestern Guizhou on the Sichuan border, Chishui is encircled by limestone hills. The subtropical forests covering these hills are divided into nature reserves, reached by minibus from town. The finest is Shizhang Dong, 23 miles (37 km) south of town, with a 236-ft (72-m) waterfall. Some 10 miles (16 km) southwest, Sidong Gou is a valley whose red-silted river gives Chishui its name, "Red Water." It runs over four waterfalls and through a forest thick with bamboo. Locals harvest the edible bamboo shoots, and the mature stems are split and woven into matting. The region is also world famous for its baijiu, an alcoholic drink produced in Maotai, 50 miles (80 km) southeast in Xishui county (see p581).

🌿 Nature Reserves

🚗 minibus from Chishui. ☉ daily. 🚗

Facade of the elegant Song-dynasty mausoleum, Yang Can Mu

Bamboo

A FAST-GROWING, long-lived type of grass found throughout central and southern China, bamboo is put to a huge array of uses. The culms (stems) are turned into pipes, hats, furniture, mats, and cooking utensils, while the shoots of certain varieties are cooked and eaten. The body of the plant is a rhizome (a horizontal, underground stem) that, according to type, clumps or runs, putting out regularly-spaced shoots that grow nearly 2 feet (60 cm) per day until they reach full height. Plants might flower only every few decades, or even just once per century, after which they die back. The plant has become part of the religion, philosophy, and culture of the Chinese: it represents Confucian values of devotion and righteousness; the segments on its straight stem symbolize the steps along the straight path to enlightenment; and its strength, grace, and longevity have made it the subject of a great many poems and paintings.

Versatile bamboo stems

In the wild, bamboo covers the hillsides in tall, dense, waving green forests, a sight often called a "bamboo sea." In gardens smaller plants are often used as symbolic elements (see p179).

Bamboo painting – or mozhu – is an esteemed art considered to be on a par with calligraphy (see p219). Using a monochrome ink the painter attempts to convey the bamboo's spirit rather than its exact form in just a few fluid and almost abstract brush strokes.

Split bamboo can be woven into many useful objects such as lattice screens and blinds for use around the home as well as baskets such as these, used for carrying chickens to market.

Whole bamboo stems are versatile enough to be sawn, drilled, bent or spliced, while keeping their strength. Items of furniture like these teabow chairs can be made by a skilled craftsman in a matter of minutes.

The strength of bamboo is such that, in the south of the country where it is easily available, bamboo is preferred over steel poles as scaffolding even for high-rises. China's urban boom is being built on the back of this giant grass.

Karst

HUGE AREAS of China's Southwest comprise visually spectacular landscapes featuring karst – weathered limestone formations. In China, limestone has been created from fossilized prehistoric sea floor sediments, brought to the surface by geological upheavals. The exposed alkaline limestone is then eroded by naturally-occurring acidic rain. Above ground, this results in anything from closely packed “stone forests,” poking a few meters skywards, to the huge conical hills covering half of Guizhou, and the tall, elegant pinnacles around Guilin. Underground, percolating water and subterranean rivers carve out long, interlinked caverns, hung with oddly shaped rock formations.

Stone forests, such as Sbi Lin outside Kunming (see pp378–9), are karst formations created by the retreating waters of ancient seas, and wind and rain erosion.

KARST FORMATION

Southwest China's thick and fractured pure limestone has led to a dramatically eroded landscape. The warm wet climate speeds up the weathering of limestone by acid rainwater and chemicals in rotting plants.

1 Surface streams lose water to cave systems developing in the limestone. Surface drainage is diverted down sink holes to below the water table.

2 Peaks develop from the land left after erosion by the streams. The cave system gets larger as fast-moving subsurface streams bore through the limestone, and the water table drops.

3 Much of the limestone has eroded past the caves down to a layer of shale. Limestone peaks remain, many fractured with small, waterless caves.

Sinkholes, or tiankeng (heavenly pits), are formed by repeated cave-ins of thinning layers of limestone. The holes can be disturbingly massive. This one at Xiaozhai, Chongqing, is almost as wide as it is deep—2,200 ft (666 m).

The limestone of southern China's crust is exceptionally thick and extensive, enabling the creation of spectacular karst.

KARST LANDSCAPE

This cut-away artwork shows an idealized karst landscape, with all the features shown together. Karst topographies usually have a thick layer of cave-ridden limestone, and then, depending on the area's geology and the age of the formation, a few of the features shown here.

The Li River (see pp416–17) cuts through an impressive variety of karst hills. Cruises start in Guilin with fenglin, which gradually give way to dense fengcong.

Fenglin karst, which translates as peak-forest karst, is characterized by peaks that rise near vertically, like trees, 100 to 250 feet (30 to 80 m) above the surrounding flat floodplains. These dramatic tower-like karsts are found in and around the city of Guilin (see pp414–15).

A losing stream runs along the surface, and then disappears underground, joining the subterranean drainage system.

Caves that open out into large halls filled with stunning limestone formations are found throughout karst areas. Minerals deposited by losing streams and water drainage create the strange shapes.

Sinkhole caving in to join cave system

Fengcong karst, or peak-cluster karst, differ from the straight-sided fenglin. Their peaks are more cone-shaped and one hill meets the next across a depression or doline. Superb fengcong landscape can be seen near the small town of Xingping (see p417).

Guilin 11

桂林

Tai ji quan
in the park

GUILIN IS RENOWNED FOR its karst peaks, most under 650 ft (198 m) high. Dotted throughout the city, they are particularly concentrated along the Li River (see pp416-7) to the south of town. Guilin dates back to the Qin era, and by the 6th century AD, its hills were already inspiring poets. Under the Ming, it emerged as a provincial capital, a position it lost in 1914 to Nanning. Guilin today is a tidy tourist city, with about 10 parks enclosing some fine peaks and limestone caves. Guilin means “Osmanthus Forest,” and has an avenue of these sweet-scented trees along the riverside Binjiang Lu.

Karst hills rise amongst apartment blocks in the center of town

🌿 Rong Hu & Shan Hu

Rong Hu Bei Lu & Shan Hu Bei Lu.

Pagodas ☐ daily. 📷

The conjoined Rong and Shan Lakes lie on either side of Zhongshan Lu, which runs through the heart of town. Originally a part of the Ming city's moats, the lakeshores have been paved and pleasantly planted with shady banyan and willow trees. On the shore of the westerly Rong Hu stands an 800-year-old banana tree, which gives the lake its name. On the lake's northern shore lies

Gu Nan Men,

Guilin's old South Gate, the only remains of the Ming city walls. Several classical-style arched bridges join the two banks. Shan Hu, on the eastern side of Zhongshan Lu, is overlooked by the twin 130-ft (40-m) pagodas, Riming Shuang Ta, built in an antique style.

One of the two
Riming Shuang Ta

🌿 Xiangbi Shan

Off Minzhu Lu. 📷 2, 58. 📷 from

Nanhuan Lu. ☐ 7am-6pm daily. 📷

The most famous of the city's rock formations, the 328-ft (100-m) high Xiangbi Shan (Elephant Trunk Hill), with a hole through one end, resembles the stylized form of an elephant taking a drink from the adjacent Li River. According to a local legend, a baggage elephant in an imperial convoy was abandoned by the riverside by an uncaring emperor after it became sick.

Nursed back to health by an elderly couple, the elephant refused to rejoin the returning convoy and was killed by the emperor and turned into a hill, the one that stands here to this day. The small stupa at the summit is said to be the hilt of the emperor's sword sticking out of the elephant's back. Ferries can be taken from Nanhuan Lu to the hill. Along the path to the summit stands an old, crumbling pagoda.

🌿 Qixing Gongyuan

Qixing Lu. ☐ 7am-8pm daily. 📷

The pleasant and lush Qixing Gongyuan (Seven Stars Park) covers an area of 1 sq mile (2 sq km) along the eastern shore of the Li River. It is named after the four peaks on Putuo Hill, and three on Crescent Hill. Seen together, the peaks form the shape of the Great Bear or Big Dipper constellation, which governs fate in Chinese mythology. Covered in thick scrub, they provide shelter to about 100 half-wild monkeys. There are several trails and pathways ascending to viewing pavilions.

Guilin's crags are renowned for their graffiti and caves. Crescent Hill is known for the 200-odd poems and commentaries carved into its overhangs, some of which are believed to date back to the Tang dynasty. Putuo Hill, which houses the 22-story high Putuo Si, is hollowed out by Qixing Yan (Seven Stars Cave), a broad cavern with a small subterranean waterfall and surprisingly few rock formations. The 246-ft (75-m) Luotuo Shan (Camel Hill), standing on its own to the north of the park, resembles a seated single-humped camel. From its summit, there are views of Chuan Shan (Hill with a Mole), and the adjacent Ta Shan (Pagoda Hill) with a Ming-dynasty pagoda.

The pleasant Qixing Gongyuan
(Seven Stars Park)

Colorfully illuminated formations inside Ludi Yan (Reed Flute Cave)

Jinjiang Prince's Palace & Duxiu Feng

Off Xihua Lu. Complete with its own encircling wall and four gates, this palace resembles a miniature Forbidden City. It was originally built for the Ming prince Zhou Shouqian in 1372, predating Beijing's palace by 34 years. Having housed 14 successive Ming princes, it later served as Sun Yat Sen's headquarters in the 1920s. Today, it houses the Guangxi Teacher Training College. A sloping marble slab, carved with clouds at the entrance, indicates an imperial residence, while the absence of the usual dragons indicates that the palace was for a prince, not an emperor.

Within the palace grounds lies Duxiu Feng (Solitary Beauty Peak), whose 707-ft (216-m) spike protects the palace from the unlucky northern direction. At its foot is a tag carved by the 5th-century governor Yan Yanzhi, extolling Guilin's charms. Steps lead to the summit, offering splendid views.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

260 miles (420 km) NE of Nanning.
 600,000. Liangjiang International Airport. Guilin Train Station. Guilin Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport), Minibus Station (to Yangshuo). 41 Binjiang Lu, (0773) 286 1623.

Fubo Shan

Binjiang Lu. A tall, yellow-gray rock rising from the river, Fubo Shan is believed to calm the rough waters below, hence its name, "Wave-Subduing Hill." A crumbling temple on the peak houses a huge bronze bell and several hundred Buddha images from the Song era.

Ludi Yan

3 miles (5 km) NW of city center. 3, 58. Used as a hideout by Guilin's residents during the Japanese invasion in the 1940s, Ludi Yan (Reed Flute Cave) has 33-ft (10-m) tunnels winding for 1,640 ft (500 m) through Guangming Hill. Inside, its numerous rock formations are lit with neon lights.

GUILIN CITY CENTER

- Fubo Shan ⑥
- Jinjiang Prince's Palace & Duxiu Feng ③
- Qixing Gongyuan ④
- Rong Hu ①
- Shan Hu ②
- Xiangbi Shan ③

KEY

- Train station
- Long distance bus station
- Ferry terminal
- Tourist information
- Post office

Li River Cruise

漓江

Fisher and cormorant

THE CRUISE ALONG the Li River (Li Jiang) from Guilin south to Yangshuo passes through landscape that seems lifted straight out of a Chinese scroll painting. The shallow river weaves between sheer-sided, 980-foot (300-m) karst peaks, all weathered into intriguing shapes and interspersed with the villages and bamboo groves so typical of southern China's rural areas. People here still travel the river on low bamboo rafts, often using trained cormorants to catch fish (see p418). Cruises take about six hours and usually include a buffet lunch. Foreign visitors are charged more than Chinese tourists and sail in separate boats.

Bamboo rafts, for navigating the river during winter's low waters

★ Elephant Trunk Hill

Located on the riverside in downtown Guilin, Elephant Trunk Hill (Xiangbi Shan) is an endearing symbol of the city (see p414). It resembles an elephant who has placed its trunk in the Li River waters for a drink.

The pier at Zhu Jiang is where many tours begin.

0 km 3
0 miles 3

KEY

-  Minor road
-  Built-up area

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Elephant Trunk Hill
- ★ Penholder Peak
- ★ Scenery at Xingping

Daxu

Downstream from Guilin, Daxu is a Song-era market town, whose cobble main street still retains many timber and stone houses over a century old, as well as an attractive Qing bridge, just outside town.

Pointed fengcong karst formations near Yangdi

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Guilin to Yangshuo 52 miles (85 km), 6hrs. F 41 Binjiang Lu, Guilin, (0773) 286 1623 (CITS for booking). T to starting point and from Yangshuo provided. IS

★ Penholder Peak

Just past Yangdi and facing Writing-brush Mountain, this sharp, vertical outcrop does indeed resemble a traditional Chinese penholder. This section of hills is the beginning of the most spectacular mountain ranges.

Fish Tail Peak

Nine Horse Fresco Hill

is a cliff face stained brown by minerals creating a mural resembling galloping horses.

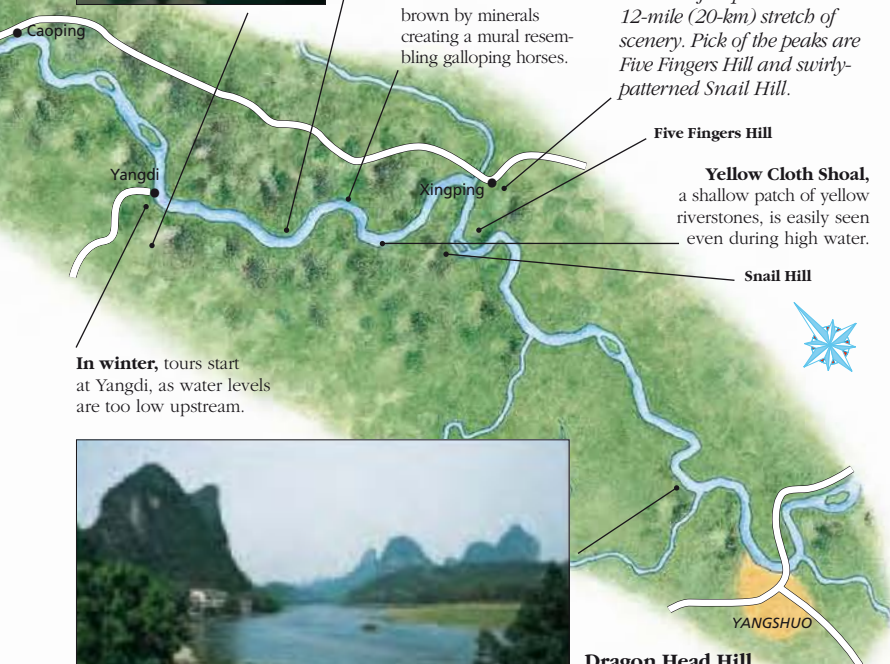

★ Scenery at Xingping

Xingping, an old, wooden town and ferry port, marks the start of a spectacular 12-mile (20-km) stretch of scenery. Pick of the peaks are Five Fingers Hill and swirly-patterned Snail Hill.

Five Fingers Hill

Yellow Cloth Shoal, a shallow patch of yellow riverstones, is easily seen even during high water.

Snail Hill

In winter, tours start at Yangdi, as water levels are too low upstream.

Dragon Head Hill

Visitors to Yangshuo are greeted by this imposing peak, said to resemble the head of a dragon with its gaping jaws wide open.

Yangshuo 阳朔

阳朔

A SMALL HIGHWAY TOWN at the end of the Li River Cruise (see pp416-17), Yangshuo is surrounded by some spectacular karst hills interspersed with green paddy fields. It was nothing more than a rural marketplace until the late 1980s, when it became popular with visitors taking the cruise from Guilin. Not as tranquil as it used to be, Yangshuo remains a good base to explore the surrounding peaks and river, as well as a few caves and outlying villages. Hiring a bicycle is one of the easiest ways to explore the area. Local specialties include grapefruit-like pomelos and “beer fish” – served at most restaurants in town. Yangshuo has recently become one of Asia’s favorite rock-climbing centers, with over 200 short routes already mapped out.

Ferries moored along the Li River, with karst hills rising in the distance

Xi Jie

An 820-ft (250-m) long cobbled street running between the highway and the Li River, Xi Jie (West Street) is lined with restored rural architecture dating from the Qing dynasty. Today, it has a glut of friendly restaurants, cafés, guesthouses, and souvenir shops aimed at foreign visitors. Restaurants serve western cuisine such as wood-fire pizzas and steak as well as local specialties including a variety of fresh fish dishes. Shops sell a range of inexpensive Chinese souvenirs, from Mao memorabilia and wooden theater masks to antique wooden panels, batik, silk T-shirts, scroll paintings, modern and traditional clothes, and pirated Western music CDs. A few shops also sell factory-reject designer wear at bargain prices. The Hongfu Hotel, located about halfway down the street, was built in the 19th century as an inn for merchants from Jiangxi. The docks area at the river end, where ferries pull in from Guilin, is covered in ornamental paving and offers good views of the angular peaks upstream. In the area north of the highway are some lovely back alleys, and a lively produce market where locals shop.

The forested Bilian Feng (Green Lotus Peak), overlooking the river

Bilian Feng & Yangshuo Gongyuan

daily

Situated close to the center of town are two 328-ft (100-m) high peaks which can be climbed. To the southeast of town, overlooking the river, is the towering Bilian Feng (Green Lotus Peak), with a steep track to the summit. The second peak, Xilang Shan (Man Hill), is situated in Yangshuo Gongyuan to the west of town. It has an easier set of steps that lead to a viewing pavilion. The park is also a pleasant place to stroll and watch sessions of early-morning tai ji quan.

Jianshan Si & Underground Caves

3 miles (5 km) S of Yangshuo.

by car or cycle. 8:30am-5pm daily

The only temple in the area around Yangshuo, Jianshan Si is built in a simple, late Qing-dynasty style, with wing-like horsehead gables protecting

CORMORANT FISHING

The Chinese have used tame cormorants to fish for thousands of years, and this unusual technique is still practiced in southern areas. Fishermen set off on bamboo rafts after dark, with cormorants wearing collars to prevent them from swallowing their catches. The birds swim just below the surface alongside the raft towards a light hanging from the bow. When a bird has made a catch, the fisherman pulls it from the water and retrieves the fish from the bird's beak. Hour-long viewing trips can be organized during the summer months through most hotels.

Cormorant fishing at night using lanterns its doorway. Located nearby, the Black Buddha, Assembled Dragons, and New Water Caves are a series of underground caverns discovered in the 1990s. Locals show people around the cool, damp, and muddy caves using hand-held flashlights. Although visitors have to negotiate tall bamboo ladders and scramble over rocks, the lack of well-laid paths and garish colored lights that usually illuminate subterranean rivers and waterfalls is refreshing.

Pomelos on sale at market take the main road south of town toward the river and turn right about 220 yards (200 m) before the bridge. From here, it's an hour to Yueliang Shan. Close by,

Longtan Village has several unrestored old buildings, with whitewashed brick walls, wooden doors, and tiled roofs supporting intricate "flying eaves" drawn out into points.

Fuli Village

5 miles (8 km) E of Yangshuo. or cycle.

The pretty village of Fuli is a quiet rural center except when it hosts a busy produce market on days

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

44 miles (70 km) S of Guilin.
 60,000. from Guilin.
 8th Fl, 362 Zhongshan Zhong Lu, Da Shijie. tours & boat trips available. For rock climbing visit the cafés on Xian Qian Jie particularly Lizard Lounge & Karst Café.

ending in 1, 4, or 7. One of the best in the region, it is visited by throngs of villagers who bargain for livestock, seasonal fruit, plastic buckets, wooden pipes, all kinds of vegetables, and bamboo fans – a famous local product. To the north is Donglang Shan, a narrow hill often paired with Yangshuo's Xilang Shan in local legends.

Yueliang Shan

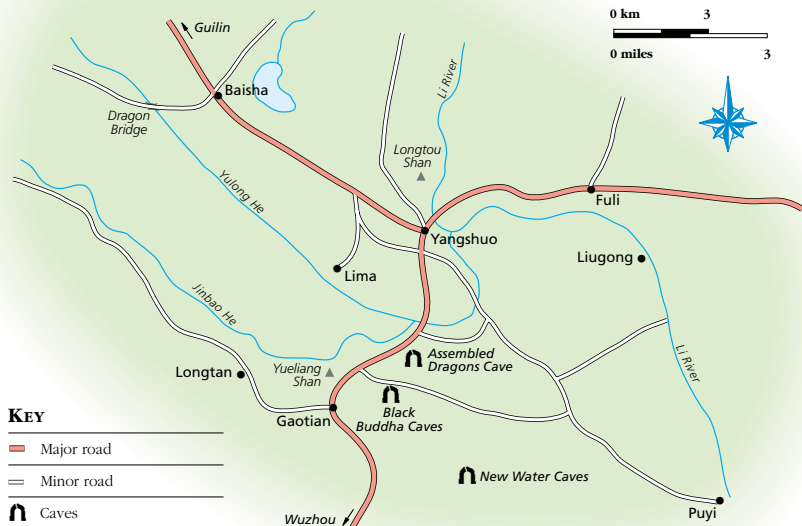

4 miles (7 km) S of Yangshuo.

or cycle. daily.

The distinctive crescent-shaped arch that pierces Yueliang Shan (Moon Hill) has made it the most famous of Yangshuo's peaks. Stone steps, steep in places, lead to the base of the arch, a half-hour climb through bamboo thickets and bushes. The view of the Li River valley from the far side of the arch is magnificent, with fields laid out below, encircling the jagged karst pinnacles. The best time to visit is during the summer rains, when the fields are bright green. If traveling by bicycle, visitors should

The pretty countryside surrounding Assembled Dragons Cave, Yangshuo

KEY

- Major road
- Minor road
- Caves

A view of the complex terracing on Longji Titian, Longsheng

Longsheng 13

龙胜

56 miles (90 km) NW of Guilin.

🏠 170,000. 🚌 minibuses from Longsheng to Ping An.

THE HIGH RIDGES of the Rongshui River Valley surround the township of Longsheng, which serves as a good base for exploring the adjoining countryside dotted with Zhuang and Yao villages. To the southwest is a steep range of 3,280-ft (1,000-m) high hills, known as Longji Titian (Dragon Backbone Terraces), whose lower and middle reaches have been covered in rice terracing by the Zhuang people (see p424). The Zhuang, who form the majority of Longsheng's population, live in traditional wooden houses. On the hilltops lie a few villages, inhabited by the Yao, an ethnic community that consists of numerous sub-groups, some of whom still depend on hunting rather than farming. They are also especially skilled in embroidery, weaving, and dyeing. The Zhuang village of Ping An sits near the top of a ridge in the heart of Longji Titian. It offers basic accommodations in traditional wooden buildings, as well as walking trails leading to other settlements in the area.

Sanjiang 14

三江 程杨

109 miles (175 km) NW of

Guilin. 🏠 330,000. 🚌 🚗

📞 Wind & Rain Bridge Travel Service (0772) 861 7088.

SITUATED ON THE Rongshui River, Sanjiang was the base of resistance against the Japanese during World War II, when Danzhou, the former regional capital located 22 miles (35 km) south, was captured. Today, Sanjiang is the main town of a region central to the indigo-clad Dong community, which has a population of around 2.5 million. Typical Dong architecture, consisting of wooden houses, towers, and bridges, can be found in several villages up in the hills to the north. The hospitable Dong usually offer visitors their favorite douxie cha or oil tea, a bitter soup made with rice and fried tea leaves.

On the south bank of the river is an 11-story Drum Tower, the largest in the region. It was built in 2003, using entirely traditional techniques. The structure is supported by four 154-ft (47-m) pillars, each carved from separate tree trunks. The third story of the tower houses a large drum.

The small Fulu Buddhist Nunnery, situated on the hill behind, is a little unusual, since the Dong community is mainly Daoist. The nunnery's three halls contain a mix of statuary representing both religions. Situated to the north of the river, the County Museum stands next to the Government Guesthouse. The museum exhibits several scale models of traditional Dong architecture, photographs, and maps displaying Sanjiang's strategic wartime role. Also displayed here are a number of colorful costumes worn by the Dong, Zhuang, and Yao communities during festivals.

Bamboo shoots for sale, Sanjiang

The intricately-crafted fengyu qiao, wind-and-rain bridge, Chengyang

DONG ARCHITECTURE

The Dong, who dwell in forested hill country where stone is of poor quality, make efficient use of timber. Nails are avoided, and even the largest structures are skillfully pegged together. As incomes rise in the region, there's been a resurgence of traditional building with villages competing with one another to sponsor the construction of bridges and towers. Drum towers are usually square-based, with multiple octagonal eaves. Originally they served as watchtowers and rallying places for the village, many with adjoining theater stages for use during festivals. Elaborate, covered wind-and-rain bridges are also places for villagers to meet, and are believed to ward off inauspicious energy.

Traditional drum tower in one of Chengyang's pretty rural hamlets

ENVIRONS: The most accessible Dong villages lie 11 miles (18 km) north of Sanjiang at Chengyang, a group of hamlets on the far side of the Linxi River, accessible by bus or minivan taxi from Sanjiang. Connecting Chengyang to the main road are over 100 bridges. One of the most exquisite is a fengyu qiao, a wind-and-rain bridge, dating from 1916. The 256-ft (78-m) long bridge, built from pegged cedar – no nails are said to have been used – took 12 years to complete. The roof is especially elaborate, with five raised pavilions, each built in a different regional style. These beautifully-built bridges not only served a practical function, but acted as shrines to river spirits as well. Most of the altars have now been moved to the riverbank, as the incense is considered a fire hazard.

Basic accommodations are available for visitors interested in exploring the ethnic villages and surrounding countryside. Each hamlet in Chengyang houses a small drum tower, while the surrounding fields are irrigated by bamboo pipes fed by huge, spindly water-wheels, also made from plaited bamboo.

The highland market town of Dutong lies two hours by bus north of Sanjiang, on a separate road past numerous Dong villages. Situated near the Hunanese border, it provides basic accommodations for visitors. A cobbled walking track leads uphill to Gaoding, a cluster of six drum towers and 100-or-so dark-roofed wooden houses.

Zhaoxing 肇兴

肇兴

75 miles (120 km) NW of Sanjiang.

from Sanjiang.

ONE OF THE MOST attractive Dong villages, sprinkled with fish ponds and bisected by a stream, Zhaoxing sits in a wide, flat valley and is famed throughout China for its impressive collection of traditional architecture (although there are a few modern buildings found on its outskirts). The town is divided into five sections, each inhabited by a different clan, and each possessing its own drum tower, theater, and wind-and-rain bridge. The original structures were destroyed during the Cultural Revolution, and although they have been rebuilt since, they are charmingly well-worn and impressively intricate. The bridges and theaters are embellished with mirror fragments and detailed moldings.

The Dong community here still makes and wears traditional dark-blue clothing, which is hand-beaten with wooden mallets until soft, and then varnished with eggwhite to ward off mosquitoes.

Numerous muddy tracks lead through the surrounding rice terraces. One trail leads 4 miles (7 km) uphill to the small village of Tang An, packed with wooden buildings. Jitang, 2 miles (3 km) south of Zhaoxing, is also worth the steep climb. It has some old drum towers that survived the vandalism of the early 1970s.

A cluster of Dong wooden houses, Zhaoxing

Wuzhou 16

梧州

137 miles (220 km) SE of Guilin.

🏠 330,000. 📍

ON THE NORTH BANK of the Xi Jiang, Wuzhou is a large town, adjacent to the Guangdong border. The town served as a staging post and trading center for Europeans during the 19th century, when goods were transported by boat between Guangzhou and the southwest. Numerous colonial structures remain in Wuzhou's old eastern quarter, especially along the pedestrianized Dadong Shang Lu, where modern Chinese produce markets contrast with the formal European-style buildings.

The Snake Repository is the largest in China and is located northeast of the center in Shigu Chong. Up to half a million snakes, including cobras, kraits, pit vipers, and rat snakes, are bred on the premises to supply restaurants and the traditional medicine market. Snakes are revered for their flexibility and ability to slough off their skin, so their parts are primarily used to help cure arthritis and skin complaints. Summer is the better time to visit; in winter, the snakes tend to be sluggish and the stocks may be depleted.

🐍 Snake Repository

Yugai Lu, Shigu Chong. 🕒 daily. 📍

Xi Shan's tea plantation surrounded by mist-covered forest, Guiping

Guiping 17

桂平

137 miles (220 km) S of Guilin. 📍

LOCATED at the confluence of Yu and Xun rivers, Guiping is an unremarkable city surrounded by lush mountain scenery. Its importance as a regional center has recently declined, due to the cessation of river traffic during the 1990s. Its main industry is now sugar cane.

Guiping is renowned for its high-quality green tea, xi shan cha, which grows on Xi Shan (West Mountain), on the outskirts of town. The long leaves of tea are processed and rolled into what look like miniature black cheroots. They are steeped one at a time to produce a faintly bitter, yet refreshing brew.

Xi Shan itself can be easily ascended from town. The

2-hour hike, past tea plantations and through bamboo groves, passes a number of Tang-era Buddhist temples. Longhua Si, deep in the forest on the upper slopes of the mountain, was built during the Song dynasty and heavily renovated during the 1980s. It contains numerous Buddhist statues. The temples sell Xi Shan cha, which is said to be superior to that sold in

Lion statue from Longhua Si, Guiping

A depiction of imperial forces recapturing Nanjing from the Taiping rebels in 1864

THE TAIPIING REBELLION

After being defeated in the 1840–42 Opium Wars, China was forced to pay a huge indemnity to Britain. Taxation was increased, causing great hardship in poor rural areas such as southern Guangxi. People's discontent with the weak Qing rule was fuelled by Hong Xiuquan, who formed a 10,000-strong militia, known as Taiping Tianguo (Kingdom of Heavenly Peace), at Jintian village in January 1851. Marching north, the Taipings captured Nanjing, making it their capital in March 1853. Influenced by Hong's personal interpretation of Christianity, the Taipings initially planned the overthrow of the Qing dynasty along with traditional religions, aiming to establish an egalitarian society. However, poor military planning and Hong's paranoia saw the movement falter. In July 1864, imperial forces wrested back Nanjing after a siege in which Hong died. It is thought that 20 million people were killed during the 13-year-long Taiping Uprising, one of the world's bloodiest civil conflicts.

Guiping shops. The summit offers splendid views of the river plains.

ENVIRONS: A 40-minute journey by bus from Guiping, the hamlet of Jintian lies 16 miles (25 km) north of town. From the bus stop, it's a 3-mile (5-km) walk across rural fields to the location of the first headquarters of Hong Xiuquan's Taiping Army. A museum here houses weapons, paintings, and maps recording the main events of the Taiping Uprising.

Waterfall pouring down a Xi Shan rock face, Guiping

Nanning 18

南宁

218 miles (350 km) SE of Guilin.

☎ 1,300,000. 🚗 🚏 🚉

📍 40 Xinmin Lu, (0771) 280 4960.

NESTLED IN THE southern half of the province, only 120 miles (200 km) from the Vietnamese border, the

Vegetable vendors with their baskets at an outdoor market, Nanning

DONGSON DRUM

Named for an archeological site in Vietnam, the oldest Dongson Drums are over 2,200 years old. They appear to have originated in Thailand or Vietnam, from where their use spread across Southeast Asia. The characteristic narrow-waisted drums are made from bronze, and reach up to 3 ft (1 m) in height, in styles that vary greatly from region to region. In Guangxi, timpani are marked with a 12-pointed star, and are often decorated with frog figurines, while their middles are finely chased in stylized designs of warriors in boats wearing feathered headdresses. Originally used as storage vessels, later, as Ming historians observed, they came to symbolize chiefly authority amongst the Zhuang. They were played during agricultural ceremonies, and still feature as percussion instruments in some festivals amongst Guizhou's Miao community.

Bronze drum from Nanning

Guangxi capital of Nanning is somewhat removed from the rest of the province. Founded in the Song dynasty, Nanning became the provincial capital in 1912, until it was occupied by the Japanese forces during World War II. Reinstated as the capital in 1949, Nanning later served as an important center for supplies going to North Vietnam during the Vietnam War in the 1960s. In 1979, relations with Vietnam soured, and China went to war with its southern neighbor; Nanning once more became a military stronghold. Today, the city is expanding rapidly, partly as a consequence of cross-border traffic, which resumed in the 1990s.

Nanning makes a useful transit point for those heading to Vietnam or towards sights located in the southwestern corner of the province, such as Detian Falls and the Zuo Jiang (see pp424–5). Nanning itself has only a handful of monuments and sights, but is a nice enough place with a laid-back atmosphere and many bustling markets. It is also the main city of the Zhuang minority (see p424), who make up over 60 percent of the population.

The busy shopping district of Xingning Lu, with its well-restored European-style buildings, is a reminder that Nanning was opened to foreign trade in 1907. The Provincial Museum on Minzu Dadao has a display of over 50 antique bronze "Dongson" drums in many different styles, some of which are about 2,000 years old.

On Renmin Dong Lu, Renmin Park is planted with a variety of tropical plants such as giant taro, heliconias, bird-nest ferns, and philodendrons. To the east of the city on Chahua Yuan Lu, Jinhua Cha Gardens exhibits the rare Golden Camellia, only found in the mountains of Guangxi and quite possibly now extinct in the wild. Unusual for a camellia, its petals are large and rather tough.

🏛️ Provincial Museum

Minzu Dadao. 🕒 9am–5:30pm

daily. 🎫

🌳 Renmin Park

1 Renmin Dong Lu. 🕒 daily. 🎫

Ancient rock art on the cliff of Hua Shan along the Zuo Jiang

Zuo Jiang ⑩

左江

62 miles (100 km) SW of Nanning.

to Ningming. to Ningming.

sampan to Hua Shan from Ningming. contact the Nanning tourist office for river tours.

Longrui Reserve

A RIVER TOUR up the peaceful Zuo Jiang in a sampan hired from Ningming, a small settlement on the railroad between Nanning and Pingxiang, takes visitors past prehistoric rock art and towering karst scenery. Produced almost 2,000 years ago between the Warring States and the late Han period, the paintings of over 2,600 human figures are scattered across 70 locations along the river. Painted in red-brown ferrous oxide, they mainly depict mass shamanistic ceremonies. The designs show marked similarities to those on bronze Dongson drums (see p423) that were found in Vietnam and southern China. It is believed that the artists were the Luo Yue, ancestors of the indigenous Zhuang.

The first paintings are about 12 miles (20 km) upstream from Ningming, but the largest concentration is situated at Hua Shan (Flower Mountain), about three hours or so along the river. A steep cliff rising 33 ft (10 m) above the water is covered in as many as 1,200 stick figures, mostly male, engaged in what appears to be a ritual dance. A frequently recurring symbol is a small circle, thought to represent a bronze drum, around which several figures seem to dance with their arms raised as if to invoke the gods. A few carry swords or ride on the back of beasts. Only two of them are clearly women, depicted with long, flowing hair. Other figures include dogs, a horse, farmers, and rowers in a dragon-boat race. A shaman, identifiable by his elaborate headdress, appears at the center of all this activity.

Panlong, a tiny hamlet on the river between Ningming and Hua Shan, has gorgeous views of the rural peaked landscape. Lodging is available here in a handful of pretty wooden buildings. Paths lead from Panlong through the Longrui Nature Preserve, meant to protect the very rare white-headed leaf monkey. A sighting of these black-and-white primates amongst the dense forest and undergrowth is unlikely, but its rugged paths are well worth exploring.

Gate tower along the Vietnamese border, Pingxiang

Pingxiang ⑫

萍乡

93 miles (150 km) SW of Nanning.

SURROUNDED BY vast fields of sugar cane and the jagged hills so typical of this region, Pingxiang is a busy market

A group of Zhuang women in traditional clothes

THE ZHUANG COMMUNITY

With a population of around 18 million, the Zhuang form China's largest ethnic minority. Most live in the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, although there are also communities in adjoining provinces and Vietnam. They speak their own language, which uses the Roman alphabet instead of Chinese characters. Visitors will see bilingual road signs all across the region, particularly in Guilin and Nanning. Apart from their language, it is hard to distinguish urban Zhuang from the Han Chinese, although in the country the men often dress in turbans and black pyjamas, while the women wear blue embroidered jackets. The Zhuang are mainly animistic, which explains the lack of Buddhist and Daoist temples in Guangxi. One of their most famous festivals is Buffalo Soul Day, held in honor of the Buffalo King's birthday on the eighth day of the fourth lunar month (Apr/May). On this day, all buffalos are washed and groomed, fed a special rice dish, and given the day off work.

The magnificent Detian Falls surrounded by spectacular karst hills town and the railhead for the crossing into Vietnam. Visitors require a valid visa to enter Vietnam at the border crossing, Youyi Guan (Friendship Pass), another 9 miles (15 km) away. The current border was demarcated as early as the Ming era, and a good stretch of the original 33-ft (10-m) stone wall still stands, along with a restored watchtower and gateway under which visitors pass. The tower's second floor houses a diorama of the area and offers views into Vietnam. An early 20th-century European-style building on the Chinese side was built by the French when they controlled this region, known then as Indo-China. For those crossing into Vietnam, the rail line for Hanoi resumes 3 miles (5 km) away on the far side at Dong Dang.

Detian Falls 21

德天

93 miles (150 km) W of Nanning. 🚗 via Daxin to Shuolong, minibus from Shuolong to falls, 10 miles (16 km). 🚶

ASPECTACULAR SET of broad cataracts dividing China from Vietnam, Detian is the second largest transnational waterfall in the world, after Niagara Falls on the US-Canada border. The two attractions, however, have little else in common. Detian does not possess the sheer force of Niagara, but is more gently beautiful, falling in stages over rocks and around islets, and surrounded by an emerald karst landscape of jagged hills and plowed fields. It is possible to swim in the broad pool beneath the falls, and to take a bamboo raft into the spray near its base. Remember that a border runs through the center of the river – do not stray too far across. A road running along the top of the falls leads to a stone tablet from the 1950s that marks out the border in both French and Chinese.

Beihai 22

北海

93 miles (150 km) S of Nanning.

🚗 🚶 🚲 🚢 to Hainan Island.

ATROPICAL PORT CITY of about 400,000 people, Beihai is one of the departure points for ferries to Hainan Island (see pp304–5). Many of the city's residents are ethnic Chinese from Vietnam, whose expulsion from that country in the late 1970s sparked a brief attempt by China to invade its neighbor.

Established over 2,000 years ago, the city prospered during the Han era, when it was a busy port. The old Colonial Quarter on the northern seafront along Zhongshan Lu, is a 1.2-mile (2-km) stretch of narrow lanes and quietly disintegrating 1920s plasterwork, at least one former church, and several colonnaded shopfronts where a heady fish market is often held.

About 2 miles (3 km) west of the center farther down Zhongshan Lu is the Hainan Ferry Port. Lying beyond is a small harbor crammed with motorized junks, rusty cargo ships, and battered trawlers.

Beihai's other attraction, Yin Tan (Silver Beach), lies 6 miles (10 km) south of town. Although it has a range of resorts and restaurants, Yin Tan's monotonous stretch does not compare with the lovely beaches of Hainan.

Façade of an old colonial church along Zhongshan Lu, Beihai

THE NORTHEAST

INTRODUCING THE NORTHEAST 428-435
LIAONING, JILIN,
& HEILONGJIANG 436-455

The Northeast at a Glance

LYING IN THE PERIPHERAL CORNER of China, the Northeast (Dongbei) abounds in raw beauty and mineral wealth, and was inhabited for centuries by indomitable tribes including the Khitan, Mongols, and Jurchen (Manchu), the latter ruling China for over 250 years. Today, the region's three provinces of Liaoning, Jilin, and Heilongjiang form China's industrial heartland, although the many lakes, mountains, and rugged borderlands offer scenic getaways. In Liaoning, Shenyang's palaces are testament to its great Manchu past, while Dalian is a fast-moving city with architectural marvels. The city of Jilin, once the capital of Manchukuo (1933–45), the puppet state installed by the Japanese, has stunning winter landscapes. Changchun, the capital of Jilin province, has a thriving automobile industry, while Heilongjiang is famed for its Harbin Ice Festival.

The ornate paifang or gateway to the rugged scenery of Bingyu Valley (Bingyu Gou), Liaoning

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Changchun 6
- Dalian 5
- Dandong 3
- Harbin 9
- Jilin 7
- Jinzhou 2
- Shenyang 1

Nature Reserves, Mountains & Areas of Natural Beauty

- Bingyu Valley 4
- Changbai Shan pp448–9 8
- Mudanjiang Jingpo Hu 10
- Wu Da Lian Chi & the River Border 12
- Zhalong Nature Reserve 11

SEE ALSO

- Where to Stay pp570–71
- Where to Eat pp595–6

Offering incense at the Buddhist Jile Si, Harbin

KEY

- International airport
- Domestic airport
- National highway
- Major road
- Minor road
- Railroad
- Provincial border

The icy blue waters of the volcanic Tian Chi – Heaven's Lake – in Changbai Shan

GETTING THERE

The major cities – Shenyang, Dalian, Changchun, Harbin, and Jilin – are connected to Beijing by air and rail. There are express buses from Beijing to Shenyang, Dalian, and Changchun. Regular trains and buses also ply within the region. A few flights operate between the major cities, including Harbin and Dalian. In winter, popular destinations such as Jilin and Harbin are relatively easy to reach, while remoter areas such as Jingpo Hu and Changbai Shan are more difficult to access. Within cities, taxis are the best option.

A PORTRAIT OF THE NORTHEAST

SANDWICHED BETWEEN Russia, Korea, and Inner Mongolia, the three northeastern provinces constitute China's easternmost extent. Even though the prevalent culture is Han Chinese, the Northeast's geography, history, and extended external boundaries have shaped a distinct regional identity. The region's attractions range from the bustling sprawl of its big cities to the rugged, and sublime terrain beyond, and the cultural mix of its border towns.

It is hard to categorize the Northeast (Dongbei) – it enjoys hot summers but glacial winters, and while heavy industry and socialist planning blight some cityscapes, others sport elegant pockets of colonial architecture. And parts of the region may be revelling in China's recent economic boom, others suffer from chronic unemployment.

Encompassing the three provinces of Liaoning, Jilin, and Heilongjiang, the Northeast was a latecomer to the Chinese empire and is sometimes considered as little more than an appendix to the rest of the country. As part of former Manchuria, however, it was the cradle of the magnificent civilization that ruled China from 1644 until the collapse of imperial rule in 1911.

Statue of twin Buddhas,
Bei Ta, Shenyang

Shenyang, Liaoning's present capital, became the Manchu capital in 1625, and the site of their still-impressive Imperial Palace. Here they perfected their Eight Banner system of color-coded hereditary social and administrative divisions (see pp432–3) and plotted the overthrow of the Ming dynasty in 1644, whereupon they moved their capital to the Forbidden City in Beijing. Even today, the region's Manchu population take great pride in their heritage and still adhere to the Eight Banners.

Stately Russian architecture in Daliqiu district, Harbin

Façade of the Puppet Emperor's Palace, Changchun

In more recent times, the Northeast attracted the attentions of Russia and Japan, both of which have helped shape the region's destiny. At the end of the 19th century the Russians, interested in the ice-free port of Lushun, tried to annexe parts of Manchuria and built part of the Trans-Siberian Railway line, before being humiliated by Japan. The area suffered again during the Japanese occupation of the 1930s and 40s, when it was renamed Manchukuo and Pu Yi was installed as Puppet Emperor. The brutal occupation left deep scars on the region's psyche along with some pitiful sights, such as the Japanese Germ Warfare Experimental Base near Harbin.

Japanese occupation came to an end after World War II, ushering in a period of industrialization under Chairman Mao. His camaraderie with Russia in the 1950s resulted in the installation of a Stalinist state-sector economy. The peaceful relationship was shortlived and conflicts soon flared along the border.

The Northeast's rich mineral wealth has made it China's industrial heartland. However, in recent years, underinvestment and ruthless downsizing with huge state-sector layoffs have resulted in high unemployment and sporadic demonstrations.

Centuries of hardship have molded the character of the Dongbeiren (Northeasterners). Resolute, unaffected, forthright, and hospitable, they are looked upon by their compatriots as a hardy, stalwart people, prone to hard drinking. Taller and stockier than their southern cousins, they speak Mandarin with a coarse, albeit intelligible accent. Unlike the sophisticated cuisine of Hong Kong and Shanghai, the local food – including jiaozi (dumplings), dun (stews), and tudou (potatoes) – is hearty and filling. The temperament of the people matches the vigorous landscapes that range from dense forest to volcanic regions and the tough terrain along the Russian and North Korean borders. These areas offer plenty of outdoor options including trekking and bird-watching, particularly in Zhalong Nature Reserve.

The border town of Dandong has a thriving tourist industry, catering mainly to North Korean visitors.

Despite the unfortunate effects of industrialization, there is much worth seeing. The onion domes and Byzantine ornamentation visible in Harbin's buildings are distinctly Russian, a legacy of the city's cross-cultural links. Dalian, on the Yellow Sea, is a dynamic and progressive city that has enjoyed the same economic success as Shanghai. Known as the "Hong Kong of the North," it adds an affluent touch to the Northeastern rustbelt.

Door handle
Confucius Temple

A secluded bay by the blue waters of the volcanic Jingpo Hu, Heilongjiang

The Manchu Dynasty

Carving from Manchu palace

THE FINAL OVERLORDS of the Middle Kingdom, the Manchus from the Northeast, took advantage of a China weakened by peasant rebellion to invade and establish the Qing or “pure” dynasty in 1644. This foreign Manchu court preserved much of China’s governing apparatus and over time absorbed local ways. Despite providing some of China’s most illustrious emperors, including Kangxi (see p122) and Qianlong, the Qing declined into an ineffectual torpor. Coupled with the seizure of territories by foreign powers, the Qing failure to modernize led to the collapse of Manchu legitimacy and the final downfall of the dynasty.

The queue, a long plaited hairstyle that has come to symbolize Chinese traditions, was a Manchu import imposed on Han Chinese men.

THE COURT AT THE FORBIDDEN CITY

Like the Ming before them, the Manchu Qing established their court in Beijing. The Manchus were the last dynastic occupants of the Forbidden City. Served by as many as 3,000 eunuchs, they were immersed in a court life of arcane ceremony and ritual until the dynasty was unseated by the founding of the Republic of China in 1912.

Nurhachi (1559–1626), the first Manchu emperor, organized the scattered tribes of the north-east into eight banner units in the early 17th century. He moved his capital to Shenyang, but did not live to see the subjugation of China. After his death, his son Ababai established the Qing dynasty in 1636 and proceeded to invade China.*

The Manchu Imperial Palace in Shenyang was begun during Nurhachi’s reign and completed by Ababai. In 1644, when the Manchus toppled the Ming, the Shenyang complex became a “travelling palace”, used by the emperor during tours of inspection.

Elaborate summer camping trips in Inner Mongolia were undertaken by the early Qing rulers, as a break from Confucian court life. They hunted, practiced archery, and slept in yurts, in order to preserve their Manchu vigor.

Qianlong (r. 1735–1796), the fourth Qing emperor, was a generous patron of the arts. His lengthy reign was also marked by territorial expansion, including the absorption of Xinjiang, and was largely a period of Chinese prosperity.

Yuanming Yuan, the Garden of Perfect Brightness (see p103), was designed by Jesuits for the Qianlong emperor. Much of its grandiose architecture was destroyed by French and English troops in 1860.

Jesuit missionary Adam Schall von Bell (1591–1666) impressed the Manchu court with his knowledge of astronomy. The Jesuits realized that having influence in China required mastering the Confucian Classics and Mandarin.

In 1793, Lord Macartney arrived with elaborate gifts from King George III, seeking to establish trade between Britain and China. Macartney refused to kowtow and was rebuffed by the Qianlong emperor, who refused Britain a single concession.

THE BOXER REBELLION

The Boxers, a band of xenophobic rebels from north China who rose up to rid China of the “foreign devils,” drew from superstitious rituals that they believed made them invulnerable. Cixi, seeking an opportunity to strike back at the foreign powers, allied herself to their cause. The rebels laid waste to Beijing’s Legation Quarter in 1900, while besieging the district’s foreign population. The siege was finally lifted by an eight-power allied force. The Qing government was forced to sign The Boxer Protocol which, among other conditions, allowed the stationing of foreign troops in Beijing.

Boxer massacre of Chinese Christians

The Empress Dowager, Cixi (see p101), was deeply conservative and a shrewd manipulator. Dismissive of foreign powers, she appointed pro-Boxer Prince Duan as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Trans-Siberian Railway

THE TERM TRANS-SIBERIAN RAILWAY refers to three services: the Trans-Siberian, the Trans-Mongolian, and the Trans-Manchurian. In 1891 Russia decided to join the extremities of her empire by rail. A short cut through Manchuria was negotiated with China and the line was completed in 1903. War with Japan forced the Russians to cede the railroad to them in 1905 and build a new line skirting Manchuria – the Trans-Siberian route was finished in 1916. The Trans-Mongolian route was added in the 1940s and 50s. In an era of jet travel, this epic week-long journey is an experience not to be missed.

Conductor and train on the Trans-Siberian Railway

Orthodox priest running a mobile religious service in Manchuria at the turn of the 20th century. Today the historic Russian presence in the Northeast can still be seen in Harbin, Lushun, and border towns like Manzhouli.

Steam trains were finally replaced in 2002, although electrification began in 1939. Because of differences in the track widths of Chinese and Russian lines, huge cranes lift the carriages up onto the correct width "boogies" when crossing the border.

The train carves its way through the grasslands of the north Manchurian plain.

This 1907 poster advertises the romance of a winter trip on the Trans-Siberian Railway. The poster's distinct Japanese feel derives from Japan's occupation of Manchuria and Korea at the time.

The standard of luxury is reasonable. (The Chinese deluxe carriage has showers.) If the dining car doesn't appeal, at each stop there's a throng of vendors on the platforms selling goods.

The longest railway service in the world at nearly 6,000 miles (9,500 km), it takes up to 7 days to cover the journey.

KEY

- Trans-Siberian
- Trans-Mongolian
- Trans-Manchurian

TRANS-MANCHURIAN RAILWAY

The Vostok makes the six-day trip once a week from Beijing through Shanhaiguan and Harbin, before heading through the spectacular Manchurian plain, the huge expanse of Russia, and back.

The Trans-Mongolian is probably the most interesting route of the three: it goes through China – past the Great Wall and Datong, site of the Yungang Caves; via Mongolia and its grasslands; and finally through the expanse of Russia. However, it also requires three visas.

Lake Baykal's cliffs proved problematic for the builders. They had to chisel miles of tunnels out of solid rock and construct many bridges. It was worth it in the end because the southern end of the lake provides all three lines with some of the most picturesque scenery of the trip.

TRAVELERS' TIPS

- You can book tickets through CITS Beijing – see www.cits.com
- Summer is the peak season; Fall is quieter; the train is heated, but Winter can be very cold outside.
- www.monkeyshrine.com has a lot of useful information about the service and can arrange trips.
- Bring dried noodle snacks, hot chocolate, a bowl, and cutlery as there is boiling water on tap.
- Arrange for at least one or two stops on the way – separate ticket required for each stop.
- Be prepared to drink vodka.

Looking out the window occupies most of your time on the trip – when not meeting other travelers.

Moscow is the end (or indeed start) for the three Trans-Siberian Railway services. It is possible to go on to St. Petersburg and the Baltic Sea. However, Moscow has plenty of museums, churches, and grand architecture to see, and deserves a few days of exploration.

LIAONING, JILIN, & HEILONGJIANG

STRETCHING FROM Shanbaiguan – the Great Wall’s terminus at the Yellow Sea – to the Siberian borders in the north, the provinces of Liaoning, Jilin, and Heilongjiang cover 309,000 sq miles (800,000 sq km), an area larger than Spain and Portugal. With a population of over 100 million, they offer a variety of landscapes from seaside ports to expanses of uninhabited forests and mountains.

The region was once part of erstwhile Manchuria, and the lavish palace of the Manchu kings at Shenyang in the heart of Liaoning stands testament to their might. On Liaoning’s balmier southern coast, Dalian features scenic coastal drives and fine, sandy beaches.

As the only ice-free port in the area, it was coveted by both Japan and Russia, and occupied continuously by one or the other between 1895 and 1955.

Japan’s imperialist stamp also survives in Jilin’s capital, Changchun, from where China’s last emperor, Pu Yi, ruled the Japanese state of Manchukuo as a mere puppet. In Heilongjiang, the city of Harbin has heavy Russian overtones, clearly evident in its buildings and restaurants, while strong Korean influences color Dandong town, situated along the North Korean border. Also straddling the border is the rugged, spectacular Changbai Shan Reserve, which abounds in lush, jagged peaks and hiking opportunities. Its volcanic lake, Tian Chi, is China’s deepest, rumored to be home to a mysterious aquatic beast.

Other natural attractions include Liaoning’s Bingyu Valley with its towering rock formations, Heilongjiang’s volcanic lakes – Wu Da Lian Chi and Jingpo Hu, and the huge bird sanctuary at Zhalong Nature Reserve, whose marshy expanse supports hundreds of species of birds during the summer breeding season.

A secluded sandy cove in the Bangchuidao Scenic Area, Dalian

Shenyang ①

沈阳

Colossal
Mao statue

CAPITAL OF LIAONING PROVINCE and the largest city in the Northeast, Shenyang may lack the panache of Dalian, but it serves as an important transport and industrial hub at the heart of the province. Of strategic importance in the state of Yan during the Warring States period (475–221 BC), the town was first called Shenyang during the Mongol Yuan dynasty, before rising to prominence as the first Manchu capital in 1625, when it was known as Mukden and was chosen as the setting for the Imperial Palace, a splendid rival to Beijing's Forbidden City.

A throng of visitors outside the Dazheng Hall, Imperial Palace

Imperial Palace

171 Shenyang Lu. ☎ (024) 2484 4192.
 ☉ 9am–4:30pm daily. 📺 📷 interiors.
 Second only in scale to the Forbidden City in Beijing, the Imperial Palace is Shenyang's premier historical sight, situated in what was the center of the old city. Its construction began in 1625, during the reign of Nurhachi (1559–1626), leader of the Manchus. In 1644, Manchu troops breached the Great Wall at Shanhaiguan (see p128) and swarmed into China to establish the Qing dynasty. Serving as the imperial residence of both Nurhachi and his son and heir Abahai, the palace is composed of 300 rooms. While its features reflect a pronounced Manchu and Mongol influence, the palace was obviously an attempt to emulate its Ming counterpart, the Forbidden City, Beijing. The palace divides into three sections. The dominating feature of the central section is the Chongzheng Hall, from where Abahai oversaw political affairs and received envoys from vassal lands and border territories. In the courtyard behind the hall, the Qingning Palace is where the emperor and his concubines resided. The Phoenix Tower, the tallest structure in the imperial grounds can be found here too.

In the western section, the Wensu Pavilion formerly housed one of seven copies of the 36,078-volume Siku Quanshu (Complete Library of the Four Treasures), an encyclopedic collection of Chinese literature compiled in the Qing era, of which only four sets survive. The Dazheng Hall is the central feature of the eastern section, fronted by pillars emblazoned with sinuous dragons. It was here that Shunzhi (Aisin Gioro Fulin) was crowned as the first Qing emperor, before he conquered China in 1644. In front of the hall stand the Ten King Pavilions, once used as offices by the chieftains of the "Eight Banners" – the Manchu system of land and hereditary divisions. The palace has been undergoing extensive restoration and some halls that are usually open may be closed. It achieved UNESCO World Heritage Site status in 2004.

Mao Statue

Zhongshan Square.

The statue of Mao Zedong situated in Zhongshan Square in downtown Shenyang stands as a reminder of a vanished era. Mao statues tower over public squares across China, including such far-flung outposts as Lijiang (see pp390–91) in Yunnan and Kashgar (see pp510–11) in Xinjiang, but this example is perhaps the most histrionic, depicting Mao's giant monolithic figure as a superman in an overcoat.

North Pagoda

27 Beita Jie. ☉ 8am–4pm daily. 📺

Built in 1643, Bei Ta is the only one of four temples and pagodas situated on the city boundaries that exists in a decent state of repair.

The surviving features of the original pagoda are the Great Hall and Falun Temple. The main hall is decorated with murals of deities.

Wei Tuo Buddha,
North Pagoda

18 September Museum

46 Wanghua Nanjie.

☉ 9am–4pm daily. 📺 📷

The Jiuyiba Lishi Bowuguan commemorates the occupation of Shenyang on September 18, 1931, by Japanese troops. Its exhibits make up the most comprehensive chronicle of the Japanese aggression in Manchuria. Like other museums with a similar theme, some of the displays can be rather gruesome.

North Tomb's ornate west wall and gateway

North Tomb

12 Taishan Lu, Beiling Gongyuan, North Shenyang. ☐ 8:30am–4:30pm daily. 🗺️ 🏠 interiors. The huge Beiling Park houses the tomb of Abahai (1592–1643), the son of Nurhachi, and his wife, Empress Borjigit. One of the largest and best-preserved of China's imperial mausoleums, the North Tomb (Bei Ling) was built in 1643, the year of the emperor's death. The layout of the complex is typical of imperial Chinese tombs (see pp104–5), and is accessed through Zhengzhong Gate to the south. Of the pavilions lying on either side of the gate, the easternmost pavilion was used as a dressing room for visiting emperors, while the westernmost was the site for sacrificing animals. A spirit way (shendao), lined with animal statues, leads to the Hall of Eminent Favor (Ling'en Dian). Right behind the hall lie the tree-covered imperial burial mounds, formally called Zhao Ling (the Luminous Tomb), and an exquisite dragon screen.

Mythical animal, North Tomb

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

440 miles (700 km) NE of Beijing.
 🗺️ 4,000,000. ☑️ Shenyang Airport. 🚆 South Train Station or North Train Station. 🚌 South Bus Station, Express Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport). 🏠 Room 217, Building 1, 189 Shifu Lu.

East Tomb

3 miles (5 km) E of Shenyang. ☐ 8am–4pm daily. 🗺️ 🏠 interiors. The impressive East Tomb (Dong Ling), the final resting place of Nurhachi and his wife Yehenaal, was completed in 1651. Arranged attractively on the slopes of Mount Tianzhu near the Hun River, the three-storied tomb has a flight of 108 steps leading to its main gate. The number 108 is sacred to the Chinese; in the Daoist celestial order, 108 represents the 36 stars of heaven and the 72 stars of hell. The number is also sacred to Buddhists, reflected in the 108 beads on Buddhist rosaries and the number of luoban in certain Buddhist sects.

SHENYANG CITY CENTER

- Imperial Palace ①
- Mao Statue ②
- North Pagoda ③
- North Tomb ⑤
- 18 September Museum ④

KEY

- 🚆 Train station
- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 📍 Tourist information
- 📧 Post office

The impressive Bija Shan, connected to the mainland by an isthmus at low tide

Jinzhou ②

锦州

125 miles (200 km) SW of Shenyang.

AN INDUSTRIAL CITY on the eastern shores of the Liaoning Gulf, Jinzhou is visited mainly for its storehouse of Jurassic period fossils, of which more than 300 are housed in the private Wenya Museum (Bowuguan). Set up by the amateur collector Du Wenya, this unremarkable three-story building stands on Heping Lu although there is talk of relocating it in the near future. The star attraction is a specimen of dusbi kongzi niao (Confuciusornis dui bou), a winged, avian dinosaur with feathered features, that was unearthed in 1998 in western Liaoning, a region rich in dinosaur remains. Other exhibits include another dinosaur with bird-like features known as Sinosauropteryx, a 120-million-year-old and 29-ft (9-m) fossilized tree, and fossilized dinosaur eggs from the Jurassic period. Jutting out of Jinzhou Bay, 21 miles (34 km) south of town, is Bija Shan (Pen-holder Mount). It is connected to the mainland by an isthmus that emerges from the sea at low tide. The island's peaks – which resemble a Chinese pen rest – support several Buddhist temples and offer magnificent views over the bay. Visitors who wish to walk to Bija Shan along the isthmus should check the timings of low-tide before planning a trip. An alternative way of reaching the island is by taking a fishing boat.

Wenya Museum

33–13 Erduan, Heping Lu.

Bija Shan

6am–6pm daily.

Dandong ③

丹东

172 miles (277 km) SE of Shenyang.

600,000.

20 Shiwei Lu, (0415) 213 7493.

PRESIDED OVER BY a statue of Mao Zedong in the heart of town, Dandong is located along the Yalu Jiang (Yalu River) in the eastern part of Liaoning province. It would have been little more than an obscure outpost, ignored by travelers, if it were not for its proximity to North Korea. Today, the largest border town in China, Dandong has an unmistakable Korean stamp, from the shaokao (barbecue) dishes, to the signs in bangul (the Korean script), and the Korean shops and souvenirs.

Within reach of Dandong are several other interesting sights, and the town acts as a useful launch pad to Changbai Shan (see pp448–9) and the stunning mountain lake of Tian Chi. Dandong's trademark sight is the Yalu Jiang Duan Qiao (Yalu River Bridge) that reaches out into the river alongside the bridge connecting China with North Korea – this railway line runs all the way from Beijing to Pyongyang. The steel bridge ends halfway along its full span, the remainder having been dismantled by the Koreans. The surviving half in Chinese territory bears the scars of combat, having been strafed in 1950 by US fighter planes during the Korean War. The ruin serves as a monument to the Kang Mei Yuan Chao Zhanzheng (War to Resist US Aggression & Aid Korea), as the Chinese refer to their part in the conflict. Boats and speedboats offer cruises along the Yalu River, for visitors who want to get within two or three feet of the hermit kingdom. It is permitted to take photographs of North Korea, though there are few photogenic features – just factories, civilians, and Stalinist housing. Those who wish to learn more about China's contribution to the Korean War can visit the Museum to Commemorate Aiding Korea & Resisting America, with a plethora of exhibits on the war. Even though the captions are almost exclusively in Chinese, the nationalistic refrain is clearly evident.

The Yalu Jiang Duan Qiao, that once connected China with North Korea

Dramatic karst hills rising up from the river, Bingyu Valley

Located 31 miles (50 km) northwest of town, the 2,760-ft (840-m) Fenghuang Shan (Phoenix Emperor Mountain) is associated with Daoist mythology. It supports a crop of temples and caves, besides offering some excellent hiking trails. A good time to visit is during the temple fair (miaohui), held every April. The Hushan Great Wall, a little-visited and restored vestige of the Great Wall, is located 20 km (12 miles) northeast of Dandong, near Jiuliancheng town, overlooking the Yalu River and the North Korean border. This section of the wall, dating from the reign of the Ming Wanli emperor, is its easternmost point. In 2003, the Great Wall Museum opened at the site, displaying relics associated with the defensive barrier.

Since the North Korean border is not always clearly marked, hiking around this area is inadvisable, in case visitors inadvertently cross over into North Korea.

Yalu Jiang Duan Qiao
 ☎ (0415) 212 2145. ☑ daily. 🗺
Fenghuang Shan
 Fengchen City. ☑ daily. 🗺

Bingyu Valley 4

冰峪谷

149 miles (240 km) NE of Dalian.

🚗 from Dalian to Zhuanghe, then bus. 🚌 from Dalian to Zhuanghe, then bus to Bingyu Fengjingqu.

A PICTURESQUE river valley, Bingyu Gou lies sprawled across 42 sq miles (110 sq km). It offers long riverside walks and hikes in fabulous trekking terrain overlooked by jagged peaks, karst rock formations, temples, and cliffs hollowed out by numerous caves. Opportunities for climbing, fishing, and rafting are also available. The valley can be reached via the town of Zhuanghe, northeast of Dalian. Accommodations are available for those who wish to stay overnight. It is best to avoid the holiday periods as well as weekends during summer, when the valley receives crowds of visitors.

A traffic policeman on duty

Steps leading to a Daoist temple on Fenghuang Shan

Dalian ⑤

大连

Giant football,
Labor Park

SPARKLING WITH SELF-ASSURANCE and confidence, Dalian is Northeast China's most dynamic and attractive city. It is famed throughout China for its top-notch hotels, progressive economy, modern and European-style architecture, football team, and cleanliness. The city resembles Shanghai in its port setting, cosmopolitanism, Special Economic Zone status, and history of foreign control, but has the added attraction of a coastline dotted with scenic beaches and lawns. Located at the southernmost point of Northeast China near the tip of the Liaodong peninsula, Dalian enjoys sea breezes and a warmer winter than other parts of the region.

Colonial architecture and modern highrises around Zhongshan Square

Exploring Dalian

The city of Dalian has few temples or monuments of note, but most visitors come for its beaches, seafood, shopping, and striking modernity. Serving as a dazzling hub from which major streets radiate, Zhongshan Square (Zhongshan Guangchang) is laid out with lawns and encircled by a ring of colonial buildings dating from the Russian and Japanese eras. At night, locals gather here to dance and listen to music, and to watch the occasional cultural performances that are held. The most interesting buildings along the square's periphery are the Dalian Hotel (Dalian Binguan) at No. 4 to the south, and the Bank of China (Zhongguo Yinhang) on the northern rim at No. 9.

Currently being redeveloped, Dalian's main shopping area is Tianjin Jie, a pedestrianized stretch of shops northwest of Zhongshan Square. Beneath Shengli Square to the west is a huge underground shopping center, while the Friendship Store lies farther east on Renmin Lu.

Dotting Dalian are several tree-lined streets and spacious parks. Southwest of Zhongshan Square is Labor Park (Laodong Gongyuan), with its hallmark giant football at the center. It is known for hosting the Locust Flower Festival each spring. Farther southwest is Dalian's other main square, Renmin Square. Formerly known as Stalin Square, it was until recently overlooked by a large statue of a Russian soldier, that now stands in nearby Lushun. The square is pleasantly laid out with grass and is lit at night.

Dalian is famous for its beaches and these can easily be reached by bus or taxi. In the northeast of the Dalian peninsula, just off Binhai Lu near the Eighteen Bends, is the scenic Donghai Park. Covering 1,112 acres (450 ha), this seaside park has a 3,937-ft (1,200-m) long coastline. It was founded to celebrate Dalian's centennial anniversary, and has striking statues of oversized sea-creatures, including a giant octopus and a shark. There are fine sea views, and the water is clean though rather cold until mid-July for swimming. The pebble beach is popular with visitors, who often bring tents and beach towels and spend the whole day here.

Farther south along the coastal Binhai Lu, the Bangchuidao Scenic Area (Bangchuidao Jingqu) has the best beaches on China's east coast, once reserved for party officials and now open to all. Binhai Lu makes for a marvelous walk with fantastic views over the cliffs across the Yellow Sea. The next stop is the more touristy Tiger Beach Scenic Area (Laohutan Jingqu), which sports an amusement park and an aquarium. Several miles farther west, the Fujiazhuang Scenic Area (Fujiazhuang Jingqu) is also rather boisterous and crowded, and farther still is the Xinghai Beach Scenic Area, housing the immensely popular Sun Asia Ocean World. This aquarium has a 381-ft (116-m) long underwater tunnel and several tanks filled with sea-life that attract children in droves. Just off the coast, Xinghai Square was built to commemorate the return of Hong Kong to China in 1997.

Statue of a rowing team in midstroke, Xinghai Square

🍁 Donghai Park

Binhai Lu. ☐ 8am–5pm daily. 🌿

🌿 Bangchuidao Scenic Area

☐ daily. 🌿

🐉 Sun Asia Ocean World

☐ 9am–5pm daily. 🌿

Barber attending to a customer

ENVIRONS: Lying 22 miles (35 km) southwest of Dalian, Lushun enjoys an excellent strategic position, its harbor benefiting from the perennial ice-free waters.

Known as Port Arthur, it was the chief naval base for the Chinese Beiyang fleet from the mid-19th century, and was seized by the Japanese during the Sino-Japanese War (1894–95). Returned to China soon after, the port fell to the Russians in 1897, who developed the base for their Pacific fleet, but Japan wrested Lushun back in

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

180 miles (300 km) S of Shenyang.

🚗 2,100,000 🚗 Dalian Airport.

🚗 🚗 Dalian Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport), Heishijiao Bus Station. 🚗 from Yantai & Weihai.

🌸 Locust Flower Festival (Spring).

1905, forfeiting it only at the end of World War II. Among the surviving Russian architecture is the Railway Station, built in 1898 as the terminus of the South Manchuria Railway (see pp434–5), and still in use today. The Japanese-Russian Prison, which incarcerated Russian, Japanese, and Chinese prisoners, also has a rather gory torture room and gallows. Tours take in the compound and various photographs on display. North of the bay and near the station, Baiyu Hill is topped with rows of cannons and a tower, and offers views over town.

Visitors must check with the Public Security Bureau just off Zhongshan Square for permission to visit, since Lushun is a closed military zone.

🏰 Japanese-Russian Prison

139 Xiangyong Jie. ☐ daily. 🌿 🚗

A cruise liner docked near Xinghai Square

DALIAN CITY CENTER

Bangchuidao Scenic Area ⑥

Donghai Park ③

Fujiazhuang Scenic Area ⑧

Labor Park ③

Renmin Square ④

Sun Asia Ocean World ⑨

Tianjin Jie ②

Tiger Beach Scenic Area ⑦

Zhongshan Square ①

KEY

🚗 Train station

🚗 Long distance bus station

🚗 Ferry terminal

📍 Tourist information

Living quarters at the Puppet Emperor's Palace, Changchun

Changchun 6

长春

185 miles (300 km) NE of Shenyang.

✈️ 2,200,000. 🚗 🚝 🚆 to Dalian, Shanghai & Tianjin. 🏠 Room 701, Guoji Dasha, Xi'an Da Lu, (0431) 892 8055.

THE SPRAWLING modern capital of Jilin province is cheerfully known as “Eternal Spring” despite its brutal winter. The city was badly damaged at the end of World War II, which ended its ignominious phase as the capital of the Japanese-controlled state of Manchukuo, when it was known as Hsin-Ching. Industrialized after the war, Changchun today has emerged as an attractive, green city in China’s northeastern “rustbelt,” famed for its car production.

Changchun’s only major sight of interest is the Puppet Emperor’s Palace, the residence of the “Last Emperor,” Pu Yi, whom the Japanese installed as the Emperor of Manchukuo. Located in the city’s northeast, the palace,

Official buildings at the Puppet Emperor's Palace, Changchun with its period furnishings and old photographs, serves as an apt epitaph to the tragic folly of Pu Yi’s life. The palace lacks the majesty of the Forbidden City, and instead is suggestive of the sanctuary of an exiled monarch. Recent renovations have, however, restored much of its former grandeur. It is now a fascinating museum of artifacts relating to the 13 powerless years that Pu Yi spent here. Scenes from Bertolucci’s 1987 epic film The Last Emperor were filmed here. Other period buildings include the Manchukuo State Council Building on Xinmin Dajie in the southeast of town, a further relic of the Japanese occupation. Open to the public, the building is a government structure that features a brass Otis elevator that once ferried Pu Yi aloft.

In the northeast corner of People’s Square on the main street of Renmin Dajie stands Banruo Temple, an active Buddhist temple dating to 1921. Inside the main hall is a statue of Sakyamuni with attendant arbat (see pp30–31). Changchun is also famous for its cinematic output and the city’s film studio can be visited, although it is only really of interest to specialist film buffs.

🏰 Puppet Emperor’s Palace

5 Guangfu Lu. 🕒 daily. 📷

THE LAST EMPEROR

Aisin Gioro or Pu Yi ascended the Qing throne at the age of three in 1908 after the death of his uncle, the Guangxu emperor. His brief reign as the Xuantong emperor was brought to an end on February 12, 1912, when he abdicated the throne in the Forbidden City to make way for the new Republican government. The powerless Pu Yi continued to live in the palace until 1924, before furtively escaping to live in the Japanese concession in Tianjin. He was later installed as the Japanese puppet emperor of Manchukuo, residing in his palace in Changchun. At the end of World War II, he was arrested and handed over to the Chinese Communists, who imprisoned him in 1950. In 1959, Mao granted him amnesty. Pu Yi never returned to the Forbidden City, and he died of cancer, childless and anonymous, in 1967, after working for seven years as a gardener at the Beijing Botanical Gardens.

Pu Yi (1905–1967), China’s “Last Emperor”

Jilin 7

吉林

60 miles (100 km) E of Changchun.

¥ 1,300,000. ✈️ 🚗 🚝 🚞 to Shanghai, Dalian & Tianjin. 📞 2288 Chongqing Lu, (0432) 244 3451.

KNOWN AS KIRIN during the Japanese occupation between 1931 and 1945, the city of Jilin is a little-visited industrial settlement on either side of the Songhua or Sungari River. Like many other cities in the northeast, Jilin has a short history and was a small village until the 17th century when it was fortified. It was heavily industrialized during the Japanese occupation, when the huge hydro-electric power station at Fengman on the Songhua River was constructed. The station generates one of Jilin's major winter attractions – shugua or needle-like white frost which covers the branches of the riverside pine and willow trees. As warm water from the power station flows into the Songhua, its temperature rises and it remains unfrozen. Evaporating water droplets from the river condense along the branches of trees and freeze, producing a sparkling display of ice-rimmed branches, resembling fragile pieces of coral. As with Harbin, winter is the main tourist season, and Jilin also stages an ice festival from January to the end of February.

Catholic Church, Jilin

Pleasant walks along paths, and past shrines and pavilions are possible in hilly Beishan Park in the west of town. The park has an array of Daoist and Buddhist temples that are worth investigating, including the Guandi Temple (Guandi Miao), the Three King Temple (Sanwang Miao), and the Jade Emperor's Temple (Yuhuang Ge), with a gaggle of fortune tellers in front.

Locals are proud of the city's attractive Catholic Church, built by the French in the early 19th century. It rises up west of Jilin's main bridge on Songjiang Lu, the road along the north bank of the river. Vandalized during the Cultural Revolution, the church became the city's emblem after it reopened in 1980.

East of the church is the Confucius Temple (Wen Miao), dedicated to the great sage. Candidates of the imperial civil service examinations came here to pray for his help and blessings. The sedate temple provides an escape from Jilin's modern face.

In the south of the city, the Meteorite Shower Museum houses a scattering of rock fragments that rained down around Jilin in 1976, including a vast specimen weighing nearly two tons (1,770 kg).

Statues at the scholars' altar, Confucius Temple, Jilin

🌿 Beishan Park

🕒 daily. 📍

🏰 Catholic Church

3 Songjiang Lu. 🕒 daily during service hours only.

🏰 Confucius Temple

2 Nanchang Lu. 🕒 daily. 📍

ENVIRONS: Not far from Jilin, Zhuque Shan (Rosefinch Mountain) has earned a reputation for its ski slopes. Formerly known for its temples and hiking opportunities, it now offers two slopes for sledding and skiing. Its restaurant, which stands on a heated platform, provides panoramic views over the hills.

About 15 miles (24 km) southeast of Jilin is the picturesque Songhua Lake (Songhua Hu), covering a vast and panoramic area surrounded by peaks. It provides an excellent getaway from town, offering hiking and boating in a huge forested park setting. Every winter, an expensive, state-of-the-art ski resort operates on the slopes around the lake, attracting crowds of cross-country fans. At the lake's southern end is the Fengman Dam, the site of the city's hydro-electric power station. Due to the river's annual flooding, four sluice gates are opened to keep Jilin from being submerged.

🏰 Zhuque Shan

Taxi from Jilin train station. 🕒 daily.

📍 Ski gear available.

🏰 Songhua Lake

📍 No. 338 from Jilin to Fengman.

then taxi to ski resorts.

The delicate frost that covers Jilin's trees each year

Changbai Shan ❸

长白山

Korean minorities in ethnic dress

LISTED AS A UNESCO Biosphere Reserve, Changbai Shan (Ever-White Mountains) is the largest of China's nature reserves at 760 sq miles (1,965 sq km) with a rich abundance of fauna and flora. Thick belts of deciduous and coniferous forest harbor important medicinal plants like ginseng, and endangered animals like the Siberian (or Manchurian) Tiger, while above the treeline lies the only alpine tundra in East Asia. The highlight of any visit to Changbai Shan is Tian Chi (Heaven's Lake), a glittering volcanic crater that straddles the mountainous border with North Korea. This is China at its wildest and most spectacular, with opportunities for hiking amid dramatic scenery, although the area is only open to exploration during summer and early autumn.

White birch

Despite heavy deforestation, there are still healthy numbers of over 80 species of tree such as these white birch.

★ Changbai Waterfall

Tian Chi releases huge quantities of water (the mountains are capped with snow between October and June) creating the dramatic 225-ft (68-m) high waterfall near the volcanic crater.

GINSENG

The root of the ginseng (Panax ginseng) plant has been valued in China for thousands of years for its healing and rejuvenating properties. Native to Korea and Northeast China, ginseng is a slow-growing herbaceous perennial that is widely farmed (although wild specimens are most highly prized). Ginseng from Northeast China is especially esteemed and was once protected under imperial edict to prevent overharvesting. Its efficacy does not develop until the plant is around six years of age. Premium quality wild ginseng is very expensive costing between US$150–450 per gram. However, buyer beware; the market is awash with fake produce.

The root and leaves of the ginseng plant

KEY

- International Border
- - Path

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Changbai Waterfall
- ★ Tianchi – Heaven's Lake

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

16 miles (25 km) S of Baihe; 350 miles (560 km) E of Jilin.

🚗 or 🚘 to Baihe, then bus or taxi. ☐ Jun–Sep (snowbound the rest of the year). Last bus back to Baihe 4pm. 🚗

🚗 from Jilin (CITS). 📶 📷

★ Tian Chi – Heaven's Lake

The volcano last erupted in 1702, wiping out most of the surrounding forest. The deep waters of Tian Chi (China's deepest lake) are said to harbor an aquatic beast similar to the Loch Ness Monster.

Hot springs near Tian Chi

Many springs reach temperatures of over 176° F (80° C) – hot enough for local hawkers to boil eggs and for visitors to take therapeutic dips in steamy pools.

Trekking opportunities

Even at peak periods, it is easy to enjoy and explore the wilderness and beauty of Changbai Shan at leisure – however, do not stray into North Korea.

CLIMBING CHANGBAI SHAN

Due to heavy snowfall, Changbai Shan is only open to trekking from June to October. Although a tempting 8 miles (13 km) in circumference, Tian Chi cannot be circumnavigated as it overlaps with North Korea. Prepare for unpredictable weather conditions as it can get very cold (and carry plenty of food and water.) The more sedentary can hire a 4-wheel-drive taxi all the way to the main peak. Visitors can overnight in one of the hotels on Changbai Shan or in tents on the lake shore. Tours are easy to find and usually include two nights in a hotel.

Harbin 9

哈尔滨

SITUATED IN THE FAR NORTH of China close to the vast sub-Siberian plains, Harbin is the pleasant capital of Heilongjiang province. It was a simple fishing hamlet on the Songhua River until the Russians linked it to both Vladivostok and Dalian (see pp444-5) by rail at the close of the 19th century. The railway and the Bolshevik Revolution brought large numbers of Russians to the city, prompting a change in Harbin's fortunes. Once called "Little Moscow" for its charming pockets of Russian architecture, Harbin still vaguely resembles an outpost of Imperial Russia. While the city's summer is quite pleasant, its winter temperatures dip below -22°F (-30°C), perfect weather for its spectacular Ice Festival.

People walking and relaxing along Harbin's riverbank

Exploring Harbin

Harbin's most pleasurable aspects lie within the Daoli district (Daoli Qu), the area stretching from the main railway station to the Songhua River. The district's downtown area is lined with several upmarket boutiques, fur shops, and department stores. Visitors can walk north along the pedestrianized shopping street of Zhongyang Dajie to explore the picturesque cobbled alleys and architectural legacies of the grand Russian era. Numerous shops and buildings on Zhongyang Dajie have been restored, and their histories recorded in English on exterior plaques. The lanes leading off Zhongyang Dajie are ideal for a leisurely stroll, while along its length are several good bars and restaurants. Lined with ice sculptures in winter, the streets here are alive with the bustle of pavement cafés during summer.

East of Zhongyang Dajie is the Church of St. Sofia, the city's most spectacular Russian edifice. Dating from 1907, it is also the largest Russian Orthodox church in the Far East. This Byzantine-style red-brick cathedral is topped with a green, onion-shaped dome. It houses the Architecture and Arts Centre, a rewarding photographic exhibition of the Russian influence on Harbin.

To the north, Zhaolin Park is the setting for many of the ice sculptures of the annual Ice Festival (Bingdeng Jie), officially held every year from January 5 to February 25. In winter, the park is transformed into a glistening wonderland of brightly-lit ice sculptures, ranging from simple statues to buildings, monuments, and temples.

Close by, Harbin's riverfront is dotted with a number of interesting sights. The Flood Control Monument at the northern end of Zhongyang Dajie was erected in 1958 to commemorate the river's flood-prone history. Stretching 26 miles (42 km) along the riverbank is Stalin Park, China's last public memorial to Joseph Stalin. It is an engaging riverside promenade and meeting place for Harbin locals. In summer, boat trips can be taken along the river and across to Sun Island Park on the northern bank. The park has a variety of recreational attractions and can also be reached by cable car. In winter, the river freezes over completely, and visitors can hire go-carts or simply walk across. An annual snow sculpture exhibition is held on Sun Island, which is also home to the Siberian Tiger Park, where the endangered Manchurian tiger is currently being bred. Visitors may want to give this rather dismal place a miss, as the fenced-off area seems much too small for the big cats, who are constantly being teased with live chickens by noisy busloads of tourists. Southeast of the main railway station, the Provincial Museum has a rather uninspiring collection of exhibits with no English captions. Farther east along Dong

A motorcycle taxi in Harbin

The splendid Byzantine-style Church of St. Sofia

Tiger at the Siberian Tiger Park, Harbin

Church of St Sofia

Diduan Jie. ☐ daily. 🗺️

Sun Island Park

3 Jingbei Lu. ☐ daily. 🗺️

Jile Si

9 Dong Dazhi Jie. ☐ daily.

Harbin Northern Forest Zoo

Gezidong. ☐ daily. 🗺️

ENVIRONS: 12 miles (20 km) southwest of Harbin in the small village of Pingfang, the Japanese Germ Warfare Experimental Base is the city's most notorious sight. Formerly operated by the Dazhi Jie are some of Harbin's Buddhist temples, all of which were damaged during the Cultural Revolution. The quiet Jile Si is home to an active Buddhist community. The complex follows a typical Buddhist temple layout with Drum and Bell Towers, Hall of Heavenly Kings, and a main hall, adorned with statues of Sakyamuni (the Historical Buddha) and various bodhisattvas. Adjacent is the seven-tiered Qiji Futu Pagoda, standing within the largest temple complex in the province. Nearby on Wenmiaojie, the Confucian Temple is a sizeable shrine also worth visiting. Harbin's zoo has been moved 25 miles (41 km) away from the city center, renamed Harbin Northern Forest Zoo, and is now one of the largest zoos in China.

The elegant, seven-tiered Qiji Futu Pagoda in the northeast of town

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

340 miles (550 km) N of Shenyang. 🗺️ 2,700,000. 🗺️
 🗺️ 🗺️ Harbin Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport). 📞 14 Songhuajiang Jie, (0451) 5360 1717. 🗺️ Ice Festival (Jan 5–Feb 25), Harbin Music Festival (Jul).

Japanese army's 731 Division, the gruesome remains of the experimental base are now open to the public. It housed a top-secret research unit that subjected thousands of Chinese, Korean, British, Mongolian, and Russian prisoners to some truly horrendous experiments. The Japanese destroyed the base at the end of World War II, and it was only after the dogged efforts of a Japanese journalist in the 1980s that the existence of the base was exposed. The museum is largely limited to photographs and all captions are in Chinese, but the site survives as a somber monument to the atrocities of World War II.

Japanese Germ Warfare Experimental Base

Pingfang. ☐ daily. 🗺️

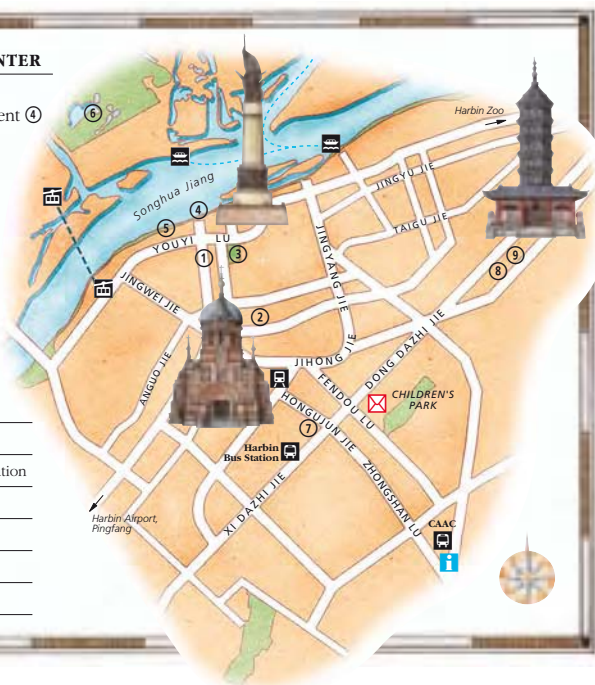

HARBIN CITY CENTER

- Church of St. Sofia ②
- Flood Control Monument ④
- Jile Temple ⑧
- Provincial Museum ⑦
- Qiji Futu Pagoda ⑨
- Stalin Park ⑤
- Sun Island Park ⑥
- Zhaolin Park ③
- Zhongyang Dajie ①

0 km 1
 0 miles 1

KEY

- 🚉 Train station
- 🚌 Long distance bus station
- 🚤 Riverboat pier
- 🚠 Cable car
- 📍 Tourist information
- 📧 Post office

Diving off the edge of Diaoshuilou Pubu (Diaoshuilou Waterfall), Jingpo Hu

Jingpo Hu 10

镜泊湖

62 miles (100 km) SW of Mudanjiang. from Mudanjiang to Dongjing, then minibus to Jingpo Hu in summer only; in winter via taxi. from Harbin & Mudanjiang. 34 Jingfu Lu, Mudanjiang, (0453) 695 0061. daily.

AN attractive, 31-mile (50-km) long winding strip of water, Jingpo Hu was carved from the Mudan River by volcanic eruptions thousands of years ago. The surrounding forested slopes are clearly reflected in the lake's waters, hence its name, "Mirror Lake." In summer, busloads of visitors – largely Chinese and Russian – gather at Jingpo Shanzhuang, a village on the northern shore equipped with abundant resort facilities. Although tourism has spoiled some of the lake's natural beauty, much of its huge body of water and the luxuriant wooded hills are still tranquil and worth exploring. The 131-ft (40-m) wide waterfall Diaoshuilou Pubu lies at the northern end of the lake. Its cascade is most impressive in the wetter summer months, while in winter, it freezes into a spectacular curtain of ice.

Visiting the lake is possible in winter, although temperatures can also dip well below freezing point through to April, with fewer transport and accommodations options. July and August are the wettest and busiest months, and booking ahead at lakeside hotels is recommended. An alternative is to stay in Mudanjiang city to the north, from where buses depart for Jingpo Hu. Activities include boating, fishing, and hiking and boat tours around the lake can also be arranged. Not far from the waterfall is a Korean minority village.

Several volcanic features dot the surrounding area, including lava caves and the Dixia Senlin (Underground Forest), 31 miles (50 km) northwest of Jingpo Hu. Not actually subterranean, the forest has grown spectacularly in the fertile soil of ten dormant volcanic craters. The delicate ecosystem here supports a varied animal and plant population including black bears, leopards, purple pines, firs, and dragon spruces.

A visitor enjoying a ride on a jet ski at Jingpo Hu

Taxis and buses leave regularly from Jingpo Hu's main gate to Dixia Senlin.

It is also worth looking out for tour buses to the lake that include trips to Dixia Senlin.

Dixia Senlin

50 km NW of Jingpo Hu. daily.

The marshlands at Zhalong Nature Reserve, important to migrating birds

Zhalong Nature Reserve 11

扎龙自然保护区

17 miles (27 km) SE of Qiqiha'er. to Qiqiha'er, then bus. daily.

CHINA'S LARGEST wetland reserve, the 518,700-acre (210,000-ha) Zhalong Nature Reserve lies in the Songhua-Nen River plain, along a major bird migratory route from the Arctic to Southeast Asia. Zhalong's reedbeds, ponds, and marshland provide an ideal home to almost 300 species of birds, including swans, storks, ducks, geese, egret, white ibis, and other waterfowl. Established in 1979, the reserve is one of the few breeding grounds in the Far East for the marsh grassbird (Megalurus pyerri). Six of the world's 15 varieties of crane are also found here. The most famous are the endangered red-crowned crane (Grus japonensis), a tall bird with black and white plumage and a red crest that is the symbol of longevity in China, and the white-naped crane (Grus vipio), both of which are bred at a research center here. Other rare bird species that visit Zhalong include the swan goose (Anser cygnoides), and the siberian crane, (Grus leucogeranus). Birds arrive in spring, and begin breeding in summer. The best time to visit the reserve is from April to June. It is advisable to take binoculars, as Zhalong's population of waterfowl can be elusive.

Fossils of Northeast China

CHINA HAS LONG been an excellent hunting ground for fossil collectors. Over 130 million years ago much of northern China was volcanic, richly forested and teeming with life. As the volcanoes erupted they covered the land with dust, hot ash, and mud, and for many years fossils of all kinds have been uncovered, from simple, shellfish-like ammonites through to complete skeletons of large dinosaurs. More recently, the area of northeast China has captured the imagination because of the discovery of at least five feathered species of dinosaurs. The feathers were not only used for flight, but also for insulation and perhaps decoration. Such has been the excitement – and indeed money – generated by these discoveries that fossils have become big business in the area. Locals are discovering and illegally selling what they find, and even going so far as to create fake fossils that have fooled the scientists.

Coiled shell of an ammonite

Paleontology has become a booming business in China and placed the country at the heart of important debates about evolution. Therefore the government has been keen to sponsor further research and museums.

This Dicynodont was a plant-eating reptile the size of a pig, with two large front teeth – its name means “two dog teeth.” One of the most common dinosaur fossils, it has been found all over the world.

Dragonfly fossils like this reveal even the delicate tracery of the insect's wings. This amazing detail was retained thanks to a thin dusting of fine volcanic ash that was followed by a thick layer of mud, preventing oxidation and rapid decay.

Dinosaur eggs are classified by size and shell type because it is difficult to tell what species they were laid by. Some are very similar to birds' eggs, further strengthening the theory that birds descended from a specific group of dinosaurs.

Microraptor gui was a four-winged creature – its legs were feathered too – that glided from tree to tree. The outline of the feathers can clearly be seen, and some think that it might represent an intermediate stage between dinosaurs and birds.

One of the five volcanic lakes at Wu Da Lian Chi

Wu Da Lian Chi & the River Border 12

五大连池

232 miles (375 km) N of Harbin. 📍 from Harbin or Qiqiha'er to Beian, then bus to Wu Da Lian Chi. 🚌 from Harbin.

A LARGE AND POPULAR nature reserve situated in a volcanic field, Wu Da Lian Chi lies in a region in western Heilongjiang inhabited by the ancient Daur minority. Its name, meaning “Five Big Connected Lakes,” is derived from the five bodies of water created by a succession of volcanic eruptions, the most recent occurring in the 18th century. The resulting lava, which blocked the Bei River and created the lakes, has turned Wu Da Lian Chi into a volcanic spa, with geothermal springs and sulphurous waters that have a reputation throughout China for their curative powers.

The 14 volcanoes at Wu Da Lian Chi add a measure of drama and character to the region's flat terrain. To the west of Number 3 Lake are the two principal volcanic vents, Lao Hei Shan (Old Black Hill) and Huoshao Shan (Fire Burn Hill). The sites of the most recent eruptions, which took place between 1719–21, both volcanoes are popular with visitors and can be climbed for panoramic views of the area. Surrounded by fields of lava, Laohei Shan generated most of the magma that spilled out into the surrounding area. However, like all the volcanoes at Wu Da Lian Chi, it is now dormant. Visitors can also bathe in the area's pungent hot water springs and taste the local mineral water. Apparently bursting with dissolved minerals and curative powers, the waters are sought by a devoted band of the ill and infirm, as well as elderly Chinese, who flock to Wu Da Lian Chi to avail of treatment in the numerous sanatoriums that have opened here. The waters are also the star attraction of the annual Water Drinking Festival of the local Daur people, held every May.

Underground caverns dot the area, including the freezing Crystal Palace and Bai Long Dong (White Dragon Cave), subterranean ice caves decorated with ice sculptures and crowded with visitors in summer. The nearest settlement is the village of Wu Da Lian Chi, which has several hotels. Since the guided tours available often make costly and needless diversions, visitors may find it more efficient to travel independently by regular taxi or motorcycle cab.

🐉 Bai Long Dong

🕒 daily. 📷

ENVIRONS: The Heilong Jiang (Black Dragon River, known as the Amur in Russia), that lends its name to this province, demarcates a long section of the border between China and Siberia. Several of Northeast China's ethnic tribes traditionally settled in this region, making their living from the river, although many have now been assimilated into the larger Han Chinese population. It is possible to see Siberian forests and small settlements along the border. Since most parts of this region require a permit, it is advisable to check with Harbin's Public Security Bureau.

Connected to Harbin by train, the large border town of Heihe sees a healthy cross-border trade with the Russian port town of Blagoveshchensk, which can be visited with a tourist visa for Russia, arranged in Beijing. Hour-long cruises along the Heilong Jiang are also available. At the northern tip of Heilongjiang is Mohe, whose main attraction is the spectacular aurora borealis (northern lights) in winter. The town records almost 22 hours of daylight in June.

The frozen Heilong Jiang, used for traveling through the heavily forested terrain

River Border Minorities

ALTHOUGH THE MAJORITY of the population in Heilongjiang is Han Chinese, the River Border is home to several minorities, including the Oroqen, Hezhen, and Ewenki. Traditionally these nomadic peoples eke out a living in this inhospitable environment. They rely on animal furs for clothes and local plants for medicines, and, when on the move, even construct tents out of birch bark. The Oroqen are hunters, descended from Khitan nomads. They speak an Altaic language and are noted for their

Medicinal berries of the Huaqiu tree

shaman and animistic customs and rituals. Numbering a few thousand, the Hezhen are one of China's least populous tribes but their skill at fishing is legendary. The Ewenki supplement their fishing and hunting mainly through breeding reindeer. For all these peoples, however, this way of life is slowly dying out: hunting has been banned in some of the mountain reserves, forcing the nomads to settle down as farmers, while others have left for the cities in search of an easier life.

The Ewenki are dependant on reindeer which are well adapted to survive in the cold climate. However this nomadic and traditional way of life is slowly disappearing.

Ewenki tents traditionally have a frame made out of birch poles that are covered with birch bark in summer and with animal skins in winter. Practical feng shui means that the entrance is usually south-facing to avoid the wind from the north.

The Hezhen are legendary for their fish-skin shirts, trousers and even shoes. The dried skins of carp, pike and salmon are stitched together to make waterproof items that are highly prized.

The Oroqen are expert hunters who even make clothes from the animals that they kill for food.

Subsidies are now enticing some of them to settle down as farmers.

The Oroqen's traditional hunting grounds have suffered from encroachment by industry as well as general deforestation and finally by China's newfound enthusiasm for wildlife preserves that have closed off large areas of the wilderness from hunting.

INNER MONGOLIA & THE SILK ROADS

INTRODUCING INNER MONGOLIA &
THE SILK ROADS 458-465
INNER MONGOLIA & NINGXIA 466-477
GANSU & QINGHAI 478-501
XINJIANG 502-515

Inner Mongolia & The Silk Roads

THIS MASSIVE REGION, forming a giant northwesterly arc linking Siberia with Central Asia, takes up a third of China's area. Geographically it ranges from forest to sandy desert to grassland, whilst ethnically these lands are home to several Chinese minorities, notably Mongolians, Uighur, and Hui, as well as, among others, Russians, Kazakhs, and Kirghiz. Three provinces – Inner Mongolia, Ningxia and Xinjiang – are officially designated autonomous regions. The main attractions in Xinjiang and Gansu are the dusty oasis towns of the Silk Road, replete with Buddhist cave paintings, evocative ruins, and chaotic markets, whilst elsewhere the appeal is the beauty of China's last great wildernesses.

A monk prays at the Gao Miao, Zhongwei

Buddha sculpture at Bingling Si, Gansu, still retaining some of its original color

GETTING AROUND

There are airports in the major towns and cities, whilst the rail network is confined to trunk routes linking major centers. Independent travelers will need to use local bus services, which are comprehensive but crowded and uncomfortable. Because of the distances involved, visitors are likely to focus on one area at a time – the Silk Road, or the Mongolian grasslands, for example.

The Yellow River at Shapotou, an oasis at the edge of the encroaching desert

SEE ALSO

- Where to Stay pp571-3
- Where to Eat pp596-7

KEY

- National highway
- Major road
- Minor road
- Mountain

Nomads beside Qinghai Hu, the largest lake in China

A PORTRAIT OF INNER MONGOLIA & THE SILK ROADS

THIS VAST REGION, COMPRISING Inner Mongolia, Ningxia, Gansu, Qinghai, and Xinjiang, covers a significant proportion of the total area of China. Although sparsely populated, the area's appeal lies in its magnificent landscape, the distinctive lifestyles of its indigenous peoples, and its Silk Road past. This fabled route's legacies are visible everywhere, from historic sights to the Islamic religion.

Bordering the Mongolian Republic and Russia to the north, the Central Asian states to the west, and the Indian subcontinent to the south, this region is now indissolubly attached to China, as a result of vigorously pursued Chinese hegemony. Today, although the local population is largely Han, they have little in common with the area's indigenous peoples. Only the eastern portion of Gansu seems naturally to form part of China proper. Gansu to the west of Lanzhou and the other provinces are at best indifferent to and at worst in uneasy thrall to the government in Beijing, which has often ruled with callous disregard for local sentiments. For the Chinese, there still lingers a historic suspicion of the barbarians living beyond the frontier marked by the course of the Great Wall.

Tiled decoration
Praying Hall, Ta'er Si

However, historic cultural identities have been retained, and this, together with the region's distinctive geography, means that Inner Mongolia and the northwest have a quite different character to most of China. Because of this, three areas – Ningxia, Xinjiang, and Inner Mongolia – are not officially provinces but so-called Autonomous Regions, where the Hui, Uighur, and Mongolian peoples theoretically have a measure of self-government. In practice, any autonomy is superficial, though local languages are spoken and religions practised reasonably freely.

Although the communities are united by their ethnic minority status, the region is by no means an organic entity. For example, the Mongolians and Uighur are only connected by the fact of their inclusion within the political borders of China. Mongolia's grasslands are inhabited by a traditionally nomadic people who obtain their livelihood through the grazing of sheep and horses. Xinjiang, the homeland of the Turkic-speaking Uighur, on the other hand, is a stony desert relieved by oases dependent upon an ancient but sophisticated system of underground irrigation channels. The one feature that links the region is the extreme nature of its climate and terrain. Whilst much of Xinjiang is flat and featureless, it is fringed by some of the world's highest mountains, including the Pamirs to the southwest and Tian Shan to the northwest.

Dramatic sand dunes near Crescent Moon Lake, Dunhuang

Incense burner in the inner courtyard of the Gao Miao, a multi-denominational temple in Zhongwei

At its center sits the Taklamakan Desert, an immense tract of sand dunes characterized by its name, which means "Go in not come out." Summers here are unbearably hot, and its winters are dry and very cold. Qinghai is a mountain plateau whilst arid Ningxia and Gansu are rendered habitable only by the presence of the Yellow River. Inner Mongolia, composed of grassland, steppe, desert, and mountain, has short, pleasant summers but cold, windswept winters.

Historically, this area's most significant period was during the great days of the Silk Road, when caravans carrying silk, spices, and tea crossed the inhospitable terrain, stopping at oasis towns along the way. Centuries later, this region became the domain of Genghis Khan, the Mongol warlord (see p471). These desert gardens are still markets where local products, from raisins to saddles and daggers, are traded just as they have been for centuries.

The most significant Silk Road monuments are the Mogao Caves in Dunhuang, perhaps the greatest repository of Buddhist murals, sculpture, and manuscripts. Other Buddhist sites such as the Labrang monastery in Gansu and Ta'er Si in Qinghai owe their origins to the influence of Tibetan Buddhism.

Statue inside the Fuxi Miao, Tianshui

Besides visiting caravanserais, grottoes, and monasteries, it is worth exploring the grasslands, mountains, and lakes such as Qinghai Hu, as some of China's last great wilderness areas can be seen here. While it is true that some of China's prosperity has begun to trickle west, it will take some time before the nomads and traders give up their ingrained habits and culture. Thus, despite its size, there are only a few large cities, in particular Lanzhou, provincial capital of Gansu, and Ürümqi, capital of Xinjiang.

Tibetan nuns gathering outside their nunnery in Xiahe, Qinghai

Mongols of the Steppe

IN THE 13TH CENTURY Genghis Khan (see p471) united the steppe-land tribes into a confederation that briefly ruled the civilized world. Today, the Mongolian nation is divided into two parts: the Mongolian Republic to the north, and the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region in China. Traditionally, Mongols are nomadic herders who travel and work on horseback, mostly on the vast, grass-rich steppe. Their diet consists largely of meat and many dairy products, including fermented mare's milk, the intoxicating airaq. In Inner Mongolia, most of the Mongolian minority now lead a sedentary life of farming. They are striving, however, to keep their traditions alive, by staging the annual Nadaam Festival, for example.

Motorbike travel has replaced the horse for many families and it is not unusual to see an entire family astride a bike which is just as likely to be seen parked outside a ger as a horse.

EQUESTRIAN SKILL

The key to the Yuan Empire's success was the Mongolians' horse-riding prowess. Horsemanship is still valued, and many learn to ride before they can walk. The sturdy Mongolian pony remains an integral feature of life in the countryside for nomadic herders.

The name Mongol, first used during the Tang dynasty, referred to several tribes. This illumination from 1350 shows that the essential lifestyle of Mongolians changed little up to the 20th century.

Gers (yurts)

are the traditional felt homes of the nomads. They are found in the rural grasslands. Permanent encampments of gers are found closer to Hohhot.

The frame comes apart for easy transportation. The wooden poles (orange like the sun) are called uni, between ten and fifteen of which support each of the khanas, or sections of wall.

Tied down skillfully to withstand fierce winds, the outer and inner skins are made of canvas, with an insulating layer of felt between.

The principal traditional garment, the deel, is a long gown tied with a brilliant sash at the waist. It is worn by both women and men and comes in different weights – lined with sheepskin for winter, quilted for spring, and made of light cloth for summer.

Colorful banners are carried by riders at the competitive Nadaam Festival.

Mongolian wrestling, a favorite event at the Nadaam Festival along with equestrianism and archery, has no weight classes and no time limits. The winner is the one who throws or trips his opponent in such a way that some part of his body touches the ground.

Leather saddles have replaced the less comfortable traditional wooden version.

Hardy Mongolian pony

Buddhism is the main religion among Mongols. Tibetan influence became very strong at the Mongolian court of Kublai Khan and by the 16th century Lamaist Buddhist images found a place in every ger.

DESERTIFICATION

The incursion of dry soil into fertile lands, desertification, is caused by overworking the soil and inappropriate irrigation, a major problem in China. In Inner Mongolia, it is severely affecting the traditional way of life, as it destroys grazing pastures. Poor farmers swarm to the area to harvest facai or “get rich” grasses removing the topsoil’s anchoring root-structure. Mongols have been encouraged to abandon the pastoral life and settle as farmers and so increase the pressures on the land.

Once-rich grassland reduced to infertile sand

Inside is warm and comfortable. A stove sits in the center of the ger, whilst the back is reserved for the family altar and is the place for elders and honored guests.

The Silk Road

A foreign – big-nosed – trader

IN REALITY several ancient trading routes between China and eastern Europe, the Silk Road – the term was coined in the 19th century by Baron von Richthofen – first became busy in the Han dynasty, exposing the Chinese capital Chang'an (Xi'an) and ultimately all of China to the influences and styles of an alien world. Technologically advanced, with a large workforce, and a monopoly on some highly valued products, China was well placed to benefit from a massive expansion in trade.

Camel caravan crossing the daunting Silk Road dunes

SILK ROAD COMMERCE

The merchants who used the Silk Road dealt not only in spices, silk, porcelain and jade but also in gold and silver, wool, Arab horses, and many other commodities. However, it was silk (see pp208–9), a mysterious Chinese invention, that particularly captivated the west.

This piece of silk dating from 1500 BC was discovered in what was Bactria, today's Afghanistan, indicating that a network of trading routes had been established long before the heyday of the Silk Road under the Tang.

Rome was a major importer of silk and knew China as "Seres" – the land of silk. This gold Roman coin was found along the Silk Road in Xinjiang.

EMPEROR WU & GENERAL ZHANG QIAN

Statue of one of Ferghana's "heavenly horses"

In the second century BC the Han emperor Wudi saw that his cavalry's horses – better suited to pulling carts – were struggling against the fast horses of his enemy, the Xiongnu. Therefore he sent Zhang Qian, his general, to Sogdiana and Ferghana to obtain some of their legendary horses. Although the mission failed, the information Zhang Qian brought back about the riches he saw led to the development of trade along the Silk Road, and the Ferghana horses did eventually make it to China.

Gold and silver were not highly prized in China until after contact with the West. These precious metals became fashionable in the Tang dynasty, as shown by this gold teacup with Middle Eastern styling.

This Chinese incense burner shows that silverworking techniques must have made it to China along with the vogue for precious metals.

The Silk Road was a series of routes linking China in the east with the Roman Empire to the west. The principal routes looped south and north of the Taklamakan Desert, to join with other branches from Siberia and India, as they headed through Central Asia and Persia as far as the Mediterranean. The route flourished in periods of calm and declined in times of war.

DETAIL FROM THE CATALAN MAP
Made in the 14th century for Charles V of France, this map gives an indication of the extent of geographical knowledge as it stood during the later Middle Ages. The inclusion of China was helped by Marco Polo's account.

The period of unrest after the demise of the Tang led to a decline in trade. The Silk Road prospered again during the Yuan dynasty when the region came under the control of the Mongol Empire. Silk was no longer a Chinese monopoly, but their porcelain was clearly the finest pottery in the world.

FOREIGN IDEAS AND RELIGIONS
Contact with foreigners meant traders brought back religions such as Buddhism, which eventually became the national religion, as well as philosophies and artistic styles.

Most artistic influences came from Gandhara, a center of Buddhism. The area's unique artistic styles developed after its conquest by Alexander the Great in the 4th century BC. This Gandharan-inspired Chinese bust recalls the graceful sculptures of Classical Greece.

This cross is evidence of Nestorianism in China around the 8th century BC. Other religions to make it to China include Islam, Judaism, and Manicheism, a Babylonian religion based on the opposing principles of Light and Darkness.

The final decline came with the large ships of the 15th century that could travel with less cost, harassment, and danger. Dwindling use saw the gradual abandonment of the caravanserais that had been the merchants' refuges.

INNER MONGOLIA & NINGXIA

THIS AREA comprises two autonomous regions, Inner Mongolia, stretching across northern China in an enormous arc, and Ningxia, China's smallest province after the island of Hainan. The region's main attractions are its great landscapes and the unique cultures of its minority people.

Much of Inner Mongolia consists of rolling grasslands dotted with the traditional tents (gers or yurts) of the nomadic Mongols. The capital of Hohhot is the most convenient place to join a tour and experience their traditional way of life, while the more adventurous can head north to the towns of Xilinhot and Haila'er, where vast tracts of untouched wilderness lie waiting to be explored. The historic Mongolian homeland was made up of the independent Republic of Mongolia, Inner Mongolia (now in China), and parts of Siberia.

Bordering Inner Mongolia to the south, Ningxia was first established in 1928. In the 1950s, it became part of Gansu, and in 1958 was designated an autonomous region for the indigenous Hui (see p475). Living in pockets throughout China, the Muslim Hui descended from Arab Silk Road traders, but are now largely assimilated with the Han culture. Despite some industrialization, Ningxia is a largely undeveloped region with a smattering of interesting sights. At the foot of the scenic Helan mountains near the capital of Yinchuan stand the crumbling tombs of the Western Xia dynasty. The Xumi Shan Caves near Guyuan are another key sight with a wealth of Buddhist carvings.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Baotou 2
- Dongsheng 3
- Haila'er 5
- Hohhot 1
- Manzhouli 6
- Yinchuan 8

Historic Sites

- Xanadu 7
- ### Areas of Natural Beauty
- Xilinhot 4
 - Zhongwei 11

Mountains, Grottoes & Caves

- Guyuan 12
- Helan Shan 9

Monasteries & Stupas

- 108 Dagobas p477 10

◁ Traditional Mongolian tent or ger on the steppes of Inner Mongolia

Hohhot ①

呼和浩特

255 miles (410 km) W of Beijing.
 2,000,000. 10 miles (16 km) E
 of town. CITS Tongda Hotel,
 Chezhan Dong Jie, (0471) 696 5978.

A SMALL BUDDHIST settlement since the Ming era, Hohhot became the capital of Inner Mongolia in 1952. Although it has expanded considerably in recent years, the city has kept some of its charm, visible in traditional mud-brick houses in the south, as well as a few temples and an excellent museum. However, the surrounding grasslands and the traditional way of life they support are probably the main interest. The greenery in summer makes it the best time to visit the city. Hohhot is largely inhabited by Han Chinese, with a small Mongol and Hui population.

Inner Mongolia Museum

Hulunbei'er Lu.

9:30am–5pm daily.

Situated in the center of the new part of town, the Inner Mongolia Museum is definitely worth visiting for an insight into the history and traditions of the Mongolian people. The museum's ground floor exhibits the paraphernalia used by the nomadic Mongols, including saddles, costumes, archery

Local fruit stall being carried on a bicycle and polo equipment, and a ger (portable tent used by Central Asian nomads). The museum also has an excellent collection of fossils discovered in Inner and Outer Mongolia, including the complete skeleton of a woolly rhinoceros unearthed from a coal mine in Manzhouli (see p474), as well as several impressive dinosaur skeletons. The museum's upper floor is dedicated to the life of Genghis Khan, who, in the 13th century, united the disparate Mongol tribes and established arguably the largest land empire in human history. Some of the maps and objects on display have English captions.

Dinosaur skeletons on display at the Inner Mongolia Museum

Great Mosque

Tongdao Nan Jie. daily.

In the old southwestern part of the city, the attractive Great Mosque (Qingzhen Da Si) is best known for its fusion of both Chinese and Arab architectural influences. The main building, dating from the Qing dynasty, is constructed in black brick, while its minaret has a Chinese-style pagoda roof. It is an active place of worship, which permits non-Muslim visitors, especially if they are accompanied by a local Hui worshiper. The mosque's prayer area, however, is reserved for Muslims. The surrounding Muslim area is well worth exploring, with its narrow alleys lined with restaurants selling delicious noodles and kabobs.

Xilitu Zhao

Tongdao Nan Jie. daily.

A short walk south of the Great Mosque in the old city, the Xilitu Zhao (Xilitu Temple) started off as a small Ming-dynasty temple and is one of Hohhot's oldest shrines. This Tibetan-Buddhist temple became the spiritual home of the 11th Grand Living Buddha in 1735. Since then, it has served as the official residence of successive reincarnations of the Grand Living Buddha, who presides over Buddhist affairs in the city. This version of the temple was built in the 19th century, after its predecessor burned down. Xilitu Zhao was also badly damaged during the Cultural Revolution, but has since been heavily restored. It is essentially

Main prayer hall at the Tibetan-Buddhist Xilitu Zhao

Chinese in style, with a few Tibetan elements. Its dagoba (Tibetan-style stupa), for example, features Sanskrit writing, Chinese dragons, and tantric Tibetan murals that vividly depict the horrors of hell in gory detail. The temple is still active and the monks here are friendly and speak English. They are usually happy to show visitors around.

Da Zhao

Tongdao Nan Jie. ☉ daily. 📷

The largest Buddhist temple in the city, the Da Zhao is located in a narrow alley just west of Tongdao Nan Jie. Similar in style and layout to the Xilitu Zhao, it was originally built in 1579, and most recently renovated during the 1990s. The shrine was dedicated to the renowned Qing emperor, Kangxi, in the late 17th century, and murals in the main hall commemorate his visit. An astounding 10-ft (3-m) silver Sakyamuni Buddha is amongst the temple's many treasures. Da Zhao also boasts an extensive collection of musical instruments and dragon sculptures, and is the venue for Buddhist festivals held through the year.

Wusutu Zhao, Hohhot's Mongolian temple

Wu Ta Si

☉ 9am–7pm daily. 📷

Just south of Qingcheng Park, amidst the remains of the old city, the Indian-style Wu Ta Si (Five Towers Temple) is one of Hohhot's most attractive buildings. It was constructed in 1727, as part of another temple that has now disappeared. The distinctive five pagodas surmount a solid-looking base that contains a smallish temple with 1,563 images of the Buddha carved into its walls, each differing slightly from the others. Inside is a rare Mongolian cosmological map carved onto a large stone, which illustrates a zodiac and the positions of numerous stars.

Guardian, Wusutu Zhao

Wusutu Zhao

7 miles (12 km) NW of Hohhot. ☉ 9:30am–4:30pm daily. 📷

Founded in 1606, the predominantly

Mongolian-styled Wusutu Zhao includes some Chinese and Tibetan features. Inside the monastery there are Ming-dynasty murals on display as well as some intricate woodcarvings with imperial dragon motifs. The name "wusutu" means "near to water" in Mongolian. The nearby grasslands and Daqing mountains make pleasant day-trips from town.

The open grasslands, traditional home to nomadic Mongols

THE GRASSLANDS

Mongolia's history is linked to its grasslands, and for many people, the classic image of the Mongolian landscape is unbroken grassy steppe spreading to the horizon. The steppe provides fodder for the horses and sheep that support the Mongolians' nomadic lifestyle. The three grassland areas accessible from Hohhot are Xilamuren, 50 miles (80 km) north; Huitengxile, 75 miles (120 km) west; and Gegentela, 93 miles (150 km) north. The easiest way to explore them is by taking a tour, which includes a stay in a village of traditional tents (gers), where visitors attend a banquet and watch Mongolian sports. Though obviously stage-managed, they do show something of Mongolian culture. One can also travel independently by hiring a horse, or negotiating an overnight stay in a ger belonging to a local.

Bai Ta

9 miles (15km) east of Hohhot

☉ 8am–5:30pm daily.

Bai Ta (White Pagoda) is a seven-storied, octagonal structure. It was first built in the 10th century to house Buddhist scriptures dating from the Liao dynasty (see pp50–51). Over 164 ft (50 m) high, and made of wood and brick, it has some striking carvings inspired by Chinese mythology and nature, including coiled dragons, flowers, and birds. A winding staircase leads to the top, from where there are panoramic views. Bai Ta is best reached by taking a taxi from town.

Buddhist mural outside a hall at Wudang Zhao monastery, Baotou

Baotou ②

包头

105 miles (170 km) W of Hohhot. 1,225,000. ☒ from Beijing. f Baotou Hotel, (0472) 515 4615.

THE LARGEST CITY in Inner Mongolia, Baotou was once an arid and undeveloped region, inhabited by Mongolian herders of sheep and horses. Today, it is an industrial community, made up largely of Han Chinese, with a visible Mongol presence. The town is divided into three principal areas – Donghe, the oldest part of town lies to the east, while the western area consists of Qingshan, the main shopping district, and Kundulun, the industrial hub. While Qingshan resembles any modern Chinese town, with its tower blocks and array of shops, Kundulun is a depressing leftover from the Communist era, with large, bleak squares, and no sign of greenery. Donghe, a pleasant quarter of streets lined with mud-brick houses and their cluttered courtyards, lends color to this fairly drab city.

ENVIRONS: The region's best-preserved Lamaist monastery, Wudang Zhao lies 43 miles (70 km) northeast of Baotou in a tranquil valley. Built in 1749 in the Tibetan flat-roofed style, it quickly became an important place of pilgrimage, and was home to several hundred monks belonging to the Yellow Hat Sect. It houses a collection of Buddhist murals from the Qing era.

Just 6 miles (10 km) south of Baotou lies a section of the Yellow River that inscribes a huge northerly loop enclosing an area called the Ordos, which was not conquered by the Chinese until the Qing era. The irrigation projects made possible by the Yellow River have made this area a fertile oasis. There is little to see besides the river, but its sluggish progress through the flat, cultivated landscape is impressive.

South of Baotou is the great Gobi, a desert that stretches across the northern reaches of Inner Mongolia and the Republic of Mongolia. The Resonant Sand Gorge, 37 miles (60 km) south of Baotou, is filled with sand dunes, some of which soar 295 ft (90 m) high. Visitors slip and slide on the dunes, and its name refers to the sound made by the falling sand. Paragliding and camel rides are also available, and a chairlift shuttles visitors from the main road.

Plaque in four scripts, Wudang Zhao

- Wudang Zhao
- ☉ daily. 📍
- Resonant Sand Gorge
- ☉ daily. 📍

Dongsheng ③

东胜

62 miles (100 km) S of Baotou.

📍 95,000. 📍

REASONABLY ATTRACTIVE, the small town of Dongsheng serves mainly as a base for visiting Genghis Khan's Mausoleum (Ejin Horo Qi), a rather uncomfortable bus trip 30 miles (50 km) to the south. It is almost certain that Genghis Khan is not buried here, as his real tomb is thought to lie in the Hentei Mountains near Ulan Batur in the Republic of Mongolia. However, scholars believe that this site contains a few relics of the Great Khan, and it has grown into a place of pilgrimage for many Mongolians. The mausoleum consists of three conjoined halls, each echoing the shape of a ger (Mongolian tent) decorated with murals. The middle hall has a large statue of Genghis with a map of his empire. Some of the halls are bedecked with hangings, and contain gers, altars, and other religious paraphernalia. Special ceremonies are held here four times a year to honor Genghis Khan, attracting pilgrims from all over Mongolia.

📍 Genghis Khan's Mausoleum

☉ 8am–7:30pm daily. 📍

Genghis Khan's Mausoleum, a place of pilgrimage for Mongolians

Genghis Khan

BORN IN 1162 to the head of the Kiyat-Borjigen tribe, Genghis Khan (or Chinggis Khan) was given the name Temujin. A born fighter, as a teenager he killed his half-brother and in 1206 he was proclaimed Genghis Khan (meaning universal king). He unified Mongolia's warring fiefdoms into a huge army of up to 200,000 warriors that invaded China and much of Asia, and eventually created one of the greatest land empires in history.

Genghis Khan's statue from his mausoleum

The secret of his success was the skilful use of cavalry and the toughness of the Mongolians who could survive on very little. Their dietary needs were met either from their horses or from the countryside. Genghis died in 1227, before the capture of Peking, after falling from his horse. In fact it was after his death that the Mongol armies made most of their conquests, but it was thanks to his organization and determination in the first place.

The empire of Genghis Khan's successors at its greatest extent shown on a modern map

Genghis Khan was a supreme organizer and tactician. He also created the first Mongolian code of law, the "Yasak," and promoted the growth of trade between China and Europe.

Mongolian bow's unique shape gave it a better range than standard bows.

Lance for close-quarters fighting

THE MONGOLIAN WARRIOR

This Persian picture, painted 100 years after Genghis Khan's death, shows him fighting the Tartars. The key to Mongolian success was their horsemen. They were disciplined, mobile, and heavily armed, and their ferocity and skill were unmatched at the time.

Mongolian horses were small but sturdy.

The cavalry were supreme horsemen and able to fight on the move.

Genghis Khan's Mausoleum is perhaps reminiscent of a Mongolian ger or tent. After his death his body was carried by thousands of his followers and taken back to Mongolia. The site of his burial is unknown.

The vast expanse of the Hulunbuir grasslands around Haila'er

Xilinhot ④

锡林浩特

310 miles (500 km) NE of Hohhot. ☒ from Beijing. ☒ to Erlanhot, then bus. ☒ from Hohhot, check with PSB if a permit is required. 📞 Baima Fandian, (0479) 822 3592.

SITUATED right in the heart of the province's grasslands, Xilinhot's main draw is a visit to the Mongolian wilderness, inhabited by nomadic sheep herders in their muchang jia (pastureland homes). The tours available here are quieter and cheaper than the ones around Hohhot. Independent trips can also be organized through private tour agents.

Haila'er ⑤

海拉尔

219 miles (350 km) NE of Xilinhot. ☒ from Beijing & Hohhot. ☒ from Harbin, Qiqihar & Beijing. 📞 📞 Beiyuan Hotel, Shengli Jie, (0470) 822 4017.

CLOSE TO THE Russian border, Haila'er is Inner Mongolia's northernmost town. This small settlement on the banks of the Amur River is a good base for visiting the grasslands in summer. The town's main sight is the network of tunnels used by the Japanese army during World War II. Built by Chinese prisoners, they were used as defensive bunkers along Haila'er's northwestern ridge, which marked the western boundary of Japan's advance into China. Beyond Haila'er lie the Hulunbuir Grasslands, an expanse of rolling plains threaded by rivers and inhabited by herds of sheep and horses. Tours are arranged by the tourist office.

Manzhouli ⑥

满洲里

116 miles (186 km) W of Haila'er. ☒ from Haila'er & Harbin. ☒ from Haila'er. 📞 35 Erdao Jie, (0470) 622 8114.

FOR LONG INHABITED only by nomads, the border town of Manzhouli became a permanent settlement in 1901, as a stop on the Trans-Manchurian and Trans-Siberian railways. Steam locomotives can still be seen in the shunting yards at Zalainuo'er. Russian influences are still apparent in the architecture, mainly the wooden cottages with painted shutters and stucco buildings in pre-Revolutionary style. The main attraction, however, is Dalai Hu or Hulun Nur to the south. Surrounded by marshy grasslands, it is one of China's largest lakes, where migratory swans, geese, and cranes come to nest. The tourist office organizes grassland tours, where visitors can stay in gers (tents).

Xanadu ⑦

夏那都

280 miles (450 km) NE of Hohhot. ☒ arranged by tourist office in Xilinhot, Baima Fandian, (0479) 822 4448.

CLOSE TO INNER Mongolia's border near Duolun lie the remains of Yuanshangdu or Xanadu, the site of the legendary palace of Kublai Khan, grandson of Genghis Khan (see p471). One of China's greatest emperors, Kublai Khan and his magnificent summer palace were exalted in Samuel Taylor Coleridge's poem which begins with the lines "In Xanadu did Kubla Khan a stately pleasure-dome decree." The palace was abandoned by the Khan during his lifetime, and eventually crumbled. There is little left to see, but those who wish to visit can contact Xilinhot's tourist office.

Manzhouli, the last stop in China on the Trans-Manchurian railway line

Yinchuan ⑧

银川

326 miles (525 km) SW of Hohhot.

📍 929,000. 📏 15 miles (25 km) SE of Yinchuan. 📞 (0951) 672 7898.

SITUATED IN THE NORTH OF Ningxia, in the lee of the Helan mountains, Yinchuan is well protected from the harsh desert climate, and makes a good base from which to explore the surrounding sights. Watered by the Yellow River, this lush and leafy city was the capital of the little-known Western Xia Kingdom from around the 11th century onward, which has left few traces of its short existence except for a set of dagobas, and a handful of imperial tombs located 12 miles (20 km) outside the city (see p476). This mysterious dynasty materialized in the early 11th century, in the area north of Han China. Following a period of expansion from AD 982 to the 1030s, the Western Xia empire included all of modern-day Ningxia, as well as parts of Shaanxi, Gansu, Qinghai, and Inner Mongolia. Although the Chinese considered them barbarians, they achieved a considerable level of sophistication, partly through the assimilation of Tang culture, until their kingdom was sacked by the invading Mongols in 1227.

Sign advertising a fortune teller outside Haibao Ta

Today, Yinchuan is a pleasant and lively city, with a handful of interesting things to see. It consists of two parts, the new town (Xin Cheng) to the west near the railway station, and the old town (Lao Cheng), 4 miles (7 km) east, where the city's main bus station and most of the sights are located.

Jiefang Jie, the old town's main thoroughfare, has two well-restored, traditional Chinese towers. One is the large Gulou (Drum Tower), while farther east lies the Yuhuang Ge (Yuhuang Pavilion), which dates back to the Ming dynasty. Just south of the Drum Tower, Gulou Jie is the heart of the city's busy shopping district and is lined with department stores.

The stately Gulou (Drum Tower) in Yinchuan's old town

West of Gulou Jie stands the 13-story, octagonal Xi Ta (West Pagoda), built within the grounds of the Chetian Temple. Originally built in the 11th century, the temple houses the Ningxia Provincial Museum which has a large collection of Western Xia artifacts. The museum also displays splendid items from the Silk Road era, and has a section on the indigenous Hui people. Followers of Islam, the Hui originally descended from Arab and Persian traders from the Middle East, who came to China during the Tang and Yuan eras.

Southeast of the museum, close to the bus station, is the South Gate (Nan Men) which resembles a miniature version of Beijing's Tian'an Men. A short walk southwest of Nan Men, Nanguan Mosque is a modern building constructed in 1981 to replace the original 1915 shrine. It is an active place of worship that caters to Yinchuan's Hui population.

Unlike most mosques in China, it has hardly any Chinese features, and is built in a distinct Middle-Eastern style. In the northern reaches of the old town, the ancient Haibao Ta stands in the grounds of an active monastery. According to records, the 177-ft (54-m) tower, also known as the Northern Pagoda (Bei Ta), was first built in the 5th century AD. It was rebuilt in the 18th century in the original style, after an earthquake destroyed it in 1739. It is an unusually angular structure, with ledges and niches at every level. It is worth making the climb to the top of its nine stories, as there are terrific views across the city to the Yellow River and Helan mountains.

📍 Gulou & Yuhuang Ge

Jiefang Jie. ☑ 8:30am–5pm daily. 📞

📍 Ningxia Provincial Museum & Xi Ta

Jinning Nan Jie. ☑ 9am–5pm daily.

📞 separate fees for the temple grounds, pagoda, & museum.

📍 Nanguan Mosque

Yuhuangge Nan Jie. ☑ daily. 📞

The 1,500-year-old Haibao Ta in northern Yinchuan

The striking Xi Xia Wang Ling (Western Xia Tombs) in Helan Shan

Helan Shan ⑨

贺兰山

12 miles (20 km) W of Yinchuan. 🚗
or taxi. 📍 Yinchuan Tourist Office,
116 Jiefang Xijie, (0951) 504 8006.

LOOMING OVER Yinchuan, about 12 miles (20 km) to the west, the 11,667-ft (3,556-m) high mountain range, Helan Shan, has some interesting historical places to visit. At the foot of its eastern slopes lie the Xi Xia Wang Ling, the royal tombs of the Western Xia dynasty (1038–1227). Spread over a large area, these crumbling but still impressive mounds commemorate the 12 Xia kings. The Gunzhong Pass, farther west, makes for pleasant hikes in the surrounding hills if the weather is fine. Located 5 miles (8 km) north of the pass are the 39-ft (12-m) twin pagodas, Baisikou Shuang Ta, decorated with Buddha statues. Nearby, at Suyu Kou, are hundreds of rock paintings, of uncertain age, depicting animals and human figures. These sights can all be visited in a day by hiring a minibus or car from Yinchuan.

🚗 Xi Xia Wang Ling

22 miles (35 km) W of Yinchuan.
🕒 8am–7pm. 📍

108 Dagobas ⑩

See p477.

Zhongwei ⑪

中卫

106 miles (170 km) SW of Yinchuan.
🚗 🚗 📍 Zhongwei Travel Service,
Yixing Dajiuadian, (0953) 701 2620.

THE PLEASANT TOWN of Zhongwei lies between the Tengger Desert to the north and the Yellow River to the south. This small settlement can easily be explored on foot or by cycle-rickshaw. At its center lies a traditional Drum Tower (Gulou) dating to the Ming era. Zhongwei's main sight is the 15th-century Gao Miao, a rather bizarre temple which serves Buddhists, Daoists, Confucianists, and Christians alike. It was Painting on upper pavilion, Gao Miao

Carved entrance of the multi-denominational Gao Miao, Zhongwei originally built for Buddhists, but somehow developed ecumenically, which is reflected in the welter of well over 200 chapels and rooms. Rebuilt several times, the temple, in its present form, is an interesting amalgamation of architectural styles.

ENVIRONS: About 9 miles (15 km) west of Zhongwei, the spectacular resort of Shapotou lies on the banks of the Yellow River, between riverbank vegetation on one side, and the striking sand dunes of the desert, on the other. Accessed by minibus from Zhongwei, the Shapotou Desert Research Center was founded in 1956 to reclaim fertile land from the desert. It has met with some success, as seen in the groves of trees and surrounding cultivation. It is now a resort, offering camel rides and trips down river on traditional rafts that are kept afloat with inflated sheep skins. Sand sleds are available to rent for those who wish to speed down the sand dune slopes.

📍 Gao Miao

Gulou Bei Jie. 🕒 daily. 📍

🚗 Shapotou

🕒 8:30am–5pm daily. 📍

Guyuan ⑫

固原

286 miles (460 km) NW of Yinchuan.

🚗 🚗 Xumi Shan Caves 📍 from Guyuan to Sanying, then taxi.

IN THE SOUTHERN part of Ningxia, Guyuan serves as a base for visiting the Xumi Shan (Treasure Mountain) Caves, 31 miles (50 km) to the northwest. Set in dramatic sandstone hills, these Buddhist grottoes – numbering well over a hundred – are relics from the greatest era of the Silk Road, mostly the period covering the Northern Wei, Sui, and Tang dynasties. They contain more than 300 well-preserved Buddhist statues, the most famous being a colossal Maitreya (Future) Buddha, which stands 62 ft (19 m) high in Cave 5.

108 Dagobas 10

108塔

SET IN THE DESERT near the town of Qingtongxia Zhen, the 108 Dagobas stand in twelve gleaming rows, spread out in a perfect triangular formation overlooking the Yellow River. A Buddhist monument, it is not clear exactly what their purpose is. Traditionally it has been thought that they were placed here during the Yuan Dynasty (1279–1368) but recent thinking is that there may be some link to the Western Xia Empire. 108 is a significant number in Chinese numerology: there are 108 prayer beads in a Buddhist rosary – the same number of possible sins or worries.

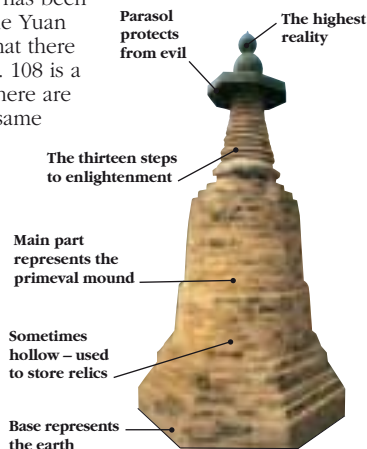

★ Hillside Location

Impressive as the dagobas are, a good reason for visiting them is to get out in the quiet surrounding hills and do a bit of walking. Here you can find quiet temples at the top of some testing steps as well as some inspirational graffiti.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

50 miles (85 km) S of Yinchuan.

🚗 or 🚏 from Yinchuan to Qingtongxia Zhen, then minibus or taxi. 🕒 daily. 📶

★ The Dagobas

Like the Indian stupa, the dagoba is a deeply symbolic icon. In early Buddhist art, Buddha was never shown in human form, instead a stupa became his symbol.

VIEWING THE DAGOBAS

The best view is from a boat on the river – if the water level is high enough. The site is in excellent condition as a result of an over-zealous restoration.

STAR FEATURES

- ★ Hillside Location
- ★ The Dagobas

WESTERN XIA EMPIRE

Western Xia Coin

This mysterious dynasty materialized in the early 11th century when they established the Great Xia empire in the area north of what was Han China. Known as Tanguts – and probably from Tibet – they were briefly strong enough to build up a small empire and force tribute from the Song rulers in China. However, they were so thoroughly defeated by the Mongols in 1227 that little evidence of their existence remains except for some coins, books, and a famous stele covered in their feathery script (now in Xi'an).

GANSU & QINGHAI

FOR CENTURIES, Gansu and Qinghai were regarded as frontier provinces that marked the outer limits of ancient China. A harsh and rugged region, Gansu connects the Chinese heartland with the vast desert regions to the northwest. The Hexi Corridor, running 750 miles (1,200 km) between two mountain ranges and dotted with oases, formed a link between China and the West. The Silk Road passed through here, as did the Great Wall, and later, the region's only railway line. The Yellow River flows through Lanzhou, for centuries a major stop along the Silk Road. To the southwest lies the Tibetan town of Xiahe and its splendid Labrang Monastery. In the desert landscape northwest of Lanzhou are two great historical relics – the mighty Ming fortress of Jiayuguan and the cave art at Dunhuang.

Lying between Gansu and Tibet, Qinghai is a vast mountain plateau inhabited by a mere 5 million people. In every respect – culturally, historically, and geographically – it is part of the Tibetan Plateau, and was once the Tibetan province of Amdo, becoming part of China only in the 18th century. Due to its remoteness, it has been used as the site for several prison camps for political dissidents. The province, however, abounds in natural beauty, with lush valleys around the capital of Xining, and miles of unspoiled wilderness around Qinghai Hu, China's largest lake. It also houses one of the country's greatest Tibetan lamaseries, Ta'er Si, and provides access into Tibet from Golmud and Xining across some of the highest mountains in the world.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Dunhuang 12
- Golmud 18
- Langmusi 3
- Lanzhou 6
- Linxia 5
- Pingliang 8
- Tongren 13
- Wuwei 9
- Xining 15
- Zhangye 10

Mountains, Caves & Lakes

- Bingling Si 7
- Luomen 2
- Maji Shan pp480-1 1
- Mengda Tian Chi 16
- Qinghai Hu 17

Monasteries & Temples

- Ta'er Si pp500-1 14
- Xiahe 4

KEY

- Domestic airport
- Major road
- Minor road
- Railroad
- International border
- Provincial border
- Great Wall

Historic Sites

Jiayuguan Fort pp492-3 11

Maiji Shan ❶

麦积山

Buddha's disciple

THE SITE OF ONE of China's most important groups of Buddhist carvings, Maiji Shan (Corn Rick Mountain) rises up spectacularly like Sumeru, the holy mountain of Buddhist myth. It is likely that the first sculptures were made around the end of the 4th century AD, and work continued up to the Qing dynasty. It therefore provides an invaluable insight into the development of Chinese Buddhist artistic style. Almost 200 caves survive and are reached by a series of precipitous stairways. However, many of the best caves are closed to visitors and the gloomy interiors have to be viewed through grilles, so bring a flashlight.

Maiji Shan, said to resemble a corn rick or haystack from afar

★ Colossal Buddha: Cave 98

This finely worked 53-ft (16-m) high statue of Amitabha Buddha is portrayed attended by two smaller statues of Avalokitesvara. The move away from classical Indian-style Buddha sculptures is clearly evident here.

WORKING WITH CLAY

Because of the friable nature of the stone at Maiji Shan, many of the statues were not hewn out of the rock but modelled from clay stuck onto a wooden frame. Although they are not as well preserved as a result, they are more lively and with more detail than similar carvings in the Buddhist caves at, for example, Dunhuang. There are a few stone statues at Maiji Shan, but these have been carved from specially imported rock.

Statue showing details of dress and hairstyle

Cave 135, Cave of Heaven

Cave 5, Calf Hall

Cave 133 is actually a tomb and home to many sculptures and engravings. It is considered one of the most exquisite holy caves.

STAR SIGHTS

★ Colossal Buddhas

★ Gallery Views

Upper Seven Buddhas: Cave 4

The upper gallery of Buddhas includes this magnificent Song-dynasty guardian. The cave complex itself is said to have been built by the local governor Li Yunxin, as early as the sixth century.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

28 miles (45 km) SE of Tianshui.

☎ (0938) 223 1075.

🚗🚗 from Beidao, Tianshui.

🕒 8:30am–5:30pm. 🗝 for an additional large fee, the closed caves may be opened. 📷 included in entry fee. 🚫

Cave 3, Thousand Buddha Corridor

★ Colossal Buddhas: Cave 13

These huge statues originally date from the Sui dynasty and were then repaired during the Ming dynasty. The myriad holes around the statues were probably used to support a protective framework.

Middle Seven Buddhas: Cave 9

These figures show a transitional phase between Indian-influenced sculpture and later Song-era figures, with pure Chinese characteristics. The statues are well-proportioned and slim in stature, with realistic drapes to their clothes.

Cave 43, is the tomb of a Wei-dynasty empress.

★ Gallery Views

There are excellent views across the countryside from the network of walkways on the cliff face of Maiji Shan. If time allows, a bike around the Botanical Garden at the foot of the cliff is recommended.

Rock carvings at Lashao Si, Luomen, depicting Sakyamuni Buddha

Luomen ②

洛门

155 miles (250 km) SE of Lanzhou.

Water Curtain Thousand Buddha Caves minibus from Luomen.

THE SMALL TOWN of Luomen serves as a base for visiting the Water Curtain Thousand Buddha Caves, situated in a spectacular gorge in the nearby mountains. Remote and accessible only by a rough road, which is actually a riverbed, the caves cannot be reached in bad weather as the road becomes unusable. The main attractions are a 98-ft (30-m) Sakyamuni (the Historical Buddha), carved into a rock face, and Lashao Si, a temple built into a cave in the mountainside that has paintings and carvings dating from the Northern Wei dynasty (AD 386–534). Visitors can reach Luomen by bus or train from Tianshui, or from Lanzhou.

Langmusi ③

郎木寺

170 miles (270 km) S of Lanzhou.

from Lanzhou, Linxia or Xiahe to Hezuo, then direct bus to Langmusi.

REMARKABLE FOR its unhurried pace, the remote mountain town of Langmusi is inhabited by a mix of Tibetan, Hui, and Han Chinese. While the hills offer miles of unspoiled country with trails for walking and riding, several active temples dot the town. Built in 1413, the Dacheng Lamo Kerti Gompa is the place of worship for several hundred monks, who study astrology and medicine, apart from Tibetan Buddhist theology. Traditional sky-burials, where the dead are left for birds of prey, also take place here. However, visitors are not permitted to view the last rites.

Dacheng Lamo Kerti Gompa
 daily.

Xiahe ④

夏河

175 miles (280 km) SW of Lanzhou.

Monlam (Great Prayer) Festival (Feb/Mar).

PERCHED AT A HEIGHT of 6,860 ft (2,090 m) in a mountain valley at the edge of the Tibetan plateau – that is now a part of Gansu – Xiahe is a significant Tibetan monastery town that attracts many devout Buddhist pilgrims to its Labrang Monastery every year. As a result the town's population is a mix of Hui, Tibetan, and Han Chinese.

Xiahe's location offers many opportunities to explore the surrounding grasslands preferably on horseback, although cycling is an option for some. The town itself comprises a single street, running along the Daxia River. The commercial part of town is at the eastern end; the Labrang Monastery is in the center; while the Tibetan quarter is at the western end, offering glimpses of the Tibetan way of life. This town is worth a visit, especially for those not going to Tibet.

ENVIRONS: Lying near Sangke village, 5 miles (10 km) west of Xiahe, is a lake surrounded by the Sangke grasslands, used by nomads for grazing their yaks. This huge area of grass and flowers can be accessed by road, although a fee is charged. Another 19 miles (30 km) north lie the even more vast and picturesque Gancha Grasslands.

Breathtaking alpine scenery around Langmusi

Labrang Monastery

拉卜楞寺

Labrang
monk

THE MOST IMPORTANT CENTER of the Yellow Hat Sect (Gelugpa) outside Tibet, the Labrang Monastery (Labuleng Si) attracts Tibetan pilgrims in their thousands. As a result of the Cultural Revolution the monastery was closed until 1980 and the number of monks reduced from 4,000 to about 1,200 or less. Set in an auspicious location with the Dragon mountains to the north and the Daxia river to the south, the impressive monastery buildings are joined by a haphazard maze of alleways that makes it a fascinating place to wander around.

Main prayer hall, Labrang Monastery

Exploring the Labrang Monastery

This monastery was founded in 1709 during the forty-eighth year of the reign of the Qing Kangxi emperor by a local monk, E'Ang Zongzhe. He became the first generation Living Buddha, or Jiemuyang, who ranks third in the Tibetan hierarchy after the Dalai and Panchen Lamas. The monastery's buildings came through the Cultural Revolution relatively unscathed, but in 1985 a fire seriously damaged the Grand Sutra Hall, which has subsequently been fully restored. Today the sprawling monastery complex dominates the town. It is actually impossible to see where the town stops and the monastery begins, they are so inextricably woven together.

The monastery is built in a typical Tibetan style and consists of six grand halls for the study of scriptures or sutras, eighteen Buddha temples, offices for the Living Buddha and many hundreds of residences for the monks. The monastery is also an academic institution and holds an assortment of around 60,000 sutras and specialized books. The large halls are colleges for the monks to study a variety of degrees such as mathematics, astronomy, medicine and other more esoteric subjects.

The Grand Sutra Hall

is the most impressive of the buildings and can hold up to 4,000 monks. It is an eerily impressive sight to see the monks chanting here each morning as they wait to go in and pray. Labrang also has a multitude of prayer wheels set

Senior Yellow
Hat monk

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Xiahe 160 miles (260 km) SW of Lanzhou. 🚗 Linxia, Lanzhou or Tongren. 🕒 8am–noon, 2pm–6pm daily. 📅 Nov–Feb. 📖 required for the main temple. 🎉 Monlam Festival 4th–16th of the 1st Lunar month (see pp44–5).

in a long line that encircles the monastery. Spinning these was, and still is, a way for the largely illiterate Tibetan people to pray.

Within the prayer wheels stands the Gongtang Pagoda, south of the main road. At nearly 100-ft high (31-m) it comprises five levels topped with a gold colored stupa containing thousands of sutras and Buddha statues. You can climb up to the upper level and get an outstanding view over the monastery and town. Parts of Labrang can only be visited as a member of a tour group, although much of the monastery can be freely explored. There are a couple of tours in English each day. Visitors, of course, should be sensitive to the religious nature of the site.

Xiahe is also famous for its Monlam festival. Witnessed by thousands who have come from all over the country, a huge thangka of Buddha is unfurled and sanctified on a screen to the south of the Daxia River. There follows several days of festivities including processions, musical performances, and dances.

View over the monastery with the gleaming Gongtang Pagoda to the left

Bunches of noodles tied up and ready for sale, Linxia

Linxia ⑤

临夏

62 miles (100 km) SW of Lanzhou.

🏞️ 140,000. 🚗 from Lanzhou. 🚗

A PLEASANT PLACE for ambling leisurely through streets bustling with locals, Linxia has a predominantly Muslim character, defined by the resident Hui minority. It was once a stopover for travelers passing between Lanzhou and the South Pass along the Silk Road. The town is still a good place to break the journey between Lanzhou and Xiahe. However, it offers very few attractions aside from its numerous mosques. The most prominent is the large and impressive Nanguan Mosque, just off the main square.

Linxia's appeal lies in its colorful markets and pleasant teahouses. The markets are lined with shops selling carved gourds, carpets, and saddlery. Most interesting are the local spectacles, made from ground crystal lenses fitted into metal frames, which many elderly men can be seen wearing. At the top end of Jiefang Nan Lu in the south of town is the delightful night market with numerous stalls stocked with aromatic curry-flavored breads (bing) and huge piles of noodles – fresh and dried.

Linxia is also a center for the Dongxiang minority, who speak their own Altaic language, and are supposedly descendants of 13th-century immigrants, who moved here after Kublai Khan invaded their homelands in Central Asia.

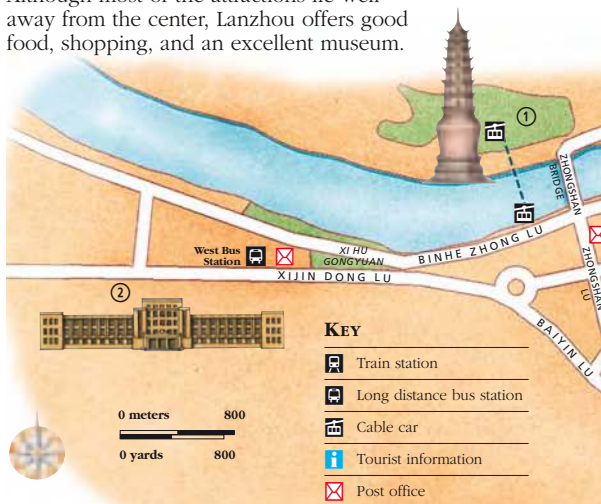

Lanzhou ⑥

兰州

Elephant drum

A LARGE INDUSTRIAL CITY and Gansu's capital, Lanzhou has for long been the key transport link between the Chinese heartlands and the Northwest. It was an important stop on the Silk Road at the beginning of the Hexi Corridor, and is thus culturally closer to the Northwest than to Central China. The Yellow River flows through the center of the city, and for centuries Lanzhou was the principal point for crossing the river. In fact, until the 19th century, a bridge created by chaining together a flotilla of boats was used. The first iron bridge was built in 1907. Although most of the attractions lie well away from the center, Lanzhou offers good food, shopping, and an excellent museum.

Yellow River flanked by the lush Baita Shan Gongyuan & Lanzhou city

🌿 Baita Shan Gongyuan

🕒 6am–6pm daily. 🚶

To the north of the river, near Zhongshan Bridge, is Baita Shan Gongyuan (White Pagoda Hill Park). It takes its name from the 13th-century pagoda, Bai Ta, which was built as part of a temple at the hill's summit. Steps have been carved into the steep slopes, while the walkways are dotted with teahouses, mosques, a plant nursery, and assorted pavilions. Chairlifts take visitors to the top from inside the park, or from town, on the other side of the river.

🏛️ Gansu Provincial Museum

Xijin Xi Lu. ☐ Mon-Sat. 📄
This museum is set in an old Soviet-style building west of town. The ground floor has a natural history section with a mammoth skeleton found in the Yellow River in 1973. Captioned in English, the history section upstairs is best known for the striking 2,000-year-old bronze Flying Horse, with its hoof resting on the back of a swallow, that was discovered in an Eastern Han tomb in Wuwei.

Flying Horse statue at Lanzhou's train station

Also worth seeing are the bronze chariots, with horses and attendants, from a tomb in the same area, as well as a fine collection of Yangshao pottery dating from the late Neolithic period. Other relics include Silk Road carvings, wooden spills, statuary, and writing tablets. In the garden, a mock tomb recreates burials in the Jiayuguan area in the late 3rd and early 4th centuries. Finally, a large exhibit commemorates the Long March.

LANZHOU CITY CENTER

- Baita Shan Gongyuan ①
- Baiyi Si ③
- Gansu Provincial Museum ②
- Lan Shan Gongyuan ⑤
- Wuquan Shan Gongyuan ④

🏛️ Baiyi Si

Baiyi Si, with its temple and accompanying stupa, was built during the Ming dynasty (1368–1644). It is situated just a few hundred feet to the east of busy Jinchang Lu, on the north side of Qingyang Lu. The small temple's unusual location, dwarfed by the towering and swanky department stores of Lanzhou's main shopping district, makes it appear strikingly out of place, and worth a visit for this alone.

Ornamental door knob, Rui Yuan Si, Wuquan Shan

🌿 Lan Shan Gongyuan

☐ 8:30am–5pm daily. 📄
South of the city, Lan Shan Gongyuan (Lan Shan Park) can be reached by chairlift from Wuquan Shan Gongyuan. It is a 20-minute ride to the top, which is a pleasant place to escape the summer heat. Popular at weekends, it is a great spot to watch the sunsets, as well as the city lights at night. An amusement park and several eateries are also located here. A trail leads to Wuquan Shan Gongyuan.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

425 miles (680 km) W of Xi'an.
 📄 3,000,000. ☑️ Lanzhou Airport, 56 miles (90 km) N of city.
 📄 Lanzhou Train Station. 📄 CAAC (buses to airport), East Bus Station, Private Bus Depots, Main Bus Station, West Bus Station. 📄 2nd Floor, Tourism Building, Nongmin Xiang, (0931) 881 3222.

Wuquan Shan Gongyuan

☐ 6am–5pm daily. 📄
Also set in the south of town, the Wuquan Shan Gongyuan (Five Springs Hill Park) resembles a traditional garden, with its weathered rocks, cascading streams, elaborate-shaped doorways, and myriad pavilions, and is pleasant enough to wander around in for a while. The hill is said to be the place where the Han general, Huo Qubin, quartered his cavalry as he mounted an expedition to the northwest. According to one legend, he cut at the rocks until the water he needed for his horses and men gushed forth. Of the several temples on the site, Chongqing Si dates back to 1372, and houses an iron bell cast in 1202. Despite its venerable origins, modern materials like concrete have been used several times in building the temple, and it is now an artistic blend of Soviet and traditional Chinese design. Another one of the oldest buildings in the park, the Ming-dynasty Jingang Palace houses an impressive, 16-ft (5-m) bronze Buddha, reputedly cast in 1370.

Gateway designed as a quatrefoil moon in Wuquan Shan Gongyuan

The enormous seated Buddha carved into a cliff, Cave 172, Bingling Si

Bingling Si 7

炳灵寺

56 miles (90 km) SW of Lanzhou. 🚗 to Liujia Xia Reservoir, then boat to caves.

🕒 in season, when the water level in reservoir is high. 📶 from Lanzhou.

THE MAGNIFICENT GROUP of Buddhist caves at Bingling Si (Bright Spirit Temple) is one of the most intriguing sights in Gansu. Buddhism arrived in China along the Silk Road, and these caves are among the earliest significant Buddhist monuments in the country. Carved into sheer cliffs, the caves stretch for about a mile (1.6 km) along a 196-ft (60-m) high gorge. Isolated by the waters of the Liujiaxia Reservoir on the Yellow River, the splendid sculptures and paintings were saved from damage during the Cultural Revolution, and remain in surprisingly good condition. Known as the Thousand Buddha Caves, there are in fact, only 183 of them, of which 149 can be more appropriately described as niches.

The caves were created about 1,600 years ago during the Northern Wei and Western Jin dynasties. It is believed that the artists hung down the cliffs on ropes, and chiseled out sculptures into the rock-face. The style of work is similar to the Buddhist caves at Datong and Luoyang. Most of the caves contain rock-cut statues, clay sculptures, and colorful frescoes. One of the earliest caves, No. 169, dates to AD 420, and contains a Buddha and two Bodhisattvas that are among the oldest and best preserved in China. Most of the other caves were completed during the Tang era. The most impressive cave, No. 172, has an 89-ft (27-m) high seated statue of Maitreya (the Future Buddha). There are also four clay pagodas and another one carved from stone.

Work on the sculptures continued long after the Silk Road had lost its importance, and there are examples of work from the Song, Ming, and Qing dynasties. The paintings reached their height during the Song and Ming dynasties, although there are some older and comparatively cruder paintings dating back to the Tang period.

Getting to the caves can be slightly uncertain, as access depends on the water level in the reservoir. Autumn is usually the best time of year to visit Bingling Si, but it is best to check with other travelers before arranging a trip. It is a two-hour bus journey from Lanzhou to the reservoir and dam, followed by a three-hour boat trip to the caves, passing through some beautiful countryside with fishermen busy at work, and wheat and rice being cultivated on the riverbanks.

Pingliang 8

平凉

155 miles (250 km) SE of Lanzhou.

HIDDEN IN the hills in a mountainous region near the Gansu-Ningxia border is the sleepy town of Pingliang. Surrounded by beautiful peaks, some of which rise to heights of 6,890 ft (2,100 m), it remains one of the least-visited parts of the province, and is mostly used as a convenient base for exploring Kongtong Shan, a Daoist monastery, 6 miles (10 km) west

Carved stele, Kongtong Shan, Pingliang

of town. Perched dramatically on a cliff-top of the same name, the monastery lies close to a glittering lake and a few other temples scattered across the landscape. The surrounding area is excellent for taking long walks across the lush green hills.

Kongtong Shan's lush north peak, Pingliang

The Spread of Buddhism

BUDDHISM'S ESTABLISHMENT in China was a long process and the date of its arrival is uncertain. The earliest sign of the religion in China is associated with the foundation of the White Horse Temple (see p152) during the Han dynasty near the imperial capital of Luoyang. Based on the teachings of Buddha who lived in northern India during the 6th century BC, Buddhism was probably disseminated along the Silk Route by immigrants from Central Asia from the 1st century onwards. In China, Buddhism surged in popularity during periods of instability, when Confucianism's veneration for authority did not sit well with the populace (see p30), and it was eventually adopted by China's rulers. The Mahayana School (see p31) took hold in China, breaking into different sects, such as the Chan sect, which gained a large following in Japan as Zen Buddhism.

Stone Buddha statue

Mahayana Buddhism started in India in the first century AD, finally spreading to Japan, via China, around AD 600.

The Great Goose Pagoda in Xi'an was built for the monk Xuanzang in AD 652 to house the sutras he brought back from India, a pilgrimage immortalized in Journey to the West (see p29). He spent the remainder of his life translating the sutras, aiding the spread of Buddhism.

The caves at Dunhuang (see pp496-7), served as the last stop on the Silk Road for pilgrim monks on their way to India. The frescoes and carvings, which celebrate the spread of Buddhism and date from the 4th to the 11th century, are amongst the most important early Buddhist works in China.

Guanyin, the female Bodhisattva of Compassion, was originally the male deity Avalokitesvara. This sex change is one way the Chinese adapted Buddhism to suit their needs. Guanyin became the patron of motherhood and is the most worshiped figure in China.

The early Tang dynasty was a time of Buddhist renaissance, with the religion gaining imperial patronage. In the 9th century, however, rebellions provoked a period of Buddhist suppression.

Wuwei 9

武威

140 miles (225 km) NW of Lanzhou.

Lying between Lanzhou and Zhangye, this small town is where Gansu's most celebrated relic, the bronze Flying Horse, was discovered in 1969. Found in an Eastern Han tomb in the grounds of Leitai Si, a few miles north of town, the Flying Horse is now in the Provincial Museum in Lanzhou, and its symbol can be seen all over Wuwei. The tomb, a series of empty passageways, houses replicas of its original relics and is open to visitors.

Other sights are the brick Luoshi Ta, off Bei Dajie, and farther east, the old Bell Tower with pleasant gardens. To the south is Wen Miao, a museum set in the grounds of a temple. The South Gate (Nan Men) has been reconstructed and adds a little old-world grandeur to a rapidly-changing town.

Wen Miao

8:30am–6pm daily.

Zhangye 10

张掖

280 miles (450 km) NW of Lanzhou.

ONCE A STOPOVER on the Silk Road, Zhangye has several sights of interest. At its center is a Ming-era Gulou (Drum Tower), with a large bell. To the east, Daode Guan is an active Daoist shrine also dating to the

A traditional incense burner in the grounds of Dafo Si, Zhangye

Ming era. South along Nan Jie lies Tu Ta, a former Buddhist monastery featuring a large stupa. Also nearby is the Dafo Si, which houses the largest reclining Buddha in China in its hall.

Lying 37 miles (60 km) south of Zhangye, in the Tibetan town of Mati, is Mati Si, a fascinating complex of Buddhist caves carved into a cliff.

A view of the stupa at Dafo Si

Jiayuguan 11

嘉峪关

475 miles (765 km) NW of Lanzhou.

from Dunhuang.

TRADITIONALLY REGARDED as China's final outpost, the last point of civilization before the desert, Jiayuguan is visited mainly for its Ming-era fort (see pp492–3). Within town, the Great Wall Museum documents the history of the wall from the Han to the Ming eras. Exhibits include photographs of remote sections of the wall as well as scale models.

Several other sights lie around Jiayuguan. About 4 miles (6 km) north of the fort is Xuanbi Changcheng (Overhanging Wall), a restored section of the wall dating to the 16th century, that once linked the fort to the mountains. In the same area, the Hei Shan rock carvings depict scenes from daily life during the Warring States period. Situated 4 miles (6 km) south of town is the First Beacon Tower, a desolate outpost that marks the start (or end) of the western part of the Ming-dynasty Great Wall. About 12 miles (20 km) east of town are tombs from the Wei and Jin eras (220–420 AD), whose bricks are painted with celebratory scenes. The Qilian Shan peaks, 75 miles (120 km) to the south, cradle the 14,110 ft (4,300 m) Qiyi Bingchuan (July 1st Glacier), reached by a combination of train, taxi, and foot.

Great Wall Museum

Xinhua Nanlu.

daily.

The 16th-century ramparts of Xuanbi Changcheng (Overhanging Wall), Jiayuguan

< Jiayuguan Fort, the farthest outpost safeguarding the civilized world of the Ming dynasty

The Great Game

THE "GREAT GAME" was the name, popularized by Rudyard Kipling in Kim, of the covert war fought by the Russian and British empires for influence in the deserts and mountains of Central Asia at the end of the 19th century. Afghanistan was the first target for these two great empires and both sides vied for influence, with the British eventually succeeding in establishing a sympathetic regime in 1880. Meanwhile in Chinese Turkestan

Rudyard Kipling

(Xinjiang) the Muslims broke free of China and set up the state of Kashgaria in 1863 under Yakub Beg. The Russians invaded the Ili Valley and, when China took Xinjiang back in 1877, negotiated to establish consulates in the area. The British response was to set up a trade mission in Kashgar and take a more aggressive approach in Tibet. In 1907 the stand-off ended with the Anglo-Russian Convention, which clearly defined territorial limits.

Central Asia was where the Russian, British and Chinese empires touched. The British, fearful of the Russian threat to India, wanted to cultivate a buffer zone around its frontier, using Afghanistan, Kashgaria and Tibet.

Sber Ali (1825–79), the son of Dost Mohammed who fought the British in the first Anglo-Afghan War, allowed entry to a Russian diplomatic mission, but turned back a British one. This sparked the second Anglo-Afghan War, after which the British placed Abdur Rabman on the throne in 1880.

The Open Mouth (1899), a Punch cartoon, shows the British Lion and Russian Bear trying to get their hands on a scared Chinaman. China, weakened by internal strife, was repeatedly forced to sign unfair treaties handing over land and allowing the superpowers to establish trade missions that were used to spy on the other side.

The Pamir Mountains held the passes that Alexander the Great and Timur (Tamerlane) had used to invade India. Russian advances here in 1885 and 1896 led to the mobilization of British troops, but treaties establishing new frontiers prevented war both times.

Tibet became involved when Britain placed it in China's sphere of influence. In response Tibet refused to acknowledge British attempts to set up a trade mission, resulting in the attack on Gyantse in 1903 (see p543) by Younghusband.

Jiayuguan Fort 嘉峪关

嘉峪关

Corner wall tower

AT THE WESTERN EXTREMITY of the Great Wall stands the Jiayuguan Fort, dominating the stony plain that separates two mountain ranges. Built of tamped earth in 1372, in the distinctive, embattled Ming-dynasty style, it was dubbed the “Impregnable Defile Under Heaven.” It was of enormous strategic importance as it controlled the only military and trade link between China and the deserts of Central Asia. The frontier lay some way further west, but for the Chinese Jiayuguan was the last outpost of civilisation, beyond which lay barbarian country, a place of perdition, fit only for exiled officials and banished criminals.

Trap Court

This was used to lure the enemy into a place from where they could be attacked from above. It also served as a holding bay for caravans.

Jiayuguan Men is three stories high with typical Ming-style upturned eaves.

“Gate of Sighs” was once inscribed with the sorrowful graffiti of those leaving China.

★ Fort Walls

Built of tamped earth and bricks, the mighty 35-ft (10-m) high walls were designed to be accessed by horses via ramps that lead from the gates to the battlements. The total length of the walls is about half a mile (750 m).

Detail inside tower

As shown by these wooden doors, the interiors of the towers were beautifully painted in typical Ming style.

Rou Yuan Men or Gate of Conciliation

Corner Towers gave protection to archers while they fired on the attacking troops.

STAR SIGHTS

★ Fort Walls

★ Guanghua Men

★ Guanghua Men

Rising 56 ft (17 m) above the fortress walls, the gate tower was originally completed in 1506, although like the others it has been extensively renovated.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

3 miles (5 km) W of Jiayuguan.

☎ (0937) 639 6058, 📺 July–Oct: 7am–10pm daily; Nov–Jun: 8am–8pm daily, 🎫 includes entry to the Great Wall Museum.

Guandi Temple

This provided spiritual nourishment for the troops. The temple would have offered a mixture of Buddhist, Daoist, and Confucian ceremonies.

Accommodations
for the generals and their families.

Wenchang Hall

This served as the official meeting point for visiting dignitaries coming from the interior of China.

Outer wall of the fort

Inner Wall

This is fortified by a 6-ft (1.8-m) parapet and embrasured towers.

Old Theater

This was a later, Qing-dynasty, addition to the fort and was used for entertaining the troops stationed both at the fort and at garrisons along the Great Wall.

End of the Great Wall of China

The wall stretches out either side of the fort closing off the plain. The wall is made of tamped earth, a raw material in ready supply in the desert.

A camel ride across the dunes at Mingsha Shan, Dunhuang

Dunhuang 12

敦煌

☑ ☒ Liuyuan, 80 miles (130 km) to the north, then bus. ☎ f John's Information Café, 22 Ming Shan Lu, (0937) 882 7000.

A SMALL OASIS TOWN, Dunhuang once prospered as the last stop on the Silk Road before it split north and south to skirt the Taklamakan Desert. It is a pleasant settlement that has achieved a certain level of prosperity, primarily through acting as a base for visiting the famous grottoes at Mogao (see pp496–7), a short distance away. The town caters for its foreign visitors and has several restaurants and budget hotels. The only items of interest at the Dunhuang County Museum (Xian Bowuguan) are a few Chinese and Tibetan manuscripts, from Mogao's famous Cave 17, which escaped the looting of explorers and archeologists. The museum also has examples of traditional silks and domestic items found near the beacon towers that were once part of China's outermost line of defense. There is a souvenir night market every summer evening along the town's main thoroughfare, Dong Dajie. The range of items on sale includes leather shadow puppets, Chinese scroll paintings, jade items, coins, Tibetan horns, and Buddha statues.

Printed textiles, Dunhuang market

Just 3 miles (5 km) south of Dunhuang is Yueya Quan (Crescent Moon Lake), a small freshwater lake that has been a vital source of water here for thousands of years. It lies adjacent to the Mingsha Shan (Singing Sand Mountains), which tower several hundred feet high. The dunes were named after the noise made as the grains of sand are crunched under foot. For some remarkable views, visitors can climb the dunes – preferably in the cool of the evening. There is also a range of activities, including paragliding, sand tobogganing, and camel rides. A small folk art museum lies nearby.

Situated in the middle of fields about 2 miles (4 km) west of Dunhuang is the nine-story Baima Ta (White Horse Pagoda). This Tibetan-style dagoba was built in memory of a horse belonging to the monk, Kumarajiva, who came from the Silk Road kingdom of Kuqa (see p509). The horse died here in AD 384.

🏛️ Dunhuang County Museum

Yangguan Dong Lu.

☎ (0937) 882 2981.

🕒 9am–5pm daily. 📄

🏘️ Yueya Quan

🕒 8am–5:50pm daily.

ENVIRONS: About 12 miles (20 km) southwest of Dunhuang lies Dunhuang Gucheng (Dunhuang Ancient City), a film set built in the 1990s that was never dismantled. Its location and panoramic views are impressive, but it is rather dog-eared on closer inspection. However, the set has become a regular tourist stop with souvenir stores and even accommodations in yurts.

Lying 50 miles (80 km) west of Dunhuang are two Han-dynasty gates, Yu Men Guan (Jade Gate Pass) and Yang Guan (South Pass). Separated by 3 miles (5 km) of desert, they were once linked by the Great Wall. Abandoned over 1,000 years ago and under constant attack by the desert, the two towers remain quite impressive. The huge cube of the Yu Men Guan with its 33-ft (10-m) walls is the only discernible man-made structure in sight.

Yueya Quan and Mingsha Shan dunes, Dunhuang

Race for the Silk Road Oases

A SCHOLARLY REFLECTION of the political rivalry between the great powers at the end of the 19th century was the race between a group of explorer-archeologists to locate (and plunder) the lost towns of the Silk Road. Between them, they succeeded in uncovering a huge number of long-forgotten, desert-scoured towns. These pioneers furthered the knowledge of life along the Silk Road and saved many items from further degradation.

Tang musician,
Dunhuang

However, they did remove vast quantities of priceless works of art, to the eventual annoyance of the Chinese government. These are now scattered in museums around the globe. Initial interest in the region by the British was based on strategic considerations (see p491); then, as stories of lost cities emerged, the interest of antiquarians around the world was aroused. Controversial though they were, their excavations captured the world's imagination.

Tales of buried cities being uncovered by sandstorms emerged at the end of the 19th century. The Gaochang Ruins, discovered by von Le Coq, were found to have been a major Buddhist and Nestorian center (see p465).

Sven Hedin (1865–1952), from Sweden, was the first of many government-sponsored adventurers to explore these isolated regions. The others were Albert von Le Coq from Germany, Count Otani of Japan, Paul Pelliot of France, Sir Aurel Stein from Great Britain, and Langdon Warner from the USA.

This Buddha's head came from the Bezeklik Caves, discovered by von Le Coq in 1904. These caves held some beautiful murals protected over the years by the encroaching sand. Von Le Coq simply cut them from the walls and sent them home to Germany. Unfortunately, the murals were destroyed by bombing during World War II.

This silk painting is from the Mogao Caves, which were reached by Aurel Stein in 1907. He befriended the Abbot, Wang, and gained access to the newly discovered silks and manuscripts of Cave 17.

This fresco of a bodhisattva and other wall paintings at the Mogao Caves were considered sacred, so the collectors could not remove them (see p496). But Stein and the others negotiated with Abbot Wang to carry off thousands of historic items.

The Cave Paintings of Dunhuang

PROTECTED BY THEIR RELATIVE ISOLATION, the cave paintings at Dunhuang form the most fascinating repository of Buddhist art in China. For over 700 years, between the 4th and 11th centuries AD, Buddhist monks excavated and painted these caves, until invasion and the encroachment of Islam brought work to a halt. The paintings were all but forgotten until 1907, when the explorer Sir Aurel Stein stumbled across the caves and the Daoist priest who guarded them, Wang Yuanlu. Among the many thousands of items uncovered by Stein is the Diamond Sutra, the world's earliest printed book (in scroll form), and many of the patterns used by the monks to reproduce paintings at will.

Cave 275: Sixteen Kingdoms 366–439 This early cave of the Northern Liang Period is dedicated to the Maitreya or Future Buddha, who is depicted in wall paintings and statues.

Cave 272: Sixteen Kingdoms 366–439 These Devas (Buddhist angels) are in rapture as they listen to the Buddha's teaching.

Cave 254: Northern Wei 439–534 This cave shows stories of Buddha's early life, including the Sacrifice of the Prince. The murals are richer in content than in earlier caves and the artwork has become more accomplished.

Cave 249: Western Wei 535–556 On the north wall there is a wonderfully lively hunting scene showing the backward-shooting hunter – a feat only made possible with the invention of the stirrup.

Cave 428: Northern Zhou 557–580 Stories of the good prince, an earlier incarnation of Buddha, abound. Here he offers himself to a starving tigress so she may feed her cubs.

Cave 419: Sui 581–618 Under the short-lived Sui dynasty, China was reunified with both the north and south adopting Buddhism as their religion. This harmony allowed the development of a more Chinese artistic style and was a highly fruitful time for Dunhuang. This cave portrays the good prince on a hunting trip with his brothers.

Cave 420: Sui 581–618 This fresco portrays a journey on the Silk Road, the route via which Buddhism came to China, as well as pictures of buildings in a style of which no real example survives.

Cave 220: Early Tang 618–704 Rich patrons would often feature in murals. This cave portrays ten generations of the wealthy Zhai family.

Cave 217: Early to High Tang 618–780 Detail of the Western Paradise of Amitabha Buddha. This cave contains some wonderful, unfinished paintings of Bodhisattvas.

Cave 17: Late Tang 848–906 A detail from the famous cave where the massive library of sutras was first found by Abbot Wang.

Cave 263: Western Xia 1036–1226 Under the Western Xia dynasty a lot of older caves were simply redecorated. This was originally a cave of Northern Wei origin.

The Dunhuang cliff face, home to 1,000 years of Buddhist history

Mogao Caves

敦煌石窟

Mogao, 15 miles (25 km) SE of Dunhuang, Gansu Province. 📍 🚗

🕒 8am–6pm. 📶 📷 📱

THE CAVES at Mogao were dug into cliffs that rise out of an otherwise largely flat and featureless desert landscape. Getting there is relatively easy, if you are travelling independently, as Dunhuang is crawling with minibuses. As usual they wait until every seat is taken before setting off, but the half-hour journey is cheap. Remember that the caves are closed between 11:30am and 2:30pm.

Of the six hundred surviving caves, only about thirty are open to the public. The entrance fee includes a Chinese-speaking guide, although it is worthwhile, for an additional fee, engaging an English-speaking guide, as the tour party is likely to be smaller and the choice of caves less rigidly laid down. The caves that include portrayals of tantric sex can also sometimes be opened for a supplementary payment. The guides are generally fairly knowledgeable about the history of the caves and the paintings and sculptures within. You are, however, recommended to take your own flashlight and to remember that photography is not allowed in the caves (without a very expensive permit), a rule that is strenuously enforced. The standard tour lasts half a day, and includes about fifteen of the caves as well as the museum, which exhibits some of the scrolls found here. It is also worth visiting the Research and Exhibition Center, where seven of the caves have been reproduced, permitting far closer scrutiny of the paintings than is possible in the original caves, albeit without the same atmosphere of antiquity. There is a simple guesthouse for those wishing to stay overnight; otherwise, the return journey to Dunhuang is by minibus, the last one leaving around 6pm.

Statue from pagoda at Mogao caves

Façade of Cave 96, covering a 100-ft (30-m) statue of Buddha

The beautifully decorated door of Longwu Si's prayer hall, Tongren

Tongren 13

同仁

66 miles (107 km) W of Xiahe. 🏠

🏠 Lural Festival (6th lunar month),
Buddhist Festival (1st lunar month).

KNOwn AS REPKONG in Tibetan, Tongren is a transit point between Xiahe and Xining. This small Tibetan town offers fascinating insights into the life of the Tibetan people. On the outskirts of town lies the colorfully decorated lamasery, Longwu Si, containing fine relics in its many halls. Initially built in 1301 during the Yuan dynasty, today's modern reconstruction houses three colleges and an assortment of lamaseries belonging to the Yellow Hat sect – a branch of Tibetan Buddhism (see pp522–3). At dusk, visitors can watch the resident monks debating, using elaborate formalized body language to make a point. Sometimes, if you're lucky, they can also be seen making sand paintings. Behind the monastery, a stream flows into the grassland for about a mile, leading to a pretty Tibetan village. Situated in another village, 4 miles (7 km) from the city center, the Upper & Lower Sengeshong are a pair of monasteries that are home to around 50 renowned thangka artists. Both monasteries are magnificently decorated, with every surface of their assembly halls carved and painted with traditional Repkong designs. The residents of this village speak a mixture of Tibetan, Mongolian, and other dialects.

A devotee in the Great Mosque served as a stopover on the Silk Road's lesser-used southern route, and is now a good base for exploring Qinghai. Xining lies in a remote valley, and, at 7,220 ft (2,200 m), experiences a cool summer and freezing winter.

The Great Mosque, one of the largest and most impressive in northwest China, is situated on Dongguan Dajie, close to the city center. Restored recently, it was originally built in the 14th century, and is thoroughly Chinese in design, with elements such as flying eaves and vividly-colored arches. Enclosed within is a public square, that is usually bustling with worshippers.

In the far north of town, across the Huangshui River, the Daoist Bei Shan Si sits atop a hill and is the focus for a pleasant afternoon's hike. The route, via stone steps and across wooden walkways, passes numerous cave shrines decorated with Daoist symbols.

Xining's ethnic mix is best appreciated at Shuijing Xiang Market, in the west of town off Xi Dajie, where over 3,000 stalls sell all manner of provisions and food, especially hot breads, mutton dishes, and kabobs. It is also a good place to stock up on snacks before heading off on a trip to Qinghai Hu, to the west of town.

Ta'er Si 14

(See pp500–1)

Xining 15

西宁

144 miles (232 km) W of Lanzhou.

🏠 1,115,000. 🏠 🏠 🏠 🏠 Xining
Dasha, (0971) 812 9842.

ALTHOUGH BLESSED with very few sights, Qinghai's capitol, Xining, is home to an intriguing mix of minority peoples, mostly Hui Muslims and Tibetans with a sprinkling of Kazakhs and Mongols. From the 16th century, it

The grand Chinese-style architecture of the 14th-century Great Mosque, Xining

Mengda Tian Chi nature reserve along the banks of the Yellow River

Mengda Tian Chi 16

孟达天池

124 miles (200 km) SE of Xining.

🚗 to Guanting or Xunhua, then taxi.

THE REMARKABLY beautiful Tian Chi, or “Heavenly Lake,” forms the core of the Mengda Nature Reserve, situated along the Yellow River. In contrast to most other parts of the province, the land here is fertile and abounds with vegetation. Most of the reserve is woodland, offering opportunities for scenic walks and birdwatching.

Accommodations are available at the reserve, while trips can be arranged through Xining’s Tourist Office. The trip to Mengda Tian Chi from Xunhua is spectacular, winding along a precipitous road that cuts into the cliffs along the Yellow River, through quiet towns and past fields of wheat, corn, and barley.

Qinghai Hu 17

青海湖

93 miles (150 km) W of Xining. Bird

Island 🗓️ Nov–Feb. 📷 📱

THE LARGEST LAKE in China, Qinghai Hu covers a vast area of over 1,740 sq miles (4,500 sq km). Its location on the Tibetan plateau, at a height of 10,500 ft (3,200 m) above sea level, makes it extremely remote, accessible only with the help of a tour agency. The grand desert vistas along the way are an excellent reason to visit the lake, and in summer, numerous yak herds can be spotted grazing.

The lake’s icy salt water is home to large quantities of fish, which feed a thriving bird population.

Most trips to the lake center around a visit to Bird Island, a rocky outcrop on the western side where colonies of swans, cormorants, bar-headed geese, and rare black-necked cranes, among others, flourish during the breeding season.

On the southern shore, the Qinghai Lake Tourist Center offers opportunities for boating, fishing, horse riding, and trekking. Accommodations are available at the tourist center.

A medallion with Tibetan calligraphy

Golmud 18

格尔木

474 miles (762 km) W of Xining.

🚗 📷 📱 📞 Golmud Hotel, Geermu Binguan, (0979) 413 003.

IN THE FAR WEST of Qinghai, Golmud is perched at 9,845 ft (3,000 m) in the forlorn Tibetan plateau. The only sizable town for several hundred miles, it is the second largest city in the province after Xining, with a largely Han Chinese population. Today, it acts mainly as a transit point between Xining, Dunhuang, and Lhasa.

The town’s bus service which runs to Lhasa in Tibet is currently the only overland public transport that non-Chinese visitors are officially permitted to use to get there. The trip is not particularly cheap, as tickets can only be purchased through the tourist office at a fairly hefty markup. The bumpy ride takes about 25 hours on a tough road across high passes. Temperatures drop well below freezing point at night, and it is strongly recommended to take provisions and warm clothing. An alternative route out of Golmud is to take a landcruiser tour into some of the remoter parts of Xinjiang.

The town itself is largely unappealing, although the surrounding lunar-looking landscape has a rugged charm best appreciated on the way out. A 625-mile (1,000-km) railway line is being built from here to Lhasa scheduled to be completed by 2010. Tibetans fear the line will bring an influx of Han migrants to Lhasa.

Colorful Tibetan prayer flags on the shore of Qinghai Hu

Ta'er Si 14

塔尔寺

Prayer wheels each containing a scroll was born here, and the first temple was built in his honor in 1560. The monastery was closed for a period under Communist rule, although the buildings were afforded protection during the Cultural Revolution, and reopened in 1979. A major restoration project has been undertaken since an earthquake rocked the complex in 1990. Ta'er Si is easily accessible from Xining, and so is popular with both tourists and pilgrims.

Dinkejing Hall

Pilgrim

Turning a hand-held prayer wheel and fingering prayer beads, the devout walk clockwise around the perimeter of the complex.

★ Hall of Butter Sculpture

This strongly fragrant exhibition is packed with intricately carved yak butter sculptures. The gaudily painted figures depict scenes from Buddhist lore.

STAR SIGHTS

★ Great Hall of Meditation

★ Hall of Butter Sculpture

★ Great Golden Roof Hall

Nestled into a hillside, this walled temple complex, also known as Kumbum Monastery, is one of the most important Tibetan Buddhist sites in China. Tsongkhapa, founder of the Gelugpa sect (see p522),

★ Great Golden Roof Hall

This temple was built at the spot where Tsongkhapa was born and a tree is said to have grown with an image of the Buddha on each leaf. It contains a silver stupa holding his image.

Nine Room Hall

Prayer Hall

Grand Kitchen

★ Great Hall of Meditation

This evocative chamber, where up to 2,000 monks could gather to chant sutras, is hung with silken thangkas. The flat roof rests on grand pillars, each wrapped in an exquisite carpet.

Local monk

Ta'er Si is a working monastery and houses over 600 monks, who spend their life studying Buddhist teachings. There were once as many as 3,000 resident monks.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Huangzhong, 17 miles (28 km) S of Xining. 🚗 from Xining (depart just west of Xi Men). 🕒 8:30am–5:30pm. 📅 Monlam: 8th–15th of 1st lunar month; Saka Dawa: 8th–15th of 4th month; Tsongkhapa Festival: 20th–26th of 9th month.

Visitors who climb these steps are rewarded with views across the valley.

Dafangzhang Hall

Chorten

A towering chorten of 46 ft (13 m) marks the monastery's entrance. The square base symbolizes earth, the dome water, the steps fire, and the parasol wind, all of which is topped by a crown representing the ethereal sphere.

Lesser Golden Roof Hall

A truly bizarre pavilion, this temple is dedicated to animals. Stuffed deer, sheep, and goats, draped in ceremonial scarves, peer down from the upper story.

Prayer Hall

This time-worn temple is still used for religious tutelage. The external murals are new, however, and show a mix of Chinese and Tibetan influences.

XINJIANG

CHINA'S SECOND-LARGEST province, Xinjiang shares borders with eight countries from Mongolia in the northeast to India in the southwest. This isolated region is largely desert and grassland fringed by some of the highest mountains in the world.

Two thousand years ago a string of oasis towns were established along the Silk Roads that skirted the northern and southern edges of the scorching Taklamakan Desert. Trade attracted merchants from India and Europe, and Xinjiang became the meeting point of east and west, with Christian churches and Buddhist temples existing in close proximity. At the end of the Tang era, Turkic tribes repeatedly overran the region, and by the 15th century Islam was established as the main religion.

In the 18th century, the Chinese took control of what was then Kashgaria, and despite several revolts, have maintained their rule ever since. Almost fifty percent of the population is comprised of ethnic minorities, and in 1955, in deference to the large Uighur population, the area became the Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region, with its capital at Ürümqi. Today, highlights of a visit include the Tian Shan range and the rich pastures around Tian Chi (Heaven Lake) outside Ürümqi, and Silk Road towns such as Turpan and Kashgar, shaded by palm trees and set against a backdrop of desert and mountain. It is also possible to travel south over the Karakoram mountains into Pakistan or west into Kazakhstan along the ancient trade routes.

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Karghilik 12
- Kashgar 8
- Khotan 13
- Kuqa 7
- Turpan 1
- Ürümqi 2
- Yarkand 11
- Yengisar 10

Lakes, Mountains & Areas of Natural Beauty

- Altai 4
- Tian Chi 3
- Karakoram Highway 9
- Sayram Lake 5
- Yining & Ili Valley 6

KEY

- International airport
- Domestic airport
- National highway
- Major road
- Minor road
- Railroad
- International border
- Provincial border
- Disputed border

The graceful Imin Ta and Iranian-style mosque

Turpan ①

吐鲁番

116 miles (187 km) SE of Ürümqi. 𠄎 200,000. 𠄎 Daheyan, 33 miles (54 km) N of Turpan, then minibus. 𠄎 Oasis Hotel, (0995) 852 1352.

THIS OASIS TOWN on the northern Silk Road lies in the Turpan depression – one of the lowest areas on earth – and is largely an Uighur settlement. The Uighur descended from nomadic Siberian tribes who united in the 7th century and settled in the region in the 9th century. They later converted to Islam as it spread

Dried fruit on sale, Turpan bazaar

𠄎 Bazaar

Laocheng Lu. 𠄎 daily. The small Turpan market is an interesting place to browse for local products including a variety of medicinal potions, decorated knives, clothing, fabric, nuts, and fruit (especially raisins).

variety of medicinal potions, decorated knives, clothing, fabric, nuts, and fruit (especially raisins).

variety of medicinal potions, decorated knives, clothing, fabric, nuts, and fruit (especially raisins).

𠄎 Imin Ta

1.5 miles (2.5 km) E of town. 𠄎 dawn–dusk. 𠄎

This is perhaps the most interesting of Turpan's numerous mosques because of its old minaret (Imin Ta), constructed in 1778, that rises like a stout but graceful chimney beside it. Built by Prince Suleiman in honor of his father, Prince Emin, the minaret is broad at the base and tapers toward the top.

Designed in the Iranian style with some elaborately decorative brickwork, its staircase was closed in 1989.

variety of medicinal potions, decorated knives, clothing, fabric, nuts, and fruit (especially raisins).

𠄎 Turpan Museum

Gaochang Lu. 𠄎 9am–8pm daily. 𠄎 This small museum has a few worthwhile exhibits. The main points of interest are items excavated from the now empty Tang-dynasty Astana tombs located outside town. These include ancient silks, clothes, food items, and even some preserved corpses.

𠄎 Jiaohe Ruins

6 miles (10 km) W of Turpan. 𠄎 minibus or cycle. 𠄎 9am–6pm. 𠄎 𠄎 Although less important and smaller than Gaochang, the ruins of Jiaohe are better defined. Jiaohe was founded as a garrison town but came under Uighur jurisdiction in the 6th century. It was finally abandoned during the Yuan era, perhaps due to failing water supplies. The ancient city occupies a spectacular position on a steep plateau, with its street plan clearly visible, and is well worth a visit.

Returning from Jiaohe, visitors can stop-off to see the karez irrigation site. Used throughout Xinjiang, this ingenious system of irrigation taps into natural underground water sources by using a network of subterranean tunnels which channel water to the fields. Wells, dug at intervals along the length of the tunnels, bring water to the surface.

The ruined city of Jiaohe set against a backdrop of hills on a steep plateau

The dramatic Flaming Mountains near Turpan

🍇 Grape Valley

🚗 minibus from town. 🕒 daily. 📷

A surprisingly attractive desert oasis to the north of Turpan, Grape Valley (Putao Gou) is best visited in the height of summer. With vines and trellises bulging with grapes, it is a pleasant place to stop for lunch, with plenty of grapes and raisins to eat (for a fee). There is a winery nearby, as well as brick silos for drying the grapes.

Buddha mural in the Bezeklik Caves

The caves originally stored a collection of Buddhist murals in the Indo-Iranian style, which showed unusually marked western influences. Unfortunately, only fragments remain, as after centuries of neglect, they were all removed in the early 1900s by the German explorers, von Le Coq and Grünwedel, and placed in a Berlin museum, where they were later destroyed by Allied bombs during World War II.

🔥 Flaming Mountains

🚗 minibus from town. 📷

The road east to Bezeklik leads past these sandstone mountains, made famous in the novel Journey to the West, a fictionalized account of the journey of the pilgrim monk, Xuanzang, to India. In the book, the mountains (Huoyan Shan) are described as being on fire, and at certain times of day, a combination of sun and shadows turns them a brilliant red and makes them seem to flicker as though glowing red-hot.

🏢 Bezeklik Caves

31 miles (50 km) NE of town. 🚗 minibus from town. 🕒 dawn–dusk.

📷 Picturesquely situated in a desert gorge high above the Sengim River, the Bezeklik Caves once formed part of a Buddhist monastery between the 6th and 14th centuries.

🏢 Astana

25 miles (40 km) SE of Turfan.

🚗 minibus from town. 🕒 dawn–dusk. 📷

The cemetery of the ancient city of Gaochang is located at Astana, a few miles northwest of Gaochang. The tombs, dating from between the 3rd and 8th centuries AD, were systematically excavated from 1959, and revealed several corpses, naturally mummified by the dry desert air. They had been wrapped in silks, and buried with many everyday items, including pottery, wooden carvings, coins, and documents relating to military and domestic transactions such as land tenures. Unfortunately, most items are now on display at museums in Turpan and Ürümqi, but the three tombs that are open to visitors display Tang-era paintings and a few preserved corpses.

🏢 Gaochang Gucheng

29 miles (46 km) SE of Turfan. 🚗 minibus from town. 🕒 dawn–dusk. 📷

Southeast of the Astana tombs lie the impressive ruins of Gaochang city, surrounded by 33-ft (10-m) high walls. Gaochang was founded as a garrison town in the 1st century AD, and by the 4th century, it had become the capital of the western Han empire. A cosmopolitan city with traces of Nestorian Christianity and Manichaeism (a Persian dualistic religion), it was visited by the monk Xuanzang in AD 630, on his journey to India in search of Buddhist sutras.

From the 9th to the 13th centuries, the city became the Uighur capital, but was abandoned during the early Ming era. The ruins are extensive, but there is almost nothing left that is recognizable, apart from a Buddhist temple outside the southwest walls.

The Bezeklik Caves situated in a spectacular river gorge

Ürümqi ②

乌鲁木齐

911 miles (1470 km) NE of Kashgar.

CAPITAL OF XINJIANG since the 19th century, Ürümqi sits amidst beautiful scenery, with the snow-laden Tian Shan to the east. It served as the base for a succession of warlords well into the 20th century, including the infamous Yang Zengxin who, in 1916, invited all his enemies to dinner and then beheaded them. Today a growing metropolis with a population of one million, Ürümqi is a modern Chinese city, with designer stores and high-rises. Many Han Chinese have settled here since 1949, and the population is now half-Han and half-ethnic minorities including Uighur, Manchu, Kazakh, Mongolian, and Tajik.

No longer a remote outpost, Ürümqi was finally connected to Central Asia and Europe after the Ürümqi-Altamy rail line was built in 1991. Most visitors come to see Tian Chi (Heaven Lake) but the city has other attractions such as its lively markets and the fascinating mix of ethnic peoples. The fine Xinjiang

Pagoda in Hongshan Park, Ürümqi

Provincial Museum devotes a section to archeological finds, especially from around Turpan, including some preserved corpses, silk paintings, and lovely brocades. The museum also has a section dedicated to local peoples and includes gers, jewelry, and traditional clothes. Up on a hill in the north of the city, the scenic Hong Shan Park is surmounted by a small 18th-century pagoda, and offers wonderful views.

Xinjiang Provincial Museum

Xibei Lu. ☐ 8:30am–5pm daily.

Tian Shan peaks surrounding the deep-blue waters of Tian Chi

Tian Chi ③

天池

62 miles (100 km) E of Ürümqi.

☎ (0994) 323 1238. 🚗 from Ürümqi. 🌨 in winter. 🐎 Horses available for exploring lake area.

A REFRESHING break from the arid deserts of northwestern China, Tian Chi (Heaven Lake) is a beautiful stretch of water, surrounded by luxuriant meadows and dense pine forests. It lies at an elevation of 6,500 ft (1,980 m), enclosed by snow-capped peaks including the majestic Bogda Feng, that reaches a height of almost 20,000 ft (6,000 m). A wonderful place for spending a day, or indeed several, Tian Chi offers many opportunities for leisurely walks and hikes in the lake area and through the neighboring countryside dotted with Kazakh gers.

The local Kazakhs are mostly nomadic, living off sheep-breeding, and more recently, tourism. Very friendly and hospitable, they can arrange guides and horse treks around the lake and into the hills.

Tian Chi can only be visited during summer (May–September), as it is not accessible during the winter months. There are usually plenty of accommodations available in local Kazakh gers around the lake. Staying overnight can be far more fun and interesting than the day-tours which are sometimes a bit tacky.

GRAPES & WINE

Nearly every household in the region is involved in grape production, either in cultivation, or in drying inside ventilated barns. In Xinjiang, the use of grapes for making wine was first recorded by a Chinese emissary in 138 BC, although grapes were possibly cultivated here as early as the Shang era. In fact, all wine-making in China was learned from the peoples of the western regions. By the Yuan era, wine production, based in Xinjiang, was substantial, and by the Ming period, varieties such as the crystal, the purple, and the seedless green rabbit-eye grape were grown. Today, wine production is thriving in China, and most of these varieties are still grown.

Fruit vendor weighing grapes at the marketplace in Ürümqi

Islam in China

ISLAM PROBABLY CAME to Xinjiang via the Silk Road in the ninth century, some 200 years after Arab sailors had landed in southern China. By the Ming Dynasty, Muslims had flourished and become fully integrated into Han society without losing their dress and dietary customs. Despite hostile regimes and upheavals there is now a significant Muslim population of about 13 million. These comprise the Xinjiang nationalities –

Arabic script on a Chinese mosque

Uighur, Kazakhs, Kirghiz, Tajiks, Tatars, and Uzbeks of the northwest – and the large contingent of Chinese-speaking Hui, scattered around the country. It is generally accepted that all Muslims in China are Sunni of the Hanafi School, which is one of four “schools of Islamic law.” It is considered the oldest and most liberal school and is traditionally tolerant of differences within Muslim communities.

Mosques in China retain most traditional Islamic features but the pagodas and upturned eaves are clear signs of Chinese architectural influences.

The muezzin, as in all Muslim communities, calls the faithful to prayer five times a day. Today, the call is usually recorded and broadcast by loudspeaker.

Inside the mosque the congregation members, usually men, prostrate themselves before the mihrab, a niche in the wall indicating the direction of Mecca. The main hall is reserved for Friday prayers.

Dongxiang Muslims hail from Gansu province and speak Mongolian. They have left pastoral herding in favor of a sedentary farming life.

The Hui are said to be the descendants of the Arab and Persian traders who arrived in the Tang dynasty and married into Chinese families. They are the biggest Muslim minority.

The Koran was first translated into Chinese in 1927. Through the interpretations of the scholars, the Koran is a vital part of Islamic life.

The breathtaking alpine scenery of Hanas Lake Nature Reserve, Altai

Altai ④

阿勒泰

404 miles (650 km) N of Ürümqi.

✈️ Altai, then bus. 🚗 from Ürümqi to Burqin, then 93 miles (150 km)

N via bus or car to reserve. 📞 (0906) 212 2882.

IN CONTRAST to the arid deserts of southern Xinjiang, the far north is covered in forests, lakes, and streams, overlooked by high mountains. The Altai region, bordering Mongolia, Russia, and Kazakhstan, is famous for its natural beauty, best seen in the Hanas Lake Nature Reserve (can be visited from Burqin). Centered around an alpine lake set at 4,490 ft (1,370 m) in the glorious Altai mountains, the reserve supports a diversity of wildlife. The area is wonderful for walking, and boat trips are available on the lake.

Tours from Ürümqi operate between June and September, since heavy snow closes the road from October to May.

Sayram Lake ⑤

塞里木湖

75 miles (120 km) N of Yining. 🚗

THE JEWEL-LIKE Sayram Lake, or Sailimu Hu, is a vast stretch of water set amidst magnificent mountain scenery and flowering meadows. Located at 6,560 ft (2,000 m), the lake area is chilly for most of the year, and only warm in summer when it is also covered in flowers. Reached by bus from Yining, it is a beautiful spot, barely touched by tourism, although it is possible to stay in simple lakeside guesthouses or gers (yurts).

Yining ⑥

伊宁

242 miles (390 km) W of Ürümqi.

🚗 216,600. ✈️ 🚗 from Ürümqi.

Ili Valley 🚗 from Yining.

CLOSE TO THE border with Kazakhstan, Yining is the capital of the Ili Kazakh Autonomous Prefecture. In recent centuries, Russia has noticeably influenced this former transit point on the northern branch of the Silk Road. It was occupied by Russians in 1872 when Yakub Beg ruled the region – then known as Kashgaria – and later, during the period of Sino-Soviet friendship in the 1950s, a number of Russians resided here. After relations between China and the USSR broke down in the early 1960s, there were violent border clashes along the Ili River. More recently, Yining has been the scene of several Uighur uprisings, which were firmly quelled.

Woman tending her sheep in a flower-covered meadow on the shores of Sayram Lake

A traditional shop in one of Yining's Uighur bazaars

Small, but pleasant and friendly with tree-lined streets ideal for walking, Yining is known for its local honey beer, and hard cheese. Its main draws are the lively Uighur bazaars with their range of street food in the old city, south of Qingnian Park. In summer, the town comes alive with bustling night markets and food stalls.

Grapes for sale on the street, Yining

About 3 miles (5 km) south of town, the Ili Valley (Ili Gu) is a scenic farm area of fields and meadows, where dairy cattle graze. It is home to the Xibo people, a tiny minority, whose capital is at Chapucha'er. Related to the Manchus, the Xibo were sent here during the Qing era to maintain sovereignty in the region. They have kept themselves separate from the Han and other local communities, and retain many aspects of their original culture, such as their own language and script.

Kuqa ⑦

库车

186 miles (300 km) SW of Ürümqi.

¥ 63,500. ☎ 63,500. 📠 63,500. 📺 Qiuci Hotel, (0997) 712 2524. 📅 every Fri.

A SMALL OASIS TOWN, Kuqa is essentially an Uighur settlement and has an interesting history. It was an independent state until the 8th century, when it fell under Chinese rule. The kingdom had strong links with India, and even had its own Indo-European language. Its significance as a Buddhist center dates back to the 4th century, when the Buddhist scholar Kumarajiva flourished. Born here, he went to school in Kashmir, northern India, and came back to China as a teacher and linguist, translating Sanskrit texts into Chinese. The town became a focal point from where Buddhism, which reached its zenith during the Tang era, was disseminated throughout China. Several large monasteries were founded on the vast wealth generated by the Silk Road trade. In the 7th century, the monk Xuanzang passed through Kuqa and claimed to have defeated its erstwhile ruler in a philosophical debate. With the arrival of Islam in the 9th century, however, most traces of its Buddhist past were swept away.

Mainly a stopover on the long journey to Kashgar, Kuqa is effectively two towns – New Kuqa to the east and Old Kuqa to the west. The old town has a bustling bazaar atmosphere, and a few dusty, narrow lanes lined with traditional mud houses have been preserved. There is also an interesting Friday market near the Great Mosque. Built in 1923, this attractive green-tiled mosque bears no traces of Chinese influences in its traditional arabesque design.

One of the main reasons to visit Kuqa are the Thousand Buddha Caves, located at Kizil, 43 miles (70 km) west of town. The caves date to between AD 500–700 and the frescoes, in a mixture of Indo-Iranian and Greek styles, are fascinating for their total absence of Chinese influence. Unfortunately, the caves were looted at the beginning of the 20th century by the archaeological explorers, von Le Coq and Paul Pelliot. While most of the caves have been stripped bare of their frescoes, some of the cave decoration has survived, notably the musicians in Cave 38, and the domestic and agricultural scenes in Cave 175.

About 19 miles (30 km) north of Kuqa lies the ancient city of Subashi Gucheng. Abandoned in the 12th century, the street plan can still be seen amongst the ruins and some of the 20-ft (6-m) high city walls are still standing.

🏛️ Thousand Buddha Caves

Hired car or taxi. ☐ daily. 📺

📅 arranged by the Kuqa tourist office.

The Thousand Buddha Caves at Kizil, outside Kuqa

Kashgar 8

喀什

Market caps,
Old Town

IN THE FAR WEST of Xinjiang, the Silk Road town of Kashgar lies at the foot of the Pamir mountains, with the Taklamakan Desert to the east. As the meeting point of the northern and southern Silk Roads and the gateway to the West, it was once a place of great significance. A Chinese garrison was established here in AD 78, but the area succumbed to the spread of Islam in the 9th century, and Kashgar did not become part of the Chinese empire again until the 18th century. Later, a Central Asian warlord, Yakub Beg, proclaimed himself Khan of the state of Kashgaria but he died in 1877 and China annexed the province. Today, Kashgar is once more a busy market town and transport hub, and despite rampant modernization retains much of its old charm.

Farmers waiting to trade livestock at market, Kashgar

Sunday Market

Near Ayziret Lu.  daily.

Livestock Market Sun.

One of China's most famous weekly markets, the Sunday Market lies in the northeast suburbs, just beyond the river. Despite now being split into two markets – the livestock market is a few miles southeast of town – thousands of traders flood in from all directions on horseback, in donkey-drawn carts, on foot, and in every form of motorized vehicle. In the crush, stall holders sell blankets, garish fabrics, carpets, and fruit. However, the main attraction is the bustling livestock market. (Carts shuttle between the two.) Here horses are road-tested at a gallop and small herds of sheep are kept in order while waiting to be sold. It is a dusty, noisy, and photogenic place, which comes to life at dawn, and lasts into the evening.

Id Kah Mosque

Idi Kah Square.  8:50am–10pm daily (closed during services).

The largest mosque in Xinjiang, and one of the largest in China, Id Kah Mosque (Aitika Qingzhen Si) was probably founded in 1738, although it possibly stands on the site of a smaller mosque, built in the 15th century. Built in the Central Asian style and altered over the centuries, the mosque's current structure dates back only as far as 1838, and was badly damaged during the Cultural Revolution (see pp64–5). The main gate, flanked by a pair of small minarets, is a confection of marzipan-like yellow brick and tiling. Inside the gate is an octagonal pavilion and a pool, as well as a 100-columned space which can accommodate as many as 7,000 worshippers. Although women are generally not permitted to enter the mosque, all modestly dressed foreign visitors should have no problem, although there are times – such as during services – when non-believers are not allowed. Visitors are advised to remove their shoes when entering carpeted areas.

Old Town

Area to the NE of Id Kah Mosque. Northeast of Id Kah Square is the sprawling Uighur bazaar area. Split into different sections, each specializes in particular items such as hats, musical instruments, carpets, and hardware. The main attractions are the locally-produced Kashgar kilims (carpets) and colorful Central Asian hats. Part of the area is a network of mud-brick walls and courtyards, with local teahouses and tiny restaurants selling flat breads, noodles, lamb stews, and kabobs. A 10-ft (3-m) section of the old city walls can be seen at the end of Seman Lu, east of the mosque, and on Yunmulakxia Lu, southwest of the mosque.

The Id Kah Mosque, with Kashgar city and the Pamirs on the horizon

One of many old alleyways lined with mud-brick houses, Kashgar

Tomb of Yusup Hazi Hajup

daily. This favorite son of Kashgar was an 11th-century Uighur thinker and poet, renowned for his epic poem The Knowledge of Happiness. He was originally buried outside the city, but his tomb was relocated close to Kashgar's main square, when threatened by a flooding river. Although it has a plain interior, the external structure is impressive. Topped with a blue dome and a cluster of minarets, the tomb is encased in blue-and-white tiles with Arabic motifs.

Aba Khoja Mausoleum

(See pp512-13)

Caves of the Three Immortals

11 miles (18 km) N of Kashgar. Among the earliest Buddhist cave carvings in China, the Caves of the Three Immortals (Sanxian Dong) possibly date back to the 2nd century. The grottoes are not always accessible as they are perched high on a sandstone cliff. Poor attempts at restoration and embellishment over the years have destroyed many of the paintings and statues. However, a handful of small Buddha figurines remain, which can only be seen with the permission of the Kashgar tourist office. If permitted, visitors will have to take the official guided tour.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

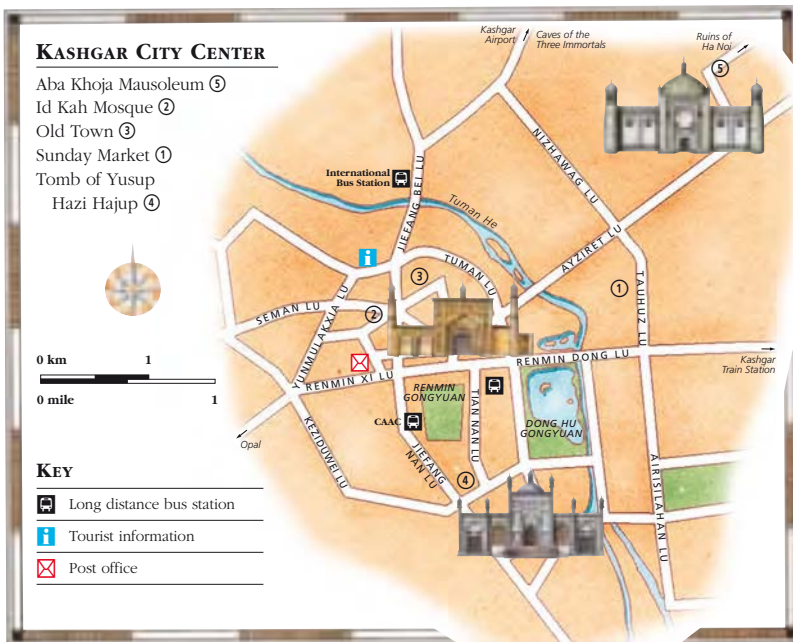

920 miles (1,473 km) SW of Ürümqi. 200,000. Kashgar Airport. Kashgar Train Station. International Bus Station, CAAC (buses to airport). Sun.

Ruins of Ha Noi

22 miles (35 km) NE of Kashgar. The remains of the Tang-era town of Ha Noi lie in an atmospheric desert setting northeast of Kashgar. Abandoned in the 12th century, the ruined 7th-century town offers little besides the Mor Pagoda, a large stupa said to have been visited by the monk Xuanzang on his historic journey to India.

Opal

18 miles (30 km) W of Kashgar. Opal or Wupoer is the site of the renovated tomb of Mohammed Kashgari – an eminent 11th-century scholar and philologist, credited with compiling the first Turkic-Arabic dictionary. A museum devoted to his life and works is also situated here, and every Monday there is also a colorful local market.

Aba Khoja Mausoleum

阿帕克和卓 - 香妃墓

BUILT IN THE 17TH CENTURY, the Aba Khoja Mausoleum and nearby buildings form one of the best examples of Islamic architecture in China. The mausoleum is the burial place of the family of Aba Khoja, a celebrated Islamic missionary. However, the monument is also known as Xiangfei's Tomb, as it is the burial place of one of Aba Khoja's descendants, Ikparhan, said to be the legendary "fragrant concubine" Xiangfei. The wife of a defeated rebel leader, she was captured by the Qianlong emperor and taken back to Beijing to be his imperial concubine. Refusing to submit to him she was, depending on which story you believe, either murdered or driven to suicide by the emperor's mother. Others claim she died of old age.

The entrance to the Aba Khoja complex lined with plane trees

★ Geometric Decorations

Floral and geometric patterns are common in Islamic art because creating animate objects was considered to be in God's realm (flowers were considered inanimate).

Minarets

The four corner towers lack the slender grace of most other minarets. Instead their charm derives from the colorful striping of the tiles and the exquisite detailing of Islamic motifs and patterns.

The dome is 56 ft (17 m) in diameter

The casket of Ikparhan is labelled inside the tomb hall. The carriage which supposedly carried her body back from Beijing is also on display.

STAR FEATURES

★ Geometric Decorations

★ Tombs

★ Tombs

Decorated with blue-glazed tiles, the tombs of the Aba Khoja family lie on a raised platform, draped in colorful silks.

Cemetery

The cemetery, still in use by the local Uighur population, is filled with many hundreds of distinctively-peaked, mud and brick tombs. The bodies of the dead are washed and prepared for burial in the adjacent mosque.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Just over 2 miles (4 km) NE of Old Town center. 🚶 or 🚗 from People's Square. Also possible to cycle or walk.

Mausoleum ☐ 8am–5:30pm daily. 🚶 Mosque ☐ daily

Minaret decoration

Each of the windows are screened in a different geometric pattern. The surrounds are adorned with graceful arabesques while the turret is topped with an inverted lotus dome, scalloped edges, and finial.

Graceful minarets flanking the entrance

Arabesques are beautiful floral patterns where a main stem branches into a series of secondary stems that may either branch again or rejoin the main stem, and so on.

THE ABA KHOJA COMPLEX

Although Islam came to Xinjiang via Arab traders on the Silk Road in the 9th and 10th centuries, it was not until the 15th century that it became the dominant religion of the area, and Kashgar became an important Islamic center. The Aba Khoja complex is a significant architectural ensemble comprising a mausoleum, four prayer halls, a lecture hall, and a cemetery. There is also a gateway covered in decorative, blue-glazed tiles and a pond in the courtyard for worshippers to cleanse themselves before entering the mosque. The halls are graced by exquisitely painted wooden beams supported by pillars with delightful muqarnas – an Islamic feature of projecting niches – on the capitals.

Arabic muqarnas on mosque pillar

Mausoleum Entrance

The impressive façade of the mausoleum has a tiled iwan in niche-style entrance typical of mosques in Central Asia.

Truck passing a checkpoint on the Karakoram Highway, with the Pamir mountains in the background

Karakoram Highway 9

中巴友谊公路

SW from Kashgar into Pakistan. 📍

ONCE A SPUR OF THE Silk Road, the Karakoram Highway (Zhongba Gonglu) was the only route over the Karakoram Mountains, to and from India. During the 1970s and 1980s, a road was built across the mountains following the old caravan route, to link China and Pakistan. The 808-mile (1,300-km) route from Kashgar to Islamabad in Pakistan, which stretches across the Pamir mountains over peaks reaching 26,250 ft (8,000 m), is one of awe-inspiring beauty. Camels and yaks, tended by Tajik herds-men, graze in the highland pastures. Lakes with mirror-like surfaces, such as Lake Karakul, reflect the majesty of the mountains, while the remains of the occasional caravanserai stand crumbling at the side of the road.

The last town in China is Tashkurgan, a bleak outpost, with the remains of an ancient fort. Beyond it is the 15,750-ft (4,800-m) high Khunjerab Pass, the gateway to Pakistan. The Pakistan border post lies just beyond at Sost. Visitors should note that the border is closed in winter, and that visas are required – issued in Beijing or Hong Kong – to cross into Pakistan. The highway took nearly 20 years to build. The journey along it is fairly arduous, and although traveling conditions are improving, it is best to carry warm clothing, food, and drink for the trip, which takes about four days.

Yengisar 10

英吉沙

37 miles (60 km) S of Kashgar. 📍

THE SMALL, SLEEPY TOWN of Yengisar on the southern arm of the Silk Road is renowned for its locally produced knives. For centuries, the town has been manufacturing hand-crafted knives for Uighur men, who carry them as traditional accoutrements. Knives of all shapes and sizes are sold in dozens of shops. While most of the knives produced are factory-made, traditional knife-making skills are still practiced by artisans in the center of town. Using basic tools, the workers at the Yengisar Country Small Knife Factory produce exquisite designs fashioned from fine woods, their handles inlaid with silver or horn. It is sometimes possible to visit the factory, even though a big board outside bears a “No Entrance” sign. The knives, which make attractive gifts, require special arrangements to be taken home.

Polished knives displayed at a stall in the Sunday Market, Yengisar

JADE

Jade, or nephrite, has been carved and polished by the Chinese for several thousand years, along with jadeite, soapstone, and chalcedony. While the latter are known as yu, nephrite is zhen yu, or true jade. Initially used as a tool, jade came to be widely used as jewelry during the Han era. By the Qing period, carvers were producing a variety of decorative pieces including intricate jade animals. Always thought of as being green, jade can in fact be brown, black, or the prized cloudy white. To the Chinese, it symbolizes longevity and purity, and is worn as an amulet to ward off disease. The country's only source of nephrite is Xinjiang, particularly around Khotan, so a sophisticated supply system must have existed even in neolithic times.

Uncut nephrite or true jade available here at bargain prices. Visitors interested in silk production can stop by the Hetian Silk Factory in the northeast of town.

Sections of the old city walls still stand on both sides of Nuerwake Lu. The chaotic local market takes place on Fridays and Sundays in the northeast of town. Though not as large as its famous counterpart in Kashgar, it is a colorful affair with livestock, fruit, silks, and carpets on sale.

At the end of the 19th century, the first rumors of the region's lost cities – which inspired several expeditions – emanated from here. A detailed map, indicating the location of the buried cities, lies in the small Hetian Cultural Museum. Items of interest include fragments of silk, wooden utensils, and jewelry excavated from nearby lost cities, as well as the mummified corpses of a 10-year-old girl and a 35-year-old man with Indo-European features, which are 1,500 years old. The ruined city of Melikawat lies over 18 miles (30 km) south of town. All that remains of this once significant Buddhist center are crumbling walls, and shards of glass and pottery.

H Hetian Cultural Museum
Tanai Lu. ☉ daily. 📷

Yarkand 11

莎车

106 miles (170 km) SE of Kashgar. 📍

FOR CENTURIES an important commercial center on the southern arm of the Silk Road, Yarkand was, like Kashgar, prominent in the Great Game – the power struggle between China, Russia and Britain (see p490). The old town, with its adobe walls and narrow streets, has a few interesting sights. The Altyn Mosque has beautifully painted ceilings, and in its courtyard is the newly-built Tomb of Aman Isa Khan (1526–60) – the poet wife of one of the local Khans. Behind the mosque is a sprawling cemetery housing the tombs of the Khans of Yarkand. There is also a lively Sunday market.

A vendor pulls a cart of radishes, Yarkand

Karghilik 12

椰城

144 miles (230 km) SE of Kashgar. 📍

THIS TOWN was a convenient stop between Khotan and Kashgar on the southern arm of the Silk Road. The colorful old Uighur town is definitely worth exploring, while the town's main attraction, the 15th-century Jama Masjid, sits amidst the arcaded bazaar.

Khotan 13

和田

249 miles (400 km) SE of Kashgar.

📍 1,400,000. 📠 📺 📞 23
Tamubage Lu, (0903) 202 6090. 📷

THE OASIS TOWN of Khotan, or Hetian, was an early center for the spread of Buddhism before Islam arrived in the 9th century. Formerly the capital of the Yutian kingdom, it has been, like most Silk Road cities, periodically subsumed into the Chinese empire. For centuries, the town's jade, carpets, and silk have been considered the finest in China, and are still produced in factories across town. According to legend, the secret of silk was first introduced to the region by a Chinese princess betrothed to a local prince, who smuggled silk moth eggs in her hair in AD 440. Craftsmen carve fine jade items at the Jade Factory on Tanai Lu, while the Carpet Factory across the river is a friendly place also worth a visit, especially for those wishing to buy a carpet, as they are

Craftsmen at the open-air market in Khotan

TIBET

INTRODUCING TIBET 518-527
AROUND TIBET 526-547

Tibet At a Glance

BORDERED ON THREE SIDES by some of the world's highest mountain ranges – the Himalayas, the Karakoram, and the Kulun – Tibet has remained in relative isolation. Sheltered first by its inaccessibility and then, in the age of air travel, by Chinese occupation, the “Roof of the World” has only recently opened to foreign visitors. Its one major city, Lhasa, retains its spiritual core: the Jokhang; the venerable palace of the Dalai Lamas, the Potala; and great monasteries such as Drepung and Sera. Wherever you go, Tibet offers panoramic vistas of high-altitude desert fringed by peaks, but the turquoise depths of Lake Namtso and the sky-scraping peaks of Mount Everest are particularly worth visiting.

Thangka hanging on a door at the Jokhang Temple, Lhasa

Yamdrok Lake the largest lake in south Tibet, seen from the Kamba-la Pass

SIGHTS AT A GLANCE

Towns & Cities

- Gyantse 5
- Lhasa 1
- The Nepal Border 9

Areas of Natural Beauty

- Namtso Lake 4

- Everest Base Camp 8

Temples & Monasteries

- Sakya Monastery 7
- Samye Monastery pp540–41 2
- Shigatse & Tashilunpo 6
- Tsurphu Monastery 3

The Potala Palace seen from the rooftop of the Jokhang, Lhasa's holiest temple

SEE ALSO

- Where to Stay p573
- Where to Eat p597

KEY

-  International airport
-  Major road
-  Minor road

GETTING THERE

Lhasa is well served by air with visitors arriving from Chengdu, Sichuan, or Kathmandu, Nepal. An overland route also connects Kathmandu and Lhasa, but visitors must be part of a tour group. The other bus route is from Golmud, Qinghai, where the China International Travel Service (CITS) will arrange the journey. Whatever the means of entry, a permit from the Tibetan Tourism Bureau (TTB) – (0086) 0891 633 1174 – is required. Once in Tibet, travel may be limited, as permits are required for most areas. The best option is to arrange a tour with an agency in Lhasa, who will also handle permits.

A PORTRAIT OF TIBET

TIBET'S REPUTATION AS A LAND OF EXOTIC MYSTERY is due to centuries of geographic isolation and a unique theocratic culture, based on Buddhism but influenced by an older shamanistic faith called Bon. In 1950, China marched into Tibet and annexed the country. Despite this upheaval, the traditional culture and values of the Tibetans remain strong and continue to lure and enchant visitors.

Since the introduction of Buddhism in the 7th century, the religion has permeated all aspects of Tibetan life, with monasteries acting as palaces, administrative centers, and schools. Ruled by priests, Tibet was feudal in outlook and resisted all modernization. The country thus entered the modern world without an army, lay education, or roads, and with few technologies more sophisticated than the prayer wheel.

Buddhism was introduced in Tibet by Songsten Gampo (AD 608–50). A remarkable ruler who also unified the country, Songsten Gampo, was converted to Buddhism by his Chinese and Nepalese wives. The next religious king, Trisong Detsen (742–803)

Buddha mural,
Jokhang Temple

consolidated the Buddhist faith, inviting the Indian teacher Padmasambhava (Guru Rinpoche) to Tibet and founding Samye Monastery. A revival of the native Bon religion in the 8th century led to Buddhist persecution, and though the religion re-emerged later, the kingdom disintegrated into several principalities.

In the 13th century, Tibet submitted to the all-conquering Mongols, and in 1247 the head lama of Sakya Monastery visited their court and was appointed Tibet's ruler. Subsequently, Tsongkhapa (1357–1419) established the Gelugpa or Yellow Hat sect. His disciples became the Dalai Lamas, rulers of Tibet for 500 years. Each new Dalai Lama is seen as a reincarnation of the previous one.

Sprawling Ganden Monastery, built in the early 15th century

Buddha's all-seeing eyes on the Kumbum, Gyantse

In 1950, the Chinese took advantage of a tenuous claim to the territory and invaded, calling it "liberation." In the uprising that followed in 1959, the 14th Dalai Lama (b.1935) fled to India, where he still heads the Tibetan Government-in-Exile. By 1970 more than a million Tibetans had died either directly at the hands of the Chinese or through famine caused by incompetent agricultural policies. Tibet's cultural heritage was razed, and over 6,000 monasteries destroyed.

Conditions have improved today, and there are signs of religious revival. Many monasteries that were ravaged during the Cultural Revolution are now being repaired and returned to their former roles, but creating or owning an image of the Dalai Lama is still illegal.

The ancient city of Lhasa is the heart of Tibet, though Han Chinese immigrants now outnumber ethnic Tibetans. However, the old quarter, home of the Potala Palace and the Jokhang Temple, illustrates the determination with which Tibetans have held onto their cultural traditions. A common sight here are the pious and cheerful pilgrims, swinging prayer wheels and performing energetic prostrations as they make kora – holy circuits – around the temple.

Most of Tibet is desert and the average altitude is over 13,000 ft (4,000 m) with temperatures well below freezing in winter. Many customs arose as response to life in this harsh environment. Sky burials, for example, in which the dead are left in the open for vultures, are practical in a land where firewood is scarce and the earth too hard to dig. Polyandry (the practice of having more than one husband at a time) and celibacy of the clergy were necessary forms of population control.

Farming this largely barren land is difficult and the only crop that grows easily is barley. Moreover, almost a quarter of the people are nomads, keeping herds of dzo (a cross between a yak and a cow) and living in tents. Their livestock provide products vital for everyday Tibetan life – yak butter is used in the ubiquitous bitter butter tea and burnt in smoky chapel lamps.

Tibet's roads are few, and journeys are always time consuming. The busiest route is the Friendship

Highway between Lhasa and the Nepalese border, which passes through Shigatse, Gyantse, and the dramatic Sakya Monastery. It is a long, bumpy but rewarding diversion from here to the Everest base camp, which offers great views of the forbidding peak. Lhasa, too, can be a good base for exploring some of the other isolated destinations. The monasteries of Drepung, Sera, Ganden, and Tsurphu are easily accessible, while Lake Namtso and Samye are farther away.

A Tibetan mandala, a ritual tantric diagram

Monks debating under a tree, a common sight at Sera Monastery

Tibetan Buddhism

A guardian deity or dbarmapala

THE MAHAYANA SCHOOL of Buddhism, which emphasizes compassion and self-sacrifice, came to Tibet from India in the 7th century. As it spread it took on many aspects of the native, shamanistic Bon religion, incorporating Bon rituals and deities. Like most Buddhists, Tibetans believe in re-incarnation – consecutive lives that are better or worse depending on the karma, or merit, accrued in the previous life. For many Tibetans, Buddhism suffuses daily life so completely that the concept of a religion separate from day to day occurrences, is completely foreign – there is no word for religion in Tibetan.

Chortens hold the ashes of spiritual teachers. The square base symbolizes earth; the pinnacle crown represents the ethereal sphere.

The Gelugpa or Yellow Hat sect was founded in the 1300s by the reformist Tsongkhapa. Dominant in Tibetan politics for centuries, the sect is led by the Dalai Lama and Panchen Lama (see p520, p544).

MONKS AND MONASTERIES

At the height of monastic power there were some 2,700 monasteries in Tibet, and numerous Buddhist sects. Most families sent a son to become a monk and live a life of celibacy and meditation.

The Nyingma order is the oldest and most traditional of all the sects. It was founded during the 600s by Guru Rinpoche.

A soul can take one of two paths: the light path leads to auspicious rebirths until final liberation, the dark to poor rebirths and hell.

BON – TIBET'S PRE-BUDDHIST FAITH

Bon, an animistic faith with emphasis on magic and spirits and the taming of demons, was Tibet's native religious tradition before the arrival of Buddhism. Many Tibetan legends concern the taming of local gods and their conversion to the new faith. Much of today's Buddhist iconography, rituals, and symbols, including prayer flags and sky burials – where the deceased is chopped to pieces and left on a mountainside for vultures – are Bon in origin. The ancient faith has been revived by a handful of Bon monasteries in Tibet.

A 19th-century bronze figure of a Bon deity

At the axle the three evils, a snake (anger), a pig (ignorance), and a cockerel (desire), eternally chase each other's tails.

WHEEL OF LIFE

The continuous cycle of existence and re-birth is represented by the Wheel of Life, clutched in the jaws of the Lord of Death, Yama. Achieving enlightenment is the only way to transcend the incessant turning of the wheel.

Spinning a prayer wheel clockwise sends a prayer written on coiled paper to heaven. The largest wheels contain thousands of prayers and are turned by crank or water power.

The outer ring illustrates the 12 factors that determine karma, including spiritual awareness (a blind man with a stick) and acts of volition (a potter molding pots).

The inner wheel depicts the six realms into which beings can be reborn – gods, demigods, humans, animals, ghosts, and demons.

PRAYER AND RITUAL

Worship in Tibet is replete with ritual objects and customs, many of which help with the accrual of merit. Koras, which are always followed clockwise, can be short circuits of holy sites or fully-fledged pilgrimages. The most auspicious kora is around Mount Kailash, considered the center of the universe; nirvana is guaranteed on the 108th circuit.

This ritual drum, made from the upper part of two skulls, has extra potency as a tool of prayer, because it is fashioned from human remains.

A worshiper spins a hand-held prayer wheel, rings a Tibetan bell called a drillbu and holds offerings of banknotes, all in aid of prayer.

Mani stones are carved with the Sanskrit mantra “om mani padme bum” (bail to the jewel in the lotus), a powerful Buddhist chant.

THE TIBETAN PANTHEON

An overwhelming plethora of deities, buddhas, and demons, many of them re-incarnations or evil aspects of each other, make up the Tibetan pantheon. Buddhas, “awakened ones,” have achieved enlightenment and reached nirvana. Bodhisattvas have postponed the pursuit of nirvana to help others achieve enlightenment.

Jampalyang (Manjusri) represents knowledge and learning. He raises a sword of discriminating wisdom in his right hand.

Dharmapalas, defenders of the law, fight against the enemies of Buddhism. Originally demons, they were tamed by Guru Rinpoche, who bound them to the faith. Mahakala, one of the most common dharmapalas, is a wrathful manifestation of Chenresig.

BUDDHIST DEITIES

- Jowo Sakyamuni: the present Buddha
- Jampa (the Maitreya): the future Buddha
- Dipamkara (Marmedze): the past Buddha
- Guru Rinpoche (Padmasambhava): earthly manifestation of Buddha who spread Buddhism throughout Tibet
- Chenresig (Avalokitesvara): multi-armed bodhisattva of compassion
- Drolma (Tara): female aspect of compassion

Nomadic life

Young nomad and dzo

THE CHANG TANG, a high plateau covering almost 70 percent of Tibet, is home to about a quarter of Tibetans, many of whom are nomads, or drokba, as the harsh, arid climate precludes farming. Their existence has barely been touched by modern life, and they still herd sheep, goats, and dzo (a cross between a yak and a domesticated cow), as they have for centuries. The animals are adapted to high altitude, having larger lungs and more hemoglobin than lowland animals. The nomad's culture is also adapted to the harsh, arid climate.

Dried yoghurt is thought to protect the skin from the sun, but men don't use it at all; women smear it on with a tuft of wool as a cosmetic.

These men enjoy cups of salted tea made with yak butter, a popular drink throughout Tibet. The salt combats dehydration and the fat gives much-needed energy. They wear knee-length lokbars, with a black strip at the edge, the traditional dress for male nomads.

Traditionally, nomads wear belted robes made out of goatskin called lokbars that double as blankets at night. The fleece is worn on the inside, while the sturdy hide is exposed to wind and snow. The sleeves are extra long to keep hands warm. Women braid their hair and wear their wealth as jewelry. Coral, in particular, is highly valued.

Each household has a home tent, four-sided and made out of the coarse hairs found on a yak's belly. Often, the tent is pitched in a pit and surrounded by stone windbreaks. Another cloth tent may be used for traveling.

THE HERD

Nomads rely totally on their herds for food, clothing, shelter, and sometimes income, so no part of any animal goes to waste. Goats, for example, provide milk for yoghurt, skins for clothing, wool for trading, and dung for fuel.

A woman spreads yak dung over a windbreak wall. Once it has dried, she will scrape the dung off the wall and use it to fuel fires for cooking. Such tasks are strictly demarcated by gender; women do all the milking, churning, cooking, weaving, and fuel gathering, and so work harder than the men for most of the year.

A nomad pours yak butter from a churn for adding to strong, salty tea. The nomadic diet is basic; the staple is tsampa, roasted barley flour, which, often eaten dry and on its own, provides about half of a nomad's calories. Goat's milk yoghurt, radishes, and occasional meat stews supplement the diet.

The wool of the yaks, sheep, and goats in the nomad's herd is woven using a loom, creating robust textiles for tent walls, blankets, and clothing. The incomes of many nomads have been augmented recently by the popularity of cashmere wool, the soft down on a goat's underbelly.

MOVING THE HERDS

Nomads on the Chang Tang do not move continuously, nor do they move far – only around 10 to 40 miles (15 to 65 km), as the growing season is the same all over the plateau. Indeed, they try to minimize travel, declaring that it weakens livestock. Some families even build a house at their main encampment. In the fall, after the herds have eaten most of the vegetation at the main encampment and the growing season has ended, the nomads move their livestock to a secondary plain for grazing. Here livestock must forage for eight to nine months on dead vegetation. Later the nomads may move some of their herds farther up the hills. They then return to their original encampment.

A herder driving his yaks over a snowy mountain pass

TIBET

THE ENORMOUS TIBETAN PLATEAU stretches across an awesome 463,323 sq miles (1,200,000 sq km). Its northern expanse is the Chang Tang, a vast, uninhabited high-altitude desert, dotted with enormous, brackish lakes. Nearly all the main sights and cities, as well as half of Tibet's population of 2 million people, are concentrated in the less harsh southern region.

The fertile valley created by the Yarlung Tsangpo river is bordered by the Himalayas along Tibet's southern boundary. A mere 14 million years old, the Himalayas are the youngest mountains on earth, and also the highest, with over 70 peaks reaching elevations of 23,000 ft (7,000 m), including Mount Everest, the world's highest at 29,029 ft (8,848 m). The spectacle of these snow-clad peaks is perhaps what led to Tibet being called the "Land of Snows." In reality, at an average altitude of over 13,000 ft (4,000 m), the thin air intensifies the sunshine making acclimatization and sun screen essential.

Tibet's eastern reaches are riddled with gorges carved out by the three of China's rivers – the mighty Yangzi, the Salween, and the Mekong. The wide, open spaces of northern Tibet are home to nomads who live a hardy pastoral existence. These wilderness areas are slowly shrinking as a result of the encroaching industrial world.

However, despite rapid development and more than 50 years of Chinese occupation, Tibet still clings strongly to its cultural heritage, most visible in the revitalized monasteries. Tourism too, is a growing industry as more areas are opening up, allowing visitors tantalizing glimpses of a once-forbidden world.

Main prayer hall at Ganden Monastery, the first Gelugpa monastery in Tibet

Lhasa ❶

拉萨

Statue, Tsepak Lhakhang

TIBET'S CAPITAL SINCE THE 7th century, Lhasa is an intoxicating introduction to Tibet. The Dalai Lamas' splendid but poignantly empty seat, the Potala Palace, dominates the city from its site on top of Marpo Hill. The old Tibetan quarter to the east is Lhasa's most interesting area; its centerpiece is the revered Jokhang Temple.

Around it is the Barkhor, which retains its medieval character with smoky temples and cobbled alleys. Most Tibetans come here as pilgrims. The additions of concrete buildings and internet cafés show how the city has changed over recent decades.

Strikingly-colored mural at the Lukhang Temple

❷ Potala Palace

See pp534–5.

❸ Lukhang

Ching Drol Chi Ling Park.

Picturesquely located on an island in the lake behind the Potala, and cloaked by willows in summer, this temple is dedicated to the king of the water spirits (lu), who is depicted riding an elephant at the back of the main hall. The upper floors are decorated with striking 18th-century murals, representing the Buddhist Path to Enlightenment. Their great attention to detail and vivid stories offered visual guidance to the Dalai Lamas (see p520), who retired here for periods of spiritual retreat.

Buddhist myths dominate the walls on the second floor, while the top-floor murals depict the esoteric yogic practises of the Indian tantric masters. They also illustrate episodes in the life of Pema Lingpa, ancestor of the 6th Dalai Lama who is credited with the Lukhang's original design in the 17th century.

❹ Ramoche

9am–5pm daily. ❷ ❸ fee.

The three-story Ramoche, just north of the Barkhor area (see pp530–31), is the sister temple to the Jokhang. It was built in the 7th century by Songtsen Gampo (see p520) to house the statue of Jowo Sakyamuni (Tibet's most venerated Buddha image), brought by his Chinese wife Wencheng. According to legend, the threat of Chinese invasion after the king's death compelled his family to hide the statue inside the Jokhang.

Prayer wheels at the Ramoche Temple

KEY

- Street-by-Street area: see pp530–1
- Long distance bus station
- Tourist information
- Temple
- Mosque
- Post office

0 meters 500
0 yards 500

Kyi Chu

It was replaced by a bronze statue of an eight-year-old Sakyamuni (see pp30–31), part of the dowry of another of his wives, the Nepalese Princess Bhrikuti.

The reconstructed temple features some huge prayer wheels, and is not as busy as the Jokhang. Next door is the Tsepak Lhakhang, a chapel with an image of Jampa, the Tibetan name for the Future Buddha (see p523).

The Summer Palace of the Dalai Lamas in the Norbulingka

🏠 Ani Tsankhung Nunnery

🕒 daily, 📶

Situated in the old Tibetan quarter, the Ani Tsankhung Monastery is difficult to find. Wandering through the busy back alleys south of the Barkhor area in search of the place, can, however, be a wonderful experience. It is located in a yellow building on the street running parallel and north of Chingdol Dong Lu. The nunnery's main hall contains a beautiful image of Chenresig, the multi-armed Bodhisattva of Compassion (see p523), and behind it lies a meditation chamber used by Songtsen Gampo in the 7th century. An air of quiet serenity pervades this quaint place, with its flower bushes and spotless compound. The nunnery's main attraction is the warm welcome the curious nuns give to visitors.

🏠 Jokhang Temple

See pp532–3.

LHASA CITY CENTER

Ani Tsankhung Nunnery ④

Jokhang Temple ③

Lukhang ②

Norbulingka ⑦

Potala Palace ①

Ramoche ③

Tibet Museum ⑥

🏠 Tibet Museum

🕒 10am–5pm daily, 📶

This impressive building presents a rather one-sided version of Tibetan history. If the propaganda is ignored, however, the over 30,000 relics are worth a visit. There are plenty of religious artifacts, but the most interesting displays are of rare Tibetan musical instruments, medical tools, and even a coracle.

🏠 Norbulingka

🕒 9:30am–6pm daily, 📶

Today a pleasantly scrubby park, the Norbulingka (Jewel Park) was once the summer palace of the Dalai Lamas.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

🏠 2,700,000. 🏠 Lhasa Airport at Gongkar, 58 miles (93 km) SE of Lhasa, then bus. 🏠 Main Bus Station, CAAC, Minibus Station.

🏠 4WD vehicle. 📶 208 Yuan Lin Lu, (0891) 633 3476.

🏠 Losar (1st lunar month).

Founded by the 7th Dalai Lama in 1755 and expanded by his successors, the park contains several palaces, chapels, and buildings. The path west from the entrance leads to the oldest palace, the Kelsang Potrang, used by the 8th to the 13th Dalai Lamas. Its main hall has a wealth of thangkas (see p536) and a throne. More diverting is the Summer Palace, just north of here, which was built for the present Dalai Lama in 1954. Its audience chamber holds bright murals depicting events from Tibetan history, from the tilling of the first field to the building of the great monasteries, including the Norbulingka. Next to it are the Dalai Lama's meditation room and bedroom, preserved exactly as he left them in 1959, when he escaped from this palace disguised as a Tibetan soldier and began his journey to India. The Assembly Hall where he held state has a golden throne and colorful murals depicting scenes from the Dalai Lama's court, and episodes from the lives of Sakya Thukpa (Sakyamuni, the Historical Buddha) and Tsongkhapa, founder of the Gelugpa order of monks (see p520).

Brightly painted doorway, Norbulingka

Street-by-Street: The Barkhor

圖

Roof ornament, Jokhang Temple

LHASA'S LIVELIEST NEIGHBORHOOD, the fascinating Barkhor bustles with pilgrims, locals, and tourists eager to visit the Jokhang (see pp532-3) – by dusk the crowds are enormous. The pilgrimage circuit or kora that runs clockwise around the Jokhang is Tibet's holiest and has been since the 7th century; market stalls have always lined the route to serve the pilgrims staying in the area. Many of the buildings in the Barkhor are ancient, some dating back to the 8th century.

Despite the efforts of conservationists, some important buildings have been demolished and replaced with less attractive traditional architecture. Still, the Barkhor's cobbled alleyways maintain a unique, archaic character.

Butter stall

A stall-holder sells yak butter for burning in the Jokhang. Widely available, it gives the area its distinctive smell.

★ Jokhang Temple

The magnificent Jokhang, Tibet's most important religious structure, sits at the heart of the Barkhor, and is the structure around which the rest of Lhasa developed.

Prayer flags

Two poles laden with flags stand outside the Jokhang. Vertical flag poles originated in the Amdo region, and represent battle flags that have become signs of peace.

KEY

— — — — — Kora (holy route)

STAR SIGHTS

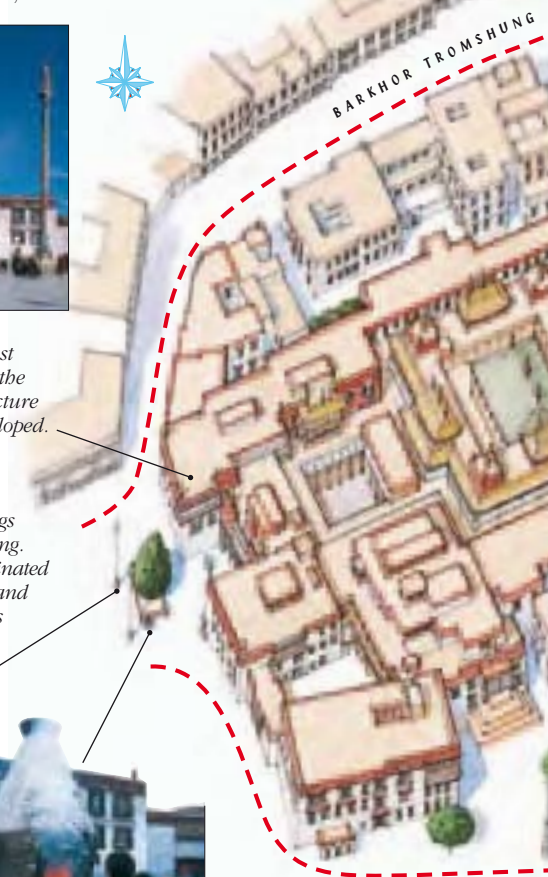

★ Jokhang

★ Meru Nyingba

Incense burner

Juniper bushes are burnt in the four stone incense burners, or sangkang, which mark the route of the kora.

Tromzikhang

This 18th-century building once housed government officials such as the Ambans, representatives of the Qing emperor. Now a housing complex, all but the front was destroyed in the 1980s.

The Jamkhang is a 15th-century building housing a two-story image of the Maitreya.

The Nangmano complex is home to 22 families.

★ Meru Nyingba

Originally founded in the 9th century, this monastery was enlarged in the 1800s to become the Lhasa residence of the Nechung Oracle (see p536). Beautifully restored in 1999, the building includes a wing of public housing.

An ancient shrine dedicated to Palden Lhamo, the female protector of Lhasa, is surrounded by modern buildings.

Labrang Nyingba was once home to the 5th Dalai Lama and Tsongkhapa at different times.

BARKHOR

Stalls along the kora

Stalls selling all manner of intriguing bric-à-brac, from cowboy hats to prayer flags, line the entire pilgrimage route. The shops behind the stalls have better quality goods, including religious statuary, and carpets.

Jokhang Temple

大昭寺

Roof detail of fierce creature

THE CONSTANT BUSTLE, gaudy paraphernalia of worship, flickering butter lamps, and wreaths of heady incense make the Jokhang Temple one of Tibet's most memorable experiences. The Jokhang was founded in AD 639 to house an image of the Buddha brought as dowry by the Nepali Princess Bhrikuti on her marriage to King Songtsen Gampo. Its location was chosen by another wife of the king, the Chinese consort Princess Wencheng. She declared that a giant female demon slumbered beneath the site and a temple must be built over her heart to subdue her. After the king's death, Wencheng's own dowry image of Jowo Sakyamuni was moved from the Ramoche (see p528) to the Jokhang, where it was thought to be safer from invading forces.

Courtyard

This open courtyard, or dukhang, is the focus for ceremonies during festivals. The long altar holding hundreds of butter lamps marks the entrance to the interior.

Just inside the entrance are the four Guardian Kings, the Chokyong, one for each cardinal direction.

This stele is inscribed with the terms of the Sino-Tibetan treaty of AD 822, guaranteeing mutual respect for the borders of the two nations.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Chapel of Chenresig
- ★ Chapel of Jowo Sakyamuni
- ★ Inner Sanctum

Roof ornament

The spokes of the wheel of law represent the eight paths to enlightenment.

Prostrating pilgrim

The Jokhang is Tibet's most venerated site. Pilgrims bow and pray on the flagstones just outside the temple doors.

Alternative entrance

The chapel of Tsongkhapa has an impressive and accurate image of the founder of the Gelugpa order.

The chapel of Songtsen Gampo, where the king is flanked by Wencheng on the right and Bhrikuti on the left.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

The Barkhor, Lhasa. ☐ 9am–6pm daily. Visit from left to right clockwise. Inner Chapels ☐ 8am–noon. 🗓️ 🗓️ Monlam, during the first lunar month.

★ Chapel of Chenresig

A large statue of Chenresig, the Bodhisattva of compassion, dominates this room. The doors and frames, crafted by Nepalis in the 7th century, are among the few remains of the original temple.

★ Chapel of Jowo Sakyamuni

Pilgrims crowd around this impassive statue of the 12-year-old Sakyamuni to make offerings and pray. Part of Princess Wencheng's dowry, it is the most revered image in Tibet.

The Jampa

Enshrined here is a copy of the one brought to Tibet by Princess Bhrikuti.

★ Inner Sanctum

This houses some of the Jokhang's most important statues, including images of Guru Rinpoche, the Jampa and a thousand-armed Chenresig. The chapels lining the walls are visited clockwise, and there's a line for the holiest, with monks at hand to enforce crowd discipline.

Prayer Wheels

Pilgrims spin the wheels on a route that surrounds the inner chapel called the Nangkor, one of the three sacred circuits of Lhasa.

Potala Palace

布达拉宫

Bronze roof statue

BUILT ON LHASA'S highest point, Marpo Hill, the Potala Palace is the greatest monumental structure in Tibet. Thirteen stories high, with over a thousand rooms, it was once the residence of Tibet's chief monk and leader, the Dalai Lama, and therefore the center for both spiritual and temporal power. These days, after the present Dalai Lama's escape to India in 1959, it is a vast museum, serving as a reminder of Tibet's rich and devoutly religious culture, although major political events and religious ceremonies are still held here. The first palace was built by Songtsen Gampo in 631, and this was merged into the larger building that stands today. There are two main sections – the White Palace, built in 1645, and the Red Palace, completed in 1693.

The Chapel of the 5th Dalai Lama contains a stupa gilded with around 6,600 lb (3,000 kg) of gold.

★ Chapel of the 13th Dalai Lama

Decorated with gold and jewels, the stupa of the 13th Dalai Lama, containing his mummified remains, is nearly 13 m (43 ft) high.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Chapel of the 13th Dalai Lama
- ★ Golden Roofs
- ★ 3D Mandala

★ Golden Roofs

Seeming to float above the palace, the gilded roofs (actually copper) cover funery chapels dedicated to previous Dalai Lamas.

Red Palace Courtyard

The base is purely structural, holding the palaces onto the steep hill.

Thangka Storehouse

★ 3D Mandala

This intricate mandala of a palace, covered in precious metals and jewels, embodies aspects of the path to enlightenment.

View from the Roof of the Red Palace

On a clear day the view over the valley and on to the mountains beyond is unequalled, although the newer parts of Lhasa are less impressive.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

Beijing Zhong Lu, Lhasa.
 ☎ (0891) 683 4362. ☑ 9am–5pm daily. ⚠ extra charges for Golden Roof access and Exhibition Room. 📷 in chapels, otherwise extra charges for photography.
 🚫 Not suitable for those who find stairs a problem.

White Palace

The entrance to the main building has a triple stairway – the middle set of stairs is for the sole use of the Dalai Lama.

The Eastern Courtyard

School of Religious Officials

Defensive Eastern Bastion

Heavenly King Murals

The East Entrance has sumptuous images of the Four Heavenly Kings, Buddhist guardian figures.

The Western Hall

Located on the first floor of the Red Palace, the largest hall inside the Potala contains the holy throne of the 6th Dalai Lama.

Exploring Around Lhasa

LHASA'S ENVIRONS ARE DOTTED with the major monasteries of Drepung, Nechung, Sera, and Ganden. Easily accessible from Lhasa by bus, minibus, or hired vehicle, these are ideal for day-trips, especially for those unable to venture farther afield in Tibet. Agencies in Lhasa hire out landcruisers along with a driver and guide, and also handle the necessary permits. Vehicles can take up to five people – if looking for companions to share the cost, check the bulletin boards in backpacker hotels.

A typically gory tantric painting at Nechung Monastery

Drepung Monastery

5 miles (8 km) W of Lhasa.

 8am–4pm daily (chapels close between noon–3pm).

Drepung meaning “rice heap,” was founded in 1416 by Jamyang Choje, a disciple of Tsongkhapa, the founder of the Gelugpa or Yellow Hat order of monks (see p520). In its heyday in the 17th-century, it was Tibet’s richest monastery, with four colleges and 10,000 monks; today there are fewer than a thousand.

The site is vast and the easiest way to get around is to follow the pilgrims, who circle the complex clockwise. From the entrance, turn left to the Ganden Palace, built in 1530 as a residence by the 2nd Dalai Lama. His rather plain apartments are upstairs on the seventh floor. The courtyard is usually busy with woodcarvers and block-printers creating prayer prints at great speed. Next is the Tsogchen or Main Assembly Hall, the most atmospheric building in the complex. About 180 pillars hold up the roof, and the room is draped with thangkas and hangings and decorated with suits of armor.

There is plenty of statuary, with the finest images in the Chapel of the Three Ages at the back of the Main Assembly Hall.

At the hall’s entrance, stairs lead to the upper floor from where it is possible to see the massive head and shoulders of the Maitreya Buddha, the future Buddha or Jampa, rising up three stories. Pilgrims prostrate before it and drink from a holy conch shell. The Tara Chapel next door contains wooden racks of scriptures and a statue of Prajnaparamita, the Mother of Buddhas and an aspect of the goddess Tara; the amulet on her lap contains a tooth said to belong to Tsongkhapa.

Behind the Tsogchen, the little Manjusri Temple has a relief image of the Bodhisattva of Wisdom, Jampalyang, chiseled out of rock. The circuit continues north to the Ngagpa College, then to various colleges toward the southeast.

Each building contains fine sculptures, though some might prefer to skip them and rest in the courtyard outside the Tsogchen. Those who are acclimatized can walk round the Drepung kora or pilgrim circuit, which passes rock paintings and the cave dwellings of nuns, and offers great views.

Nechung Monastery

4 miles (7 km) W of Lhasa.

 8am–4pm daily (chapels close between noon–3pm).

A fifteen-minute walk southeast from Drepung, Nechung Monastery was the seat of the Tibetan Oracle. The Oracle not only predicted the future, but also protected the Buddha’s teachings and his followers. During consultations with the Dalai Lama, the Oracle, dressed in an elaborate and weighty costume,

THANGKAS AND MANDALAS

Thangkas are religious paintings mounted on brocade that carry painted or embroidered images inside a colored border. Seen in temples, monasteries, and homes, they depict subjects as diverse as the lives of Buddhas, Tibetan theology and astrology, and mandalas or geometric representations of the cosmos. The Tashilunpo Monastery (see p544) displays gigantic thangkas during its festivals each year.

Mandalas are often used as meditation aids by Buddhists and are based on a pattern of circles and squares around a central focal point. The Potala Palace in Lhasa (see pp534–5) has a splendid three-dimensional mandala made of precious metal. Monks spend days creating mandalas of colored sand that are swept away on completion to signify the transient nature of life.

Mandala symbolizing the universe

Monks engaged in group debates at Sera Monastery would go into a trance before making his pronouncements, concluding the session in a dead faint. Tibet's last Oracle fled to India in 1959, and now the monastery has only a few caretaker monks. Nechung's decor is startling as the courtyard outside is filled with gory paintings and demon torturers. Within the chapels, leering sculptures of skulls loom out of the gloom. The airy Audience Chamber on the second floor is a welcome respite. Here, the Dalai Lama used to consult the Oracle. The roof-level chapel is dedicated to Padmasambhava, the Tantric Buddha, also known as Guru Rinpoche.

Sera Monastery

2 miles (4 km) N of Lhasa.  3–5pm daily.

Founded in 1419 by disciples of the Gelugpa order, Sera Monastery was famous for its warrior monks, the Dob-Doa. Once home to 5,000 monks, today there are less than one-tenth that number, although the energetic renovation suggests that this may improve.

Activity centers around its three colleges, visited in a clockwise circuit. Turn left from the main path to reach the first college, Sera Me, that was used for instruction in Buddhist basics. Sera Ngag-Pa, a little farther up the hill, was for tantric studies and Sera Je, next to it, was for teaching visiting monks. Each building has a dimly lit main hall and chapels toward the back that are full of sculptures. The largest and most striking building in the complex is the Tsogchen located farthest up the hill. It features wall-length thangkas, a throne that was used by the 13th Dalai Lama, and images of him and of Sakya Yeshe, the founder of Sera monastery. At the top of the path stands the open-air debating courtyard, well worth a visit at 3:30pm every day, when the monks assemble for debates. Their ritualized gestures – clapping hands and stamping when a point is made – make it fascinating to watch. The Sera kora, or pilgrim circuit which heads west from the main entrance, takes about an hour to complete and passes some beautiful rock reliefs.

Rock painting, Sera Monastery

Ganden Monastery

28 miles (45 km) E of Lhasa.

Shuttle from the square at Jokhang

Temple.  8:50am–4pm daily.

The farthest of the monasteries from Lhasa, Ganden is probably the one most worth visiting, with its scenic setting high on the Gokpori Ridge. To get a feel of the place, it is best to travel with the excited pilgrims on the bus that leaves from Lhasa's Barkhor area every morning at 6:30am, returning at 2pm. The monastery was founded in 1410 by Tsongkhapa, and its main building, the Serdung Lhakhang, has as its centerpiece a huge gold and silver chorten (stupa or funerary mound) with Tsongkhapa's remains. However, the buildings are not its main appeal.

Its highlight is the kora, which takes an hour to walk. The circuit offers fine views of the landscape and a chorten or two that pilgrims (and visitors if they wish) must hop around on one leg.

A domestic yak on the steep hills surrounding Ganden Monastery

Samye Monastery ❷

桑耶寺

Tantric protector in Gongkhan

WITH ITS ORDERED DESIGN, wealth of religious treasures, and stunning location, Samye makes a deep impression on visitors. Tibet's first monastery, Samye was founded in the 8th century during Trisong Detsen's reign with the input of the great Buddhist teacher, Guru Rinpoche. Indian and Chinese scholars, invited to Samye to translate Buddhist scriptures into Tibetan, argued over the interpretation of doctrine, and so Trisong Detsen held a public debate to decide which form of Buddhism should be followed in Tibet. The Indian school won out and Chinese-religious influence gradually waned. Today the monastery has a well-worn and eclectic feel, having been influenced by numerous sects over the years.

★ Chenresig Chapel

This chapel centers on a stunning statue of Chenresig, with an eye painstakingly painted on each of its thousand hands.

Monks live in quarters on the upper level of the outer wall.

EXPLORING THE ÜTSE

The Ütse is dimly lit, so take a flashlight to explore. The entrance leads directly into the Main Hall, with the Chenresig Chapel to the left and the Gongkhan Chapel to the right. The Jowo Sakyamuni Chapel is at the far end of the Main Hall. Numerous chapels and the Dalai Lama's quarters are located on the second story. The third story has an open gallery lined with impressive murals.

STAR SIGHTS

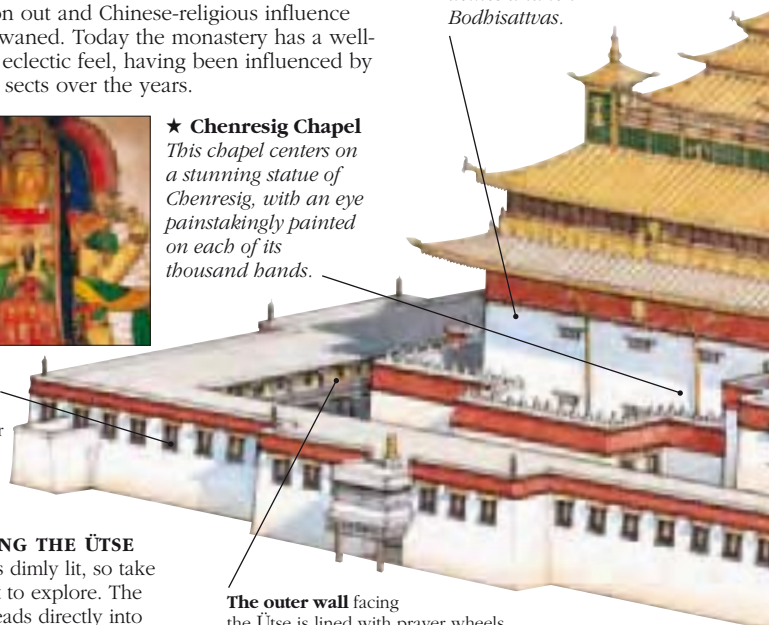

★ Jowo Sakyamuni Chapel

★ Chenresig Chapel

★ Jowo Sakyamuni Chapel

Samye's most revered chapel centers on an image of Sakyamuni at age 38. He is flanked by two protector deities and ten Bodhisattvas.

The outer wall facing the Ütse is lined with prayer wheels and elaborate murals of Buddha.

View of Samye Monastery

A superb view of the monastery can be had from the surrounding hills. From here it is easy to see that the monastery is laid out as a 3-D mandala (see p536).

◁ Flags hung on the hills around Ganden Monastery to infuse the wind with prayers

Guru Rinpoche
An 8th-century monk-king from Swat in modern-day Pakistan, he is said to have subdued evil demons and established Buddhism in Tibet. Images of him carrying a thunderbolt are found throughout the complex.

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

93 miles (150 km) SE of Lhasa.
 🚗 from Lhasa or Tsetang to ferry on Tsangpo, then truck. 🚗 🚗 unless fee paid. 🗓️ Samye Festival, 15th day of fifth lunar month.

The mural to the left of the entrance on the third story depicts the 5th Dalai Lama receiving the Mongol Khan Gushri and his retinue.

Quarters of the Dalai Lama
This simple apartment, consisting of anteroom, bedroom and throne room, is full of relics, including Guru Rinpoche's hair and walking stick.

Gongkhan Chapel is packed with draped statues of fierce demons. A stuffed snake guards the exit.

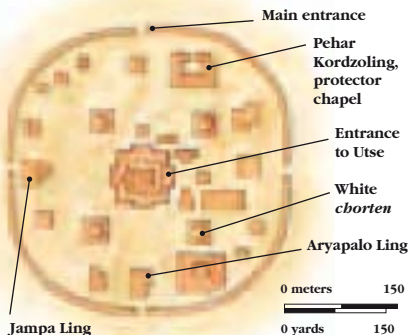

The main hall houses images and statues of Guru Rinpoche and the Buddhist kings, Trisong Detsen and Songtsen Gampo.

The inscription on this stone stele (779 AD) declares that King Trisong Detsen has proclaimed Buddhism as the state religion.

Main entrance

PLAN OF SAMYE COMPLEX

Samye's design echoes Tibetan Buddhism's cosmology of the universe. Many of the 108 buildings have been destroyed, but the four ling chapels representing the island continents that surround Mount Sumeru (the Utse) are still intact. Jampa Ling holds an impressive mural of the complex as it once was. The circular monastery wall is topped with 1,008 chortens that represent Chakravala, the ring of 1,008 mountains that surrounds the universe.

Nomad tents, at the edge of the breathtaking Namtso Lake

Tsurphu Monastery ③

楚布寺

Tolung Valley. 45 miles (70 km) W of Lhasa. 🚌 daily from Barkhor Square in Lhasa. Last bus back to Lhasa, 3pm.

🚗 4WD rented from Lhasa, 2–3 hrs.

🕒 9am–2pm daily. 📷

SITUATED AT AN altitude of 14,700 ft (4,480 m), this monastery was founded in the 12th century by the Karmapa or Black Hats order and is important as the home of the Karmapa Lama, the third most important religious leader in Tibet after the Dalai and Panchen Lamas (see p544). The present incumbent, the 17th Karmapa, fled to India in 1999 at the age of 14. His departure was significant as he was the only senior Tibetan Buddhist official recognized by both the Chinese authorities and the Dalai Lama. The flood of daily pilgrims who came for blessings has now stopped and the monastery is rather quiet, though several hundred monks still reside here.

One of the many brightly-colored murals at Tsurphu Monastery

The Karmapa's throne, an object of great veneration, is in the audience chamber of the main hall. Here, a chorten (stupa or funerary mound) contains the relics of the 16th Karmapa, who died in Chicago in 1981. The kora from behind the monastery takes three hours, and provides magnificent views but beware – visitors must be acclimatized.

Namtso Lake ④

纳木错湖

125 miles (200 km) NW of Lhasa.

🚗 4WD rented from Lhasa, 2–3 day round-trip. 🕒 daily. 📷

BEAUTIFUL NAMTSO Lake, with its classic Tibetan scenery of azure water beneath snow-capped peaks and grasslands dotted with herds of yak, has made it the most popular overnight jeep trip from Lhasa. About 45 miles (70 km) long and 19 miles (30 km) wide, it is the second largest saltwater lake in China after

THE EIGHT AUSPICIOUS SYMBOLS

The Eight Auspicious Symbols represent the offerings that were presented to Sakyamuni Buddha, after he attained Enlightenment. Born as Siddhartha Gautama, prince of the kingdom of Kapilavastu, he renounced his princely life at the age of 30, and went in search of answers to the meaning of human suffering and existence. After years of penance, Siddhartha attained Enlightenment after meditating under a Bodhi tree in Bodhi Gaya, India. Tibetans regard the symbols as protective motifs and use them to decorate flags and medallions as well as tiles in Buddhist temples, monasteries, and homes. The Conch Shell is blown to celebrate Sakyamuni's Enlightenment; the Endless Knot represents harmony, and the never-ending passage of time; and the Wheel of Law symbolizes the Buddha's eightfold path to Enlightenment. Other symbols include the Golden Fish, representing liberation from the Wheel of Life, and the Lotus Flower that represents purity.

Conch Shell

Endless Knot

Wheel of Law

Qinghai Hu (see p499). The flat land around it offers good grazing, and is usually ringed with nomad encampments in summer. From November to May, the lake freezes over. Most people stay a night at Tashi Dor, a monastery on a lakeside hill. Bring a flashlight and a warm sleeping bag. The lake is situated at the incredible height of 15,500 ft (4,718 m), so visitors must be thoroughly acclimatized.

Highly decorated doorway to the main chapel, Kumbum, Gyantse

Gyantse 5

江孜

158 miles (255 km) SW of Lhasa.
 Minibus: alternate days from Lhasa bus station. 🚗 4WD from Lhasa.
 Travel Permits required (see p519).

AN ATTRACTIVE, if dusty, small town, Gyantse is Tibet's third largest settlement, famous for its carpets, and usually visited en route to Nepal (see p547). Often called "Heroic City," it was originally capital of a 14th-century kingdom, and the remnants of its old Dzong, or fort watches over the town. Heavily bombarded during the British invasion in 1904, when it was captured at great loss of life to the Tibetans, it is today a dramatic ruin with a small museum. Here, Chinese propaganda describes the "heroic battle fought to defend the Chinese motherland," although at that time China had no authority over Tibet. The Dzong offers good views from its roof.

THE BRITISH INVASION OF TIBET

Alarmed by the growing influence of Tsarist Russia in the 19th century, Britain's viceroy in India sent a diplomatic mission to Tibet in an effort to build links and facilitate the free flow of trade. When the mission failed, an expeditionary force – part of the Great Game (see p491) – of 1,000 soldiers and 10,000 porters, led by the dashing 26-year-old Colonel Francis Younghusband, invaded Tibet in 1903. As the force traveled inward, they killed almost 700 peasants, who were armed in part with magic charms to ward off bullets. Then, in the world's highest battle, the British captured Gyantse Fort with only four casualties, while the Tibetans lost hundreds of men. The force proceeded to Lhasa, where an agreement allowed Britain to set up trade missions.

Francis Younghusband

About 650 ft (200 m) north-west is a compound housing the Kumbum and Pelkor Chode Monastery.

The Kumbum, constructed around 1440, is a magnificent six-story and 115-ft (35-m) high chorten, honeycombed with little chapels. It is built in an architectural style unique to Tibet and this is the finest extant example. A clockwise route leads up past chapels full of statuary and decorated with 14th-century murals – kumbum means "a hundred thousand images." On the fourth floor, painted pairs of eyes, signifying the all-seeing eyes of Buddha, look out in each of the cardinal directions. The staircase in the eastern chapel leads into the chorten's dome. There are dramatic views from the top.

Built 20 years after Kumbum, the Pelkor Chode Monastery was designed for all the local Buddhist sects to use; its murky Assembly Hall has two thrones, one for the Dalai Lama and one for the Sakya Lama. The main chapel at the back of the hall has a statue of Sakyamuni, the Historical Buddha, and some impressive wooden roof decorations. At the very top, the Shalyekhang Chapel has some fine mandalas (see p536).

On the way to Gyantse it is worth taking a detour to see beautiful Yamdrok Lake, one of the four holy Tibetan lakes

🏰 Dzong

🕒 Mon–Sat. 📷

🏰 Kumbum & Pelkor Chode Monastery

🕒 9am–7pm Mon–Sat (closed noon–3pm). 📷 📷 for a fee.

Kumbum, Gyantse, a three-dimensional mandala

Shigatse & Tashilunpo 6

日喀则

Striped cloth woven on loom

CAPITAL OF THE TSANG REGION, Shigatse sits at an elevation of 12,800 ft (3,900 m). To its north, the Drolma Ridge rises steeply, topped by the ruins of the ancient Dzong, once home to the kings of Tsang. Shigatse holds a powerful position in Tibet, and was the capital for a spell during the early 17th century. After Lhasa regained its status, Shigatse continued to hold sway as the home of the Panchen Lama, Tibet's second most important religious ruler, whose seat is located at Tashilunpo Monastery, the town's grandest sight. Worth exploring for a day or two, Shigatse is the most comfortable place in Tibet after Lhasa, with decent food and accommodations on offer.

A group of carpet makers tying richly colored wool into intricate knots

Gang Gyen Carpet Factory

Qomolangma Lu.  9am–12:30pm & 2:30–7pm Mon–Fri.

This factory, where local women produce beautiful carpets, first skeining the wool than weaving it, is the place to come if you are in the

Night Market

A small cluster of street food stalls can be found at the corner of Qomolangma Lu and Jiefang Zhong Lu. Chairs and tables, and even the odd sofa, line the sidewalks next to the stalls. Enjoy a large bowl or noodles or a kabob.

THE 11TH PANCHEN LAMA

The death of the 10th Panchen Lama in 1989 brought Tibet's leaders and the Chinese government into conflict over succession. Like the seat of the Dalai Lama, the Panchen Lama's position is passed on through reincarnation. Traditionally, upon the death of either of these leaders, top monks scour the land hoping to identify the new incarnate. In 1995, after an extensive search, the Dalai Lama named a six-year-old boy, Gedhun Choeki Nyima, as the 11th Panchen Lama. The chosen boy and his family soon disappeared and have not been seen since. Keen to handpick the next Dalai Lama's teacher, the Chinese authorities sanctioned a clandestine ceremony which ordained Gyancain Norbu as the "official Panchen Lama" and immediately whisked him off to Beijing.

Young Gyancain Norbu, the China-sanctioned 11th Panchen Lama

Dzong

The leaders of Tsang once ruled from the mighty fortress of Shigatse Dzong, in the north of town, built in the 14th century by Karma Phuntso Namgyel, a powerful Tsang king. It once resembled a small Potala but was destroyed by the Chinese in 1959 during the Tibetan uprising, and little remains today except the stumps of a few burned walls. Nevertheless it is a good spot to take in the view over the town. A kora or holy route, marked by prayer flags and mani stones, leads here from the west side of Tashilunpo. Keep your distance from the packs of stray dogs.

Tibetan Market

At the Dzong's southern base on Tomzigang Lu stands a small Tibetan market selling souvenirs, such as prayer wheels and incense, and a few Tibetan necessities – medicine, legs of lamb, and large knives. Just to the west of the market is an old traditionally Tibetan neighborhood of narrow lanes and tall whitewashed walls.

Stall selling religious regalia at the Tibetan Market

Tashilunpo Monastery

 Summer: 9am–12:30pm & 4–6pm Mon–Sat; Winter: 10am–noon & 3–6pm Mon–Sat.

A huge monastic compound of golden-roofed venerable buildings and cobbled lanes, Tashilunpo would take several days to explore fully. It was founded in 1447 by Genden Drup, retrospectively titled the 1st Dalai Lama. It grew suddenly important in

Majestic Tashilunpo Monastery with Drolma Ridge rising behind

1642, when the 5th Dalai Lama declared his teacher, the monastery's abbot, to be a reincarnation of the Amithaba Buddha and the fourth reincarnation of the Panchen Lama, or great teacher. Ever since it has been the seat of the Panchen Lamas, who are second in authority to the Dalai Lama.

Head up the main path to the back of the compound for the most impressive sights. The gold and silver chorten straight ahead holds the remains of the 4th Panchen Lama. Built in 1662, it was the only funeral chorten in the monastery to escape destruction during the Cultural Revolution.

The larger, jewel studded chorten just to the west holds the remains of the 10th Panchen Lama, who died in 1989; it was constructed in 1994 at a cost of eight million US dollars.

Continue west for the Chapel of Jampa, which holds the monastery's most impressive artifact, an 85-ft (26-m)

The Wheel of Law, an auspicious symbol

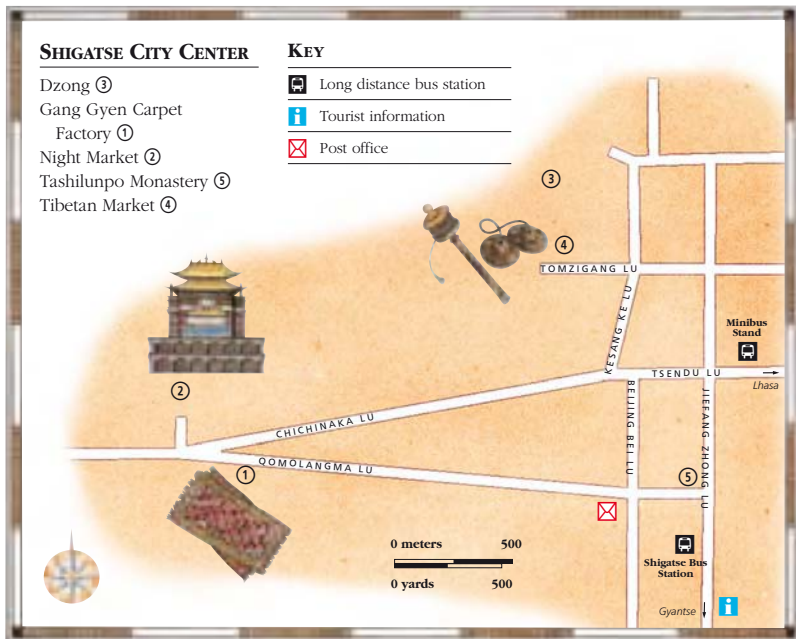

VISITORS' CHECKLIST

- 172 miles (278 km) W of Lhasa.
- 60,000. Shigatse Bus Station, Minibus Stand.
- Tashilunpo Festival: 2nd week of 5th lunar month.

golden image of Jampa, the future Buddha, made in 1914. It took almost a thousand artisans four years to complete using more than 600 pounds (275 kg) of gold.

The complex of buildings on the east side is the Kelsang. It centers around a courtyard where monks can be observed praying, debating, and relaxing. The 15th-century Assembly Hall on the west side holds the imposing throne of the Panchen Lamas.

Those with energy left can follow the monastery kora, which takes about an hour. It runs clockwise around the outside of the walls before heading up to the Dzong. On the way you'll pass colorful rock reliefs, some of Guru Rinpoche, and the huge white wall where a thangka of Buddha is exposed to the sun during the joyous three-day long Tashilunpo Festival.

Sakya Monastery 7

萨迦寺

311 miles (500 km) SW of Lhasa.
 🚌 bus or minibus from Lhasa to Shigatse (7 hrs); every 2 days from Shigatse. 🚗 4WD rented from Lhasa.
 ☉ 9am–6:30pm Mon–Sat. 📶 📷
 fee. Travel Permit required (see p519).

THE TOWN of Sakya is dominated by the huge, fortress-like monastery, that looms up from the gray plains. Sakya or “Gray Soil” in Tibetan, was the capital of all Tibet in the 13th century, when monks of the Sakyapa order formed an extraordinary alliance with the Mongols. In 1247, the head of the Sakyapa order, Sakya Pandita, traveled to Mongolia and made a pact, whereby the Mongols were the overlords, while the Sakya monks ruled as their regents – the first time a lama was also head of state. His nephew, Phagpa, later became the spiritual guide to the conqueror of China, Kublai Khan. In 1354, Mongol power waned, and infighting among the religious sects led to a decline in Sakya’s influence.

Originally, there were two monasteries on either side of the Trum River, but the northern one was destroyed during the Cultural Revolution (see pp64–5). The mid-13th century Southern Monastery, built by Phagpa, is a typical Mongol structure, with thick walls and watchtowers. The entrance leads to a courtyard with an enormous prayer pole in the center. To the left is the Puntsok Palace, the traditional home of one of the two head lamas, who now lives overseas. Apart from the statue-filled chapel, its rooms are mainly empty. Moving clockwise, the next chapel, the Purkhang, holds images of Jowo Sakyamuni and Jampalyang among others, while wall murals depict tantric deities. The Main Assembly Hall has 40 huge wooden pillars, one of which was said to have been gifted by Kublai Khan, while another is said to have come from India on the back of a tiger. The elaborately decorated hall has rich brocades, statues, and butter lamps and holds thousands of religious texts (sutras). The fine central Buddha image enshrines the remains of Phagpa. The chapel to the north has 11 silver chortens containing the remains of previous Sakya lamas. Sakya houses are traditionally painted gray with red and white vertical stripes; the colors are supposed to symbolize the Bodhisattvas Channa Dorje, Jampalyang, and Chenresig respectively.

Detail from wall painting at Sakya Monastery

Everest Base Camp 8

珠峰大本营

Rongphu 336 miles (540 km) SW of Lhasa. 🚌 from Lhasa to Shigatse (7 hrs), then rent 4WD (more difficult to hire here than in Lhasa). 🚗 4WD from Lhasa, 2 days; 4WD from CITS office near Shigatse Hotel or Tashi 1 restaurant in Shigatse. 📶 for Everest area. Travel Permits required (see p519).

DESPITE THE spine-jarring, four-hour trip off the Friendship Highway – that connects Lhasa to the Nepal border at Zhangmu – the craggy lunar landscape en route to Everest is enchanting. Rongphu is a good place for a stop and at 16,500 ft (4,980 m) is the highest monastery in the world. Although it has some good murals, the interior is not as riveting as its stunning location in front of Everest’s forbidding north face in the Rongphu Valley. The monastery was founded in 1902 on a site that had been used by nuns as a meditation retreat for centuries, and is now home to some 30 monks.

Everest Base Camp lies 5 miles (8 km) to the south. The trip across the glacial plain takes about 15 minutes by vehicle or two hours on foot. It is just a jumble of tents, with a makeshift tea-house and the world’s highest post box, but the views of Mount Everest, the world’s highest mountain at a staggering 29,029 ft (8,848 m), are absolutely unforgettable.

The entire Rongphu and Everest area has been designated a nature reserve that covers 13,100 sq miles (34,000 sq km), and borders three national parks in Nepal. A spectacular viewpoint at the Pangla Pass en route to Rongphu has a chart that helps identify peaks over

Houses at Sakya Village, painted gray with red and white stripes

Everest Base Camp, with magnificent views of the world's highest mountain

26,000 ft (8,000 m) high – Cho Oyu, Lhotse, Makalu, and of course, Everest, known as Chomolungma in Tibetan.

The rarefied air at this altitude (17,000 ft/5,150 m) makes any strenuous activity impossible. Unless visitors are properly acclimatized, it is best to go all the way back to the Friendship Highway and carry on to the town of Shekhar to spend the night.

begins a steep, winding descent through mountains that are densely wooded; the change of scenery is startling after the desert landscape of the high, arid plateau. It is only another 20 miles (33 km) to the border town of Zhangmu, which is relatively low and oxygen-rich at 7,600 ft (2,300 m). Although much of Zhangmu consists of slightly dilapidated shacks, perched above one another on the mountainside, this frontier town has a gaudy vibrance. Border formalities to get into Nepal are fairly cursory. The Nepalese immigration post, 6 miles (10 km) farther down at Kodari, will issue a single-entry visa, though visitors have to pay in US dollars and provide a passport photo. From here, it is a four-hour trip to Kathmandu.

The Nepal Border 9

尼泊尔边境

Zhangmu Nepal border. 435 miles (700 km) SW of Lhasa. 🚐 private minibus from Lhasa's Barkhor area to Zhangmu, 2 days. 🚗 4WD rented from Lhasa, 2 days (direct), or 5–6 days (via Gyantse, Shigatse & Everest Base Camp). Travel Permit for all places (between Shigatse and border) required (see p519).

THE FRIENDSHIP Highway connecting Lhasa to the Nepal border is one of Tibet's most popular link routes. From the Rongphu turn-off along the highway, it is another 31 miles (50 km) west to Tingri, on what is a surprisingly good road. This is a small, traditional Tibetan town with good views of the Everest range. After climbing for 56 miles (90 km) the road

THE FRIENDSHIP HIGHWAY

The 435-mile (700-km) route between Lhasa and the Nepal border, known as the Friendship Highway, is probably the most popular journey for visitors to Tibet and includes some important sightseeing detours along the way. Many agencies in Lhasa and in Kathmandu in Nepal can arrange the trip, sort out the necessary permits, and provide an appropriate four-wheel drive vehicle, a driver, and guide. Depending on the itinerary, which usually includes the towns of Shigatse and Gyantse, the trip can take up to a week. Visitors must ensure that the contract specifies exactly what they want and what they are paying for.

Friendship Highway, winding across the plateau to Nepal

TRAVELERS' NEEDS

WHERE TO STAY 550-573

WHERE TO EAT 574-597

SHOPS & MARKETS 598-601

ENTERTAINMENT 602-603

OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES &

SPECIALIST HOLIDAYS 604-607

WHERE TO STAY

AN ABUNDANCE of accommodations is available in China for most of the year, despite the rapid growth in domestic travel. Four- and five-star hotels, sometimes run by foreign hotel chains, are plentiful in the major cities and tourist destinations. In other cities and towns, there are numerous mid-range hotels and budget options with basic facilities to choose from. Generally, there is no need to book in advance, unless you are traveling during one of the high seasons – the first week of May and October, and the Chinese New Year (Spring Festival). Although you may want to book some of your stay (the first few nights, for example, to ease your arrival), it is perfectly feasible to turn up at your hotel of choice, bargain cheerfully, and book yourself a room at a sizable discount.

Logo of the White Swan Hotel

DIFFERENT KINDS OF HOTELS

VISITORS IN SEARCH of international standards of comfort and service should stick either to five-star hotels managed by familiar Western chains, or the Singapore- and Hong Kong-based luxury companies. Several international chains such as Hyatt, Shangri-La, Sheraton, and Sofitel have some new hotels in development; check their websites to see if the new properties have opened up. Bear in mind, though, that the rapid expansion in China's hotel industry has resulted in a continuous shortage of trained staff, so even familiar hotel chains have difficulty maintaining quite the same standards that they are able to maintain elsewhere.

Chinese-run hotels do their best to emulate Western operations. The published rack rates of Chinese four- and five-star hotels are indeed comparable, although the level of service in Chinese hotels does not match their Western counterparts. There is a willingness to please, however, especially away from the main tourist areas.

The Chinese star system of grading hotels is meaningless. Although authorities have devised a check-list of facilities that hotels must provide within each grade, there is no proper system of monitoring the standards of these services. Therefore, no matter how poorly these facilities may be maintained, no star is ever lost once it has been given. Rather than be involved in the star-rating system, some international hotels choose to go starless. These unrated hotels can be far superior to neighboring Chinese-run, five-star properties, which may not have been renovated in years. As a general rule for Chinese-run hotels, the newer the hotel, the better the facilities.

The plant-laden lobby of the White Swan Hotel, Guangzhou

BUDGET HOTELS & OTHER TYPES OF ACCOMMODATIONS

BUDGET TRAVELERS will find a choice of basic and inexpensive accommodations all across the mainland and in Hong Kong. Dormitory beds for around ¥25–30 are common, especially away from the larger cities. Youth hostels with spotless facilities and beds costing about ¥50 are beginning to open up in some metropolises. Many universities will rent out vacant rooms in their “foreign residents wings.” Usually located far from the city center, university accommodations are often well looked after, although the communal washing facilities can be grim. There is usually a choice of internet facilities and a range of inexpensive cafés nearby.

Camping is not an option in China. Pitching a tent, except in the most far-flung places, is

The grand Xinhao Ying Hotel on Xinhao Shan, Qingdao

◀ Bai-minority vendors at the Shaping market, near Dali in Yunnan

The slick lobby at the Grand Hyatt, one of Beijing's luxury hotels certain to attract attention, and you are likely to get a visit from the police. Stays in a ger, the round portable homes of the nomadic Mongols and Kazakhs, can be arranged in Inner Mongolia and Xinjiang. These overnight camps are firmly targeted at tourists, so you may be disappointed if you are after an authentic experience. Some monasteries and lamaseries have pilgrims' inns where you are welcome to stay for a minimal fee, but conditions can be very austere. On holy mountains, such as Emei Shan, you will find many temples offering basic but atmospheric accommodations.

BOOKING A HOTEL

IN CHINA, THE REAL PRICE of a hotel room is what the customer is willing to pay. Locals always ask for a discount and you should too. The days of official surcharges for non-Chinese customers are long gone. Although many hotels still quote higher prices to foreign visitors, they are amenable to hard bargaining and will bring their rates down drastically, especially if the rooms in question will otherwise go empty.

For most foreign-run hotels, the best available price will be on the hotel's own website. Unless demand is very high, the price will tend to drop nearer to the planned day of stay.

Websites for Chinese hotels will almost always quote a wildly inflated rack rate. Only foreigners who try to book in advance from overseas will ever pay this price. Specialist websites often claim to offer huge discounts but, while they can sometimes offer good prices for advance bookings, you should be able to get a better price by a considerable margin if you turn up to book in person. Discounts of 10 to 20 percent are standard, 30 to 40 percent very common, 50 percent not unusual. You can even try for larger discounts, especially in locations with strong seasonal demand.

The recent introduction of double beds of various sizes in Chinese-run hotels (rather than the standard twin single beds) has led to some confusion. Older hotels and a few newer ones do indeed have regular "single rooms," with a single bed in a relatively small space for a cheaper price. However, rooms described as "single" usually refer to those with a double bed, and can be occupied by two people, although they usually cost slightly less than twin-bed rooms of the same size.

The display of certain credit card symbols at hotels does not guarantee that the hotel will accept the international versions of these cards. It is therefore important to confirm that your international card will be accepted before checking in. You cannot pay directly with travelers' checks, and though most tourist hotels now have foreign exchange facilities, the staff will probably send you to the local Bank of China head office to exchange your checks. In most places, be prepared to pay in renminbi.

HIDDEN COSTS

THE PRICES QUOTED by major international hotels do not include their service charges or local bed taxes, although the latter are rarely levied. Many Chinese-run, upper-end hotels have begun to levy service charges of between 5 and 15 percent. Since this is a new practice, most Chinese customers refuse to pay the charges, and hotels rarely insist. Foreign visitors should check their bills carefully before paying, as specialty restaurants in hotels often try to sneak service charges on to their bills. Note that minibar contents are as overpriced in China as they are elsewhere in the world. Costs for phone calls from even modest hotels are computer monitored, and no more than a modest service charge will be added on top of the actual cost of the call.

Charming rural lodgings in Ping An, near Longsheng, Guangxi

SEASONAL DEMAND

WHILE ROOMS are readily available everywhere in China for most of the year, the busiest travel periods are during the week-long national holidays, principally around May 1 and October 1. Unlike the West, very few people in China have discretionary holidays, so almost everyone in the country seems to be traveling at the same time. Another time to avoid traveling is during the Chinese New Year or Spring Festival, when accommodation is almost impossible to find. The exact dates are not fixed far in advance, but as soon as the dates are declared transport and accommodation costs shoot up.

Spring and autumn, with their milder temperatures and lower humidity, are more popular seasons for traveling than summer or winter, which are both extreme. In summer, some of the cooler destinations within reasonable reach of large cities – such as the island of Putuo Shan, served by short flights and ferries from Shanghai – can be very crowded and expensive during weekends, but very cheap during the week. Other events that affect transport costs and room availability are the festivals of ethnic minorities, particularly in the southwest, and trade events such as the biannual fair in Guangzhou.

The lobby at Dalian Hotel, Harbin

Oriental Plaza, one of Beijing's larger commercial hotels

CHOOSING A HOTEL

WHEN LOOKING for a hotel amongst Chinese-run properties, keep in mind that the newest hotels are always the best, as most hotel owners seem to resist carrying out repairs and maintenance unless they are absolutely necessary. New hotels, which are constantly springing up in various parts of the country, are mostly one-off operations started by private businesses or government departments in the hope of benefiting from the growth in domestic tourism. Hotels run by the police, banks, post offices, tobacco companies, and other businesses, are aspiring to compete with long-standing establishments run by local governments.

In general, hotels whose names begin with the province or city to which they belong, followed by one of the many Chinese words for hotel such as dajudian, jiudian, fandian, and binguan, are more likely to be owned by local governments. These hotels are best avoided, as most seem to be trapped in an era of central planning and guaranteed employment, with shabby, dilapidated rooms, and a rather indifferent staff to whom the Communist motto, "Serve the people," doesn't necessarily extend to the person in front of them.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS & PRECAUTIONS

CHECK-OUT TIME is usually noon, but visitors can pay half the nightly rate to keep the room until 6pm. Chinese regulations require all non-residents to be out of hotel rooms by 11pm, but this is widely ignored. Although foreign exchange facilities are usually open seven days a week at most of the better hotels, these facilities can only be used by registered guests.

In most parts of China, hotels which provide accommodations to foreign visitors must have a license to do so. Some hotels without licenses may turn you away, although this is becoming increasingly rare. Beijing and Yunnan have already done away with the licensing system, and more regions can be expected to follow soon.

Many hotels in China, including some establishments with foreign management, advertise facilities such as night clubs, hair and beauty salons, and karaoke bars, but these are often fronts for prostitution. Be wary of unexpected telephone calls to your room offering "anmo" or massage. It is best to disconnect your phone if you wish to avoid being solicited.

It is nearly always a mistake to arrange transport services through your hotel, as they often cost as much as four times what they would if you found a taxi on your own. It is wiser to simply walk onto the street and flag down a passing vehicle. Taxis hovering near the doors of hotels in popular tourist destinations should also be approached with caution.

When surveying hotels, remember that the pictures you see on brochures and websites almost always date to the time of opening, and are unlikely to represent the current condition of rooms. You should also not be swayed by the promise of saunas, fitness centers, swimming pools, or jacuzzis, especially in Chinese-run hotels in remote areas, as the presence of these in brochures does not indicate that they are still working or fit for use. Most importantly, the rates mentioned are not fixed.

FACILITIES FOR CHILDREN & THE DISABLED

CHILDREN ARE welcome everywhere in China, although special facilities for them in hotels are rare. Most hotels allow children below 12 years to stay with their parents free of charge. Most hotels will also add an extra bed for an older child for a nominal (and usually negotiable) fee. Groups of four, including two children over 12, can sometimes share a room, but may be required to pay for two rooms. However, many older, Chinese-run hotels have three- and four-bed rooms, ideal for families.

In general, China is not a suitable destination for the disabled. Only the newest and best international hotels make any serious effort to provide wheelchair access, or fully adapted rooms. Most places have standard suites with inconveniently placed light switches, although some have wider bathroom doors to allow wheelchairs. However, most hotels have elevators, so booking a ground-floor room is not necessary.

TIPPING

AS TIPPING IS NOT very common in China, hotel staff don't usually expect to be tipped. The international hotels will already be charging you a 5 to 15 percent service charge on top of your bill. Some Chinese hotels have started to add these charges as well.

The Yunjincheng Folk Custom Hotel in Pingyao, Shanxi

DIRECTORY

com

HOTEL CHAINS

Crowne Plaza

☎ 1-800 227 6963 (US).

☎ 0800 8222 8222 (UK).

🌐 www.ichotelsgroup.com

Four Points by Sheraton

☎ 1-800 368 7764 (US).

☎ 0800 3253 5353 (UK).

🌐 www.starwood.com

Four Seasons

☎ 1-800 819 5053 (US).

☎ 0800 6488 6488 (UK).

🌐 www.fourseasons.com

Grand Hyatt

☎ 1-888 591 1234 (US).

☎ 0845 888 1234 (UK).

🌐 www.hyatt.com

Harbour Plaza

☎ (212) 253 9606 (US).

☎ (2) 9929 2829 (Aus).

🌐 www.harbour-plaza.com

Hilton

☎ 1-800 445 8667 (US).

☎ 08705 909 090 (UK).

🌐 www.hilton.com

Holiday Inn

☎ 1-800 465 4329 (US).

☎ 0800 405 060 (UK).

🌐 www.ichotelsgroup.com

Howard Johnson

☎ 1-800 406 1411 (US).

☎ 0845 602 1532 (UK).

🌐 www.hojo.com

Hyatt Regency

☎ 1-888 591 1234 (US).

☎ 0845 888 1234 (UK).

🌐 www.hyatt.com

Ibis

🌐 www.ibishotel.com

Intercontinental

☎ 1-800 327 0200 (US).

☎ 0800 028 9387 (UK).

🌐 www.ichotelsgroup.com

Marco Polo

🌐 www.marcopolohotels.com

com

Choosing a Hotel

The hotels in this guide have been selected across a wide range of price categories for the excellence of their facilities, location, or character. The chart below lists the hotels in price categories within each chapter of the book. Many hotels have business facilities, gyms, and swimming pools, but only those worth mentioning are listed

PRICE CATEGORIES

The following price ranges are for a standard double room (or single dorm bed) and taxes per night during the high season. Breakfast is not included.

- Under ¥200
- ¥200–¥400
- ¥400–¥800
- ¥800–¥1400
- Over ¥1400

BEIJING

Beijing City Youth Hostel Beijing (Chengshi Guoji Qingnian Lüshe)

Zhan Qian Xiejie 1, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 6525 8066 Fax (010) 6525 9066 Rooms 96

Map 4 F1

Among the best values in budget accommodations this is extremely convenient – located next to the Beijing Railway for those with early morning trains to catch. There's the option of very reasonably priced twin rooms for shoestringers who want a bit of privacy. Brand new, hence clean. Fax and internet available.

Feiying Binguan

Xuanwu Men Xi Dajie 10, Xuanwu, Tel (010) 6317 1116 Fax (010) 6315 1165 Rooms 46

Map 3 A2

Part of the raft of new budget hotels to open under the Youth Hostelling International umbrella, this is among the cheapest and most convenient to public transport – the subway is a few minutes away on foot. Rooms, both private twins and dorms, are pristine, and management is fairly helpful. Reliable YHA-approved travel service available.

Xindadu Youth Hostel (Xindadu Guoji Qingnian Lüshe)

Chegong Zhuang Dajie 21, Xicheng, Tel (010) 6831 9988 ext. 180 Fax (010) 8837 3701 Rooms 200

One of the newest of the YHA youth hostels that are slowly taking over Beijing budget accommodation. Dorm beds are the only option, but these are pristine, and the rates are some of the lowest in the city. Walking distance to Chegongzhuang subway station and convenient to Beijing West Railway Station. www.xindadu-hotel.com

Zhaolong Youth Hostel (Zhaolong Qingnian Lüguan)

Gongti Bei Lu 2, Chaoyang, Tel (010) 6597 2299 Fax (010) 6597 2288 Rooms 24

A quiet budget option despite proximity to the city's most popular bar and restaurant area in the Sanlitun diplomatic zone. Clientele is mostly Chinese, and the staff is adamant about keeping order, locking the doors at 1am even on weekends. Dorms are kept decently tidy and are Beijing's cheapest. Easy access to several useful coach routes.

Far East Youth Hostel (Yuan Dong Qingnian Lüshe)

Tieshuxie Jie 90, Xuanwu, Tel (010) 6301 8811 ext. 3118 Fax (010) 6301 8233 Rooms 110

Map 3 B2

The city's most charming YHA hostel, with dorms and private rooms available in a pleasantly decorated conventional hotel building and a courtyard house across the street. The surrounding area was an Imperial-era red light district and maintains its lively atmosphere. Walking distance to the subway and Tian'an Men Square.

Bamboo Garden Hotel (Zhuyuan Binguan)

Xiaoshiqiao Hutong 24, Xicheng, Tel (010) 6403 2229 Fax (010) 6401 2633 Rooms 40

Map 1 C2

Oldest of Beijing's traditional hotels, with the largest and most elaborate courtyards. Rooms are mostly located in two largish buildings that lack the intimacy and charm of its smaller competitors. The serene bamboo garden in the main courtyard, rockeries and covered pathways make for pleasant lounging. Free bottled water available.

Hade Men Fandian

Chongwen Men Wai Dajie 2A, Chongwen, Tel (010) 6711 2244 Fax (010) 6711 6865 Rooms 196

Map 4 E2

Among the older hotels in Beijing, but renovated to a standard above other Chinese-run options in this price range. Rooms are comfortable if a bit gaudy, with nice views on the upper floors. Be sure to try the famous Bianyi Fang roast duck in the restaurant, just off the hotel lobby. www.hademenhotel.com

Haoyuan Binguan

Dongdan Bei Dajie Shijia Hutong 53, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 6512 5557 Fax (010) 6525 3179 Rooms 19

Map 2 E5

The smallest and most stylish courtyard hotel in Beijing. Rooms in first courtyard are small and unremarkable, but larger units in the tree-shaded rear courtyard are exquisite, furnished with Ming-style pieces custom-made for the hotel by a renowned designer. Just off fashionable Dong Dan shopping street, near subway.

Hejing Fu Binguan

Zhangzi Zhong Lu 7, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 6401 7744 Fax (010) 8401 3570 Rooms 137

Map 2 E4

This is the largest and most recently opened courtyard hotel, the result of extensive and meticulous renovations. Three courtyards are dotted with intricately carved statuary, and suites are luxuriously appointed with traditional trappings that reflect the house's Imperial pedigree (former residence of a Qing Emperor's daughter).

Howard Johnson Paragon (Baochen Fandian)Jianguo Men Nei Dajie 18A, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 6526 6688 Fax (010) 6527 4060 Rooms 280 Map 4 E1

The most comfortable option if proximity to Beijing's main railway station is paramount. Rooms are basic and slightly cramped but clean. Better level of service than other nearby hotels and conveniently located near the subway. Some of the higher rooms are equipped with broadband internet access. www.hojchina.com

Lusong Yuan Binguan*Kuanjie, Banchang Hutong 22, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 6404 0436 Fax (010) 6403 0418 Rooms 59 Map 2 D3*

The details – paper lamps mounted over the beds, beautifully painted ceilings, antique door fixtures – are similar to those you'd find in other courtyard hotels, but here they add up to a more comfy, lived-in atmosphere. Note the charming tea house and “study room” off the lobby. www.the-silk-road.com

Novotel Peace Beijing (Beijing Nuofute Heping Binguan)Jinyu Hutong 3, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 6512 8833 Fax (010) 6512 6863 Rooms 344 Map 2 D5

Run by Accor, this is the most affordable of the foreign-managed hotels in the shopping area around Wangfujing, although the service is less than what you'd expect of the major French chain. Executive rooms are good value. Restaurants offer a wide range of cuisines (Cantonese, Sichuanese, Korean, French). www.accorhotels-asia.com

Shangri-la Beijing (Beijing Xiangggelila Fandian)Zizhuyuan Lu 29, Haidian, Tel (010) 6841 2211 Fax (010) 6481 8002 Rooms 528

Shangri-la's first property in Beijing, inconveniently but peacefully located in the western part of the city, has just finished a massive renovation project that saw rooms updated with top-flight amenities and pleasantly sleek decor. A koi pond and pavilions were also added to the already excellent garden. www.shangri-la.com

The Marco Polo (Mage Boluo Jiudian)Xuanwu Men Nei Dajie 6, Xuanwu, Tel (010) 6603 6688 Fax (010) 6603 1488 Rooms 294 Map 3 A1

This conveniently located, luxury hotel is only a few years old and offers palatial, nicely decorated rooms at rates much lower than competitors in the crowded shopping districts. Try the in-house century-old Yokohama Cantonese restaurant. Walking distance to Xidan and Xuanwu Men subway stops. www.marcopohotels.com

Traders Hotel Beijing (Guomao Fandian)Jianguo Men Wai Dajie 1, Chaoyang, Tel (010) 6505 2277 Fax (010) 6505 0818 Rooms 570

Perfect for business travelers in a hurry – slightly small rooms are stocked with copious office supplies, service is speedy, and a nicely-prepared buffet is constantly replenished. Access to five-star health club facilities in the China World Hotel is offered. Excellent value. www.shangri-la.com

Wangfujing Grand (Wangfujing Dajiudian)Wangfujing Dajie 57, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 6522 1188 Fax (010) 6522 3816 Rooms 428 Map 2 D4

Good value in one of Beijing's priciest and most advantageous hotel districts, with views of the Forbidden City from the west-facing rooms, and the main shopping drag just meters away. There's adequate service thanks to Hong Kong management and all new fixtures in only slightly more expensive “superior” units.

China World Hotel (Zhongguo Dafandian)Jianguo Men Wai Dajie 1, Tel (010) 6405 2266 Fax (010) 6505 0828 Rooms 716

A thirty-million dollar renovation makes this the most comprehensively luxurious hotel in Beijing, and one of the top hotels nationwide. The exquisite lobby has quickly become a favorite gathering spot for the rich and powerful. Boasts a very fine fusion restaurant and a state-of-the-art health facility. www.shangri-la.com

Grand Hyatt Beijing (Beijing Dongfang Junyue)Dong Chang'an Jie 1, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 8518 1234 Fax (010) 8518 0000 Rooms 607 Map 4 E1

In the glimmering Oriental Plaza complex that dominates the central shopping district, no other hotel in Beijing is better located, and few are as well equipped. A few structural glitches predate Hyatt's stewardship, but this is otherwise among the city's finest. Close to the Forbidden City and Tian'an Men Square. beijing.grand.hyatt.com

Kempinski Hotel (Kaibinsiji Fandian)Liangma Qiao Lu 50, Chaoyang, Tel (010) 6465 3388 Fax (010) 6465 3366 Rooms 526

While rooms and service here are high quality, the real selling point is its easy access to Western conveniences. The lobby connects to the Lufthansa complex – complete with airline booking offices and a medical/dental clinic – a world unto itself that some never to leave. Good for business travelers. www.kempinski-beijing.com

Peninsula Palace Beijing (Wangfu Fandian)Jinyu Hutong 8, Dongcheng, Tel (010) 8516 2888 Fax (010) 6510 6311 Rooms 527 Map 2 E5

Combines excellent location with the most distinctive luxuries of any of Beijing's large-scale upmarket hotels, thanks due to management shared with the famed Peninsula Hotel in Hong Kong. Unique are the “Peninsula Academy” courses in subjects like food and antique shopping. Close to the subway. www.peninsula.com

Renaissance Beijing (Guohang Wanli Jiudian)Xiaoyun Lu 36, Chaoyang, Tel (010) 6468 9999 Fax (010) 6468 9913 Rooms 212

The newest and classiest of the business hotels clustered around the Airport Expressway, this Marriott-managed property is part of Beijing's new “boutique” trend. Rooms are relatively few in number but large, and luxurious but subtle. Marvel at the beautiful top-floor Roman-themed pool with skylight. www.renaissancehotels.com

St. Regis Beijing (Beijing Guoji Julebu Fandian)

Jianguo Men Wai Dajie 21, Chaoyang, Tel (010) 6460 6688 Fax (010) 6460 3299 Rooms 273

Beijing hotels have for years tried to dethrone the St. Regis, perennially described as the city's finest hotel. The secret is in the boutique-style service, unparalleled except maybe in Shanghai or Hong Kong. Rooms are smallish but beautifully decorated. The choice of visiting world leaders. www.stregis.com/beijing

HEBEI, TIANJIN, & SHANXICHENGDE Mountain Villa Hotel (Shanzhuang Binguan)

Xiao Nan Men 127, Tel (0314) 202 5588 Fax (0314) 203 4143 Rooms 370

Six buildings offer a wide range of accommodations from budget traveler basic rooms to well-appointed four-star luxury in high-ceilinged rooms, and multiple restaurants (located on the first and third floors). Basic business facilities available. The hotel complex is conveniently located directly opposite the main entrance to the mountain resort.

CHENGDE Qi Wang Lou

Bi Feng Men Dong Lu Bei 1 (just left of main park entrance), Tel (0314) 202 4385 Fax (0314) 202 1904 Rooms 80

Splendid 18th-century buildings and modern block in courtyard setting on the edge of the mountain resort, once favored by the Qianlong emperor. Now comfortably refitted with modern conveniences and the first choice of Communist Party bigwigs. Reasonably small, the setting and facilities provide an intimate, comfortable stay.

DATONG Datong Binguan

Yingbin Xi Lu 37, Tel (0352) 586 8200 Fax (0352) 586 8001 Rooms 220

A large, stately building with an audaciously formal lobby and meeting rooms on every floor. Cavernous hallways lead to rooms blessed with balconies and sufficiently furnished to warrant a four-star rating. This large complex also provides reasonably substantial business facilities. www.datonghotel.com

DATONG Yungang International Hotel (Yungang Guoji Jiudian)

Daxi Jie 38, Tel (0352) 586 9999 Fax (0352) 586 9666 Rooms 200

Located in the very center of town but off a quiet alleyway. This is a newer four-star hotel run by experienced management from Beijing's long-established Jianguo Hotel, who know how to look after foreign clientele. Rooms are very decent and the hotel has two restaurants. Conveniently located. www.yjih.com

PINGYAO Tian Yuan Kui Ke Zhan

Nan Da Jie 73, Tel (0354) 568 0069 Fax (0354) 568 3052 Rooms 22

Delightfully minimal rooms – black stone floors, simple bathrooms, and antique beds and furnishings – set in a 300 year-old courtyard mansion. Modern conveniences such as air-con and 24-hour hot water on offer for the less austere inclined. The limited number of rooms ensures a more intimate stay. www.pytyk.com

PINGYAO Deju Yuan Folk-Style Guesthouse (Deju Yuan Minfeng Binguan)

Xi Da Jie 43, Tel (0354) 568 5266 Fax (0354) 5685366 Rooms 16

A travelers' rest since the Ming dynasty, when merchants would come to do business at the bank across the street, it now attracts foreigners such as former French president Valéry Giscard d'Estaing. Rooms of various sizes are located around a beautiful courtyard and provide some respite from the busy streets of Pingyao. www.pydyj.com

SHANHAIGUAN Friendly Cooperate Hotel (Yihe Jiudian)

Nan Hai Xi Lu 4, Tel (0335) 593 9069 Fax (0335) 507 0351 Rooms 77

Simple two-star hotel with three-star standards of larger bathrooms and decent furnishings, as good as it gets in Shanhaiguan. Conveniently located just one block from the railway station and close to the main south entrance to the old city. The hotel provides one restaurant but no bar, so expect to look a little further for nightlife.

SHIJIAZHUANG Yanchun Garden Hotel (Yanchun Huayuan Jiudian)

Zhongshan Dong Lu 195, Tel (0311) 667 1188 Fax (0311) 604 8689 Rooms 185

An escape from the ubiquitous L-shaped rooms of Chinese hotels, interior spaces here fit with this five-star hotel's unusual rippling frontage. It's well located two blocks east of the railway station and next to a park. Children and adults alike will be entertained by its unusual restaurants. www.gardenhotel.com.cn

SHIJIAZHUANG Hebei Century Hotel (Hebei Shiji Dafandian)

Zhongshan Xi Lu 145, Tel (0311) 703 6699 Fax (0311) 703 8866 Rooms 439

Above average service, sizeable rooms with slightly more adventurous decor than the average Chinese five-star hotel. Commendable facilities are all housed in a shiny glass tower west of the city center. Among the leisure facilities provided, the hotel boasts no less than four restaurants and two bars. www.hebeicenturyhotel.com

TAIYUAN Jingang Hotel (Jingang Dajiudian)

Binzhou Bei Lu 37, Tel (0351) 472 8888 Fax (0351) 472 8333 Rooms 236

Newly opened hotel in the city center, featuring light and airy rooms with rounded windows and friendly staff under local management. Free broadband, indoor swimming pool, and central location near Yingze Park and Wuyi Place. Half-day prices are available for travelers in transit. www.jgjt.net/jgjt.asp

TAIYUAN World Trade Hotel (Shanxi Guomao Dafandian)

Fuxi Jie 69, Tel (0351) 868 8888 Fax (0351) 868 8000 Rooms 398

Occupying the 23rd to 41st floors of the 42-story Shanxi World Trade Center, the tallest building in the province. Large rooms have even larger multi-mirrored bathrooms featuring both shower and bath. Helpful touch-screen computer guide located on 1st floor. Choice of four restaurants available. www.sxwtc.com/gmzx_hotel.html

TIANJIN Hyatt Regency (Kaiyue Fandian)

Jiefang Bei Lu 219, Tel (022) 2330 1234 Fax (022) 2331 1234 Rooms 360

A riverside tower with standard business hotel furnishings, well-served on the catering front with both southern and northern style Chinese restaurants, as well as Japanese and Western. The hotel is just across the river from the European architecture of the former foreign concessions. tianjin.regency.hyatt.com

TIANJIN Sheraton Tianjin (Xilaideng Dajiudian)

Zijin Shan Lu, Heli, Tel (022) 2334 3388 Fax (022) 2335 8740 Rooms 300

In gardens on the edge of a large park, the Sheraton offers some escape from this brash, metal-bashing town, with classically furnished five-star rooms (recently refurbished) and top class service. Chinese, Western, and Japanese restaurants. Home to numerous expats. www.sheraton.com/tianjin

WUTAI SHAN Guangren Temple (Guangren Si)

Taihuai Zhen, Tel (0350) 654 5352 Rooms 18

Experience life in a monastery, fall asleep to the scent of incense wafting through the air, and wake up to the low moan of chanting Tibetan monks. Rooms are appropriately ascetic, though many have en suite bath. Guests are invited to share breakfast with resident monks. It is little surprise that there is no bar available.

WUTAI SHAN Wolong Shanzhuang

Taihuai Zhen Jiayou Zhan Duimian (opp. filling station), Tel (0350) 654 5037 Fax (0350) 654 6090 Rooms 39

The largest family-owned hotel in Wutai Shan gives travelers a rest from the slightly impersonal government-owned places. The Fan family do their best to make up for the smallish rooms. One of the few hotels located on the east side of the Qingshui River, you can dine in the hotel restaurant, though you will need to go elsewhere for a bar.

WUTAI SHAN Yinhai Shanzhuang

Wutaishan Yinhai Shanzhuang, Tel (0350) 654 3676 Fax (0350) 654 2949 Rooms 83

Though rated a three-star, this is the classiest place in the valley. Rooms are new and clean, and bathrooms look as though they belong in a five-star hotel. Located south of town, many rooms have mountain views. Basic business facilities are available and a restaurant and bar will provide for those happy to stay put.

SHANDONG & HENANJi'NAN Crowne Plaza Ji'nan (Ji'nan Guihe Huangguan Jiari Jiudian)

Tian Di Tan Lu 3, Tel (0531) 602 9999 Fax (0531) 602 3333 Rooms 306

Fully-equipped upmarket hotel with Ji'nan's largest and most luxurious rooms, some with views of Daming Lake and, on a clear day, the Yellow River. Others offer views to the mountains across the city center. Bonuses include a sparkling swimming pool, travel agent desk, and free broadband in rooms. www.ichotelsgroup.com

KAIFENG Dongjing Hotel (Dongjing Dafandian)

Yingbin Lu 99, Tel (0378) 398 9388 Fax (0378) 393 8861 Rooms 230

A well-worn "garden style" hotel located around a sizeable goldfish-stocked pond. Very popular and often booked up, despite the number of rooms. Numerous staff stand at every corner, ready to assist with guests' every need. Several rooms have balconies. Substantial business services (including translation and secretarial) also provided.

KAIFENG Kaifeng Binguan

Ziyou Lu Zhongduan 66, Tel (0378) 595 5589 Fax (0378) 595 3086 Rooms 391

Enormous hotel built in the Neo-classical Chinese style. Very comfortable rooms furnished with traditional Chinese furniture, complete with large bathrooms with bathtub. Noticeably quieter than one would expect given the noise of the street. Built around a large rock garden. Offers three restaurants and a separate café.

LUOYANG Jing'an Peony Plaza (Jing'an Mudan Cheng)

Nanchang Lu 2, Tel (0379) 468 1111 Fax (0379) 493 0303 Rooms 187

This four-star hotel was renovated in 2003 and is situated close to the Development Zone. Rooms are typical well-appointed business standard. Rotating restaurant located on 25th floor, art gallery featured in the lobby. Staff are very friendly and unusually helpful. Good business facilities available. www.jingan-peonyplaza.com

LUOYANG Peony Hotel (Mudan Dajiudian)

Zhongzhou Xi Lu 15, Tel (0379) 468 0000 Fax (0379) 485 6999 Rooms 176

Chinese-Hong Kong joint venture hotel. Located opposite Wangcheng Park. Recently renovated rooms decorated with leopard skin carpet and equipped with shower and/or bath. A shopping arcade featuring local souvenirs is located in the spacious lobby. Staff excel at being friendly. Good business facilities available.

QINGDAO Crowne Plaza Qingdao

Xianggang Zhong Lu 76, Tel (0532) 571-8888 Fax (0532) 571 6666 Rooms 388

The busiest international hotel in town, the best location and services to match, including an excellent Brazilian BBQ and pastry counter. Justly popular with both visiting business people and discerning holidaymakers – golf clubs can often be spotted about the lobby. Located near the 2008 Olympic sailing sites. www.ichotelsgroup.com

QINGDAO Grand Regency Hotel Qingdao (Qingdao Lijing Dajiudian)

Xianggang Zhong Lu 110, Tel (0532) 5881818 Fax (0532) 588 1888 Rooms 393

The first five-star hotel in Qingdao, the Grand Regency has excellent staff and even better facilities, including health club, billiards room, squash courts, a swimming pool, tennis center, and a bowling alley. Excellent location at the edge of the city, quick access to both recreational and business venues. www.grh-ohm.com

QUFU Queli Hotel (Queli Binshe)

Queli Jie 1, Tel (0537) 486 6818 Fax (0537) 441 2022 Rooms 165

Conveniently located Neo-classical Chinese style hotel. Rooms have views of Confucian Temple and Confucian Mansion, and willow trees fill the courtyard. Service is straight-faced but beware overcharging of foreign tourists in the restaurant. Former Chinese president Jiang Zemin's choice of Qufu accommodations. www.quelihotel.com

QUFU Qufu Confucia (Kongfu Xiyuan)

Ban Bi Jie, Tel (0537) 442 3666 Fax (0537) 442 38888 Rooms 34

Perhaps the finest classical Chinese hotel in China. Gorgeous five-star accommodation built in ancient designs with sliding wooden doors and glass hallways. 34 stunning, spacious rooms furnished with traditional, yet functional, furnishings. Bathrooms are immaculate, as is the service. Offers two restaurants but no bar. www.kongzihotel.com

TAI'AN Tai Shan Overseas Chinese Hotel (Tai Shan Huaqiao Dasha)

Dongyue Dajie 15, Tel (0538) 822 8112 Fax (0538) 822 8171 Rooms 208

Recently renovated rooms provide views of Tai Shan, comfortable furnishings, and computer access. Bathrooms are only adequate and cheaper rooms are definitely a step down in quality. Leisure activities like swimming and mini-golf are available. Staff try hard to satisfy hotel guests. www.huaqiaohotel.com

WEIHAI Golden Bay Hotel (Jinhaiwan Guoji Fandian)

Beihuanhai Lu 128, Tel (0631) 568 8777 Fax (0631) 568 7999 Rooms 150

The Golden Bay Hotel's location along the quiet, golden sand Jinhai Wan certainly makes up for its distance from the town center. Rooms are spacious, and most have ocean views. The views from the restaurants are reason enough to stay here. Heated saltwater swimming pool and private beach. www.whgoldenbayhotel.com

YANTAI Golden Gulf Hotel (Jinhaiwan Jiudian)

Haian Lu 34, Tel (0535) 663 6999 Fax (0535) 663 2699 Rooms 270

The finest hotel in Yantai with a terrific position between the foot of the Yantai Shan park and the Bohai Sea. Large copies of Renaissance paintings in the lobby lend an air of graciousness which extends to the well appointed rooms. The hotel also has no less than five restaurants. Free broadband in rooms. www.yantaigoldengulfhotel.com

ZHENGZHOU Sofitel Zhengzhou

Chengdong Lu 289, Tel (0371) 595 0088 Fax (0371) 595 0080 Rooms 289

Five-star hotel featuring tastefully decorated rooms and spacious bathrooms. Three-story glass atrium in lobby featuring a huge glass flower suspended from the ceiling. There are three bars and two restaurants to entertain the clientele. Service is everything one would expect from an international upmarket hotel. www.sofitel.com

ZHENGZHOU Crowne Plaza Zhengzhou

Jinshui Lu 115, Tel (0371) 595 0055 Fax (0371) 599 0770 Rooms 449

Large columns and a grand staircase in the lobby give this hotel a majestic opera house feel. Well-appointed rooms have wood paneling and bay windows. Swimming pool and fitness facility free for guests. Unsurprisingly for a hotel of this scale, three restaurants are provided and service is outstanding. www.crowneplaza.com

SHAANXIHUA SHAN Zhenyue Gong Shanzhuang)

Hua Shan Fengjing Qu Xifeng, Tel (0913) 430 0101 Rooms 9

Located within an active Daoist monastery, accommodation may be basic, and there may be no showers, but this peaceful sanctuary offers a chance to chat with english-speaking monks, and the occasional sight of the charismatic Abbott Chen. Take a short hike to the West Peak for the sunset, and the East Peak for the spectacular sunrise.

HUA SHAN Xiyue Binguan

Yuquan Lu Zhong Duan, Tel (0913) 436 3145 Fax (0913) 436 4559 Rooms 55

Rooms in this plain hotel with a traditional-style roof tend to be dark and poky, though service is warm. But unlike the rooms at top of the mountain, these come with showers. Get one of the brighter south-facing rooms on the second floor. Located downhill from the entrance to Yuquan Temple at the base of the mountain.

XI'AN Xi'an Shuyuan Youth Hostel*Nan Dajie Xi Shun Cheng Xiang 2A, Tel (029) 8728 7721 Fax (029) 8728 7720 Rooms 40*

Laid out around three large courtyards inside the city wall, attention to detail is evident in the Ming-style decorations of this beautifully restored traditional residence. Tradition means no carpets and simple facilities, but chances to stay in accomodation of this atmosphere and antiquity are few. Free pick up from the railway and coach stations.

XI'AN Jiefang Fandian*Jiefang Lu 181, Tel (029) 8742 8946 Fax (029) 8769 8666 Rooms 318*

For those short of time, this hotel is conveniently located opposite both the railway and coach stations. Coaches for the Terracotta Warriors, Famen Si, and Hua Shan leave from outside the hotel. Parts of the hotel have been refurbished, along with their prices, but rates are reduced by 50% with little fuss. www.jiefanghotel.com

XI'AN Xi'an Melody Hotel (Xi'an Meilun Jiudian)Xi Dajie 86, Tel (029) 8728 8888 Fax (029) 8727 3601 Rooms 158

Simply furnished rooms in this new hotel are kept spotless, though service at reception can be abrupt or even non-existent. Enjoy the great bathing facilities which are state-of-the-art, and try to secure one of the rooms with a view of the Drum Tower, directly north of the hotel. Close to the lively Muslim quarter, one of Xi'an's main attractions.

XI'AN Hyatt Regency Xi'an (Kaiyue Fandian)Dong Dajie 158, Tel (029) 8769 1234 Fax (029) 8769 6799 Rooms 404

The most centrally-located of Xi'an's luxury hotels inside the city wall, the Hyatt provides effective, unobtrusive service and smallish but comfortably furnished rooms. Excellent Cantonese cuisine available at The Pavilion restaurant. Just over a mile (2 km) south of railway and coach stations. xian.regency.hyatt.com

YAN'AN Silver Seas International Hotel (Yinhai Guoji Dajiudian)Daqiao Street, Tel (0911) 213 9999 Fax (0911) 213 9666 Rooms 212

Yan'an's newest and brightest four-star hotel opened in August 2004, and offers views of the nearby Bao Pagoda and surrounding hills peppered with cave houses. The hotel provides broadband access in each room, and has a large swimming pool and gym, and banquet rooms. 10 minutes from the airport, and 5 minutes from the rail station.

SHANGHAICaptain Hostel (Chuanzhang Qingnian Jiudian)Fuzhou Lu 37, Tel (021) 6323 5053 Fax (021) 6321 9331 Rooms 21 doubles and 132 dorm beds*

The best cheap option in Shanghai. A stone's throw from the Bund, with pleasant river views from the charmingly shabby rooftop bar. Dorm beds and rooms are clean and comfortable, and all standard hostel extras are available (day trips, internet, bicycle hire.) www.captainhostel.com.cn

Pujiang Hotel (Pujiang Fandian)Huangpu Lu 15, Tel (021) 6324 6388 Fax (021) 6324 3179 Rooms 116

This historic building was, a century ago, Shanghai's most luxurious hotel. Recent refurbishments suggest aspirations of former glories, yet the Pujiang Hotel remains primarily a budget option. Still, spacious rooms with wood-paneled floors are available, some with fantastic Bund views. www.pujianghotel.com

YMCA Hotel (Qingnianhui Binguan)Xizang Nan Lu 123, Tel (021) 6326 1040 Fax (021) 6320 1957 Rooms 150

One of the better budget hotels in Shanghai, although the rooms, dorms, and shared bathrooms are dowdy, and the hot water thermos flasks seem like a throwback to Chinese hotels of old. Built in 1929, this is faintly reminiscent of Shanghai's colonial heyday. Little English is spoken. Good location but noisy area. www.ymcahotel.com

Hotel Equatorial Shanghai (Shanghai Guoji Guidu Dajiudian)Yan'an Xi Lu 65, Tel (021) 6248 1688 Fax (021) 6248 1773 Rooms 509

Possibly the best value four-star option in town, perfectly located opposite leafy Jing'an Park and a five-minute walk to Jing'an Temple and the nearby subway station. Rooms are quiet, despite the proximity to the Yan'an overpass. Convenient business center with wireless high-speed internet. www.equatorial.com

Park Hotel (Guoji Fandian)Nanjing Xi Lu 170, Tel (021) 6327 5225 Fax (021) 6327 6958 Rooms 175

Once the tallest building in Asia, the 20-story Park Hotel is now dwarfed by nearby offices. Still, the art deco feel and convenient Nanjing Lu location near the Shanghai Art Museum make for an interesting stay. Service is occasionally variable and a 24-hour business center is at hand. www.asia-hotels.com/Park_Hotel_Shanghai.htm

Peace Hotel (Heping Fandian)Nanjing Dong Lu 20, Tel (021) 6321 6888 Fax (021) 6329 0300 Rooms 380

Period charm rather than plumbing attracts guests to this art deco leftover at the junction of a major shopping street and the Bund. Overdue for a refit, the hotel could also do with some work on its attitude to service. The wood paneling and stained glass capture the atmosphere of the "Paris of the East" period. www.shanghaipeacehotel.com

Regal International East Asia Hotel

Hengshan Lu 516, Tel (021) 6415 5588 Fax (021) 6445 8899 Rooms 300

Located on the pretty, leafy consular district of the French Concession, the Regal has bright rooms with plenty of space and pleasant views. Sports buffs will enjoy the squash court, bowling alley, and Shanghai International Tennis Center. Great base to enjoy surrounding bars and restaurants. www.regal-eastasia.com

Ruijin Bilingual

Ruijin Er Lu 2, Tel (021) 6472 5222 Fax (021) 6473 2277 Rooms 70

The 1917 mock-Tudor home of a British industrialist, now with a slightly shabby elegance but with large, modern, recently refitted bathrooms. This is now the focal point of a collection of multi-period villas standing in a large spread of gardens, all redolent with nostalgia for Shanghai's glory days. Assorted external bars and restaurants.

Sofitel Hyland Hotel (Hailun Bilingual)

Nanjing Dong Lu 505, Tel (021) 6351 5888 Fax (021) 6351 4088 Rooms 400

Excellent downtown location – the check-in counter is only meters from Shanghai's most bustling streets – with great views from higher floors of the 30-story tower. The rooms are adequate, though slightly poky. A German restaurant adds to the hotel's European feel. Near People's Square and a short walk from the Bund. www.accorhotels.com

Grand Hyatt Shanghai (Shanghai Jinmao Junyue Dajiudian)

Jinmao Dasha, Shijie Dadao 88, Tel (021) 5049 1234 Fax (021) 5049 1111 Rooms 555

The Jinmao Dasha's spike is visible for miles – the hotel begins at the 53rd of 88 stories in China's tallest building. Large, ultra-modern rooms with big bathrooms and separate shower cubicles have bird's-eye views over the Bund and Pudong. Provides a variety of excellent restaurants and plenty of nightlife. shanghai.grand.hyatt.com

Hilton Hotel (Xierdun Dajiudian)

Huashan Lu 250, Tel (021) 6248 0000 Fax (021) 6248 3848 Rooms 772

A favorite of business travelers since 1987, the Hilton's number one status seems to be under threat as newer hotels emerge. Still, service is first rate and the spa's luxury treatments and opulent setting are superb. The top-floor bar commands enviable views of the French Concession. Near Jing'an Park and Temple. www.hilton.com

JW Marriott Hotel Tomorrow Square Shanghai

Nanjing Xi Lu 399, Tel (021) 5359 4969 Fax (021) 6375 5988 Rooms 342

Wood-paneled doors, exceptional service and remarkable 360 degree views of People's Square and central Shanghai. Just checking in on the 38th floor with its floor-to-wall windows is an exhilarating experience. A new contender for Shanghai's best hotel. Also close to all main attractions. www.marriott.com

Okura Garden Hotel Shanghai (Hua Yuan Fandian)

Maoming Nan Lu 58, Tel (021) 6415 1111 Fax (021) 6415 8866 Rooms 500

This Japanese-managed luxury hotel has an almost unsurpassed location, close to the subway, the French Concession and vibrant Maoming Lu. Lush, pleasant gardens, drinkable tap water in marble bathrooms, and staff with excellent language ability complete the plush picture. Business center available. www.gardenhotelsanghai.com

The Portman Ritz-Carlton (Shanghai Poteman Lijia Juidian)

Nanjing Xi Lu 1376, Tel (021) 6279 8888 Fax (021) 6279 8800 Rooms 578

The Ritz-Carlton forgoes a grand lobby for in-room check-in. Thoughtful and attentive service intelligently anticipates guests' needs, with discretion when required. The tower stands amidst a sea of top-notch shopping, banking, ticket agencies, and other conveniences. Comfortable rooms and expansive views. www.ritzcarlton.com

Pudong Shangri-La Shanghai (Pudong Xianggelila Dajiudian)

Fucheng Lu 33, Pudong, Tel (021) 6882 8888 Fax (021) 6882 6688 Rooms 981

This stately tower with its elegant lobby is about to be dwarfed by a modern addition which will provide the best of both worlds. Shangri-La is justly famed for its service standards, and many rooms have fine views over the river to the European architecture of the Bund. Basement nightclub is popular with expats. www.shangri-la.com

Renaissance Shanghai Pudong Hotel

Changliu Lu 100, Tel (021) 3871 4888 Fax (021) 6854 0888 Rooms 369

This is one of Shanghai's newest luxury hotels, in a peaceful part of Pudong yet close to Century Park and the subway. The lobby is expansive and elegant, the rooms swish; an east-meets-west theme provides for tasteful design, and the service is admirable. The in-house bakery prepares daily fresh bread. www.renaissancehotels.com

Renaissance Yangtze Hotel Shanghai

Yan'an Xi Lu 2099, Tel (021) 6275 0000 Fax (021) 6275 0750 Rooms 544

Close to Hongqiao Airport and the expressway to the city center, this recently refurbished five-star hotel has immaculate rooms, smiling service, and excellent dining. The Cru bar, with cigar humidors and lazy jazz, is one of the classier nightspots in Shanghai. The hotel's Oktoberfest celebrations are the best in town. www.renaissancehotels.com

The St. Regis Shanghai (Shanghai Ruiji Hongta Dajiudian)

Dong Fang Lu 889, Pudong, Tel (021) 5050 4567 Fax (021) 6875 6789 Rooms 318

Modern, stylish, and beautifully furnished rooms with large bathrooms and proper shower cubicles. 24-hour butler service at the push of a button. Free daily cocktails and canapés and other VIP services available to all guests, including clothes pressing on arrival. Not surprisingly, this hotel is very popular. www.stregis.com/shanghai

Shanghai Marriott Hotel Hongqiao

Hongqiao Lu 2270, Tel (021) 6237 6000 Fax (021) 6237 6275 Rooms 316

Recently upgraded to five-star, the Marriott provides spacious, well-appointed rooms, impeccable service, and advanced business facilities (Bill Gates was a recent visitor). Wireless broadband is available throughout the hotel, and excellent steaks served at the Manhattan Steak House. Close to Hongqiao Airport. www.marriott.com

The Westin Shanghai (Shanghai Weisiting Dafandian)

Henan Zhong Lu 88, Tel (021) 6335 1888 Fax (021) 6335 2888 Rooms 301

The Westin's lotus-topped tower is a Shanghai landmark in the heart of downtown shopping. The stylish modernity of the colorful lobby extends to the rooms. Bathrooms have torrential overhead showers in proper cubicles. Pampering is available at the only branch of the famous Banyan Tree Spa. www.westin.com/shanghai

JIANGSU & ANHUIHEFEI Holiday Inn Hefei (Hefei Gujing Jiari Jiudian)

Changjiang Dong Lu 1104, Tel (0551) 220 6666 Fax (0551) 220 1166 Rooms 341

The first international hotel in Anhui's capital and still the best option in downtown Hefei. Some rooms enjoy a panoramic sweep of the city and Xiaoyaojin Park, as does the revolving restaurant on the 29th floor. Runs a complimentary airport shuttle service, and just 2 miles (3km) from the railway station.

HEFEI Sofitel Grand Park Hefei

Fanhua Lu, Hefei Economic & Technological Dev. Zone, Tel (0551) 221 6688 Fax (0551) 221 6699 Rooms 261

Hardly downtown, yet useful for business travelers on account of its proximity to Hefei's Economic and Technological Zone and the Anhui International Exhibition Centre. The architecture is unique for Hefei, as is the wedding chapel, and Brazilian BBQ restaurant. An 8-minute drive to the airport, and 20 minutes to the city center.

NANJING Central Hotel (Nanjing Zhongxin Dajiudian)

Zhongshan Lu 75, Tel (025) 8473 3888 Fax (025) 8473 3999 Rooms 320

A good choice for the budget-conscious wishing to have a more "local" experience as it caters to a largely Chinese clientele, with plentiful eating options, meeting rooms, and business facilities. The outdoor pool allows for a spot of city sunbathing. The hotel is conveniently located central to the business and shopping districts.

NANJING Crowne Plaza Hotel and Suites Nanjing

Han Zhong Lu 89, Tel 025 8471 8888 Fax 025 8471 9999 Rooms 300

A convenient hotel for both business and leisure travelers located in the city center with the best views in the city; considerable business facilities plus a variety of dining options. Health club with indoor pool and sauna, department stores, and an art exhibition hall housed in same building. www.crowneplaza.com

NANJING Shangri-La Dingshan (Shangri-La Dingshan)

Cha Er Lu 90, Tel (025) 5880 2888 Fax (025) 5882 1729 Rooms 555

A secluded hillside hotel divided into various sections; the main five-star hotel, a four-star wing popular with families, serviced apartments, and a separate 14-bedroom villa. Has a pleasant tree-shaded outdoor swimming pool and a busy Chinese restaurant serving Huaiyang dishes. www.shangri-la.com

NANJING Hilton Nanjing (Nanjing Xierdun Guoji Dajiudian)

Zhongshan Dong Lu 319, Tel (025) 8480 8888 Fax (025) 8480 9999 Rooms 530

A reliable five-star option in a quieter end of town near the ancient city wall, with views over the nearby lake and mountains plus a good range of restaurants from Italian to local Chinese. Also features a deli serving fresh bread, health club with indoor swimming pool, tennis courts, and a golf simulator. www.nanjing.hilton.com

NANJING Jinling Hotel (Jinling Fandian)

2 Hanzhong Lu, Tel (025) 8471 1888 Fax (025) 8471 1666 Rooms 600

In the very center of town, this was Nanjing's first five-star hotel and, despite looking a bit shabby from the outside, is still one of the best. Frequented by discerning guests, it's distinctly stylish with a fantastic array of shopping and dining experiences, try the revolving restaurant at the pinnacle of the building. www.jinlinghotel.com

NANJING Sheraton Nanjing Kingsley Hotel and Towers

Han Zhong Lu 169, Tel (025) 8666 8888 Fax (025) 8666 9999 Rooms 350

A central location, impressive exterior and seamless service make this the best five-star option in town. The interior is both elegant and cozy without being gaudy, while high-level restaurants and bars guarantee good dining and drinking options and fantastic views over the city – try the top floor jazz bar. www.sheraton.com

SUZHOU Suzhou New Century Hotel (Suzhou Xin Shiji Dajiudian)

Guangji Lu 23, Tel (0512) 6533 8888 Fax (0512) 6533 6798 Rooms 188

Although the standard of service varies from selfless to surly, the hotel's clean, light rooms make this a reasonable three-star choice. The famous landscaped Liu Yuan – "The Garden for Lingering In" – is a pleasant ten-minute stroll away. Substantial discounts are readily offered. West of central Suzhou, but close to the railway station.

SUZHOU Bamboo Grove Hotel (Zhuhui Fandian)

Zhuhui Lu 168, Tel (0512) 6520 5601 Fax (0512) 6520 8778 Rooms 356

Stark, concrete bus bay and garish lobby aside, the Bamboo Grove is modeled on traditional Suzhou architecture, including a sizeable pond. Rooms are comfortable, though the whole establishment is showing signs of wear and tear. Conveniently located in the center of Suzhou, close to the Wangshi Yuan Garden. www.bg-hotel.com

SUZHOU Gloria Plaza Hotel (Kailai Dajjudian)

Ganjiang Donglu 535, Tel (0512) 6521 8855 Fax (0512) 6521 8833 Rooms 294

The lobby sets a somber tone, yet the Gloria Plaza offers mostly bright and spacious rooms. The staff are generally sprightly and helpful. Conveniently located close to Suzhou's main street and restaurant zone, the hotel is also near one of Suzhou's disappearing scenic canals. Fully-equipped business center. www.gphsuzhou.com

SUZHOU Sheraton Suzhou Hotel and Towers

Xinshi Lu 259, Tel (0512) 6510 3388 Fax (0512) 6510 0888 Rooms 400

The architecture of this impeccable hotel reflects the heritage of old Suzhou. Canals wind through the quiet, elegant gardens, and the luxurious rooms feature spacious marble bathrooms. Design is memorable from the traditional lobby to the rustic indoor swimming pool. www.sheraton.com/suzhou

TUNXI Huang Shan Hongta Jiudian

Huangkou Luyou Dujia Qu, Tel (0559) 231 2888 Fax (0559) 231 3009 Rooms 108

The Hongta has superior facilities, although service is somewhat lacking, and its location in the suburban resort area makes it less convenient for those without a car and driver. The hotel, however, does have two restaurants, and the resort area itself is pleasingly scenic. Broadband available in rooms. hotel.hongta.com

TUNXI Huangshan Pine Golf Hotel (Huang Shan Gaoerfu Jiudian)

Longgong 78, Jichang Dadao, Tel (0559) 256 8000 Fax (0559) 256 8111 Rooms 279

This is the best hotel in Huang Shan and the only one with five-star status. Although the service is improving, it lags behind more sophisticated cities on the eastern seaboard. However, the hotel does offer extensive conference facilities and is conveniently located close to Huang Shan's new airport. www.hsgolf.com

ZHEJIANG & JIANGXIHANGZHOU Fuchun Resort (Fuchun Shanju)

Fuyang Section, Hangfu Yanjiang Lu, Tel (0571) 6346 1111 Fax (0571) 6346 1222 Rooms 120, plus five villas

Probably the Yangzi delta's best resort matching traditional architecture with advanced facilities. The hotel is impressive but Fuchun's cluster of fully-serviced villas is its crowning glory; each with an indoor swimming pavilion and sweeping views of tea-laden terraces. World-class, 18-hole golf course. www.fuchunresort.com

HANGZHOU Hyatt Regency Hangzhou

Hu Bin Lu 28, Tel (0571) 8779 1234 Fax (0571) 8779 1818 Rooms 390

A smarter-than-average horseshoe-shaped mansion, with a vast lobby incorporating cafés and extensive shopping. Many rooms have lake views, and others have private terraces with miniature gardens. The marble bathrooms have separate shower cubicles. Hotel also has a childcare center and large pool. hangzhou.regency.hyatt.com

HANGZHOU Radisson Plaza Hotel Hangzhou

Tiyu Chang Lu 333, Tel (0571) 8515 8888 Fax (0571) 8515 7777 Rooms 284

This slickly-managed shiny tower in the city center, close to West Lake, is so well-equipped with entertainment, fitness, and dining options that you may not want to leave. Large, well-furnished rooms and bathrooms with proper shower cubicles and baths. Personal valet service available on executive floors. www.radisson.com

HANGZHOU Shangri-la Hotel Hangzhou

Bei Shan Lu 78, Tel (0571) 8797 7951 Fax (0571) 8707 3545 Rooms 383

Two hotels originally reserved for top officials and built in the extensive grounds of a now-vanished temple are now fused into one. Many of their large high-ceilinged rooms overlook West Lake. Quite simply one of the most pleasant hotels in China. Good conference and business facilities. www.shangri-la.com

HANGZHOU Sofitel Westlake Hangzhou

Xi Hu Dadao 333, Tel (0571) 8707 5858 Fax (0571) 8702 8466 Rooms 200

Perched at the end of West Lake, the Sofitel offers smart, colorful interior decor and sharp service. Relatively small scale, this is a deservedly popular choice, with its central, lakeside position, handy for the burgeoning Xi Hu Tiandi bar and restaurant area. Be sure to make a trip to the rooftop bar with splendid lake views. www.sofitel.com

JINGDEZHEN Jinye Dajjudian

Chashan Lu 2, Cidu Dadao, Tel (0798) 858 8888 Fax (0798) 856 2233 Rooms 228

Rating three-stars, but the only choice in a city full of tired budget premises, this hotel has clean and comfortable guest rooms. It caters for businessmen too, with basic conference facilities and ADSL broadband available in the more deluxe rooms. A good restaurant serves local specialties as well as pan-China favorites.

LU SHAN Qi Shi Jiujiang Dajiudian

Binjiang Lu 68, Tel (0792) 823 3388 Fax (0792) 822 2915 Rooms 232

Lifeless hotel in Jiujiang on banks of the Yangzi in need of brightening, but still better than the battered accommodations on Lu Shan itself. Many rooms have views of the river sliding by, and foreign residents gloomily ponder business deals in the unexpectedly good Chinese and Western restaurants. www.jiqishi.com

NANCHANG Gloria Plaza (Kailai Dajiudian)

Yanjiang Bei Lu 88, Tel (0791) 673 8855 Fax (0791) 673 8533 Rooms 327

Hong Kong-managed four-star hotel right on the Gan River, close to the Tang Wang Ge. Many of the well-maintained rooms have excellent river views. The palatial lobby is an odd mixture of Egyptian, Mexican, and American Indian themes. Broadband internet access is available in the rooms. www.gloriahotels.com

NANCHANG Regal Hotel (Fuhao Jiudian)

Hongcheng Lu 160, Tel (0791) 640 8888 Fax (0791) 640 7777 Rooms 186

Just south of the city center, this sparkling, four-star tower, opened in 2001, is glitzier than the Gloria Plaza but not as well located. Room decor is muted and tasteful in contrast to the extremely busy carpets of the restaurants and other public areas. Amongst other imaginative touches is an accommodation floor for women only.

PUTUO SHAN Xilei Xiao Zhuang

Xianghua Jie 1, Tel (0580) 609 1505 Fax (0580) 609 1812 Rooms 160

Next to Puji Si, and a short walk from one of the island's main beaches, the hotel provides varying grades of comfort up to four-star, all better value for money than competitors. The hotel also boasts two restaurants and two bars and extensive business facilities for mixed clientele. www.xlxzhotel.com

WENZHOU Jiangxin Liaoyangyuan

Jiangxin Yu, Tel (0577) 8820 1269 Fax (0577) 8820 1213 Rooms 6

On peaceful Jiangxin Islet, a brief ferry ride from the city, this is a charming British-built consulate building of the late 19th century. Expect accommodations of a more intimate nature, with a mere six rooms; some have a private bath while others have shared facilities. There's a pleasant terrace with views back across the river.

WENZHOU Wanhao Grand Hotel (Wanhao Shangwu Dajiudian)

Meican Lu 93, Tel (0577) 8808 9888 Fax (0577) 8808 9222 Rooms 201

Although a fair distance from the center of town and even further from the river, this four-star hotel is newer and far glossier than any of its longer-standing competitors, with modern decor and furniture in comfortable rooms, and staff who try far harder to please. It's also handy for the railway station and the new long-distance coach stations.

HUNAN & HUBEICHANGSHA Hunan Bestride Hotel (Hunan Jiacheng Jiudian)

Laodong Xi Lu 386, Tel (0731) 511 8888 Fax (0731) 511 1888 Rooms 238

Conveniently closer to the airport than most, this efficient Hong Kong-managed five-star hotel lies a little south of the city center, with conventional rooms rather larger than most. Full facilities include several Western and Chinese restaurants. A lack of other towers in the vicinity means spectacular views are guaranteed. www.hnhrhotel.com

CHANGSHA Dolton Hotel Changsha (Tongcheng Guoji Dajiudian)

Shaoshan Lu 149, Tel (0731) 416 8888 Fax (0731) 416 9999 Rooms 450

As a neighboring building is being refurbished into a Hilton, the five-star Dolton is fighting the competition with a complete renovation that has resulted in fresh, comfortably furnished rooms with marble-floored entrances, every modern facility, and friendly, courteous staff. Boasts largest hotel pool in the province. www.dolton-hotel.com

CHANGSHA Huatian Dajiudian

Jiefang Dong Lu 380, Tel (0731) 444 2888 Fax (0731) 444 2270 Rooms 660

The unconventionally shaped rooms in the new-ish tower are the best in the city (at least until the completion of the Sheraton), furnished with stylish, comfortable modernity and practicality. Above average bathrooms have proper shower cubicles with massage heads. Staff maintain high standards of English. www.huatian-hotel.com

WUHAN Jiangnan Fandian

Shengli Jie 245, Hankou, Tel (027) 6882 5888 Fax (027) 8281 4342 Rooms 107

This 1919 mansion was renovated in the mid-1990s, adding modern amenities but keeping the look and feel of the original; the rooms are woody, in greens, browns, and golds. Outside, tall trees and European architecture make this one of the most relaxing places for a stroll in downtown Hankou. www.jhhotel.com

WUHAN Wuhan Shangri-La Hotel (Wuhan Xianggelila Jiudian)

Jianshe Dadao 700, Hankou, Tel (027) 8580 6868 Fax (027) 8572 4590 Rooms 480

An efficient and well-run hotel in an otherwise run-down city. The bustling lobby is the favored meeting place of tourists, business travelers, and resident expats alike. The hotel has large, comfortable rooms with spacious, well-fitted bathrooms, and there's a choice of Chinese, Western, and Japanese restaurants. www.shangri-la.com

WUHAN Best Western Premier Mayflowers Hotel

Wuluo Lu 385, Wuchang, Tel (027) 6887 1588 Fax (027) 6887 1599 Rooms 286

This brand new hotel is on a par with the best hotels in Hankou and has by far the most comfortable rooms in Wuchang. The well-equipped health club and spacious indoor pool create an enjoyable environment for a workout or swim. Central location to most Wuchang sites. www.bwmayflowers.com.cn

WUHAN Holiday Inn Tian'an Wuhan City Center

Jiefang Dadao 868, Hankou, Tel (027) 8586 7888 Fax (027) 8584 5353 Rooms 355

A solid choice located in the heart of downtown Wuhan, close to Zhongshan Park, shopping areas, and the former colonial concession district. One of the city's busier upmarket hotels. Recreational facilities include an outdoor pool and tennis court. A cheap airport shuttle is available. www.china.ichotelsgroup.com

WULINGYUAN Minnan International Hotel (Minnan Guoji Jiudian)

Ziwu Xi Lu 18, Tel (0744) 822 8888 Fax (021) 822 9888 Rooms 146

Slightly tired rooms fail to live up to the promise of the shiny lobby in the only four-star hotel in town. It is however the best in town, with well-meaning service, not far from the airport (the best choice for those with early morning flights.) Convenient for business meetings, there are also two restaurants. www.zjjtour.com/mn

WULINGYUAN Xiangdian International Hotel

Senlin Gongyuan, Tel (0744) 571 2999 Fax (0744) 571 2666 Rooms 156

Other hotels' rooms may have the edge over those here, but otherwise there's a genuine four-star level of decor, and very good service. The hotel is close to the Senlin Gongyuan park entrance. The rooms – many with balconies – are arranged around pleasant courtyards, and have sweeping views. www.xiangdianhotel.com

FUJIANFUZHOU Ramada Plaza (Meilun Huameida Guangchang Jiudian)

Bei Huan Xi Lu 108, Tel (0591) 8788 3999 Fax (0591) 8786 9631 Rooms 323

A fully equipped and spotless if otherwise standard hotel. Situated on the north ring road, it is ideally situated to give quick access to most corners of the city. Good Western and Cantonese restaurants are located within and business center with internet, computer, fax, and secretarial service available. www.ramadainternationalhotel.com

FUZHOU Golden Resources International Hotel

Wenquan Gongyuan Lu 59, Tel (0591) 8708 8888 Fax (0591) 8708 8999 Rooms 385

Vast and lavishly decorated public areas lead to comfortably furnished rooms with movie channels, and hot mineral water received directly from the neighboring geothermal hot spring into the baths. 13 function halls of various sizes with full audio-visual equipment. Attentive staff have a high standard of English.

QUANZHOU Xiamen Airlines Quanzhou Hotel

Fengzi Jie, Tel (0595) 216 4888 Fax (0595) 216 4777 Rooms 177

Nominally a three-star hotel but above average in service and decor, running to higher end luxuries such as video-on-demand and broadband Internet on some floors. Convenient free shuttle bus to Xiamen Airport. Located in a commercial area slightly west of the older center. www.xiamenair.com.cn/english/

QUANZHOU Quanzhou Jiudian

Zhuangfu Xiang 22, Tel (0595) 228 9958 Fax (0595) 218 2128 Rooms 386

This is a three-, four-, and five-star hotel, with three separate buildings of different periods all on one site. One new wing is sumptuously furnished, but all rooms are in good condition, some offering views of the twin pagodas of the nearby Kaiyuan Si. Extensive conference facilities. www.quanzhouhotel.com

WUYI SHAN Wuyi Mountain Villa (Wuyi Shan Zhuang)

Wuyi Gong, Tel (0599) 525 1888 Fax (0599) 525 2567 Rooms 167

In competition with a new Ramada, but visiting bigwigs have long been happy with this collection of low-rise buildings with hints of local style. Located across the Chongyang Xi river and set in quiet greenery on the edge of the scenic area itself. Rooms vary from the cheap and simple to the four-star; large and well-maintained.

XIAMEN Jinquan Binyuan

San Yue Lu 26, Gulang Yu, Tel (0592) 206 5621 Fax (0592) 206 4273 Rooms 29

An intelligent conversion of an early 20th century brick building with neo-classical portico, formerly a U.S. consulate, on quiet, car-free Gulang Yu. Many rooms have views back towards Xiamen city, or onto gardens with tennis courts. There's little service, but the simple wooden-floored rooms are clean and modern.

XIAMEN Crowne Plaza Hotel Harbourview Xiamen

Zhen Hai Lu, Tel (0592) 202 3333 Fax (0592) 203 6666 Rooms 349

On the edge of the old town, close to the Hong Kong ferry terminal, and a short walk from the pier for Gulang Yu ferries, this 22-story tower has many rooms with marvellous sea views. An Amex office is located within the hotel and there is broadband Internet access in-room. Good business facilities. www.ichotels.com

XIAMEN Marco Polo Xiamen (Xiamen Mageboluo)Jianye Lu 8, Tel (0592) 509 1888 Fax (0592) 509 2888 Rooms 350

A smoothly run hotel with full four-star amenities, including an open-air pool with poolside bar and views across the Yuandang Lake to the city. The eight-story atrium lobby often echoes to live piano. The hotel caters for large groups with several function rooms and a well-equipped business center. www.marcopolohotels.com

GUANGDONG & HAINANGUANGZHOU Customs Conference and Reception CenterShamian Dajie (on Shamian Island), Tel (020) 8110 2388 Fax (020) 8191 8552 Rooms 49*

With a Neo-classical front of uncertain date (and uncertain purpose) amongst century-old foreign buildings, this small hotel offers bright and fresh rooms arranged around a central five-story atrium. Set in quiet, leafy Shamian, this offers excellent value for money in otherwise pricey Guangzhou.

GUANGZHOU Guangdong Victory Hotel (Guangdong Shengli Binyuan)Shamian Bei Jie 53, Shamian Island, Tel (020) 8121 6802 Fax (020) 8121 9889 Rooms 92

Two colonial-era buildings located on lovely Shamian Island. One is an above average three-star and the other four-star, with a vast choice of food and drink served from twenty restaurants. Service is friendly and efficient. Basic business center with fax and computer access, internet is available via TV in the rooms. www.vhotel.com

GUANGZHOU Lido Hotel (Lidu Dafandian)Beijing Road 182, Guangzhou, Tel (020) 8332 2988 Fax (020) 8332 1969 Rooms 300

Location at entrance to Beijing Road pedestrian mall sets this mid-range, and otherwise unremarkable hotel apart. Standard two-star features in 30-story building with quick access to city center, nearby subway, and express bus to Hong Kong. Offers business center and executive suite. www.lido-hotel.cn

GUANGZHOU Asia International Hotel (Yazhou Guoji Dajiudian)Huan Shi Dong Lu 326, Duan 1, Tel (020) 6128 8888 Fax (86 20) 6120 6666 Rooms 442

Polished Guangdong marble and granite grace the walls of this 442-room hotel and keep the neon-lit noise outside. Convenient city-center location near club scene. Rooms are spacious and comfortable, and service professional in Guangzhou's most elegant hotel. Great fitness facilities available. Stay in and dine at the sky-revolving restaurant.

GUANGZHOU Hotel Canton (Guangzhou Dasha)Beijing Road 374, Tel (020) 8318 9888 Fax (020) 8330 2640 Rooms 300

Among the finest of Guangzhou's hotels, with chandeliers, polished stone, and impeccable service. 38 stories of sky-blue glass situated at the top of Beijing Road in the historic city center. Full-service business center and conference rooms. Luxury options include a motor yacht on the Pearl River. www.hotel-canton.cn

GUANGZHOU Garden Hotel (Huayuan Jiudian)Huanshi Dong Lu 368, Tel (020) 8333 8989 Fax (020) 8335 0467 Rooms 1038

A gargantuan hotel with every facility you can think of. Other mega-hotels may have more restaurants, but the Garden has better service, and its rooms are more comfortable. The facilities include a children's playground, tennis and squash courts, and a shopping arcade. www.gardenhotel-guangzhou.com

GUANGZHOU White Swan Hotel (Bai Tian'e Binyuan)Shamian Nan Jie 1, Tel (020) 8188 6968 Fax (020) 8186 1188 Rooms 843

This is a hotel with ideas and room rates far above its station (but easily bargained down). It is perennially popular, and pleasantly located on Shamian Island. A favorite with tour groups and those in China for adoptions, hence the extensive children's facilities. Overlooking the Pearl River. www.whiteswanhotel.com

HAINAN Sheraton Sanya Resort (Sanya Xilaideng Dujia Jiudian)Yalong Bay National Resort District, Tel (0898) 8855 8855 Fax (0898) 8855 8866 Rooms 511

On a private stretch of beautiful Yalong Bay, this tropical retreat – twice home of the Miss World Finals – is arguably the best beach resort on China's mainland. The enormous open-air teak lobby sets an impressive tone. Equipped with first-rate swimming pools, lagoons and a full program of water sports. www.sheraton.com/sanya

HAINAN Sofitel Boao (Hainan Boao Suofeite Dajiudian)Boao, Dongyu Island, Tel (0898) 6296 6888 Fax (0898) 6296 6999 Rooms 437

Transformed from a swamp to a world class conference venue, the Sofitel boasts rooms with excellent views which can be enjoyed from balconies or from a freestanding tub in one of the open-plan bathrooms. A one-hour drive from Haikou airport, and 90 minutes from Sanya airport. www.accorhotels.com/asia or www.sofitel.com

SHENZHEN Crowne Plaza Shenzhen*Shennan Dadao 9026, Overseas Chinese Town, Tel (0755) 2693 6888 Fax (0755) 2693 6999 Rooms 376*

Shenzhen's first five-star hotel, the grand Venetian exterior finds echoes inside, from the swimming pool adorned with Mediterranean motifs to the highly regarded Italian restaurant, Blue. Nearby theme parks, including the China Folk Cultural Village, make this an attractive location for families, yet the business facilities are also commendable.

SHENZHEN Shangri-La Shenzhen (Xianggelila Dajiudian)

Jianshe Lu, Tel (0755) 8233 0888 Fax (0755) 8233 9878 Rooms 553

Despite keen competition, the recently refurbished Shangri-La still has the edge on location (visible from the main border crossing from Hong Kong) and service standards, from lavish lobby to tower-top rotating restaurant, with excellent fitness facilities and Cantonese, Japanese, and American restaurants. www.shangri-la.com

HONG KONG & MACAUHONG KONG Caritas Bianchi Lodge

4 Cliff Road, Yau Ma Tei, Tel (852) 2388 1111 Fax (852) 2770 6669 Rooms 160

Map 1 B1

A rather soulless and very basic place that happens to be very cheap and well located just off Nathan Road. The old fashioned rooms are spacious and spotless, but this is an ideal destination for the budget traveler. Located near the Ya Ma Tei subway – handy as the hotel offers no extra facilities and has no restaurant or bar.

HONG KONG Mount Davis Youth hostel

Mt Davis Path, Mt Davis, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2817 5715 Fax (852) 2788 3105 Rooms 169 beds

It's a long trek from the center (by hostel shuttle bus or taxi) and offers barrack-like dorms, but where else can you escape the city bustle, get such great sea views and find such relaxing woodland surroundings for these prices? If you are in need of peace and quiet, this is an ideal, if basic solution. www.yha.org.hk

HONG KONG Garden View International House

1 MacDonnell Road, Central, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2877 3737 Fax (852) 2845 6263 Rooms 130 Map 2 B4

You won't find a cheaper place closer to the center on Hong Kong Island. The rooms are functional rather than luxurious, the decor is slightly old-fashioned but there is a pool and you are only a short stroll from the Peak tram, Hong Kong Park, and the Botanical Gardens – of which there are views from some of the rooms. www.ywca.org.hk

HONG KONG Nathan Hotel

378 Nathan Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2388 5141 Fax (852) 2770 4262 Rooms 186 Map 1 B2

In an area packed with bland, overpriced chain hotels or cheap but dingy guesthouses, the Nathan Hotel strikes a good balance in the middle offering basic but quiet, spotless and reasonably-sized rooms in a good location close to Temple Street. Located very near the Jordan subway, you can at least be sure that this acts as a convenient base.

HONG KONG The Wesley

22 Hennessy Road, Wan Chai, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2866 6688 Fax (852) 2866 6633 Rooms 190 Map 3 E4

This is a good no frills, budget bet, located close to the hubbub of Wan Chai's pubs, bars, and restaurants. The rooms are good value given their relatively generous size and the location. A restaurant and bar are located in the hotel, though you may as well take advantage of the location and venture out. www.hanglung.com/

HONG KONG YMCA - The Salisbury

41 Salisbury Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2268 7000 Fax (852) 2739 9315 Rooms 363 Map 1 B4

You may not find better value anywhere else in Hong Kong. The harborside setting is spectacular, many rooms boast fine views and all are reasonably spacious. A great option for families (large family suites are excellent value and there's a leisure center attached) and budget travelers. www.ymcahk.org.hk

HONG KONG Eaton Hotel

380 Nathan Road, Jordan, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2782 1818 Fax (852) 2782 5563 Rooms 468 Map 1 B2

Not as central as some but high standards and competitive rates make this worth your consideration. Lounge by the rooftop pool (with an adjoining gym) or sip the superb coffee in the light airy lobby and forget completely that Nathan Road is just yards away. The rooms are very comfortable and well appointed. www.eaton-hotel.com

HONG KONG Langham Place Hotel

555 Shanghai Street, Mongkok, Kowloon, Tel (852) 3552 3388 Fax (852) 3552 3322 Rooms 665

The Langham may be set a way back from the water but it offers high-class accommodations with all the in-room, hi-tech conveniences you could wish for including widescreen plasma screens and wireless internet access. The rooms are large, modern, and appealing. langhamhotels.youdomain.com/langhamplace/hongkong/

HONG KONG The Kowloon Hotel

19-21 Nathan Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2929 2888 Fax (852) 2739 9811 Rooms 736 Map 1 B4

Sporting a supposedly cutting-edge high-tech theme that now looks dated and quaint, the Kowloon is nonetheless a reasonably good, reasonably priced, well-located place with high service levels. Rooms are on the small side though, and regrettably there are few (partially-restricted) harbor views. www.thekowloonhotel.com

HONG KONG The Kowloon Shangri-La

64 Mody Road, Tsim Sha Tsui East, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2721 1111 Fax (852) 2723 8686 Rooms 700 Map 1 C4

The Kowloon Shangri-La has great service and opulent decor and very high standards which include a selection of fine restaurants within. Rooms are large and understatedly luxurious, and available at very reasonable prices. Good harbor views, a short walk from Nathan Road. www.shangri-la.com/hongkong/kowloon/en/

HONG KONG The Inter-Continental

18 Salisbury Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Tel (852) 2721 1211 Fax (852) 2739 4546 Rooms 606

Map 1 B5

A notch down from the Peninsula, this is nonetheless one of the territory's premier hotels with large, modern rooms and a great harborside pool. Excellent restaurants including the renowned French cuisine at Spoon. Enjoy the soothing, leafy, zen-like calm of the spa. www.hongkong-ic.intercontinental.com

HONG KONG The Peninsula Hong Kong

Salisbury Rd, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Hong Kong, Tel (852) 2920 2888 Fax (852) 2722 4170 Rooms 300 Map 1 B4

Arrive in style in one of the Peninsula's green Rolls Royces or land by helicopter on the helipad and enjoy the Peninsula's blend of marble-clad opulence and old world colonial charm (afternoon tea taken to the strains of a string quartet). Spectacular food from a range of superb restaurants and cosseting service. www.peninsula.com

MACAU Hotel Royal

2-4 Estrada da Vittoria, Macau, Tel (853) 552 222 Fax (853) 563 008 Rooms 380

The Royal may once have been the acme of 60s hotel chic but it has barely changed since then and the facilities look rather meager and dated today (but spotless and comfortable.) However, the room rates have hardly changed since the 60s either, so this is a good budget bet. Conveniently located. www.hotelroyal.com.mo

MACAU Hyatt Regency Macau

Estrada Almirante Marques Esparteiro, No2, Taipa Island, Tel (853) 831 234 Fax (853) 830 195 Rooms 326

A great place to escape the hustle and bustle in increasingly crowded Macau, the Hyatt's big draw (apart from international levels of comfort, large rooms and good food outlets) is its leisure facilities including tennis and squash courts as well as golf packages, a swimming pool and spa complex, and an amazing bakery. www.hyatt.com

MACAU Pousada de São Tiago

Fortaleza de S. Tiago da Barra, Ave. da Republica, Macau, Tel (853) 378 111 Fax (853) 552 170 Rooms 23

Occupying an old fort hewn into the rocks of a hill in western Macau, this hotel oozes old world colonial atmosphere, and comes with charming service. The rooms are beautifully if heavily decorated with dark wood period furniture and Portuguese-style tiles. Small pool and decent restaurant. www.saotigao.com.mo

MACAU Mandarin Oriental

Avenida da Amizade, Outer Harbour, Macau, Tel (853) 567 888 Fax (853) 594 589 Rooms 435

Get all the luxury of the Mandarin for markedly lower prices. The big attraction is the sumptuous spa with highly skilled masseurs. The one blight on the landscape is the encroachment of a massive recent building development surrounding the Mandarin. Located close to ferry and heli ports. www.mandarinoriental.com/macau

SICHUAN & CHONGQINGCHENGDU California Garden Hotel (Jiazhou Huayuan Jiudian)

Shawan Lu 258, Intl. Exhibition & Convention Center, Tel (028) 8764 9999 Fax (028) 8764 0988 Rooms 432

Part of a huge complex of retail shops, cinema, and convention centre, the hotel's expansive lobby is adorned with pieces of sculpture and paintings. The hotel complex also boasts an opera house and ice skating rink. A newer VIP tower offers high-end accommodations alongside the standard three-star rooms. www.eccn.com

CHENGDU Sofitel Wanda Chengdu (Suo Fei Te Wangda Dajiudian)

Binjiang Zhong Lu 15, Tel (028) 6666 9999 Fax (028) 6666 3333 Rooms 262

One of Chengdu's newest and currently its best hotel, with top quality service and a pleasant contemporary feel. Overlooks the Nan River and Park, which are nicely lit at night. An English Corner, held on Tuesday and Friday nights attracts hundreds. Large-capacity meeting rooms also make this a convenient meeting venue. www.sofitel.com

CHENGDU Kempinski Hotel Chengdu (Kaibin Siji Fandian)

Renmin Nan Lu, Duan 4, #42, Tel (028) 8526 9999 Fax (028) 8512 2666 Rooms 483

Another of Chengdu's new hotels, the Kempinski has a spacious lobby and even bigger spa, with a 26-yard (24-m) pool, mineral water baths, an assortment of massage options, and a gymnasium. Service was still very green at the time of inspection. Take time out in the cigar room or tea lounges. www.kempinski.com/en/hotel/index.html

CHENGDU Holiday Inn Crowne Plaza Chengdu

Zong Fu Lu 31, Tel (028) 8678 6666 Fax (028) 8678 9789 Rooms 433

The Holiday Inn has possibly the best location in the city, across from the fashion district mall of Chunxi Street. Unfortunately service fails to live up to the grandeur of the lobby. However, facilities are good and extensive dining available in four different restaurants. Bank and Post Office available. www.crowneplazachengdu.cn

CHENGDU Sheraton Chengdu Lido Hotel

Renmin Zhong Lu, Duan 1, #15, Tel (028) 8676 8999 Fax (028) 8676 8888 Rooms 376

The Sheraton Hotel is just a five-minute walk north of Tianfu Square, with some of the best service in Chengdu. Some rooms have views of the nearby sports stadium and Panda Mall. There are impressive business facilities for work, while the health club has amenities for rest. www.sheraton.com/chengdu

CHONGQING Chongqing Carlton Hotel (Nanfang Junlin Jiudian) Ke Yuan Si Lu 259, High-Tech Industry Development, Tel (023) 6806 6806 Fax (023) 6806 6666 Rooms 313

A new massive two tower affair in the High Technology Development Zone, a short drive from the popular Liberation Monument area. The neighborhood is rather soulless but the impressive lobby and responsive service may help you forget that. A ballroom, disco, fitness center and sauna will keep you happy. www.cqcarltonhotel.com

CHONGQING Hilton Chongqing (Chongqing Xi'erdu Jiudian) Zhong Shan San Lu 139, Yuzhong District, Tel (023) 8903 9999 Fax (023) 8903 8600 Rooms 437

Set in a recreational area just over 2 miles (4 km) from the city center, overlooking the confluence of the Yangzi and Jialing Rivers, the Hilton has fine art throughout and a spectacular spa appropriately called Cloud 9. Well-appointed lobby, top-notch service and diverse leisure facilities. www.chongqing.hilton.com

CHONGQING JW Marriott Hotel (Chongqing Wanhao Jiudian) Qingnian Road 77, Yu Zhong District, Tel (023) 6388 8888 Fax (023) 6388 8777 Rooms 474

Located in a bustling commercial district, this high-rise boasts an impressive lobby, 45 floors of guestrooms, and a top-floor lounge with a panoramic view of the city. Considered by many to be the place to stay in Chongqing, its multitude of features and well-trained staff help guests forget the dinginess of the exterior. www.marriott.com

EMEI SHAN Emei Shan Dajiudian Baoguo Si, Tel (0833) 552 6888 Fax (0833) 559 1061 Rooms 288

Well situated for those who wish to visit Emei Shan and desire better quality accommodations. Located at the base of Emei in a forested area and next to the Baoguo Temple. Service is better than expected for such an out of the way place. Ample nightlife, together with health and beauty salon options, ensure that guests will not feel isolated.

LE SHAN Jinhaitang Dajiudian Hai Tao Lu 99, Tel (0833) 212 2666 Fax (0833) 213 2988 Rooms 141

Located just a few minutes from the city center but tucked away from noisier streets, the hotel spreads out over expansive well-maintained grounds, a few minutes drive to the boat docks with frequent departures to view the Big Buddha. Wander through the pretty gardens and relish the peaceful location. Basic business amenities.

ZIGONG Huidong Dajiudian Huidong East Lu 16, Tel (0813) 828 8888 Fax (0813) 828 8625 Rooms 224

Located in the east of this mountainous city with a view of downtown, the hotel has an impressive lobby but service lets things down a bit and the rooms could do with a little maintenance. Plenty of leisure activities are provided however, and a ticketing office. Boasts a beauty salon, pool room, and sauna. www.huidonghotel.com

YUNNAN

DALI Landscape Hotel (Lan Lin Ge Jiudian) Yu Er Lu 96, Tel (0872) 266 6188 Fax (0872) 266 6189 Rooms 168

Opened in 2002 and formerly a Bai residence, the hotel has the nicest standard rooms in the city – completely modern and with all the amenities. The grounds feature carved screen walls, marbled courtyards, flowers, stone benches, and even a small bubbling stream. Very quiet with good location at the north end of the Old City.

DALI Asia Star Hotel (Yaxing Dafandian) Gucheng Nanjiao, Tel (0872) 267 9999 Fax (0872) 267 0399 Rooms 310

Perched on a small hill, all rooms have a lake or mountain view. The six-story lobby mural is just one of many touches that incorporate hints of local ethnic minority culture throughout. There is an organic vegetarian restaurant on the second floor. A free hotel shuttle operates to/from the center of the Old City every half-hour at night.

KUNMING Horizon Hotel (Tianheng Dajiudian) Qingnian Lu 432, Tel (0871) 318 6666 Fax (0871) 318 6888 Rooms 440

Very popular with Chinese business and tourist guests, its central location and very clean and well-equipped rooms make it a favorite for international travelers as well. The Horizon Lounge, on the revolving top floor, is a popular night spot. Also has a bowling alley on the third floor. www.horizonhotel.com.cn

KUNMING Green Lake Hotel (Cui Hu Binguan) Cui Hu Nan Lu 6, Tel (0871) 515 8888 Fax (0871) 515 3286 Rooms 293

A year-long renovation in 2003 has transformed this hotel into the most beautiful of the five-stars in Kunming. The mezzanine-level bar affords a panoramic view of nearby Green Lake Park. Private tours of the area by car (with driver provided) is another service provided by this thoughtful, modern hotel. www.greenlakehotel.com

KUNMING Harbour Plaza Hotel (Haiyi Jiudian) Hong Hua Qiao 20, Tel (0871) 538 6688 Fax (0871) 538 1189 Rooms 315

Popular with business travelers, its quiet, leafy location northwest of the city center makes one forget it is only five minutes from the hustle-bustle of downtown, and a stone's throw from the beautiful Green Lake Park. Ample dining is provided by three restaurants, and guests can lounge in two bars. www.harbour-plaza.com/hpkm

KUNMING Kai Wah Plaza International Hotel

Beijing Lu 157, Tel (0871) 356 2828 Fax (0871) 356 1818 Rooms 555

From the overpowering glass lobby to the spectacular views of the city and surrounding mountains, this large, elegant hotel has everything one expects from an international five-star property. A five-storey shopping center is in the same complex and there are plenty of outlets for leisurely pursuits and relaxation. www.kaiwahplaza.com

KUNMING Zhen Zhuang Ying Binguan

Beijing Lu 514, Tel (0871) 316 5869 Fax (0871) 313 9756 Rooms 86

Set in the stunning surroundings of a vast traditional garden, and originally the family home of the first governor of modern Yunnan, this unique hotel is where the president, premier, and high-ranking officials of China stay while in Yunnan. The only drawback is the level of English spoken. Picturesque is an understatement.

LIJIANG Grand Lijiang Hotel (Gelan Dajiudian)

Xin Yi Jie, Tel (0888) 512 8888 Fax (0888) 512 7878 Rooms 127

One of the oldest luxury hotels in Lijiang, a new addition scheduled to open mid-2005 will feature 70 new rooms, swimming pool, fitness center, miniature golf, and shops. Standard rooms are a good value even if looking a bit worn. The cuisine is well-established here, and there are two restaurants, featuring a daily-changing buffet.

LIJIANG Guanfang Hotel Lijiang (Guanfang Dajiudian)

Xiange Lila Dadao, Tel (0888) 518 8888 Fax (0888) 518 1999 Rooms 289

This large, modern five-star hotel boasts rooms with views across the old city and the surrounding countryside. The VIP Executive Building, at the back of the 30-storey main hotel, offers upgraded standard rooms. The hotel notably provides disabled access and nonsmoking rooms with humidifiers. www.gfhotel-lijiang.com.cn

LIJIANG Sanhe Hotel (San He Jiudian)

Jishan Xia, Xin Yi Jie 4, Tel (0888) 512 0891 Fax (0888) 512 0892 Rooms 50

This small guesthouse has rooms that are very clean and modern despite the traditional architecture, with hardwood floors and newly remodelled bathrooms. The hotel lacks many luxuries but its clean, quiet courtyards and central location in the old city more than compensate. A short walk from the taxi drop-off point in this pedestrian-only area.

LIJIANG Guan Fang Garden Villas (Guanfang Huayuan Bieshu)

Zhong Duan, Tel (0888) 518 8888 Fax (0888) 518 1999 Rooms 939

Opened in 2003, this large property has two accommodation styles: modern courtyard and "village" style (two and three-floor villas in small cul-de-sacs). The villas have four nonsmoking bedrooms sharing a communal living room and complete kitchen. Almost in the countryside and close to Jade Spring Park. www.gfhotel-lijiang.com.cn

GUIZHOU & GUANGXIGUILIN Guilin Lijiang Waterfall Hotel

Shanhu Beilu 1, Tel (0773) 282 2881 Fax (0773) 282 2891 Rooms 646

This recently opened Chinese-managed hotel, with its cavernous lobby, is currently the best in Guilin, and famous for the largest artificial waterfall in the world – 150 ft (45m) high – rushing down the side of the building. There are five restaurants to choose from, and extensive facilities for business clientele. www.waterfallguilin.com

GUILIN Sheraton Guilin Hotel (Guilin Dayu Da Fandian)

Binjian Nanlu 15, Tel (0773) 282 5588 Fax (0773) 280 5440 Rooms 430

This five-star hotel, conveniently situated on the Li River amongst extensive shopping and dining, offers the best service in town, although the property itself is getting a little long in the tooth. Business facilities are provided and internet access is available in all rooms. There are two restaurants and a bar. www.sheraton.com/guilin

GUIYANG Nenghui Jiudian

Ruijin Nan Lu 38, Tel (0851) 589 8888 Fax (0851) 589 8622 Rooms 125

Willing staff and comfortable rooms – usually heavily discounted – make this centrally located four-star a convenient choice. Situated on the airport bus route with two bars and two restaurants, and basic business facilities with free in-room broadband. This is an ideal spot to convene for business. www.gyspsb.com.cn

GUIYANG Shengfeng Jiudian

Shenqi Lu 69, Tel (0851) 556 8888 Fax (0851) 556 9999 Rooms 260

A hotel with an unexpectedly high level of service for a remote provincial capital. Perks include a comprehensive breakfast buffet, and fresh interiors to larger-than-average rooms offering lots of natural light. Basic business facilities available. The best choice in town. www.shengfenghotel.com

NANNING Trans Century Hotel (Kua Shiji Dajiudian)

Minzu Avenue 111, Tel (0771) 551 9200 Fax (0771) 551 9210, 551 9477 Rooms 185

On an intimate scale and with high levels of service, the Kua Shiji is only a short walk from Nan Hu and about five minutes by taxi from the convention center. It has its own extensive business facilities, together with scope for leisure activities. Located close to the financial district, it is an ideal location for business matters.

NANNING Ming Yuan Xindu Jiudian

Xinmin Road 38, Tel (0771) 211 8988 Fax (0771) 283 0811 Rooms 296

Located in the old city center and commercial district, this is Nanning's premier hotel, with a swimming pool, sauna, spa, and tennis court, as well as satellite TV and in-house movies. There are extensive business facilities, and the hotel offers three restaurants and two bars, a limo service, and a doctor on call. www.nn-myxd.com

YANGSHUO Aiyuan Binguan

Xi Jie 115, Tel (0773) 881 1868 Fax (0773) 881 1916 Rooms 71

One of several newer properties chasing the Paradise's business, and located practically opposite it. Service is more pleasant and helpful, rooms have traditional Chinese furniture, and the more expensive ones have balconies overlooking the street. There are two restaurants available to guests, and basic business facilities.

YANGSHUO The Paradise Yangshuo Resort Hotel

Xi Jie 116, Tel (0773) 882 2109 Fax (0773) 882 2106 Rooms 165

The Paradise Hotel sits in its own lakeside compound to one side of scenic West Street. With a long reputation as the best hotel in Yangshuo, its three-star status was increased to four-stars by the local tourism board following the introduction of a new, more luxurious wing in 2001. www.paradiseyangshuo.com

LIAONING, JILIN, & HEILONGJIANGCHANGCHUN Paradise Hotel (Yuefu Dajiudian)

Renmin Dajie 46, Tel (0431) 209 0999 Fax (0431) 271 5709 Rooms 187

A four-star at three-star prices and one of the finest mid-range options, not just in the city, but in the entire northeastern region. Rooms, renovated in 2002, are cramped but surprisingly well decorated and maintained. The staff, too, are uncommonly professional and friendly. Ample culinary fare provided within the three restaurants.

CHANGCHUN Shangri-la Changchun

Xi'an Dalu 9, Tel (0431) 898 1818 Fax (0431) 898 1919 Rooms 458

The city's oldest luxury hotel is still its best, thanks in large measure to standards of service that no other local hotel can match. Walking distance to People's Square and the main shopping district. If you are hankering after Western food, nothing in the city beats the Coffee Garden. Beer garden also available. www.shangri-la.com

DALIAN Dalian Hotel (Dalian Binguan)

Zhongshan Guangchang 4, Tel (0411) 263 3111 ext. 1101 Fax (0411) 263 4363 Rooms 36

Situated on the architecturally splendid Zhongshan Square, history and location are the attractions here. The hotel was built in 1909 and considered the finest in Manchuria. It languished under the Communists until restoration in the late 1990s. The small number of rooms ensures a unique stay. www.chinadalianhotel.com

DALIAN Swissôtel Dalian (Dalian Ruishi Jiudian)

Wuhui Lu 21, Tel (0411) 230 3388 Fax (0411) 230 2266 Rooms 327

The most centrally located luxury hotel in the city, with some of its best service and a nice vista from higher rooms on the park side. Rooms are smallish but impeccable. Connection to a popular mall enables easy shopping. Excellent local seafood buffet, and occasional "international" BBQs. www.swissotel-dalian.com

DANDONG Zhonglian Dajiudian

Shangmao Lüyou Qu A Qu 1, Tel (0415) 317 0666 Fax (0415) 317 0888 Rooms 143

The finest lodgings in Dandong, with unbeatable views. Rooms are tasteful and comfortable, and the service pleasantly professional. Peer out at North Korea through the windows of the café. If you are at a loose end, go bowling, venture into the cigar room, or feast on the extensive Western buffet. www.zlhotel.com.cn

HARBIN Modern Hotel (Madie'er Binguan)

Zhongyang Dajie 89, Daoli, Tel (0451) 461 5846 Fax (0451) 461 4997 Rooms 131

Built in 1913 and dripping with character. This was the city's most illustrious hotel in the pre-Communist era and a meeting point for several of the protagonists in the revolutionary struggle. A recent restoration has recaptured some of this history. Unbeatable location at the heart of historic Zhongyang Dajie. www.modern.com.cn

HARBIN Harbin Shangri-la (Ha'erbin Xianggelila Dafandian)

Youyi Lu 555, Daoli, Tel (0451) 485 8888 Fax (0451) 462 1777 Rooms 346

By its own admission this is the least impressive of the many Shangri-la hotels in the northeast, but still the city's best luxury option. It's a bit far from the main sights, but ideal in winter, when the Sungari River freezes over and the Ice and Snow Palace is built. The modern exercise room has views of the river. www.shangri-la.com

JILIN Crystal Hotel (Wusong Binguan)

Longtian Dajie 29, Tel (0432) 398 6200 Fax (0432) 398 6501 Rooms 152

Far from the sights, but beautifully situated to appreciate the famous scenery of the Jilin River in winter. This is the city's oldest luxury hotel and this is evident from the exterior. Rooms are nicely sized and clean, and staff are familiar with foreigners. Enjoy the spa with a view of the river, notably beautiful in winter with trees frosted with ice.

MUDANJIANG Jialin Fandian*Xinhua Lu 46, Tel (0453) 653 0888 Fax (0453) 655 4888 Rooms 62*

The single exception in a city of grim hotels. Completely renovated in 2002, it is a charming and friendly little place, with clean and comfortable rooms. Facilities are basic and functional. Can't ask for much more in this area. Fax and internet facilities are available. A restaurant and bar are located within this small hotel.

QIQIHA'ER Guomai Dasha*Junjiao Jie 1, Tel (0452) 241 0000 Fax (0452) 242 0683 Rooms 218*

Situated in the city's tallest building on the main east-west road, with an odd space-age antenna visible from the train station, this the city's newest hotel and, hence, it's best. Not as luxurious as its four-star rating might suggest, it is nevertheless clean and comfortable. Walking distance to city center and convenient to the railway station.

SHENYANG Liaoning Hotel (Liaoning Binguan)Zhongshan Lu 97, Tel (024) 2383 9166 Fax (024) 2383 9103 Rooms 79

Eighty years old and beautifully restored in 2001, this was originally part of a famous chain of Japanese-owned WW II-era hotels. The green tile lobby floor and grand marble staircase with brass handrail are original. Rooms feel their age but are comfortable. Conveniently located near the city center, it has two restaurants.

SHENYANG Sheraton Shenyang Lido (Lidu Xilaideng Fandian)Qingnian Dajie 386, Tel (024) 2318 8888 Fax (024) 2318 8000 Rooms 590

The city's newest and most tasteful luxury hotel, opened in late 2002 with investment from Hong Kong shipping magnate Li Ka-Shing. Rooms are palatial and nicely decorated with decent artwork. Far from the sights, but with a high standard of service. Health club with gym, and cigar room with live music. www.sheraton.com/shenyang

INNER MONGOLIA & NINGXIAHOHHOT Hohhot Holiday Inn (Huhehaote Jiari Jiudian)Zhongshan Xi Lu 185, Tel (0471) 635 1888 Fax (0471) 635 0888 Rooms 198*

Opened in January 2003, the hotel's rooms and bathrooms are both stylish and huge. Located on exclusive Zhongshan Xi Lu, the main business artery of the city. There are two bars and two restaurants within the hotel, and a convenient airport bus shuttles guests to and from flights. www.ichotelsgroup.com

HOHHOT Phoenix Hotel (Neimenggu Guohang Dasha)Xincheng Bei Jie, Tel (0471) 660 8888 Fax (0471) 628 0959 Rooms 280

Rooms are elegant and staff very eager to assist, and there are thoughtful extras like fruit plates for guests with reserved rooms and in-house boarding pass arrangements for travelers flying out of Hohhot. The Western restaurant on the top floor serves French cuisine at a dizzying height. Close to the railway station. www.ni-phoenix.com.cn

HOHHOT Xincheng Binguan*Hulun Nan Lu 40, Tel (0471) 629 2901 Fax (0471) 693 1141 Rooms 291*

Originally opened in 1959, this monster hotel houses several restaurants and bars. There are plentiful rooms which are large, albeit a bit worn. The hotel has been updated and rooms have free broadband internet connections. On-site leisure facilities include pool, tennis courts, bowling alley. www.xincheng-hotel.com.cn

HOHHOT Yitai Dajiudian*Dongying Nan Lu 69, Tel (0471) 223 3388 Fax (0471) 493 6699 Rooms 100*

The hotel has typical business traveler-style rooms and is located in the heart of Dongying Lu, the neon-lit entertainment strip of Hohhot. Exceptionally friendly staff lurk at every corner. Popular with overseas tour groups, it also happily caters for businessmen and tourists alike. Convenient for airport and railway station. www.yt-hotel.com.cn

YINCHUAN Rainbow Bridge Hotel (Hong Qiao Dajiudian)Jiefang Xi Jie 16, Laocheng Qu, Tel (0951) 691 8888 Fax (0951) 691 8788 Rooms 192

An ugly three-star tower with some pretension to better things, this is still this quiet provincial capital's best and most successful hotel. Service is modest but tries to please, and rooms are straightforward but clean enough, many with city-wide views. The basic business center makes a convenient base, a few blocks from the old town center.

GANSU & QINGHAIDUNHUANG The Silk Road Dunhuang Hotel (Dunhuang Shanzhuang)Dunyue Lu, Tel (0937) 882 5388 Fax (0937) 882 3883 Rooms 300*

This hotel is the best in Gansu and set in the middle of the desert en route to the Mingsha Dunes; the earthy buildings contain spotless, well-furnished rooms which fit in with, rather than exclude, the wild surroundings. Cheaper rooms are available in the attached "youth hostel." Free shuttle service into town. www.the-silk-road.com

GOLMUD Post Hotel (Youzheng Binguan)

Yingbin Lu, Tel (0979) 845 7000 Fax (0979) 845 7020 Rooms 59

This smarter-than-average three-star opened in 2002 and is convenient to the most important thing in this dismal town – transport out. Standard rooms come in three different sizes; larger rooms are worth the extra outlay. Unlike other Golmud hotels, the staff here are eager to please. Bike rental and helpful travel service also available.

JIAYUGUAN Qingnian Binguan

Jianshe Xi Lu 3, Tel (0937) 622 6812 Fax (0937) 620 1089 Rooms 88

This recently refurbished hotel in the south of town was meant to resemble an imposing fort, but liberal use of pastel hues resulted in something resembling an inflatable castle. Rooms are spotless with no-frills amenities, though the walls are thin so rooms can be cold when the temperature drops sharply at night. Bike rental service available.

LANZHOU Lanzhou JJ Sun Hotel (Jinjiang Yangguang Jiudian)

Donggang Xi Lu 481, Tel (0931) 880 5511 Fax (0931) 885 4700 Rooms 236

The midsize rooms in this three-star outpost of the Accor empire are four-star standard and offer hairdryers, safety boxes, fridges, and in-room broadband. The enthusiastic staff speak good English, and will offer substantial discounts to those canny enough not to book in advance. www.accor-jinjiang-hotels.com

LANZHOU Sunshine Plaza (Yangguang Dasha)

Qingyang Lu 408, Tel (0931) 460 8888 Fax (0931) 460 8889 Rooms 189

Opened in 2002, this Chinese five-star hotel is small enough to maintain excellent levels of service. Owned by a local petroleum conglomerate, there's no shortage of funds for renovations, which are continuous. Massage showers in every room are a novel touch, as is the child-friendly games room that has every toy imaginable.

TIANSHUI Maiji Dajiudian

Tianshui Huoche Zhan Guangchang Xice, Tel (0938) 492 0000 Fax (0938) 492 9323 Rooms 123

Efficient service and very clean rooms are the main attractions in this otherwise utterly standard two-star hotel. There are some more recently renovated rooms on the top floor. The location in the same square as the railway station may be convenient, but can be noisy, so choose a room facing away from the station for a better night's sleep.

TONGREN Telecom Hotel (Dianxin Binguan)

Zhongshan Lu 2, Tel (0973) 872 6888 Fax (0973) 872 2666 Rooms 33

Recently opened, this white-tiled building is in surprisingly good condition for a two-star establishment. For the price, guest rooms are well-appointed and boast sparkling blue bathrooms. Service is as good as it gets in Tongren, which isn't a big claim. The hotel also has a three lane bowling alley which some may find a bonus.

XIAHE Overseas Tibetan Hotel (Huaqiao Fandian)

Renmin Xijie 77, Tel (0941) 712 2642 Fax (0941) 712 1872 Rooms 35

The energetic manager of this once dire hotel is slowly turning it into the best in town. Small, with a moderate number of rooms – those on the third floor are fitted with Tibetan-style furnishings and comfortable bed; more rooms will be added in 2005. The Everest Café serves delicious Nepali cuisine and a decent Western breakfast.

XINING Mingzhu Binguan

Huzhu Xi Lu 7, Tel (0971) 814 9569 ext. 1 or 2 Fax (0971) 817 4867 Rooms 148

The proximity of this standard three-star hotel to the railway and the long-distance coach stations is its main appeal. Opened in 2002, the rooms are not yet battered, and the staff is affable and helpful. However, China is not generally a quiet place so choose a room facing away from the rowdy main street. In-house restaurant but no bar available.

XINJIANGKASHGAR Chini Bagh Hotel (Qiniwake Binguan)

Seman Lu 144, Tel (0998) 282 2103 Fax (0998) 284 2299 Rooms 337

Situated on the edge of the Old Town, the original early-20th century British Consulate building still stands behind the modern hotel buildings. The afternoon teas and carefully tended lawns of the Great Game era may have gone, but the Chini Bagh is nonetheless a decently-run hotel with a variety of rooms to suit every budget.

KASHGAR Seman Binguan

Seman Lu 337, Tel (0998) 258 2150 Fax (0998) 258 2860 Rooms 300

This sprawling two-star hotel offers a rare opportunity to stay in an old colonial consulate building (Russian) behind the main accommodation block. There are some small, oddly-shaped rooms with simple bathrooms. Common areas feature high ceilings and military-themed oil paintings. Dorms in the main building are basic, but dirt cheap.

KHOTAN Tianhai Binguan

Beijing Xi Lu 5, Tel (0903) 203 7666 Fax (0903) 203 7222 Rooms 64

Located just west of the post office, Khotan's most luxurious hotel was opened in 2002, attaining a well-deserved three-star rating. Midsized rooms are cosily furnished and the bathrooms are kept in immaculate condition. Refrigerators provided in each room is a nice touch and can be a lifesaver in the heat of summer.

KUQA Jiaotong Binguan*Tian Shan Lu 87, Tel (0997) 712 2682 Fax (0997) 712 5115 Rooms 56*

The spartan rooms of this inexpensive inn were renovated in 2001, and the staff are notably embarrassed about the hotel's previous incarnation as a decrepit flophouse. If you are leaving early in the morning, be warned you may miss the hot showers. Rooms at the back are quieter and the hotel is convenient for the coach station.

TURPAN Grand Turpan Hotel (Tulufan Dafandian)Gaochang Lu 20, Tel (0995) 855 3868 Fax (0995) 855 3908 Rooms 149

This sleepy hotel was recently snapped up by a Hong Kong chain and now sports a new wing with four-star rooms. Standard rooms are large and clean, and rates are discounted by 60% in the off-season. Comfortable dorm beds in the old wing come with new bathrooms and showers – the best budget deal in town. www.xjturpanhotel.com

URUMQI Xinjiang Fandian)Chang Jiang Lu 107, Tel (0991) 585 2511 ext. 2000 Fax (0991) 581 1354 Rooms 305

The concrete corridors and dormitory rooms of this two-star monolith will be instantly familiar to any one who has studied in China. However, service is friendly, and it is close to the railway station and the Uighur part of town, jokingly known as the "autonomous region" by locals. Try the affordable "blind" massage. www.xjhotel.com.cn

URUMQI Hoi-tak Hotel (Haide Jiudian)Dongfeng Lu 1, Tel (0991) 232 2828 Fax (0991) 232 1818 Rooms 318

The 36-story Hoi-tak Hotel has an excellent location in the center of town. Fitted to five-star standards, rooms are modern and comfortable with large beds. On clear days, marvellous views of Tian Shan may be enjoyed from upper floors. Substantial discounts (up to 70%) are offered all year round. www.hoitakhotel.com

YINING Yili Binguan*Yingbin Lu 8, Tel (0999) 802 3799 Fax (0999) 802 4964 Rooms 234*

This hotel greets you with a bust of Lenin and a map. You will need the latter as the grounds are extensive. The hotel has "received Li Peng", but non-cadres are bundled out of the luxurious Building 5 before reaching the marble staircase. Buildings 2, 3, and 4 are for civilians; cheap rooms are located in the charming but dilapidated Building 4.

TIBETGYANTSE Wutse Hotel (Wuzi Fandian)Yingxiang Nan Lu, Tel (0892) 817 2909 Fax (0892) 817 2880 Rooms 48*

Renovations are ongoing at this friendly Tibetan-run hotel which opened in 1999. Standard rooms are large and fitted with comfortable firm beds, but the dormitories are very basic. The restaurant offers decent fare, though nearby Tashi's is better. Only a short walk away from the foot of Gyantse Dzong. www.wutse.com.cn

LHASA Pentoc Guesthouse*Zang Yiyuan Dong Lu 5, Tel (0891) 633 0700 Fax (0891) 633 0700 Rooms 24*

A short walk from the heart of Lhasa, with exceptionally clean rooms and comfortable beds, this Swiss-run hostel is unbeatable value. Rooms are pleasantly decorated with Tibetan fabrics and patterns, and 24-hour hot water is available in the communal bathrooms. Delicious pastries and coffee are served in the hotel restaurant. www.pentoc.com

LHASA Kyichu Hotel (Jiqu Fandian)Beijing Dong Lu 149, Tel (0891) 633 1541 Fax (0891) 632 0234 Rooms 52

For once it may be worth reserving your room in advance since the cozy rooms in this Tibetan-run hotel are often booked out. Service is exceptionally friendly. Rooms in the new south wing, overlooking a sunny courtyard, are worth the extra outlay. Only a short walk from the heart of Lhasa, the Barkhor. www.kyichuhotel.com

SHIGATSE Hotel Mansarovar (Shenhu Jiudian)Qingdao Dong Lu 20, Tel (0892) 883 9999 Fax (0892) 882 8111 Rooms 49

Opened in 2002, the standard rooms are simply but elegantly appointed, and dorm rooms are spotless, if overpriced. Staff are generally friendly and professional, despite the management's close ties with Tibet's FIT (Foreign Individual Travel) tourism monopoly. A bonus feature are the delicious Nepali curries in the attached restaurant.

TINGRI Everest Snow Leopard Hotel (Xuebao Fandian)Lao Dingri, Tel (0892) 826 2775 Fax (0892) 826 2818 Rooms 46

Situated just east of the main village and set around a spacious courtyard, with unmatched views south to the Himalayas, the Everest Snow Leopard Hotel is the only hotel in Old Tingri worth considering. Clean, simply furnished rooms have comfortable beds. Take note: hot showers are available in the evening only.

TSETANG Xuege Binguan*Hubei Lu 1, Tel (0893) 782 8888 Fax (0893) 782 7777 Rooms 65*

While reception staff at other hotels in town call the police to see if you're "allowed to stay," the staff at Tsetang's newest three-star hotel try the revolutionary approach of welcoming their guests. The midsized rooms are spotless, beds are firm, and the bathrooms compact but clean. Try the four-lane bowling alley for entertainment.

WHERE TO EAT

CAN ANY OTHER nation rival China's obsession with food? Instead of "How are you?" Chinese people greet each other with "Ni chi fan le ma?" – "Have you eaten yet?" Once your travels begin, you may ask yourself a similar question – have you really eaten Chinese food before? For the Middle Kingdom serves up cuisine of such variety and delight that meal-times there will soon dissolve the taste memories of the pale imitations of Chinese food from back home. As you travel around the country you will enjoy a veritable culinary gazeteer. From the wheat noodles, lamb kabobs, and Peking duck of the north, venture east to taste the braised crabs and abalone of Shanghai, west to try the fiery feasts of Sichuan, and south to "dot the heart" with a thousand different Cantonese dim sum.

Yin and yang
Rice Bowl

Eating together, an important part of any meal or snack

A DIVINE PLEASURE

FOOD IS A divine pleasure runs a traditional saying. China's fascination with food stems from the ancient worship of gods and spirits, when emperors were carried to temples or sacred peaks to guarantee good harvests with sacrifices of meat and rice wine. Today, any event can prompt a feast where families can bond, relationships grow, disputes be resolved, and business deals reached. For Chinese people everywhere, food is not just a social lubricant, but the cornerstone of their culture.

A FAMINE CUISINE

ONE OF CHINA'S perennial problems has been how can such a large population feed itself (currently a fifth of the world's people) when less than 10% of its land is arable? The answer lies in centuries of innovation and efficiency in the fields and in the kitchen. The Chinese have developed a "famine cuisine," cherishing wild plants like bamboo shoots, lotus roots, seaweed, fungi, or moss, and utilizing every part of domesticated or wild animals. Bustling markets and even some mealtimes are not for the squeamish, but the daring will learn how fish heads, pig's trotters, chicken intestine, duck webs, sea slugs, and bull testicles can be prepared as delicacies. Imagine how many lives scorpions, deep-fried and full of protein, could save in a famine?

THE FIRST FAST FOOD

ALTHOUGH BOILING and steaming dominate Chinese cooking, it is best known for the stir-fry. Restaurants tend to follow the less economical traditions of the elite, not the simplicity of everyday fare, but the stir-fry still reflects the efficiency of Chinese food. Meat and vegetables are cut into small pieces and fried briefly in hot oil, thus saving on fuel and equipment without sacrificing taste. There was little saving in work time, but labor is one resource of which China has plenty.

THE CULINARY ARTS

ACCORDING TO records China's earliest master of gastronomy, Yi Yin, cooked for the first Shang emperor way back in the 16th century BC. One cookbook from the sixth century AD still sets standards for today's chefs, like a mouthwatering recipe for roasting suckling pig that should "melt in the mouth like ice." Over the centuries, countless men of letters sang the glories of food. Song Dynasty poet Su Dongpo penned a famous ode to pork and today Dongpo Pork remains Hangzhou's most celebrated dish. On your travels you can learn the stories behind many other famous dishes. The ancient philosophy of yin and yang – the blending of contrasts and duality of nature – applies to culinary matters in China as much as to spiritual ones. Achieving the right harmony of yin (soft, cold, dark, and feminine) and yang (strong,

Scorpion kebabs – cooking renders the sting ineffective

Steaming food on the street – simple, fast, and efficient hot, bright, and masculine) will ensure good health not just a good meal. Cooling yin foods – for example most vegetables, crab, beancurd – must complement warming yang – meat, chilies. Hence in menu planning, there should be meat dishes as well as vegetable, hot and cold, sweet and sour, plain and spicy. Even meat dishes rarely contain meat alone, while the basic ingredients of stir-frying – scallions and ginger – are yin and yang too. Additionally a balanced diet should include appropriate proportions of both fan (grains) and cai (vegetables) and not too much meat. Many aspects of the culinary arts are thus governed by concepts and philosophies that seem to permeate all of Chinese life.

YOU ARE WHAT YOU EAT

NUTRITIONISTS were attached to the Zhou court back in the seventh century BC, for the Chinese have long recognized the medicinal value of food. In the Chinese chef's repertoire there is a dish or an ingredient for every poorly organ or ailment. Some foods that are meant to boost your qi, such as ginseng and bird's nest soup, require a small leap of faith as to their efficacy; others such as iron-rich duck blood are more obvious. In some cases, as in other societies, animal parts are believed to strengthen the human equivalent – try duck brain for more intelligence, ox tongue for eloquence, and bull's testicles for greater sexual potency.

THE FIVE FLAVORS

THE CHINESE are not really recipe-bound. Amid the drama of the flaming stir-fry, they seem to take a more flexible approach, finely judging the right quantity of each ingredient. But nevertheless, Chinese chefs are very particular about flavor, aroma, color and texture. Each of these properties has been elevated to an art form with special vocabulary and sets of rules. If xian captures the soul of a food (an elusive, sweet but natural freshness), cui is the goal of most Chinese cooking

Rice and chopsticks

(a crisp crunchiness like the skin of perfect Peking duck). Trained Chinese palates distinguish five different flavors – sweet, sour, bitter, pungent, salty – and only the right combinations work. Foods rich in flavor combine well with texture foods of little taste, such as sea cucumbers and shark's fin, which absorb and heighten the foods cooked with them.

SYMBOLISM IN FOOD

IN A CULTURE obsessed with symbolism, and eating, there are many foods that have earned special meaning and must be consumed on certain occasions. Round mooncakes, dotted with moon-like duck egg yolks, are a must for the family reunion at Mid-Autumn Festival. At the important Spring Festival dinner, the whole family cooks tangyuan, round sweet dumplings made of glutinous rice flour, because yuan can also mean "reunion." Fish is particularly auspicious, because the character for fish (yu) sounds like the one for "abundance" and offers the hope of good fortune in the year ahead. Meat dumplings (jiaozi) are another New Year favorite, especially in the north, as their shape is said to resemble a golden symbol of prosperity. Birthdays are often celebrated with noodles, a symbol of longevity, while red beans are a metaphor of longing and love. And to celebrate new arrivals, parents hand out bundles of eggs painted red for luck – an even number to celebrate a boy, an odd number for a girl.

Cooking chinese-style – balancing colors, tastes, and textures

Types of Restaurants

WHETHER YOU ARE LOOKING to eat in the splendor of an imperial pavilion in Beijing, a chic Shanghai café, or a busy Sichuan teahouse, you will find a restaurant boom taking place in China. Freed from state control, entrepreneurs are thinking up tempting new ways to indulge in the country's favorite pastime. You never have to walk far to find restaurants in China and when you do, do not let first appearances put you off – in contrast to the delicacy of the food, many gourmet restaurants boast simple decor and harsh lighting. Look instead for happy crowds of diners and a different concept of “atmosphere.” In Chinese eyes, the more lively and noisy (renao) a restaurant is, the better.

Typical restaurant – busy and noisy with a utilitarian decor

OPEN ALL HOURS

EARLY TO BED, early to rise was the pattern of Chinese lives until the 1990s, leaving some foreign visitors caught out when planning mealtimes. While Chinese stomachs still demand food earlier than their Western counterparts, social and professional hours are diversifying. You can breakfast on the street by 6 am, but all hotels should serve breakfast until 9 am or later. Lunch is typically from 11:00 am till 2:00 pm, after which some restaurants shut until the evening shift starts around 5:00 pm. In the evening closing times can be very late, while some places never shut. Booking is rare except for the most popular and high-end establishments. Usually you can simply turn up; if the restaurant is full, you may have to wait until a table comes free or have a drink at the bar. Sometimes the owner will come to your rescue by setting up a makeshift table in the corner, or even out in the backyard.

HOTEL FOOD

IF YOU ARE TIRED and hungry, and staying at one of China's more expensive hotels, then room service can provide comfort with imitations of Western food. But try to make it downstairs, as most hotels offer a range of cuisines within the premises.

In Shanghai, Beijing, and Hong Kong, some of the best restaurants are located in hotels, but these do not usually serve Chinese cuisine. In many hotels, Chinese dishes are deliberately made somewhat bland to appease foreign palates, and even though the English menus are convenient, prices can be inflated. Home to one of the world's top cuisines, China has a lot to offer visitors. The more intrepid diner who makes a few forays outside the comfort of four-star hotels will reap handsome dividends.

STREET FOOD

AS CHINA SMARTENS UP for the Olympics, the World Expo, and other world events, street vendors must sometimes play hide-and-seek with the authorities. Yet their portable stalls form a vital part of the everyday life of China, selling cheap and popular foods such as breakfasts of dough sticks (youtiao) and beancurd (doujiang), or snacks like scallion pancakes (jianbing), sweet potatoes (shanyu) roasted in old oil drums, deep-fried beancurd cubes (zbadoufu), and local fruits.

A reliable way to locate delicious street food is to stroll through a night market (yeshi), a culinary and visual feast where clouds of steam escape from bamboo steamers and the sky glows red from the flames of oil drum stoves. The sizzle of cooking and clamor of vendors shouting for business should stir your appetite and if deep-fried scorpions or cicadas on skewers prove too exotic, be assured that plenty of other foods will take your fancy. If the food is hot and freshly cooked for you, hygiene problems are rare. The market off Wanfujing Dajie (see p94), in Beijing, is the most famous, but track down night markets wherever you go, to enjoy the local delicacies and specialities.

Dunhuang nightmarket – food stalls for shoppers buying spices, silks, and carpets

Stall-holder making some xiaochi or "little eats" in Dalian

LITTLE EATS

CHEAP AND NOURISHING snacks such as those found at night markets are known collectively as xiaochi, or "little eats." Restaurants that specialize in them are called xiaochidian; they sell different types of noodles or dumplings, stuffed buns or pancakes. Open early for breakfast, they may serve simple stir-fried dishes too, and shut only when the last guest leaves. The setting is usually basic, but the food is hearty, tasty, and very reasonably priced. Every city has its own local varieties, but the ultimate "little eats" are the dim sum of Cantonese cooking (see p.282).

FAST FOOD

THE POPULARITY of fast food giants MacDonal'd's and Kentucky Fried Chicken, now found in all cities, has spurred Chinese firms to compete. Yonghe King is an impressive Taiwanese chain serving up all-day breakfasts of soya bean milk, congee (a savory rice porridge), and spring onion pancakes. If the street stalls are a little too basic, food courts in department stores or malls are worth exploring for a variety of regional foods from noodles to curries. They are clean and usually air-conditioned.

THEMED RESTAURANTS

AS URBAN TASTES grow ever more sophisticated, restaurateurs race to catch up, opening restaurants with a special theme, cuisine, or setting, like a train carriage or mock prison. The character of these places is often nostalgic, such as the old Beijing style (Lao Beijing), where each guest is loudly greeted, and staff in pre-Revolution uniforms clatter the teacups in welcome on your table. The walls of Cultural Revolution restaurants are covered with bitter-sweet memorabilia of that era, while many Sichuan eateries have concentrated on rustic decor to increase the appeal.

THE OTHER CHINA

THERE IS NOT ONLY a wide spread of regional cuisines across Han China, but also a whole range of ethnic specialties offered by the many minority nationalities from the Korean border to the Tibetan plateau. The minorities' restaurants are an "exotic" attraction for Chinese as well as foreign tourists.

In Dai restaurants, offering the Thai-like cuisine of southern Yunnan, guests are greeted with scented water, given a lucky charm, and later invited to join in the singing and dancing. In Uighur restaurants, serving food from the Muslim northwest, belly dancing is sometimes on show.

Pretty colored dumplings

VEGETARIAN SURPRISE

THE CHINESE understanding of a good life is inextricably associated with meat. They find it hard to understand why someone who could afford to eat meat would choose not to. Nevertheless, you will find a few vegetarian restaurants in big cities, often attached to Buddhist temples, serving excellent vegetarian dishes to worshippers and non-worshippers alike. Many of these have meaty names, and are made in exact imitation of their meat-filled namesakes. Ordinary restaurants can lay on good vegetarian meals too, as long as you can repeat: "Wo chi su", ("I eat vegetables") a few times and don't mind the odd bit of meat or chicken stock turning up in your bowl every now and then.

FOREIGN FOOD

WESTERN RESTAURANTS, now found in all major cities, typically offer Italian, French, or a fusion of international food. Some have justifiably earned wide acclaim, such as The Courtyard in Beijing, and M on the Bund in Shanghai.

In smaller cities, western restaurants are harder to find, although Italian cuisine is the most common – ravioli and spaghetti are easy concepts for the dumpling- and noodle-loving Chinese to appreciate. Other Asian cuisines, namely Korean, Japanese, and Thai, are also well represented, and more readily accepted by the chopstick-wielding Chinese.

Uighur bread stall in the market at Linxia, Gansu

Food Customs and Etiquette

CONFUCIUS WAS RENOWNED for his silence at meals. The good news, however, is that 2,500 years later, the Chinese are actually quite informal at meal times. In fact, a busy Chinese restaurant can be a deafening place as waiters crash plates about and diners shout orders at the waiters. It may seem daunting but just join in and expect praise for your chopstick skills – even if you struggle, your willingness to try will be appreciated.

Business dinner in a private room, still an enjoyable event

EARNING SOME FACE

THE CHINESE do not expect visitors to be fully versed in proper banquet etiquette, but awareness of a few essentials can earn "face" both for yourself and your host, whatever the occasion. The other guests will appreciate that you have some respect for Chinese culture and traditions.

When attending, or hosting, a formal meal, note that the guest of honor is usually placed on the seat in the middle, facing the door. The host, traditionally positioned opposite the guest, now more often sits to his or her left.

If you come as a guest, be punctual and do not sit down until you are given your seat – seating arrangements can be very formal and based on rank.

Once seated, do not start on the food or drink before your host gives the signal. Some of the delicacies on offer may test your courage; be gracious and try everything, it is an insult if the food is untouched; but leave some food on the plates. Empty bowls imply that the host is too poor or mean to lay on a good spread.

THE ART OF ORDERING

IF YOU ARE someone's guest, you may be asked to order something, or state some sort of preference – if you do not do so, a ten-course banquet could soon appear. Feel free to name your favorite dish, or point at the object of your desire, often swimming in a fish tank at the entrance to the restaurant. Freshness is all important in Chinese cuisine.

English language menus are becoming more common, and an increasing number of restaurants actively encourage visitors to get out of their chairs and choose ingredients from tanks, cages, and supermarket-type shelves. Your Chinese friends (and waiters and onlookers) will likely be delighted by any interest you show in the whole experience. In the end, when language or phrase book fail, point at whatever appeals on other tables, or even head into the kitchen to find what you need.

A meal might begin with cold starters such as pickled vegetables, ten-thousand-year old eggs, seasoned jellyfish, or cold roasted meats.

When selecting main courses, remember to aim for harmony and balance – an equilibrium of yin and yang. For example, with sweet and sour pork, you might order a spicy chicken dish. Different cooking methods are also important: a steamed fish or roast pork add variety to a series of stir-fried foods. You shouldn't need to ask for a side order of vegetables as they are usually part of the dishes – unless you want something specific.

The last dish, or cai, is usually soup. Then comes fan, a grain staple such as rice, noodles, or bread (mantou), without which a Chinese diner may feel they have not eaten. At informal meals you can have rice at the start of the meal, but not at a banquet, or your host will assume his dishes are inadequate.

Desserts are not a Chinese tradition, but look out for caramelized apples or bananas in the north (to be instantly dipped in water and eaten), and succulent fruit nationwide.

Filling up on rice at an informal meal in a market, Dali

INVITED TO DINNER

A FORMAL MEAL often takes place in a private room and usually begins with a toast. The host serves his guest with the choicest morsels, and then everyone is permitted to help themselves. Serving chopsticks or spoons are sometimes provided; otherwise you can simply use your own pair.

Confucius said that it was uncivilized to have knives on the table, but if you are really struggling most restaurants will readily provide you with knives and forks.

The host almost always orders more dishes than necessary. While it is polite to try everything, don't feel it is necessary to finish it all.

GOOD NEIGHBORS

IT IS COURTEOUS to keep your neighbors' tea cups filled. To thank an attentive neighbor, tap your first and index finger together on the table. This tradition dates back to the Qing Qianlong emperor, who liked to tour the country in disguise. Once, at a teahouse, he took his turn to pour the tea. His companions, who should have been pressing their foreheads to the floor, maintained his disguise by tapping their fingers in a mini-kowtow. If you don't want your cup refilled then don't empty it.

Crabs – difficult to eat with chopsticks shouldn't suck greasy fingers, or use them to pick bones out of your mouth – spit bones or shell onto the table, into the saucer that was under your bowl, or into a napkin.

Toothpicks are ubiquitous, but do cover the action with your free hand. And don't be shy about shouting for attention.

Eating alone is very strange to the Chinese way of thinking. Eating in a group – sharing the dishes and the experience – greatly increases the enjoyment.

THE END OF THE MEAL

A PLATTER OF fresh fruit and steaming hot towels signal the end of the meal is coming. Just as you should await the start of a meal, don't stand up before your host, who will rise

HOW TO HOLD CHOPSTICKS

1) Place the first chopstick in the crook of your thumb and forefinger. Support it with the little and ring fingers, and keep it there with the knuckle of the thumb.

2) Hold the second chopstick like a pencil, between middle and index fingers, anchored by the pad of your thumb.

3) When picking up food, keep the lower stick stationary and the tips even. As the index finger moves up and down, only the upper stick should move, using the thumb as an axis.

Third finger acting as a rest for the lower stick

Thumb and first finger controlling the top stick and indicate that the dinner has ended and ask if you've had enough. The answer is "yes."

The person who invited you usually shoulders the full weight of the bill, so accept graciously. Offering to pay is fine, even polite; insisting too hard suggests that you doubt the host's ability to pay.

The capitalist habit of tipping was wiped out after Mao's Communist Party took over. Politically acceptable today, it is still rare, as is "going Dutch."

Prices are fixed and written down in most restaurants, and on bills, although there is the occasional story of restaurants overcharging foreigners.

There is no service charge except in the more upmarket and expensive restaurants, which are also the only places likely to accept international credit cards.

THE BUSINESS OF BANQUETS

THE BUSINESS BANQUET is the apex of the Chinese dining experience, and almost all significant deals are clinched at the banquet table. In addition to the above, further rules apply: arrive 15 minutes early; if you are applauded as you come into the room, applaud back; reply to the welcome toast with your own short speech and toast; avoid sensitive subjects; show respect to your elders and superiors by ensuring that the rim of your glass is lower than theirs when clinking glasses and drain your drink in one swift movement.

DOS AND DON'TS

THE CHINESE ARE fairly relaxed about table manners. Slurping shows appreciation, enables better appreciation of flavor, and sucks in air to prevent burning the mouth. Holding your bowl up to your mouth, to shovel rice in, is another practical solution. You may happily reach across your neighbors, but do not spear food with your chopsticks, and do not stand them upright in a bowl of rice either, as it looks like an offering to the dead. If you have finished with the chopsticks lay them flat on the table or on a rest. You

An old lady demonstrates the perfect noodle technique

What to Drink

Fresh tea leaves

TEA, OF COURSE is the most popular drink in China. There are countless arguments for drinking the infusion of the bush Camellia sinensis, and just as many legends about its origin (see p293). While tea is the most popular drink, there is a wide range of others for the visitor. Beer is popular with meals but wine is also drunk in many upmarket restaurants. Chinese spirits can range from the extremely pleasant to the almost dangerous. Likewise approach the "health tonics" like snake wine with caution – as if the reptilian "sediment" in the bottle isn't enough, they can be fiercely alcoholic.

Tea plantation in the Fujian hills, South China

TYPES OF TEA

Green is the most common tea, baked immediately after picking. Flower tea is a mixture of green tea with flower petals. Black tea colors during the fermentation process and the reddish brew that results explains its Chinese name – red tea. The most highly prized is oolong, a lightly fermented tea. Brick tea is black or green, pressed into blocks. Eight Treasure tea babaocha has many ingredients including dates, dried longan, and wolfberry, and Tibetans enjoy yak butter tea.

Gaiwan or three-piece tea cup

Lid keeps leaves in the cup, not the mouth

Saucer to prevent fingers burning

Black: hongcha, actually called "red tea" in Chinese.

Green: lucha, uses leaves dried without fermentation.

Pu'er: from Yunnan, is compressed into "bricks."

Flower: huacha a mix of petals – jasmine, rose, and chrysanthemum.

The famous "Hairy Peak" green tea

Coffee: as café culture enters China, coffee drinking is fashionable among the middle classes. Starbucks may have an outlet inside the Forbidden City, but freshly-ground coffee is rare outside major hotels.

Tea and Coffee drink: those who want a fashionable coffee drink, but cannot do without their daily shot of tea, can try this blend of tea and coffee.

SOFT DRINKS

Even as a cold drink tea is dominant. Iced tea is very popular, especially with the young. Besides the usual array of fruit juices, there is pomegranate juice in Xinjiang, hawthorn juice in Beijing, and lychee and sugar cane juice down south. As well as the global drink brands there are local challengers like Tianfu Cola, and the energy drink Jianlibao, made with honey. As China overcomes its dairy aversion, milk and yoghurt drinks multiply, as well as soyabean (doujiang) and Hainan's famous coconut milk.

Bamboo cane juice

Iced green tea

Coconut milk drink

Tsingtao
beerYanjing
beerBEER

Europeans first introduced beer to China in the early 20th century; in the 21st, China has taken over as the world's biggest brewer, so you are never far from a very acceptable light lager, and even a darker brew. Each city usually has its own local brewery.

WINE

Although grape seeds traveled the Silk Roads, China has historically preferred grain alcohol. The quality is rapidly improving, but red wine is still a safer order than white – considered good for the heart, and a lucky color too.

Great Wall

Dragon Seal

SPIRITS

For millennia the Chinese have been distilling grains into baijiu or “white spirits” ranging from strong to deadly. Classified into three types: the qingxiang, or light bouquet, group includes Fenjiu from Shaanxi; Guizhou's famous Maotai is a classic jiangxiang, soy bouquet, while nongxiang, strong bouquet, is championed by Sichuan giant Wuliangye.

Maotai “eight times fermented and seven times distilled” is favored for toasts at banquets. At the other end of the scale erguotou is cheap and effective – the people's drink.

Maotai

Erguotou

RICE WINE

Despite being called “wine,” some care is required as this can vary in strength from a mild 15–16% alcohol, to the double- or triple-fermented wines at up to 38% ABV. Good rice wine is best drunk warm and goes well with cold starters.

Shaoxing rice wine

Strong rice wine

Shaoxing: This is among the best of the huangjiu (yellow spirits), noted for its moderate alcohol content (about 16%) and mellow fragrance.

DRINKING CULTURE

Teahouses are enjoying a bit of a revival in China, as appreciation of tea culture recovers after years of proletarian austerity. While cha (tea) stimulates quiet contemplation, jiu (alcohol) lubricates noisy celebrations. Despite reveling in the drunkenness of their poets such as Li Bai (see p28), the Chinese have not been as badly affected by alcoholism as many other societies. Public drunkenness is frowned upon – except maybe in the ever more popular karaoke bars. Traditionally only soup was drunk with meals, but this is changing, especially when eating with foreigners. “Gan bei!” or “dry the cup” is the clarion call to toasting bouts and drinking games. Beware the legendary capacity of the northeast Chinese, and don't drink alone or on an empty stomach.

The Jazz Club, Hong Kong – typical of the thriving big city bar scene

Choosing a Restaurant

Chosen for their excellent food, good value, and convenient or interesting location, the restaurants in this guide cover a wide price range. They are listed by area in the same order as the chapters appear in this book. Where a restaurant has both an English and Chinese name, the English name is given first.

PRICE CATEGORIES

The following price ranges are the equivalent of a meal for two made up of a range of dishes, served with tea, and including any service charges.

- ☺ Under ¥100
- ☺☺ ¥100–¥250
- ☺☺☺ ¥250–¥500
- ☺☺☺☺ Over ¥500

BEIJING

Beijing Dadong Kaoyadian

Dongsanhuan, SE corner of Changhong Qiao, Tel (010) 6582 2892

There is no finer Beijing duck in Beijing than that served here; flavorful and with just the right balance between tender meat and crispy skin. Less flashy than the Beijing institution and tourist trap Quanjude, it nevertheless surpasses its rival on every level, including price. Typical Sichuan dishes can also be sampled here.

Fujia Lou

Dong Si Shi Tiao 23, Tel (010) 8403 7831

Map 2 E3

Always packed with locals, and frenetic with the shouts of rushed waiters, this is among the best places to sample the pre-1949 Beijing dining experience. Dishes lean to the pungent and sour, but the atmosphere is the attraction. Stuffed eggplant and shredded potatoes in rice vinegar are noteworthy dishes.

Han Kejia

East bank of Qianhai, approx. 2 blocks north of Xi Chang'an Jie

Map 1 C3

Stunning location in the Back Lakes district and charming interior are reason enough to come here, but the food trumps both. An outstanding take on an obscure cooking style, the menu is laden with vivid flavors, salty and sweet, rarely equaled elsewhere in the country. Vegetable dishes are especially excellent.

Pamer (Pami'er Shifu)

Lianhua Chi Dong Lu 3, Tel (010) 6326 3635

Cheap, gaudy, and a bit run-down, this is nevertheless the city's best producer of Uighur cuisine. Specialty items join a wide variety of thick, supremely satisfying noodles in spicy tomato sauce, served with unleavened bread for a plain good meal. Meat dishes are also popular, notably those using mutton and lamb.

San Ge Guizhouren

Guanghua Xi Lu 3, Tel (010) 6507 4761

Genuine Guizhou cuisine – uncompromisingly spicy and sour – is generally too coarse for foreign tastes, but that on offer here blends rusticity with more conventional Chinese flavors to create something really rather enjoyable. Atmosphere is stylish, in keeping with local hipster fondness for minority cuisine.

Yuxiang Renjia

Chaoyang Men Wai Dajie 20, 5th floor of Lianhe Dasha, Tel (010) 6588 3841

One of a chain of restaurants scattered all over the city, at least as good and far cheaper than its more famous competitors, of which there are many. Despite the chain mentality, the restaurant retains a charming village theme. This is real Sichuanese food – oily, intensely spicy, and addictive. The smoked duck is a must.

Afunti (Afanti)

Houguabing Hutong 2A, Tel (010) 6527 2288

Map 2 E4

The most famous and popular Uighur establishment in Beijing, this child-friendly restaurant is best known for its after-dinner table-top dancing, done to live Muslim (and sometimes Latin) folk music. Dishes are nicely executed, but prices reflect the frills. Traditional noodle and kabob dishes are your best bet.

Hatsune (Yin Quan)

Guanghua Dong Lu, Heqiao Dasha C, Tel (010) 6581 3939

Charmingly creative sushi rolls at surprisingly affordable prices make this the city's best Japanese option. Stylish surroundings – a glass waterfall, great service, and fresh fish flown in regularly from Japan suggest a much more expensive experience. Private tatami (straw mat floor) rooms are available.

Huangcheng Lao Ma

Nanqing Fengzha Hou Jie 39 (in Dabeiyao), Tel (010) 6779 8801

Beijing's most upscale, impossibly vast, lavishly decorated hot pot restaurant. Ideal for foreign visitors frightened by the questionable hygiene of local eateries but who still want the unique experience of do-it-yourself Chinese dining. Broths range from mild to impossibly spicy, and ingredients are all extremely fresh.

Key to Symbols see back cover flap

Kong Yiji JiulouYangfang Hutong, Denei Dajie, south bank of Hou Hai, Tel (010) 6618 4917Map 1 B2

Perpetually packed to overflowing with local epicures, this is among the best two or three Chinese restaurants of any style in the city. An enormous range of delicate dishes from the Yangzi River delta, the atmosphere is pure Chinese-style culinary joy. Nicely decorated and fronted by a pleasant bamboo grove.

Lotus in Moonlight (Hetang Yuese Sushi)Liufang Nanli, Building 12, Tel (010) 6465 3299

Practically glowing with health, enhanced by the light-filled interior, this is the most recently opened vegetarian restaurant in Beijing, popular for its range and creativity. Options vary from fake (soy product-based) meat dishes to innovative vegetable combinations, complemented by an extensive tea selection.

Makye Ame (Maji Ami)Xiushui Nan Jie A1, 2nd floor, Tel (010) 6505 9616

This extension of a popular Lhasa restaurant is pricey but, like its Uighur counterpart Afunti, offers ethnic atmosphere and live folk entertainment to justify its prices. Dripping with Tibetan influence, this is a cosy, intimate find. Dishes use Tibetan ingredients but are slightly more fancy than authentic Tibetan fare.

Taipo Tianfu ShanzhenEr Qi Juchang Lu 19, behind Chang'an Shangchang, Tel (010) 6801 9641

Southwestern China produces dozens of the world's most precious wild mushrooms, over 30 varieties of which are stewed with a whole black-skinned chicken to form the basic broth here. The best approach is to choose from a long list of other ingredients to add yourself, including additional mushrooms, for a proper hot pot feast.

Transit (Dujinhu)Xingfu Yicun 1, Tel (010) 6417 6785

The epitome of Beijing chic – obscure alley location, background electronic music, and a scattering of tables surrounded by darkness. The ever-changing menu of simple fusion-style dishes is matched by expensive but perfectly mixed cocktails. Conveniently located near the Sanlitun bar district.

Café SambalDoufuchi Hutong 43, Tel (010) 6400 4875Map 1 C2

Part of a local trend that oddly places Southeast Asian cuisine in the “high-end” category, this stylish restaurant has an intimate courtyard-style setting. A favorite among expatriates as an alternative to Chinese fare, the dishes are exquisitely prepared by a Malaysian chef, justifying the expense. Try the lamb curry or Kapitan chicken.

Morel's (Molaolongxi Xicanting)Xinzhong Jie 5, Tel (010) 6416 8802

One of the longest-standing European restaurants in the city, this homely spot serves simple, high quality Belgian fare that has come to define comfort food in the minds of many expats. The waffle iron was hand-carried on a plane from Belgium, thus making this the ideal place to sample the genuine article.

Noble Court (Yue Ting)Dong Chang'an Jie 1 (in Grand Hyatt), Tel (010) 8518 1234Map 4 D1

One of Beijing's finest Cantonese restaurants, elegantly decorated and beautifully run, Yue Ting serves a splendid range of finely-crafted dim sum and Beijing-style snacks, plus excellent seafood. Customary excesses like shark fin and bird's nest are on the menu too. An enjoyable dining experience is guaranteed.

Taj Pavilion (Taiji Lou Yindu Canting)Jianguo Men Wai Dajie 1, China World Complex L1-28, Tel (010) 6505 5866

If the craving is for authentic Indian, this is the city's classiest and most consistent option, devoid of the gaudy Shiva posters or ear-splitting live entertainment common in other outlets in Beijing. Flavorful, filling, and slightly pricey curries. Take advantage of an entirely different avenue of spicy cuisine.

AriaJianguo Men Wai Dajie (in China World Hotel), Tel (010) 6505 2266

Contender for the title of Beijing's finest restaurant. An always-evolving menu travels well beyond traditional Asian-French fusion into improbable but near-perfectly executed combinations from all over the globe. A high quality experience all around, including an extensive wine selection and superb service.

The Courtyard (Siheyuan)Donghuamen Dajie 95, Tel (010) 6526 8883Map 2 F5

Once proclaimed one of the world's top dining places, Beijing's most famous fusion restaurant isn't quite the revelation it's made out to be but is nevertheless excellent. The menu changes regularly, with emphasis on execution over innovation. Their wine list is unrivaled. Browse the art gallery while you're at it.

Danieli's (Danni'aiili)Jianguo Men Wai Dajie 21 (in St. Regis Hotel), Tel (010) 6460 6688Map 4 F1

This is the best and most credible of Beijing's Italian fine dining establishments. Entrées are nicely executed, service is extremely thorough, and the wine list is superb – all giving the sense of being temporarily transported out of China. If you want a break from Chinese cuisine, this is the perfect answer.

Jing

Jinyu Hutong 8 (inside Peninsula Palace Hotel), Tel (010) 8516 2888

Map 2 E5

There's impressive variety and no shortage of innovation and quality in this food which travels from all over Asia and Europe. The focus here is on the visual – few restaurants in China can even dream of being so stylish. Admire the modern metal-and-glass interior with multiple open kitchens.

HEBEI, TIANJIN, & SHANXI

CHENGDE Xin Qianlong Dajiudian

Zhong Xing Lu 2, Tel (0314) 207 6768

Like many other restaurants in Chengde, this one stresses regional game and wild mountain ingredients in a pleasant environment and at low prices. Try the dumplings stuffed with local game – a nice variation on a standard dish, which make for a quick, cheap, and satisfying meal.

CHENGDE Qianyang Dajiudian

Pule Lu 18, Tel (0314) 205 7188

Familiar Chinese cooking methods are applied to ingredients stressing Chengde's origins as a hunting resort for the Qing emperors. In this hotel-based restaurant, emphasis is on local game (venison, pheasant, and wild boar). Local produce like mountain mushrooms and herbs are artfully employed.

DATONG Dongfang Mianshi Guan

Yingze Jie, Tel (0352) 201 5518

Expect a 10-minute wait, though it's well worth it. The hordes start piling in at 11:30am to slurp up dao xiao mian – Datong's specialty noodles – from classic lime green bowls while sitting on bright orange stools. Free tanks of broth available for refills. A good place to visit if you are looking for culinary authenticity.

DATONG Yonghe Hongqi Meishicheng

Yingbin Dong Lu 8, Tel (0352) 510 0333

Datong's best-known restaurant is outrageously large with six hostesses greeting diners on their way in. It specializes in Cantonese food, but has other options including local Shanxi dishes as well as spicy Sichuan and Hunan cuisine. A giant rock garden dominates the center of the dining space.

JI'NAN Luneng Ju Ji Wang

Heihuquan Xi Lu 65, Tel (0531) 602 1888

Everything from snake to steak. Point and choose from various roasted meats, Chinese-style sushi, traditional stir-fry, fresh seafood, and various Shandong cold dishes. Save room for the creatively different dumplings such as chrysanthemum flower and shrimp, or the specialty salted chicken. Impeccable service.

PINGYAO Dejuyuan Folk-style Guesthouse (Dejuyuan Mingfeng Binguan)

Xi Da Jie 43, Tel (0354) 568 5266

English menus and pictures simplify ordering at this often packed restaurant-cum-hotel lobby. The kitchen usually modifies the normally salty and spicy Pingyao specialties to foreign tastes. Pingyao cold beef is recommended, as is the you mian kao lao – a steamer of large, hollow noodles with a dipping sauce.

PINGYAO Yuanting Jiujia

Xi Da Jie 110, Tel (0354) 568 7052

The stale atmosphere of a typical Chinese restaurant, but a place to eat local dishes with local people. No English menus, but typical Pingyao specialties can be found here, including qiao mian wan tuan – a thin pancake cut into strips and served in a soup. Shanxi-style dishes are also available.

SHIJIAZHUANG Quanjudu

Jianshe Nan Dajie 7, Tel (0311) 621 1566

A bright, modern restaurant located in a guesthouse, this famous duck specialist chain serves Beijing's signature dish in more pleasant surroundings than the Beijing premises, and for lower prices. Shandong dishes are also available for those wanting to stray from duck fare.

SHIJIAZHUANG The Greenery Café (Lüyin Ge Kafeiting)

Zhongshan Dong Lu 195, inside the Yanchun Garden Hotel, Tel (0311) 667 1188

For those seeking a break from standard Chinese, here's a selection of pan-Asian and Western expat favorites, from Malaysian chicken to spaghetti Bolognese, and excellent set breakfasts. The restaurant is themed with general transport decor and you can enjoy the strange option of eating inside an aircraft fuselage.

TAIHUAI (WUTAI SHAN) Fo You Yuan Quan Su Zhai

Wuyue Miao Dong Ce, Tel (0350) 654 6283

Everything vegetarian (but not vegan), from simple potato and greens to tofu and beans disguised as chicken wings or BBQ pork. Diners often find themselves eating with monks, as the restaurant is very popular with the local monastic community. Only open in the tourism season: March–April.

Key to Price Guide see p582 Key to Symbols see back cover flap

TAIHUAI (WUTAI SHAN) Yin Hai Shanzhuang CantingTaihuai Zhen, Tel (0350) 654 3794

A sparse, windowless restaurant located within the Yin Hai hotel, with a peculiar simple/smart divide. Considered by locals to be the fanciest in town, but serves simple mountain fare like pheasant, rabbit, and local wild vegetables and mushrooms. Beijing duck and Cantonese food are also available, as are vegetarian dishes.

SHANDONG & HENANKAIFENG Diyilou BaoziguanSihou Jie 8, Tel (0378) 599 8655

Seemingly every family restaurant in Kaifeng advertizes guangtang (soup-filled) dumplings, but this is the up-market choice. So popular, it has spawned a dumpling empire stretching to 40 outlets across China. Typical flavors include Chinese leek and pork, and spicy chicken. Service attentive, serving up to 1,000 clientele.

KAIFENG You Yi XinGulou Jie 22, Tel (0378) 255 5186

This is a typical Chinese restaurant in the sense that the atmosphere is not impressive, but the food is of very high quality. Diners are able to sample simple country dishes from Henan; it is hard to define Henan cuisine exactly, but the Chinese categorize it as being neither extremely sweet, spicy, sour, nor salty. Service is friendly.

LUOYANG Zhenbutong FandianZhongzhou Dong Lu 369, Tel (0379) 399 5080

Well-known water banquet (see below) takes center stage at this famous restaurant. In its 109-year history, Zhenbutong has been awarded gold medals by international food critic associations. Stairs lead past pictures of the celebrities and statesmen who have eaten here, including former Chinese premier Zhou Enlai.

LUOYANG Mudan TingZhongzhou Xi Lu 15, 2nd floor, Tel (0379) 468 0028

Not as famous as Zhenbutong, but more conveniently located and with English menus. Up to 20 courses of various soups are served in the "flowing" water banquet and Korean-style BBQ meats are available. Music and minority dancing performances often accompany dinner. Service is much friendlier than elsewhere.

QINGDAO La Villa Bar & Restaurant (Weila Faguo Cangguan)Xianggang Zhong Lu 5 Hao, Tel (0532) 388 6833

Busy every day from early until late, La Villa's bar offers lounge-like comfort in a well-restored stone villa. Catering to more Western tastes, patrons may dine in private, in the strikingly-lit bar, or al fresco. Snack on tapas, or dine on an impressive range of salads, soups, pizzas, and spaghetti. Open all day.

QUFU Confucia Dining Room (Kongfu Xiyuan Canting)Ban Bi Jie 8, Tel (0537) 442 3666

This rather ordinary restaurant stands not far from the Qufu Confucia, and in stark contrast to the elegant hotel to which it's connected. It specializes in Kong Family cuisine, a branch of Shandong style, emphasizing the use of dark colors and strong flavors. The picture menu is necessary to facilitate ordering.

QUFU Queli Hotel Dining Room (Queli Binshe Canting)Queli Jie 1, Tel (0537) 486 6660

Features Kong Family dishes originally prepared for visiting officials and special occasions. English explanation for several dishes. Also serves Confucian dim sum – various fried, savory, and sweet bites. Traditional Chinese music accompanies most meals. Located in the Queli Hotel.

TAI'AN Taishan Restaurant (Taishan Caiguan)Hongmen Lu 20, Daizongfang, Tel (0538) 626 7888

A fine restaurant to eat a meal at before or after a hike up Tai Shan, and therefore conveniently located close to its entrance with a rather spectacular backdrop. Features typical Shandong food, liberally utilizing soy sauce, vinegar, and salt. Stewed dishes get high ratings, as does the local Tai Shan beer.

SHAANXIXI'AN Fanji Lazhi RoudianZhubashi Jie 46, Tel

A diner from another era – you'll be transported back to the days of ration coupons by the state-run ambience. Since this is the most renowned vendor of Xi'an's favorite snack – a lightly spiced pork hamburger (rou jia mo) that tastes much better than it sounds – it is the ideal venue in which to try it.

XI'AN Highfly Pizza (Gaofei Bisa)

Heping Men Wai Shengli Fandian, Tel (029) 8785 5333

Excellent Western-style breakfasts (with real muesli!) and decent approximations of home comforts such as hearty soups, pasta, and pizzas smothered in cheese are the main reasons for dining here. Pizzas are delivered to your hotel for a small surcharge. Ideal if you are after some respite from Chinese cuisine.

XI'AN Lao Sun Jia

Dong Guan Zhengjie 78, Tel (029) 8248 2828

The best place to try Shaanxi cuisine's most famous dish – yangrou paomo (lamb and bread soup) – is on the third floor of this bustling restaurant. Shred your bun into tiny pieces; let the waitress add the broth; add chilli and coriander to taste. The point-and-order eatery on the second floor is superb value.

XI'AN The Tang Dynasty (Tang Yue Gong)

Chang'an Lu 75, Tel (029) 8526 1633

The light southern Chinese cuisine is elaborately prepared and named, from the "Princess Pin" to the "Pearls of Cathay." The musical entertainment, showcasing instruments and costumes of the Tang Dynasty, is a stunning spectacle. Dinner starts at 6:30pm sharp – reservations are essential.

SHANGHAINan Xiang Steamed Bun Restaurant (Nan Xiang Mantou Dian)

Yu Yuan Lu 85, Tel (021) 6355 4206

Come by 10:30am or after 3pm or be prepared to wait; but the pork and crab dumplings are worth it. Walk past the line-up on the stairs to an upstairs, more pricey dining room with a much shorter wait: they will still want you out as soon as you've eaten. A rare, long-standing institution (founded 1900) that actually lives up to its reputation.

Old Station (Lao Zhan)

Caoxi Bei Lu 201, Tel (021) 6427 2233

Well-executed Shanghai classics and set meals at budget prices, with English menu, in highly unusual settings; high-ceilinged halls of a former French monastery, or two connected luxury railway carriages, one formerly used by the Dowager Empress Cixi, the other by Song Qingling – book ahead.

1221

Yan'an Xi Lu 1221, Tel (021) 6213 6585

1221 serves up a Canton-influenced and less oily version of Shanghaiese dishes including a refreshing pork and papaya soup, or a spicy boiled beef with warm sesame loaf. Western and Japanese influences make this popular, if not a favorite of expats. Away from the center of town but worth the effort.

1931

Maoming Nan Lu 112, Tel (021) 6472 5264

Better book as the number of tables in this cosy restaurant, with a 1930s private house feel, is small and its popularity with local people and expats alike is high. Although often listed as Shanghaiese, few of its dishes are directly regional, but all are light and pleasant. Charming, and good value for money.

Bali Laguna (Ba Li Dao)

Huashan Lu 189, Tel (021) 6248 6970

A slice of the tropics in Shanghai. Regularly voted among the city's most romantic restaurants, Bali Laguna nestles in a leafy park, perched on the side of a lotus-filled lake. Familiar Indonesian satays and nasi goreng (rice-based dish) are given the fine-dining touch. Housed in a villa with wonderful Balinese decor.

Brasserie Flo (Fu Lou)

Nanjing Xi Lu 388, Tel (021) 6334 5177

With dark wood moldings, frescoes and ornate lights, Brasserie Flo is as close as you'll get to Paris in Shanghai. The French restaurant manager adds some typical Gallic flair to the floor. Fresh Belon oysters and profiteroles bookend a range of impressive main dishes. Next to People's Square, across the road from the subway station.

Crystal Jade (Fei Cui Jiujia)

Unit 2F-12A&B, House 6-7, South Block Xintiandi, Lane 123, Xingye Lu, Tel (021) 6385 8752

Exceptional Cantonese, Shanghaiese, and other Chinese food in this upmarket Xintiandi complex. Highlights include the spicy, nutty dan dan mian (made from one long, fresh noodle), superb Shanghaiese dumplings, and the many varieties of steamed buns. Bookings are essential on weekends.

Gran Bodega (Bao De Jia)

Wuyi Lu 789 (1F, Royalton Hotel), Tel (021) 5206 0719

Gran Bodega is an authentic Mediterranean restaurant with a chef from Catalan Spain. Meat dishes reign supreme – try the delicate cochinillo asado (roast baby pig) or jamon iberica (cured boar ham) served on crusty bread. Interesting wines abound in this attractive cellar-style restaurant.

People 7 (Ren Jian Ying Qi Dian)Julu Lu 805, Tel (021) 5404 0707

People 7 is minimalist and clever, from the “trick” bathrooms to the asymmetrical glassware and chunky stone bowls that the modern Chinese food arrives in. Even the breadsticks are cutting edge. These embellishments don’t overshadow the cuisine, which is generally first-rate. Chic with an impressive long bar.

Simply Thai (Tian Tai Canting)Dongping Lu 5C, Tel (021) 6445 9551

This extremely popular Thai restaurant is efficient, relaxed, and inexpensive. The soups and salads benefit from the freshness of the ingredients and all the curries are well-spiced and hearty. Cozy despite the split-level interior. If the weather is right, take a table on the deck outside. Near Changshu Lu subway station.

SOAHC Restaurant & Tea Garden (Hongxi Chaju)House 3, Lane 123, Xingye Lu, South Block, Xintiandi, Tel (021) 6385 7777

Clunky name aside (“chaos” spelt backwards), this is one of the more visually appealing restaurants in Shanghai, with ponds, polished wood, and innovative lighting. The classically presented Yangzhou cuisine, from pumpkin croquettes with sesame to eel fillet with peppercorns, is similarly impressive.

Vegetarian Lifestyle (Zao Zi Shu)Fengxian Lu 258, Tel (021) 6215 7566

Zao Zi Shu boasts no eggs, meat, fish, fowl, or MSG. Fake meat dishes are prominent, most of them created with tofu, and many of the patrons are monks in flowing robes. After eating, you can browse the restaurant’s New-Age bookstore which stocks a variety of titles from Buddhist literature to vegetarian cookbooks.

Yin*Jin Jiang Hotel Gourmet Street, Maoming Lu 59, Tel (021) 5466 5070*

Chef Dan presides over an inventive and satisfying menu that includes his signature Guizhou-style fish in zesty sauce and sliced lamb with ten spices. Western influence is evident in some Spanish-style dishes. Stylish decor complete with wonderful antique furniture. Mellow yet effective service.

Ashoka (A Su Jia)Nanjing Xi Lu 388, Tel (021) 6466 4328

Despite the eerie quiet of the surrounding mall, Ashoka is an excellent addition to Shanghai’s clutch of Indian restaurants. The beef vindaloo is vinegary and tender; the Goan fish curry sweet and mild. Perfect for a lunch break from nearby museums, with a superb window view of the Shanghai Art Museum.

Palladio (Paladuo)Nanjing Xi Lu 1376, inside Shanghai Center (Portman Ritz-Carlton), Tel (021) 6279 8888

Sumptuous menu of extravagant Italian dishes with hints of Napoli; meals should be taken at a gentle pace, although briskly served business set lunches are excellent value for money too. Vast wine list worth serious consideration — thrice winner of Wine Spectator award of excellence. Highly recommended.

Prego (Page Yidali Canting)Henan Zhong Lu 88, inside The Westin Shanghai, Tel (021) 6335 1786

Competitor for the title of best Italian in Shanghai, despite stiff competition. Irresistibly light, refreshing Italian dishes are beautifully presented, made with the finest imported ingredients. An ebullient Italian in charge of the kitchen also makes sure all is well with the diners. It will be. Located in the Westin Shanghai lobby.

Shintori Null II (Xinduli Wu Er Dian)Julu Lu 803, Tel (021) 5404 5252

Rustic paths wind through bamboo to the sliding metal door of this former warehouse. Inside is an industrial chic space and possibly Shanghai’s best Japanese food. Enjoy the beefsteak in pu-leaf – a winning variation on Beijing Duck – but leave room for the green tea tiramisu. Situated on the quiet Julu Lu.

T8*Taicang Lu 181, Xin Tiandi, Tel (021) 6355 8999*

Intelligent combinations of Chinese and Italian ideas, such as Chinese duck pizza, seared salmon with char siu pork, and mushroom soup with truffle oil. Delightfully housed in the theatrically-lit and ultra-modern interior of an ancient stone house, replete with elegant glass shelving stacked with glassware.

Fook Lam Moon (Fu Lin Men)2/F, Fuchang Lu 33 (inside Pudong Shangri-La), Tel (021) 5877 3705

Discover what the genuine article should taste like – lighter, more subtle, and more delicate – at the latest, luxurious branch of this legendary Hong Kong restaurant. Cold Shanghai-style appetizers, shark’s fin and crabmeat soup, or roast suckling pig, justify the unequalled reputation.

Jean Georges (Rangqiaozhi)4th Floor, Three on The Bund, Zhongshan Yi Lu 3, Tel (021) 6321 7733

The Shanghai branch of Jean-Georges Vongerichten’s garlanded New York restaurant offers French with hints of Asia (lemongrass, coconut), each dish small but perfect in every way. Try the seasonal set menu which makes the best of available ingredients, and something from the 5,000-bottle wine cellar.

Kissho Japanese Restaurant (Jixiang Riben Liaoli)42/F, Yanggao Nan Lu 889, Pudong (inside Sofitel Jinjiang Oriental Hotel), Tel (021) 6854 6673

Richly marbled imported Osaka beef, extensive sake collection, freshly scraped wasabi, the finest tuna belly, and a theatrical teppanyaki (grilled food) counter; this is already popular with Japanese residents and visitors alike. The menu also ventures into contemporary European with foie gras (goose liver) on toast.

M on The Bund (Mishi Xi Canting)7/F, Guangdong Lu 20, Tel (021) 6322 0099

Regarded as the pioneer of top-of-the-range foreign food outside the big hotels, Michelle Garnaut serves European and Middle-Eastern flavors which has made her Hong Kong restaurant legendary, including a soft-as-butter salted lamb. Atop a 1920s bank overlooking the river, the bar is also popular.

Whampoa Club (Huangpu Hui)5th Floor, Three on The Bund, Zhongshan Dong Yi Lu 3, Tel (021) 6321 3737

Completely comprehensive menu of traditional Shanghaiese favorites in top-notch surroundings, some given a surprising modern twist (such as fried almond-and-cocoa spare ribs) or simply reinvented to accentuate the flavors. A tea sommelier offers 50 different fine teas from around China.

JIANGSU & ANHUIHEFEI The Golden Lotus (Jin Lian Ge)Wuhu Lu 199, Tel (0551) 228 6200

The decor may be unremarkable, yet this hotel restaurant is in the prettiest part of Hefei, looking across to the Baogong Temple and Children's Palace. Cantonese dishes dominate the menu, local Anhui delicacies such as caocao chicken, cooked with traditional Chinese herbal medicines, also available.

NANJING Dingshan YixianDongshan Dong Lu 458, 2/F, Tel (025) 8445 6622

Consistently recommended by locals as one of the best places in town to sample Jiangsu's Huaiyang cooking style. The decor is average but the food is tasty home-cooking and includes duck and meatball dishes. If you're feeling adventurous, try fried soft-shell turtles with white eggs and bean curd. English menu.

NANJING Great Nanjing Eatery (Da Pai Dang)Shizi Qiao Jie 2, Tel (025) 8330 5777

Offers up the full selection of Huaiyang specialities all produced in a home-cooked style in an earthy selection of chinaware. Specialties include jelly-like tofu in a lobster sauce (xihuang dofu) and pig's lung soup (zhufei luobo tang). If this doesn't suit, there are plenty of other options just along the street. No English menu.

NANJING Behind the WallShanghai Lu 150, Tel (025) 8420 1178

A friendly, relaxed restaurant perfect for al fresco eating during the summer thanks to its gorgeous, softly-lit patio dining area. Very popular with the expat crowd for its use of fresh ingredients; filling, well-cooked portions and live jazz at the weekends. European fare and some Mexican dishes also available.

NANJING Ming YuenB/F, Shangri-La Hotel, Cha Er Lu 90, Tel (025) 5880 2888 ext 21

A great place to get acquainted with the province's local Huaiyang cuisine in a high-class environment through a menu focusing on fresh seasonal river food such as perch and shrimp. Other Huaiyang specialities include duck and eel dishes. Also staple Cantonese dishes available such as shark's fin and abalone. English menu.

NANJING Nihero Cantonese Cuisine (Yue Hong He)Suning Universal Shopping Centre 11/F, Tel (025) 5792 3518

Currently the most popular upscale Cantonese restaurant in town, on the upper floors of a shopping arcade. Renowned for the freshness and quality of its ingredients. There is no English menu but the waitresses will happily point out the most delicious dishes. Strong on seafood dishes, sushi is also available.

NANJING Sui Yuan1/F, Hilton Hotel, Zhongshan Dong Lu 319, Tel (025) 8480 8888 ext 7760

Consistently high standards are served up in this five-star restaurant focusing on regional fish dishes such as Huaiyang eel and other local dishes like Nanjing roasted duck and "Lion's Heads" – shizi tou (see p180). A selection of dim sum is available. English menu. The walls are adorned with colorful Jiangsu artwork.

SUZHOU Sarawak House (Shala Yue)Shiquan Lu 576, Tel (0512) 6518 4406

Run by a friendly Australian-Malaysian known as Big Al, this restaurant offers cheap, wholesome curries and signature satays with spicy peanut sauce. The decor may be bland, yet tables by the windows have the best canal view of almost any Suzhou restaurant. Ideal for sampling authentic Malaysian cuisine.

SUZHOU Chuanfulou Dajjudian

Guanqian Jie Bifeng Fang 1, Tel (0512) 6522 8877

Nestled in Suzhou's gastronomic heartland, Sichuan and Suzhou dishes are presented in a variety of stone pots and porcelain plates in a spotless yet charming setting. Highlights of the comprehensive menu include Chuan Fu roast beef (sizzling and invigorating) and simple yet stunning stir-fried local mushrooms.

SUZHOU Deyue Lou

Guanqian Jie Taijian Nong 8 and 43, Tel (0512) 6523 8940

This renowned 400-year-old restaurant has twice appeared on Chinese cinema screens. It's probably the best place to sample squirrel-shaped mandarin fish and other Suzhou specialties. Presentation is outstanding – particularly the dumplings, some of which come shaped like hedgehogs or geese.

SUZHOU Wang Si Wineshop (Wang Si Jiujia)

Guanqian Jie Taijian Nong 23, Tel (0512) 6522 7277

Despite its tired interior, the Wang Si Wineshop serves memorable local cuisine, with an emphasis on the ingredients' medicinal properties. Try one of the wild vegetable dishes or the succulent "beggar's chicken" wrapped in lotus leaves and baked in clay. Absolutely fresh ingredients and flavors.

ZHEJIANG & JIANGXIHANGZHOU Crystal Garden (Yuqilin)

Dongpo Lu 2-7, Tel (0571) 8706 7777

Smart, brightly-lit three-story interior atrium with traditional square tables and wooden stools. A picture menu with English makes ordering very easy, try steamed mince pork and roe balls, or chicken in rice wine. Conveniently located in central Hangzhou. Tables are scattered over two balconied floors above a central well.

HANGZHOU Zhangshengji

Shuangling Lu 33, Tel (0571) 8602 6666

A partial picture menu makes ordering the light and delicate local cuisine very easy. The palatial multi-story restaurant is always busy with local people, and unlike the restaurants favored by tour guides, prices are low and the quality high. Expect a variety of Hangzhou and Huaiyang dishes with strong emphasis on fish.

HANGZHOU Shang Palace (Shang Gong)

Bei Shan Lu 78, inside Shangri-La Hotel, Tel (0571) 8797 7951

Local Hangzhou favorites such as Beggar's Chicken and Dongpo pork prepared alongside the lightest and most delicate of Cantonese specialties, all perfectly executed, and served in opulent surroundings. Luxurious traditional Chinese motifs decorate this pleasant restaurant located inside the Shangri-La Hotel.

HANGZHOU Va Bene (Huabinni)

Nan Shan Lu 148, Xi Hu Tiandi, Tel (0571) 8702 6333

An Italian heads the large open kitchen of this latest incarnation of the Hong-Kong-based Italian, set amongst lakeside groves of maple and bamboo in Hangzhou's answer to Shanghai's trendy restaurant scene. Try beef carpaccio or salmon with horseradish, pizzas from as little as ¥70, and a set menu from ¥220.

NANCHANG The New Oriental Hotel (Xin Dongfang Dajjudian)

Binjiang Nan Lu 18, Tel (0791) 670 9999

Not a hotel, but a palatial four-story restaurant opposite the Teng Wang Ge with different rooms and every kind of Chinese food conceivable, from dim sum to hot pot. Spicy fish head tofu is the local specialty. The owner is so rich that he also owns the province's only Rolls-Royce, parked in the lobby.

NANCHANG Yuan Dong Dajjudian

Fuzhou Lu 95, Tel (0791) 621 8888

Once Nanchang's most celebrated restaurant, now dowdy and left behind by more service-oriented newcomers, the Yuan Dong at least stays open late and serves well-executed spicy local dishes. Ingredients and pre-prepared dishes are on display at the entrance, making pointing to order easy.

PUTUO SHAN Xilei Xiao Zhuang

Xianghua Jie 1, Tel (0580) 609 1505

Many of Putuo Shan's restaurants cater for the pilgrim market with extensive vegetarian menus alongside the meat dishes for mere tourists. There's plenty of choice in the Chinese dishes on offer here for herbivores and carnivores alike. Comfortable surroundings, located inside the Xilei Xiao Zhuang Hotel.

PUTUO SHAN Baihua Chayi Suzhai Guan

On central square outside Puji Si, Tel (0580) 609 1208

Very central, standard restaurant serving Hangzhou and Huaiyang dishes. Also caters impressively for vegetarian visitors, with an assortment of seafood in addition. Conveniently located on the central square outside Puji Si, this is a useful place to stop and have a bite to eat.

WENZHOU Haigang Meishi Fang*Wang Jiang Dong Lu, Tel (0577) 819 7008*

On a two-story barge moored opposite Jiangxin Island, this has even better views than the Jingwangjiao, and the same raw ingredients, methods, and minimalist pricing. Point to order, then sit on white plastic chairs (open-air on the upper deck) to eat. Take advantage of the location and indulge in fish and seafood.

WENZHOU Jinwangjiao Dajjudian*Wang Jiang Dong Lu, Tel (0577) 819 7008*

Point to your desired fish or seafood, mention or mime a cooking method, and select other dishes from those on display. Visitors to China sometimes seem scared to venture beyond the pseudo-Western restaurants in their hotels, but the fresh seafood on offer here, at less than half the price, is reason enough to be a little more adventurous.

HUNAN & HUBEICHANGSHA Boton (Bodun Xicanting)Wuyi Dadao 591, Tel (0731) 227 7518*

Relief for those who find Hunan food too crude and too hot, in comfortable modern surroundings with steaks and approximations of other Western favorites, as well as good if expensive coffee. Be entertained on the stylish couches by occasional live easy-listening music, with piano and saxophone. Nice.

CHANGSHA Huo Gong Dian*Wuyi Dadao 93, Tel (0731) 411 6803*

Everything Hunanese from pickles to seafood is brought round with rapidity and efficiency in trolleys. This serving method and a picture menu make ordering easy. Expect everything to be spicy hot, except the sweet rice dish ba zhou. Also serves Cantonese dishes such as dim sum and duck soup.

WUHAN Changchunguan Sucaiguan*Wuluo Lu 269, Wuchang, Tel (027) 8885 4229*

This pleasant restaurant copies the decor of the adjacent Daoist temple and produces all manner of vegetarian dishes. The xiaopinpan is a sampler platter with small portions of several of the most popular dishes. Also try the lazi tianluo, a vegetarian version of spicy river snails, a local favorite. Standard, traditional interior.

WUHAN Fang Fang Caiguan*Jixing Jie 168, Hankou, Tel (027) 8281 0115*

Excellent food, and for a small fee you can be serenaded by local musicians singing current pop hits or Chinese classics. This is the oldest and largest restaurant, conspicuous by its giant yellow tent, and yellow theme. Try the cayiu lianou (fish and lotus root) or ya bozi (duck's neck), both local favorites.

WUHAN Mr. Xie Restaurant & Pub (Xie Xiansheng Canting)Jiefang Dadao 910, Tel (027) 8581 3580

Mr. Xie worked for several years in the U.S. restaurant business and returned to open a restaurant in the heart of Wuhan. A partial menu is available in English, and the owner himself often greets guests. Always packed with locals and foreigners. Try the steamed Wuchang fish (qingzheng Wuchang yu), a local favorite.

WUHAN Sunny Sky (Yanyangtian)Jiefang Dadao Baofeng Lukou, Tel (027) 8377 9588; 8377 9688

Sunny Sky's muted, tasteful decoration helps balance the din of the main room. The food is excellent and the Chinese menu has a few pictures. Dishes to try include the suzha oujia – deep-fried, battered slices of lotus root sandwiched around a pork filling, and nongjia xiaochaorou, a spicy pork dish.

FUJIANFUZHOU Juchun Yuan DajjudianDong Jie 2, Tel (0591) 750 2328*

Fo tiao qiao, or "Buddha jumping over the wall," a stew of more than twenty mostly rather expensive ingredients, is Fuzhou's sole claim to culinary fame. The original restaurant has been reincarnated inside a modern hotel of the same name in the city center, but the Ming-era recipe survives. Focus on the specialty stew.

XIAMEN Guan Hai Canting*Lujiang Dao 54 (on top of the Lujiang Binguang), Tel (0592) 202 2922*

Quality may be higher at restaurants inside the city's four-star hotels but so are the prices, and none have the views of the Guan Hai ("view the sea") restaurant. There's an emphasis on fresh seafood but there's also standard dishes from around China and a nod to Xiamen's links to Hong Kong in all-day trolleyed dim sum.

Key to Price Guide see p582 Key to Symbols see back cover flap

XIAMEN Nan Putuo Si*Inside the Nan Putuo Si (temple), Tel*

Justly famous restaurant for not imitating meat dishes but bringing out the best in a wide variety of fresh vegetables, legumes, and tofu, in simple surroundings. Buy a set meal at the ticket office, hand the receipt to the waitress and all will be brought to you. Caters principally for the monks and Buddhist visitors to the temple.

GUANGDONG & HAINANGUANGZHOU Taotao JuXiao Bei Lu 202, Tel (020) 8139 6111*

Eating snake (and snake blood) is a Cantonese tradition and Taotao Ju offers snake in soup and other forms alongside a menu of more familiar Cantonese dishes. Slightly smaller and more dignified than other long-standing Guangzhou restaurants, it still has the authentic raucous bustle of the Cantonese way of life.

GUANGZHOU Taste Of India (Yinsi Weishiguan Jiulang)Tao Jin Lu 181, Tel (020) 8350 7688

Serves the best Indian food in Guangzhou, endorsed by expat Indians. Evening buffet starts at 6:30pm, and the menu features Arabic salad, Goan fish curry, and mutton vindaloo. Watch Indian cricket matches on TV or view the fish in the aquarium while dining in the comfort of Taste of India's plush furniture.

GUANGZHOU Guangzhou JiuJia*Wenchang Nan Lu 2, Tel (020) 8138 0388*

This long-established warren of dining rooms has meals to suit all budgets, from pocket-money-priced dim sum and set meals, to the most elaborate and expensive of Cantonese food order-to-impress dishes. Always busy, and with a limited English menu available. Enjoy navigating around this multi-story dining bedlam.

GUANGZHOU Mao Jia Fandian*Beijing Nan Lu Da Xia 6/F, Tel (020) 8326 4869*

Rambling interior with artificial trees, ponds, and bridges. Features the spicy Hunan foods that Chairman Mao – represented by a shrine-like interior, a bronze bust, and pictures of his home – favored. Hong shao rou (fatty pork), Marshall's duck, baked pigs' feet, and "stinky tofu" served by eager staff.

GUANGZHOU East River Seafood Restaurant (Dong Jiang Hai Xian Jiu Jia)Yan Jiang Zhong Lu 198, Tel (020) 8318 4901

Best of 18 franchises in Guangdong, this is where Cantonese go to eat seafood. There is a fresh fish market and a fresh juice stand on the first floor and a surprisingly limited menu for such a large restaurant – try the East River beancurd in hot pot, or hand-shredded salt chicken. Bars on each floor of this seafood palace for those less interested in eating.

GUANGZHOU Qiaomei Shijia*Shamian Nan Jie 52, Tel (020) 8121 7018*

Qiao Mei's staff say every dish is special, but seafood remains their strongest point, with shark fin soup with chicken and pork, fried sea cucumber, or double-boiled tortoise with Tian Shan snow lotus. Other delights include eels scrambled with pepper, double-boiled chicken with caterpillar fungus, and golden grilled baby pigeon.

HAINAN Haigang Dajiulou*Xinfeng Lu, opposite the Mingri Hotel, Sanya, Tel (0898) 3828 3333*

With a Hong Kong manager, this Cantonese option in Sanya city boasts good food in a comfortable, immaculate setting. There are no sea views but this is more than compensated for by an open kitchen and strong emphasis on the freshness of the seafood. Try the fishhead soup or Zhongshan pigeon.

HAINAN Heyou Seafood Restaurant (Haikou Heyou Haixianguan)Haixiu Dadao 28, Haikou, Tel (0898) 6676 0006

A highly regarded seafood restaurant which once catered for military officials – hence the red star adorning the ceiling of the main dining room. Choose live fish or crustaceans from one of the many tanks. The steamed lobster in garlic is a highlight. Try the Hele crab, one of Hainan's four signature dishes.

HAINAN Symposium (Ju Xian Ge)Softel Boao, Dong Yu Island, Boao, Hainan, Tel (0898) 6296 6888 ext. 63

Inventive Chinese dishes served in a stylish setting. As the name implies, Symposium is popular among political and business leaders attending the Boao Forum for Asia, not least for its view of the Jade Belt Beach. Hainan specialties abound, from simple seafood dishes to quick-boiled Wenchang chicken.

HAINAN The Spice Garden (Xiangliaoyuan Yazhou Canting)2/F, Sheraton Sanya Resort, Yalong Bay National Resort District, Sanya, Tel (0898) 8855 8855 ext. 8411

Southeast Asian seems an appropriate choice of cuisine in Hainan, which feels more like the southeast than the rest of China. Seafood laksa brims with fresh fish and prawns, and the tom yum soup tingles the lips. Coconut palms and umbrellas shade the expansive outside deck. The best-located restaurant in the Sheraton Sanya Resort with sea views.

HONG KONG & MACAU

HONG KONG Woodlands

Ground floor, Mirror Tower, 61 Mody Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2369 3718

Map 1 B4

The food far exceeds the expectations of either the distinctly unlovely decor or the menu prices at Woodlands – an entirely vegetarian and alcohol-free place although there's a wide choice of juices and lassi yoghurt drinks. The buffet (thal) is a good way to go, but you're unlikely to be disappointed whatever you choose.

HONG KONG Eating Plus

Shop 1009, Level 1, IFC Mall, 1 Harbourview Street, Central, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2868 0599

Map 2 C2

Great for a quick lunch pit-stop or a light dinner, Eating Plus specializes in freshly-prepared noodles and ramen-style fare and serves refreshing, just-squeezed juice cocktails. Prices are very reasonable given the location. Bright, airy interior with smart, contemporary canteen-style benches.

HONG KONG Gaylord

1/F Ashley Centre, 23–25 Ashley Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2376 1001

Map 1 B4

Chintzy curry houses abound in this area but the Gaylord is one of the classier ones. Flavors are full without being too fiery. The dishes taste freshly prepared and the spices are freshly toasted. The delights emerging from the Tandoor oven are well worth trying. Northern Indian dishes also available.

HONG KONG Miso

Shop 15, Basement, Jardine House, Central, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2845 8773

Map 2 C3

You can't get better Japanese food for less in Hong Kong than at Miso. The sushi and sashimi are superb, although there are plenty of other options such as grilled mixed skewers. Appropriately for its name, the miso soup is superb, and the desserts are luscious. Service is terrific too. A sure-fire winner.

HONG KONG Café Deco

Shop 1, Peak Galleria, 118 Peak Road, The Peak, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2849 5111

Map 2 A5

You might expect this tourist spot with a prime view to be lazy on the food front. The eclectic international menu might add to your suspicions but you'd be wrong. The food is reliable and almost all the Italian, Japanese, French, and Asian cuisines served here are consistently well executed. Spectacular night-time views.

HONG KONG Kung Tak Lam

7th floor, 1 Peking Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2367 7881

Map 1 B4

Nestled among the flash Tsim Sha Tsui boutiques, Kung Tak Lam sources its supplies from its own farms. Fresh, inventive yet quintessentially Chinese flavors are the essence of this excellent vegetarian restaurant. Don't be put off by the dowdy but unpretentious interior; do try the delicious pumpkin stew.

HONG KONG Le Tire Bouchon

45 Graham Street, Central, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2523 5459

Map 2 B3

A slice of rustic France carefully shoehorned into the bustle of a Hong Kong tenement. Those familiar with French cuisine will not be disappointed with the versions of classic French fish soup or chateaubriand (beef fillet steak) on offer here, and there's a small but well chosen list of wines to accompany them.

HONG KONG Luk Yu Tea House

Ground floor, Luk Tea Building, 24–26 Stanley Street, Central, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2523 1970

Map 2 B3

Smart surroundings and Cantonese cuisine about as authentic as it gets are the main attractions, and the old world charm of the building doesn't hurt either. Bird's nest and abalone are options for the affluent, the dim sum are excellent value, as are many of the consistently good staples (prawn fu yung and roast pigeon).

HONG KONG Yung Kee

32–40 Wellington Street, Central, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2522 1624

Map 2 B3

Up there with Luk Yu Tea House, this centrally located, authentic Cantonese restaurant, is a larger, more impersonal, and often more crowded place, yet the cuisine is invariably fresh and the standards unwaveringly high (no frozen produce is used). The chefs often win local culinary awards.

HONG KONG Gaddis

The Peninsula, Salisbury Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2315 3171

Map 1 B4

If you must have the best, don your jacket (compulsory for men) and head here for an intense and creative culinary adventure in a lavish chandelier-festooned dining room. Rich, classic French food prepared with the finest ingredients and a sensational wine list. Prices, needless to say, are stratospheric.

HONG KONG Shang Palace

Kowloon Shangri-La, 64 Mody Road, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2733 8754

Map 1 C4

This is fine dining Chinese style. The flavors are subtle, and the dishes, culled from a range of regions and Chinese cuisines, are given great, effective twists, such as the tender, deep-fried shrimp rolls or the flavorful roast pig's neck with honey. Admire the elaborate, opulent red Chinese decor.

HONG KONG Tokio Joe16 Lan Kwai Fong, Hong Kong Island, Tel (852) 2525 1889Map 2 B3

The extremely fresh sushi served in such a central location is enough to recommend this place, but as a bonus there are some great specialties such as the soft shell crab hand roll, the house saké, and the kelp-roasted sea bass. Located amidst the bustle of the Lan Kwai Fong, a compact, comfortable venue.

HONG KONG WasabisabiShop 1301, 13th floor Food Forum, Times Sq, 1 Matheson St, Causeway Bay, HKI, Tel (852) 2506 0009 Map 3 F4

Smart and minimalist, in keeping with many Japanese restaurants, this place serves great sushi and some toothsome specials (try the excellent black cod or the intense sea urchin custard). Service is generally good and it has a pleasant, contemporary feel. Great destination if staying in the Times Square area.

HONG KONG Yü2nd floor, InterContinental, 18 Salisbury Rd, Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, Tel (852) 2721 1211Map 1 C5

The fish is served the way you like – French, Japanese and Italian are just some of the styles and options. Seafood is the overarching theme here, as the lavish, colorful fish tanks imply. There's a great wine list and an even better accompanying view of the harbor and the Island skyline through the impressive windows.

MACAU Long Kei7B Largo de Senado, Tel (853) 573 970

Don't be put off by the no-frills fluorescent lights, cheap interior, and generally less than elegant decor. As well as its fairly central location, the hugely popular Long Kei offers familiar, good-value Chinese cuisine and staple dishes. The 350-dish menu is encyclopedic. A dim sum menu is also available.

MACAU A Lorcha289A Rua do Almirante Sergio, Tel (853) 313 193

The excellent value, hearty portions, and classic Macanese and Portuguese fare seldom disappoint. Specialties include the much vaunted salt cod, huge grilled prawns, and the homely, rich feijoada (pork knuckle and cabbage stew). The tiled interior is cosy and has a distinct colonial Portuguese feel to it.

MACAU Os GatosFortaleza de S. Tiago da Barra, Avenida da Republica, Macau, Tel (853) 378 111

The atmospheric fort location is the reason to come here but the food isn't bad either. An eclectic menu is usually a bad sign but not at Os Gatos which turns out good Portuguese and Macanese staples such as caldo verde (kale soup) and good salt cod dishes along with familiar Spanish and Italian favorites such as paella and pasta.

MACAU Robuchon a Galera2-4 Avenue de Lisboa, Tel (853) 377 666

Said to have the best wine cellar in Asia, this Michelin-starred restaurant belonging to celebrated French chef Joel Robuchon is easily the best and priciest (still cheaper than any Hong Kong equivalent) place in town for Western food. The cuisine is sublime Portuguese and modern European with, needless to say, a French bias.

SICHUAN & CHONGQINGCHENGDU Huang Cheng Lao MaEr Huan Lu Nan Duan 3, 20, Tel (028) 8513 9999

A five-story building with a tea lounge in an expansive atrium area, as well as a museum, babysitting facilities, and stage for entertainment. One room has a hot pot buffet on rotating conveyor. Reservations are necessary on weekend nights. Probably the best place for Sichuan hot pot, which is not as fiery as Chongqing hot pot.

CHENGDU Shunxing Ancient Tea House – Chengdu Snack CityShawan Lu 258, Chengdu International Exhibition and Convention Centre Mall area, 3rd floor, Tel (028) 8769 3202

Covering a huge area in total, this restaurant/teahouse offers a pleasant and authentic atmosphere to enjoy Sichuan's well-known snack specialties, easily substantial enough for a whole meal. Provides nightly performances of Sichuan opera including the whole show of amazing face changing, acrobatics, and tea.

CHENGDU Sichuan Mantingfang Langting Guibin HuisuoErhuan Lu 15, Nan San Duan, Tel (028) 8519 3111

The well-appointed interior and artful division of space with dividers and columns cleverly avoid the big-room syndrome so often a part of most restaurants. This classic Chinese restaurant ensures excellent but subdued service, and tasty food. This will appeal to those looking for some traditional yet unusual fare.

CHENGDU China Grand Plaza (Zhongguo Huisuo)Hangkong Lu, Zhonggou Jiucheng, Tel (028) 8515 9896

A complex of different high-end restaurants featuring both Sichuan cuisine and Western food, with expansive and luxurious interiors. Also in the grounds are a few very expensive hotel rooms with spa facilities. Service is top notch with hostesses patiently prepared to run through all the different restaurant options.

CHENGDU Ginko restaurant (Yinxing Chuancai Jiulou)

Lin Jiang Zhong Lu 12, Tel (028) 8555 5588

A three-story affair with a lounge on the first floor, main dining room on the second and private rooms on the third. Try the specialty Sichuan roast duck (zhang cha ya), spicy chicken (ma la tu ji), and steamed fish (qing zhen gui yu). The main dining room has large picture windows facing the river, lined with lights at night.

CHENGDU Hailingge Grand Restaurant (Hailingge Dajiudian)

Shang Nan Da Jie 4, Tianfu Guangchuang, Floors 2 & 3, Tel (028) 8612 3111

Known to serve the best regional Chinese in Chengdu, this has an impressive and grand feel. Service is impeccable and food is artistically arranged for a pleasant experience. Try the "Happy Family" (hai ling ge quan jia fu) specialty dish, combining various meats and seafood. Interior is primarily white walls and brightly-lit rooms.

CHONGQING Chongqing Dezhuang Huoguo, Qi Xing Gang Branch

Dong Shan Lu 148, Tel (023) 6352 1934

Take advantage of its reputation as one of the most famous Chongqing hot pot restaurants, and part of a nationwide chain. The lively atmosphere, "four-alarm" spicy hot ingredients, and attentive service make for a good place to enjoy this searing local specialty. An ideal place to stop if visiting the Liberation Monument.

CHONGQING Da Du Hui Wai Po Qiao

Da Du Hui, 7th Floor, Tel (023) 6383 5988

Located on the 7th floor of the Da Du Hui building and serving a variety of Chongqing specialties and snacks. If the location's ambience is lacking, the artful presentation of the dishes makes up for it. Take advantage of delicious regional meat dishes using smoked pork (lao shao zhi zheng la rou) or duck.

CHONGQING Tao Ran Ju Dajiulou

Zhou Rong Plaza, Floors 6 & 7, Tel (023) 6379 2466

Spread over two floors, this restaurant makes a convenient stop-off point en route to the Liberation Monument. Part of a nationwide chain, the menu features classic Sichuan cuisine including a number of unusual dishes like fried snail or taro root and chicken stew. Traditionally furnished and attentive staff.

CHONGQING Xiaotian'e Ba Yu Shi Fu

Ming Zu Lu 22, Xin Chongqing Guangchang, 6th Floor, Tel (023) 6378 8811

Nationwide chain restaurant is one of Chongqing's most popular hot pot restaurants. Those unable to take their spices should order the half white/half red hot pots, ask the staff to remove most of the chili peppers, and put only meats in the red side. The interior is decorated in a typical Chinese restaurant-style.

LE SHAN Honglilai Jiulou

Jiading Zhong Lu 268, Tel (0833) 213 3252

Reservations a day in advance are highly recommended. Has the reputation of having the area's most beautiful women working at the restaurant. Big dining room is a bit too tightly packed with tables and chairs. Enjoy traditional vegetarian Sichuanese dishes, notably those using tofu, and other snack-style classics.

YUNNANDALI Jim's Peace Café (Jimu Heping Kezhan)

Boai Lu 63, Tel (0872) 267 1822

Completely remodelled in 2002, this is one of the original café-guesthouses to cater specifically for foreign visitors. From the menu to the decorations, it's like dining in Lhasa itself, with better Tibetan dishes than Western ones. Reservations are necessary for the specialty – a 20-dish Tibetan banquet (groups of six or more only).

DALI Marley's Café (Mali Kafei Guan)

Boai Lu 105, Tel (0872) 267 6651

Cleaner and more upscale than Dali's typical backpacker haunts, this friendly Dali institution has a menu ranging from Chinese and Bai minority dishes to simple Western favorites. Good for breakfast to full-scale Bai banquets with pleasant balcony seating from which to watch the world go by.

KUNMING The Brother Jiang (Qiao Xiang Yuan)

Renmin Dong Lu 84, Tel (0871) 339 5267

This chain features the most-famous dish of Kunming and four set menus make it simple to order the minimum (ten) or maximum (sixty) number of ingredients required. Serving bowls are big. "Crossing-the-bridge" noodles comprise fiery hot (temperature-wise) chicken or duck soup served with an array of raw accompaniments.

KUNMING Xianyun Jie Meishi Cheng

Dingying Jie Bei Men A11-A18, Tel (0871) 317 9995

The largest of the dozens of small snack houses on Ding Ying Jie and Nan Qiang Jie, this is very popular with travelers and locals alike, who can sample a number of different dishes without breaking the bank. No menu, just point and smile, and don't be surprised by having four waitresses assisting.

KUNMING Shiping Huiguan

Cui Hu Nan Lu Zhong He Xiang 24, Tel (0871) 362 7222

Worth a visit, even if not eating there, just to see an original Chinese two-story courtyard home. Best to try this restaurant in a group with a Chinese-speaking guest as there's no English menu, no pictures, and no English spoken. The earthenware-stewed chicken is a favorite among staff and should not be missed.

KUNMING Yu Quan Zhai

Pingzheng Jie 88, Tel (0871) 511 1672

Located in a hotel across from a Buddhist temple, don't be fooled by the meaty English words on the menu like "vegetarian duck"; all the dishes at this popular restaurant are completely vegetarian, artfully imitating flesh using vegetable protein. The serving sizes can be huge, be careful not to order too much.

KUNMING New Yun Yuan Restaurant (Xin Yun Yuan Jiulou)

Qingnian Lu 452, Tel (0871) 315 9668

Considered by locals as one of the best in Kunming for its vast range of both Yunnan and other regional Chinese favorites. The 184-item menu (in English) runs from stewed dog to fried pigeon and beyond, and is noted for its barbecued fish specialty. The second floor houses private dining rooms.

LIJIANG Sakura Café (Yinghua Wu)

Xinhua Jie, Cuiwen Duan 123, Tel (0888) 518 7619

This very friendly, low-key café has earned the reputation of being one of the best in the old city. Its 354-item bilingual menu offers plenty of choice and includes German, French, and local wines. The cuisine itself ranges from Asian and Western-style to Middle Eastern (Israeli) fare. Closer to home, try the delicious stuffed flatbread.

LIJIANG Ancient Town Restaurant (Gucheng Jiulou)

Dong Dajie Kou, Gucheng 1, Tel (0888) 518 1818

This is one of the few old city restaurants frequented by local people. The menu selection is rather small, mostly consisting of local Naxi dishes, but the serving sizes are large. Recommended favorites include stewed whole chicken, and dried yak. An English menu and over-eager staff make ordering easy.

GUIZHOU & GUANGXIGUIYANG Siheyuan

Qianling Xi Lu 79, Tel (0851) 682 5419

This is basic Guizhou food at rock bottom prices, in a clumsily adapted courtyard house; loud and friendly, rough and ready. Industrially spicy dishes such as shredded beef with shredded peppers, and milder dishes like potato pancakes rolled and stuffed with bean paste, then dusted with coconut.

GUIYANG Guizhou Long

Jiandao Jie 23, Tel (0851) 586 3333

One of Guiyang's smartest restaurants, with four stories of elegant private dining rooms complete with towel warmer and TV (optional). Serves a wide range of well-executed Guangdong, Sichuan, and Shanghai favorites. Located amongst Guiyang's other smart restaurants with views across a soupy river to a small, battered temple.

YANGSHUO Le Vôtre (Le De)

Xi Jie 79, Tel (0773) 882 8040

People come to Yangshuo to escape China, but amongst a maelstrom of mediocre pizza, Vincent Christophe has opened a credible, if slightly unpredictable French restaurant in a traditional Chinese former guild hall. Everything from soupe à l'oignon to crêpes Suzettes in a charming if unlikely setting.

LIAONING, JILIN, & HEILONGJIANGCHANGCHUN Xiangyang Tun

Dong Chaoyang Lu 3, Tel (0431) 894 4325

The overwhelming local favorite, and for good reason – the place turns out well-executed fare at dirt cheap prices. Dishes are simple but flavorful, a few even frightening, but most simply delicious. Pork ribs (dapaigu) are popular. Service is warm and patient with foreigners.

DALIAN Baixing Cun

Changjiang Lu 128, Tel (0411) 258 0128

Fancied rural food in a polished facsimile of village dining, spread over a vast two-story space. Ordering is made tremendously simple, with dishes in raw form set on a table in the back – just point to what you want to order. Portions are massive and the clay-pot soups are recommended. Crowds descend for dinner.

DALIAN Tian Tian Yugang*Renmin Lu 10, Tel (0411) 280 1118*

Simply the finest place to sample the city's famous seafood. Prices are high, but there's a visually delightful selection of ocean life on offer, presented live in a room full of aquariums. Servers are helpful with suggestions on how to have selections prepared to best delight your tastebuds. Quality seafood and knowledgeable staff.

DANDONG Andong Ge Jiudian*Two blocks west of Yalujiang Qiao, Tel (0415) 314 5801*

Dishes here are shockingly creative considering the city's remoteness. Sichuan is the main influence, with hints of Macau and Cantonese. Located on the Yalu River, the dining room is pleasantly bright and clean, with good views of North Korea from the window tables, although views are not necessarily picturesque.

HARBIN Dongfang Jiaozi Wang*Zhongyang Dajie 39, Tel (0451) 465 3920*

Quite simply the best dumpling restaurant in the region, if not the country. The jiaozi (dumplings) here are exceedingly simple, but perfectly delicious, and criminally cheap. This is the original branch of a rapidly expanding chain, often imitated but as yet unmatched. Glimpse the show through glass-fronted kitchens.

HARBIN Portman (Boteman Xicanting)Xiqi Daojie 53, Tel (0451) 8468 6888

Not exactly authentic Russian food, but close enough. With a distinctly European feel, the place is consistently packed, as much for the beer (which is brewed on site) and live entertainment as the food. But the food is worth a visit – hearty and comforting, especially if you're battling the vicious winter.

JILIN Liyade Shifu*Jiyuan Shangchang on Jiefang Zhonglu, Tel (0432) 201 7999*

Dining options in the city are notoriously slim, but the well prepared Hui Muslim food here is worth a venture out of the hotel. Unlike Uighur Muslim cuisine, the Hui version is closer to other Chinese styles, heavy on garlic and chili. Expect plenty of meat-based dishes and don't miss the shousi yangrou (hand-torn mutton).

SHENYANG Laobian Jiaozi House (Laobian Jiaozi Guan)Zhongjie 206, Tel (024) 2484 3965

Supposedly founded 170 years ago in a different building long since redeveloped, this is the most famous dumpling restaurant south of Harbin. Provides some respite from the frenzy of the shopping district. The dumplings are done in the simple northeastern style, with dozens of filling options to choose from.

INNER MONGOLIA & NINGXIAHOHHOT Jinhulu Shaokao ChengDongying Nan Jie, Tel (0471) 490 8074*

Opened only a few years ago, a simple, matter-of-fact kind of place. The main draw of the restaurant is the popular Mongolian barbecue; servers help grill assorted meats on a hotplate in the middle of the table, somehow producing little or no smoke – a method originally used by Mongolian horsemen, using shields for grilling.

HOHHOT Little Fat Sheep Hotpot (Xiaofei yang Huoguo)Wulanchabu Dong Lu Zhaojun Huayuan Shizi Lukou, Tel (0471) 490 1998

With hundreds of branches around the country, Xiaofei yang is the acknowledged king of Mongolian hot pot. The restaurant places great emphasis on the quality of its cuisine, and diners are encouraged not to use dipping sauce, which dampens the natural flavor of the lamb. Individual hot pots are also available.

HOHHOT Xin'anju*Xin Cheng Bei Jie, Tel (0471) 660 8888*

Opened in 1999, the very helpful English menus are well organized into Shandong, Shaanxi, Sichuan, as well as Mongolian sections. Specialties, including leg of lamb, can be washed down with agreeable house wines. Nicely decorated dining room with carved wooden walls and red Chinese knots.

GANSU & QINGHAIDUNHUANG John's Information Café (Yuehan Canting)Ming Shan Lu 22, Tel (0937) 882 7000*

Many small eateries with English menus huddle around a mediocre budget hotel, the Feitian Binguan. Only this open-air café offers both decent coffee and reliable travel advice. "Home-style" Chinese food is also on offer. Conveniently located just north of the coach station, this makes for a pleasant stop-off point.

JIAYUGUAN Lin Yuan Jiudian

Xinhua Nan Lu 34, Tel (0937) 628 6918

Even by Chinese standards, hotel restaurants in Jiayuguan are diabolical. Not to worry – the light, immaculately presented Cantonese and Huaiyang cuisine at this four-story restaurant means that it is usually full-to-bursting with locals – always a promising sign, so take heart. No English menu.

LANZHOU Mingde Gong

Jiuquan Lu 191, Tel (0931) 466 8588

Opened in 2000, this flagship restaurant for Gansu cuisine (long cai), a fusion between home-style Chinese fare and lamb-based dishes from the northwest, ironically draws most of its chefs from Guangzhou. It has a vast first floor dining hall, and opulent private rooms; service is attentive throughout.

TIANSHUI Niu Dawan

Er Ma Lu

Gansu's most famous contribution to national cuisine is beef noodles (niu rou mian), and there are few restaurants that offer a more authentic rendition than this bustling establishment (the name is a pun on "beef tycoon.") Earn respect by asking to add more beef (jia yi fen rou). Located next to the Beidao Qu coach station.

XINING Ma Linhan Yi Kao

Shuijing Xiang 276, Tel (0971) 822 1835

You could visit any food stall or restaurant in this lively pedestrian street and sate your hunger for under ¥20. This family-run outfit offers boisterous service and mouthwatering skewered delicacies, from simple lamb kabobs to succulent grilled mushrooms – create your own "barbecue" in true point-and-choose style.

XINJIANGKUQA Umerjan Resturani (Wumai'erhong Meishi Cheng)

Tuanjie Lu, Tel (0997) 712 4634

Lamb kabobs are the most popular snack-on-the-run in Xinjiang; this restaurant raises them to an art form. Huge chunks of tender meat, generously spiced and quickly fired over glowing wood embers are the perfect accompaniment to freshly baked naan. Standard Chinese dishes and assortment of Western dishes available.

TURPAN Xin Shiji

Xinzhai Dingzi Lukou, Tel (0995) 855 1199

Locals and tourists flock to enjoy generous servings of muttonly Uighur cuisine at this open-air restaurant, and the Uighur-style banquet adds to the convivial atmosphere. Traditionally-costumed staff are friendly to the point of cheekiness and there is a nightly song and dance performance with alcohol-assisted audience participation.

URUMQI Vine Coffeehouse & English Corner (Demian Kafeiwu)

Minzhu Lu 65, Tel (0991) 230 4831

Opened shortly after 2000 and one of the most unlikely surprises you'll encounter in Xinjiang, this West Indian café was opened by a former student of Xinjiang Arts College. Near the Xinjiang Hotel, you'll find cookies, real coffee, pan-fried steaks, vegetarian dishes, and all manner of other luxuries you will doubtless be missing.

TIBETLHASA Mayke Ame (Maji A'mi)

Bajiao Jie Dongnan Jiao, Tel (0891) 632 4455

Head straight for the rooftop dining area, which commands an unbeatable view of Tibet's liveliest, holiest kora (pilgrim circuit). Service and cuisine reach levels of sophistication other eateries in Lhasa attempt but fail to match. Perhaps the first Tibetan chain restaurant – it now boasts a popular, more expensive Beijing outlet.

LHASA Dunya Restaurant and Bar

Beijing Dong Lu 100, Tel (0891) 633 3374

Run by Dutch and American expats, Dunya is the best restaurant in Tibet. With fusion dishes such as the yak sizzler or "organic" yak burger, pizza, and chicken cordon bleu, small wonder you need to make reservations for dinner during summer. Happy hour in the bar on Friday nights has become a Lhasa institution.

SHIGATSE Tashi's Restaurant (Zhashi Canting)

Jijilangka Lu, Tel (0892) 883 5969

Run by the same family that owns the Mandala in Lhasa, this second floor restaurant is tricky to locate. Hearty Nepali curries and dhal (lentil stew), excellent vegetarian fare, and the ubiquitous yak sizzler are reason enough to seek it out. For those feeling slightly less adventurous, Western dishes are also available.

SHOPS & MARKETS

CHINA'S RICH artistic heritage is reflected in its stunning range of characteristic works of art – from stylized landscape paintings and calligraphy to delicate ceramic bowls and exquisitely carved bamboo. With the recent burgeoning of tourism and the official encouragement of enterprise, Chinese cities are alive with shops and markets selling an often bewildering array of trinkets and souvenirs. Even though the market is flooded with cheap imitations, many objects are still made by age-old techniques, and authentic items are not hard to find. Perhaps some of the most unique souvenirs are those produced by China's ethnic minorities, particularly their accomplished embroidery. The major cities have seen the emergence of department stores, which provide certificates of authenticity for items such as jewelry and semi-precious stones (although still no guarantee). Many large hotels also have souvenir shops, although these tend to stock over-priced, up-market items, such as silk and jade.

Statue of Buddhist deity

OPENING HOURS

SHOPS IN CHINA are usually open from 8:30am until fairly late in the evening – around 8pm – while winter timings are generally 9am to 7pm. The opening and closing times of shops, however, may vary from place to place. For instance, in some areas they open as early as 8am, and stay open until well after 8pm. Some of the large shopping centers in Beijing, Shanghai, and Hong Kong don't close before 9pm. Local food shops and markets selling fresh produce remain open for business from early in the morning until late at night. Visitors should note that some shops remain closed on public holidays, the most important being the Chinese New Year (Spring Festival), National Day (October 1), and New Year's Day (January 1).

An array of calligraphy brushes for sale in a Beijing market

HOW TO PAY

CHINESE CURRENCY is the yuan, also known as renminbi, or people's money (shortened to RMB). One yuan is divided into 10 jiao or mao, each of which is divided even farther into 10 fen. Credit cards are only accepted in the larger tourist hotels and in state-run shops. You are unlikely to be able to pay by debit card anywhere. A few ATMs in the larger cities accept foreign credit and debit cards – look around head branches of the major international banks and the Bank of China. It is recommended to carry traveler's checks, as well as a supply of currency such as US dollars, Euros or pounds sterling as they are the easiest to convert. The Bank of China has exchange desks for foreign currency and traveler's checks, and these are also found at airports, in larger hotels, and in certain stores. Keep your exchange receipts as you will need them to convert your spare renminbi into another currency before leaving the country (see pp620–21).

BARGAINING

BARGAINING is a common practice in China, especially in street markets, night bazaars, and souvenir stands. It is even worth trying in the smarter, more expensive hotels, modern shops, department stores, and government emporia and Friendship Stores as prices may still be reduced. Stallholders are notorious for charging visitors thrice the "real" price, and sometimes their starting price may be up to ten times the cost. Make a comparison of prices and be conscious of what others are paying, particularly local Chinese.

Nanjing Road's dazzling neon billboards, Shanghai

An up-market department store in Zhaoqing, Guangdong

DEPARTMENT STORES & BOUTIQUES

THE CONSUMER revolution in China has led to the mushrooming of up-market department stores, shopping plazas, and fashion boutiques in most cities, especially Beijing and Shanghai. In Beijing, the towering presence of these stores has resulted in there being fewer street bazaars and night markets, which are popular across China for their range of inexpensive goods. As in most developed countries, there is heavy emphasis on high-end items such as designer fashion, perfumes, jewelry, and watches, while supermarkets, such as the French chain Carrefour, offer a range of foods, souvenirs, and household goods at reasonable prices. Although some are independent, most department stores are state-run.

GOVERNMENT SHOPS

SPECIAL SHOPS for visitors, referred to as Friendship Stores, are a legacy from the days of Chairman Mao. These shops originally sold luxuries and quality Chinese crafts to diplomats and intrepid tourists, but not to the Chinese. These days only a few outlets remain, selling local products such as tea, silk, jade, calligraphy, and Miao embroidery. Facing fierce competition from the myriad of private shops, the stores struggle to compete on price or quality. English literature and magazines are sometimes available in these stores.

MARKETS

THE BEST WAY to experience China's diversity and its many ethnic cultures is to visit the bustling local markets, especially in rural areas. Held on specific days of the week, these are locally known as ganji, which means "going to market," or gangai, meaning "going to the street."

Traditionally, people from the surrounding countryside came into town on market days to buy or sell their farm produce. Nowadays however, rural markets are expanding their scope, and it is not uncommon to see stalls selling a range of household items from toothbrushes to woks and cooking pots. While some markets still follow the lunar calendar, which is confusing for most visitors, many have shifted to a more regular schedule. Such markets are busiest between mid-morning and mid-afternoon. The variety of food, souvenirs, and domestic items on sale is astounding, but be prepared to bargain hard.

Selling carpets at a market in Linxia, Gansu

ANTIQUES

UNLESS YOU'RE an expert, buying antiques in China is a rather risky proposition. Many Chinese cities have flourishing antiques markets, but most of the items on sale will undoubtedly be fake. However, as long as you don't mistake them for the real thing, it is fun to browse and bargain for cheap replicas. The state run antique shops, like the Friendship Stores, are in decline – and never had any bargains anyway. Shops in the foyers of art galleries and museums also sell works of art such as scroll paintings, calligraphy, and attractive silk scarves. In China, objects dating to 1795 or earlier may not be legally exported, so make sure any antiques (of a later date) that you purchase carry a red wax seal permitting export. Always keep the receipts as they may be required at Customs.

A souvenir shop in Qingcheng Shan park near Chengdu

What to Buy in China

Opera mask

MARKET STALLS AND SMALL SHOPS sell interesting souvenirs in tourist centers throughout China. Traditionally styled items can be found just about everywhere, while many other crafts are regional. You can find beautifully intricate embroidery in the southwest, prayer wheels and flags in Tibet, carpets in Xinjiang, and ginseng in the northeast. When shopping in markets it is essential to bargain. Friendship stores and gift shops at factories usually have fixed, but inflated, prices.

CALLIGRAPHY

A skill as revered as painting, calligraphy is an ancient Chinese art that is a fluid form of self-expression. Master calligraphers practice their art assiduously, and one of their works could be very expensive. Less costly examples of calligraphy are widely available.

Scrolls painted with elegantly striking script make excellent souvenirs. Skilled calligraphers will paint chosen sayings in different styles or you can purchase pre-painted works.

Writing
brushes should have a defined tip and firm fur bristles. Ink sticks made of soot are ground down and mixed with water on an ink stone.

A collection of Mao statuettes in many different poses

Marble chops are traditionally used to imprint a calligrapher's seal on to a work. At many craft markets vendors create personalized chops by carving a character version of a person's name on the base.

Painted on paper or silk with simple brushstrokes, painting is one of the most important traditional arts. Many paintings now have contemporary touches.

CERAMICS

Chinese ceramics are known the world over. They have been mass produced for hundreds of years, with fired pots being passed through a line of artisans, each adding a layer to the glaze. Porcelain, a fine, translucent ceramic, was invented during the Sui dynasty, and high quality pieces are still produced.

Jingdezhen in Jiangxi has been one of the main producers of porcelain since the 10th century (see pp254-5). It still produces fine pieces, although some of the cheaper wares may be decorated by stencil.

Yixingware, or purple sand pottery from Ding Shan in Anhui (see p218), is usually a dark reddish brown, but can also be green, buff, or gray.

SILK

Woven from the strands that make up a silk worm's cocoon, silk is also a Chinese invention (see pp208-9). Clothes made of silk, such as ladies' cheongsams, are widely available, but be aware that silk sold in markets is likely to be rayon. Beautiful embroidery on silk is also available.

Silk embroidered coasters

Silk bags

Silk-covered cushions

OTHER TRADITIONAL HANDICRAFTS

Occasionally created by skilled craftsmen but often mass produced, Chinese handicrafts are almost always highly intricate and of vibrant color. The variety of goods on offer is staggering, from delicate miniature glass bottles to the bold graphics of communist memorabilia.

Glass snuff bottles were popularized during the Qing dynasty, when snuff usage was common. Using a hooked brush, artisans paint miniature scenes inside.

Carved wooden fan

Lacquerware jewelry box

Decorative tassel

The best paper cuts are made in a few minutes by a master craftsman with a pair of scissors. Most paper cuts are mass produced, with many simultaneously cut to a pattern.

Cloisonné vases, boxes, and jars have been copper-enamelled: copper is faced with pieces of colored enamel and fired, creating a shiny finish.

Baoding balls are weighted and sometimes contain a chime. The two balls are maneuvered in one hand, strengthening grip and massaging the channels through which qi runs (see p232).

Mao memorabilia is based on designs that existed during Mao's rule. Some is authentic, but most communist souvenirs are produced for the tourist market.

Mao badges

Mao lighter

Tea, often sold in colorful tin caddies, is available everywhere. Tie guanyin and other oolong teas of Fujian are very fine. Pu'er is a specialty of the southwest.

Jade, a semi-precious stone, is associated with immortality. These pendants are green, but the lustrous gem can also be gray or brown.

ENTERTAINMENT

THE CHINESE work hard, but they also take their leisure seriously, and have a range of traditional and modern entertainment. The vast tradition of performing arts reflects China's rich cultural heritage, and includes Chinese opera, theater, shadow puppetry, and the circus. Many types of dance and music derive from ethnic cultures, adding to the diversity of entertainment. As China has opened to the West, young people in particular have been able to enjoy contemporary films, and classical

Traditional dancer posing and rock concerts. Karaoke is hugely popular, and most towns and cities have numerous bars, where visitors can sing along to popular Chinese and Western songs, accompanied by the latest videos. The popularity and increasing availability of the internet has opened up new avenues for on-line entertainment, and China's youth now spend many hours at internet cafés. Casino gambling is only permitted in the specially administered region of Macau, and horse racing is popular in Hong Kong (see p332).

Passing the time with a game of xiangqi on the sidewalks of Xi'an

GAMES

PLAYING GAMES in public parks is a timeworn Chinese custom, and though visitors may feel too inhibited to challenge locals to a game, they are great fun to watch. Some Chinese games date back thousands of years. The most well-known game is mahjong, which uses plastic tiles, originally made of bamboo or ivory. The rules are similar to rummy, with players trying to create identical, or consecutively numbered, sets. More advanced versions of the game have special tiles representing the four winds, four dragons, seasons, and flowers. When a game is in full swing, the quick movements of the participants make the tiles click and clatter – a popular translation of mahjong is “chattering sparrows.”

Chinese checkers (xiangqi) is another popular game. Here, there are two opposing sets of round counters. The board is divided into squares by nine vertical and ten horizontal lines. The board game Go (weiqi) dates back more than 4,000 years. Also known as encirclement chess, it involves two opposing sides, each with a set of circular stones, struggling for territory.

SPECTATOR SPORTS

THE MOST POPULAR sports at schools and colleges are basketball, badminton, and table tennis (ping pong), and the Chinese excel internationally in the latter two. Soccer is also played and followed with enthusiasm. The top European clubs have a strong fan-base in China, and Chinese soccer players are now being recruited by them. Fitness centers and gyms are becoming increasingly popular in cities. Traditional martial arts such as tai ji quan are popular amongst the older generation, and people practice early in the morning in parks, squares, and gardens.

TRADITIONAL FORMS OF THEATER

BEIJING OPERA (jingju) is a world famous traditional art form unique to China (see pp74-5). It is highly stylized, and characters wear elaborate costumes with special make-up and masks. Performances usually take place on a simple stage with few props.

The Chinese circus has a worldwide reputation for its highly-trained gymnasts who perform breathtaking routines that showcase their unnerving flexibility. Displays of balance often involve household props, such as brooms, plates, and chairs, with one of the most popular tricks being performed by 20 or so acrobats piled precariously on a bicycle. These routines are often combined with acts involving caged and tame animals, but the current trend is toward a purer display of acrobatics.

Actors in a Beijing opera, performing in opulent costumes

Some forms of traditional dance still exist, especially among China's ethnic groups. Some relate to shamanistic or other religious rituals, and often involve the wearing of special masks.

SHADOW PLAYS & PUPPET THEATER

SHADOW plays (piyingxi) are popular, and usually involve the use of leather puppets with jointed limbs. These are manipulated close to a white sheet and lit from behind, throwing their shadows on to the sheet. The performance is accompanied by singing and music. Plays with wooden puppets (mu'ouxi) involve elaborate and colorfully dressed marionettes, glove puppets, or puppets on the end of rods.

TRADITIONAL MUSIC

CHINESE MUSIC can be traced back as far as the Shang era. Ancient sets of 65 bells from the 5th century BC have been unearthed. During the Tang dynasty, the traditional musical forms began to take root and music was also an important part of Confucian education.

Traditional instruments include strings, winds, and percussion. String instruments played with the fingers, plectrum, or bow are the Chinese violin, horizontal harp, and many-stringed zithers, such as the zheng. The lute-like pipa is one of the most important stringed instruments. The most common bamboo flutes are the vertical (xiao) and horizontal (di). The bulusu made from a gourd and bamboo is popularly used in folk music. The sheng, one of the oldest Chinese instruments, has up to 17 bamboo pipes and a vibrating reed.

Crowds enjoying the many bars along Lan Kwai Fong, Hong Kong

Another ancient instrument is the earthenware xun. Dating back 8,000 years, and sometimes made of bone or ivory, it has a mouthpiece and a series of holes for varying the tones. Percussion instruments include gongs, chimes, drums, woodblocks, and xylophones.

A musician strums the lute-like pipa

KITE FLYING

KITE FLYING is a major hobby in China, especially on public holidays when parks, gardens, and even city squares are crowded with displays of colorful and fantastically-shaped kites, soaring to considerable heights. Birds and dragons are the most common kite designs.

BARs, DISCOS & KARAOKE

IN RECENT YEARS, bars, discos, and karaoke lounges have sprung up all over China, especially in big cities such as Beijing and Shanghai. Some bars specialize in live bands, and these are very popular with expats, foreign visitors, and urban Chinese – be warned that drinks are expensive. Coffee bars are also increasingly popular with young people, although the older generation remain faithful to their green tea and traditional teahouses.

ROCK & POP MUSIC

CHINA'S ROCK scene is bursting with energy. Young and rebellious, it only really gained a foothold during the 1980s, and played a central role at the Tian'an Men Square protests, during which many local bands played. Still not accepted by state-run radio stations, most bands rely on the internet and word of mouth to fill their small capacity shows.

Canto-pop, Hong Kong's popular music tradition, has sugary lyrics of love and loss, sung in Cantonese. Many Canto-pop singers become hugely popular pin-ups.

CINEMA

CHINA HAS traditionally produced many good films, based mainly on folk tales, romantic love stories, or strong patriotic themes. More recently, Chinese cinema has opened up to embrace international tastes, and movies such as Zhang Yimou's extremely popular Hero, released in 2004, blended martial arts with impressive special effects. Apart from Hong Kong, there are few places in China that show movies in English or with subtitles.

Delicate kites for sale catching the breeze from the Yangzi, Wuhan

SPORTS & SPECIALIST HOLIDAYS

AS OLYMPIC HOST for 2008, Beijing is the showpiece city for a nation that celebrates sporting heroes with the fervor once reserved for political icons – soccer and basketball have become big spectator sports. The spending power and leisure interests of China's booming middle classes translate into more sporting choices for visitors too – there's skiing,

Flowers in bloom

golf, rock climbing, and more. Courses in martial arts can be found in most tourists centers, or head to the hallowed halls of the Shaolin Temple to find a master. Organized tours ply the major sights of the country, but for a really memorable experience consider booking a trip that has a fascinating focus, whether photography, whitewater rafting, costume, or horse trekking.

THE OLYMPIC GAMES

THE GREATEST SHOW on earth will be hosted by Beijing in August 2008. Expectations are high, and many Chinese fully expect to reach the top of the medals table. The Games of the 29th Olympiad are making a dramatic impact on the capital, with ambitiously scheduled infrastructure improvements and massive construction projects. Beijing has promised "Green Olympics, Hi-tech Olympics, People's Olympics," so visitors should enjoy acres of parkland, futuristic stadiums, and an army of English-speaking volunteers. Half of the main Olympic Park area, at the apex of an extended imperial axis running north-south through the city, will be turned into woodland and lawns. Outside Beijing, sailing will take place in the eastern port of Qingdao, and soccer preliminaries will be held in Shanghai and elsewhere.

SPECTATOR SPORTS

CHINA HAS gone soccer-mad. Although ancient records describe a game of kick-ball with three players on each side, and paintings show a Song emperor juggling a ball with his feet, soccer is a recent phenomenon here. The Chinese Professional Soccer League was established in 1994, and the China Super League, an elite group of teams, kicked off in 2004. The Super League has a massive fan base, but has run into problems with sponsorship recently. Basketball is also gaining in popularity and its profile has been boosted by Chinese NBA stars such as the towering Yao Ming.

The annual Rugby Sevens tournament in March is a massive – and very rowdy – event in Hong Kong, with international teams playing almost 70 games over three days. The Hong Kong Rugby Football Union plays regular fixtures during the rugby season, which runs from November through March.

Shanghai hosted the Formula One Grand Prix for the first time in 2004. Tickets are expensive, but the track is top-of-the-line, with 80 percent of the circuit visible from the stands.

For a stronger Chinese flavor, track down the quadrennial Minority Nationalities Traditional Sports Games (next stop: September 2007), when ethnic groups play unusual sports from dragon boat racing to elephant tug-of-war.

GOLF

GOLF GROWS IN popularity in China, despite initial Communist Party reluctance to embrace this elitist, land-hungry sport. Visiting golfers can enjoy over 200 courses nationwide. Mission Hills in Shenzhen with 10 separate courses holds the Guinness record for the largest; while the course on Jade Dragon Snow Mountain near Lijiang, Yunnan, is one of the world's highest. Perhaps the most alluring is the beautiful Spring City course near Kunming. Most courses are open to the public, and prices are similar to those in Western countries.

SWIMMING

CHINA HAS PLENTY of coastline but lacks the beach culture of its southeast Asian neighbors. However, Hainan Island is touted as China's Hawaii, and the resorts there are improving fast, while Beihai in Guangxi boasts a Horse trek up the steep sides of Tiger Leaping Gorge, Yunnan

Traversing the sand dunes of Mingsha Shan by camel, near Dunhuang, Gansu very long stretch of sand. Closer to the capital, enjoy Beidaihe, long the Communist Party's summer retreat, or the seashores of the lovely city of Qingdao.

DOWNHILL SKIING

FOLLOWING in the tracks of Japan and Korea, the Chinese are discovering the thrill of downhill skiing. The best natural snow and ski resorts lie in Heilongjiang and Jilin provinces. Yabuli, about 100 miles (160 km) from Harbin, is one of the most established resorts. In the Beijing suburbs at least 10 slopes, mostly with man-made snow, attract skiers, and Shanghai has one of the world's largest indoor facilities. Large feet may cause problems with equipment rentals, and watch your back – complete novices abound.

CHOOSING A TOUR

A MULTITUDE of tour companies ferry groups of photo-snapping tourists through the top sights of China. If you are thinking of booking a tour, do your research carefully; it is essential to find one that suits you well. Beyond the obvious essentials of types of accommodation, transport, the size of the group, and the itinerary, be sure to ask about the tipping policy, which can sometimes add a sizeable unexpected cost to your trip. Also query the frequency of shopping stops, the bane of all organized trips in China. These detours (from which your guide may be earning a commission) can cut sightseeing time short and will become increasingly boring.

There's a wide choice of tour companies to travel with. Abercrombie and Kent is an established international group, which has provided well-organized trips for decades. Steppes East, which is particularly strong on the Silk Routes and Tibet, provides suggested itineraries that it is happy to adapt. The company also organizes special interest tours, such as those that seek out the intricate embroidery and beautiful textiles of Tibet and Guangxi. Mongol Global Tours organizes trips focusing on costumes and special itineraries for photographers. Myths and Mountains has some well thought-out itineraries that cover Yunnan and Tibet, and also organizes horse trekking. Wild China is strong on southwest China, organizing trips to remote Tibetan monasteries in western Sichuan and through the dense jungle and rural hamlets of Xishuangbanna.

TRAIN SPOTTING

WITH SUCH AN EXTENSIVE rail network, China has been a favorite destination of train lovers for years, particularly as it has continued to run steam locomotives well after other nations have discontinued their use. Sadly, the last line to run steam, the Jitong railway, which crosses the Jinpeng Pass in Inner Mongolia, is currently scrapping its remaining steam locomotives. However, tours to highly industrialized areas will certainly continue to run, as many private lines at mining pits still use steam. Train spotters have a strong internet presence – check the web for details.

Boarding a traditional raft kept afloat by inflated sheep stomachs, Yellow River

Hot air balloon floating amongst the karst peaks of Yangshuo, Guangxi

CYCLING

ALTHOUGH THE CURSE of the automobile threatens the bicycle kingdom, China remains a great place to saddle up. You will see more from a bike than a bus, and gain greater insight into the lives of the locals. A well-organized tour should provide alternative transport if you become exhausted or fall ill, and will have all the fix-it gear and able mechanics to deal with problem chains and derailleurs. Itineraries are set at different levels, from easy to challenging, and some companies provide bikes, while others ask that you bring your own wheels to keep costs down. For biking tours, consider specialist operators like Bike China Adventures, based in Chengdu, or, for shorter weekend trips near Beijing, contact Cycle China.

In rural areas, renting a bike for a day or two is the best way to see sights just outside of town and get a feel for countryside life. There are plenty of bike-hire shops in most places, and many hotels can also arrange bike rental. In cities remember to park in designated areas (retain the token) and keep to cycle lanes where possible.

MARTIAL ARTS

CHINA ATTRACTS thousands of martial arts enthusiasts hoping to find the roots to their practice. Many head for famous Shaolin Temple in Henan (see p158), where Bodhidharma is said to have first taught the monks exercises that developed into shaolin quan during the 6th century. The temple is surrounded by kung fu schools, which have courses that range from a week to six months or longer. The less well-known monastery on Wudang Shan in Hubei (see p272), said to be the home of tai ji quan, also has schools of martial arts.

Most forms of kung fu taught in China are watered-down versions of the original martial forms, which have become popular and effective ways to keep fit. If you are looking for pure fighting technique, you may have more luck overseas, or possibly, in Hong Kong. In Beijing, Shanghai, and other big cities, courses are advertised in listings magazines, but although there are plenty of sports institutes in China with classes, you may have difficulty finding an English-speaking instructor. Head to one of the traveler havens, such as Yangshuo, Dali, or Lijiang, and you are certain to find capable instruction in English. Of course, you can always try joining the leagues of kung fu practitioners at daybreak in the nation's parks, particularly if your interest is tai ji quan.

If you want to fight with more than your bare hands, paintballing is growing in popularity – try the listings magazines in the large cities. For those who really need to let off steam, anti-aircraft guns and AK-47s are available for venting at the firing range en route from Beijing to the Great Wall at Badaling.

CLIMBING

MOST OF CHINA'S sacred and scenic mountains, such as Tai Shan and Huang Shan, have steps, cable cars, and crowds all the way to the summit. Some of the mountains have less-used paths that make for pleasant hiking, but if you are a serious mountaineer, you will need to head to western China. The true roof of the world awaits in Tibet – topping Mount Everest will require patience and official approval, but treks to Everest base camp in the Rongbuk Valley are offered by several travel operators. Other spectacular climbs include Gongga Shan in Sichuan and also Muztaghata in Xinjiang (an easier climb and you can ski down), but, again, seek permission first.

More feasible is rock climbing at Yangshuo in Guangxi, where the limestone crags that inspired poets down the centuries now inspire climbers up the peaks. Asia's fastest

A class of soon-to-be kung fu masters, Shaolin Temple, Henan

Panda at the Breeding Center near Chengdu developing sport climbing area combines a wide range of climbs with beautiful views, winding rivers and great accommodations.

A few intrepid spelunkers have been exploring the extensive karst cave network of Guangxi. A small industry of caving tours has developed, although, for the most part, the itineraries are geared to the experienced spelunker.

TREKKING & CAMPING

THE FASCINATING southwest offers some of the best trekking possibilities in the country, such as exploring the jungle of Xishuangbanna or visiting remote Tibetan monasteries. Horse-riding trips are possible in the heavenly mountains of Xinjiang and the national parks of Sichuan. Check with specialist tour companies and the Northwest Yunnan Ecotourism Association.

Whitewater rafting trips are popular in the southwest and in Tibet. If you are thinking of signing up, check the company's credentials and past history, and ensure that high-quality helmets, life-jackets, and, if necessary, wetsuits are provided.

Camping independently in China is tricky, and not recommended. However, the lack of legal camping facilities may be about to change, because caravan culture has just reached China. RVing is still in its birthing stages and as the industry develops, trailer parks and camp grounds are certain to appear. Restrictions on foreign drivers mean that motorhoming is not yet an option for non-residents.

WILDLIFE & BIRD-WATCHING

SPOT A PANDA at the Wolong Nature Reserve (see p369) or in the Breeding Center (see p360), where efforts are made to conserve the threatened species. Bird-watching tours head to Qinghai province for Bird Island on Qinghai Hu (see p499), and to parks such as Zhalong National Reserve (see p452), in the northeastern province of Heilongjiang, where the largest wetland ecological region in China hosts over 300 bird species.

China's environment was savaged in the 20th century by political campaigns to move mountains with manpower; in the 21st, rampant economic growth threatens both biodiversity and cultural diversity, and conservation efforts are growing to save China's unique wildlife and ways of life. To support a responsible approach to tourism and the environment, consider tours and eco-lodges offered by organizations such as the Northwest Yunnan Ecotourism Association, based near Lijiang in Yunnan.

DIRECTORY

SPORTS

2008 Olympics

www.beijing-2008.org

Basketball

www.asia-basket.com

Formula One

www.icsh.sh.cn/en

Rugby

www.hkrugby.com

Soccer

www.sinosoc.com

GOLF

Mission Hills

1 Mission Hills Road,
Shenzhen,
PRC 518110.

T (0755) 2802 0888.

FAX (0755) 2801 0713.

www.missionhillsgroup.com

Spring City

Tangchi, Yilang,
Yunnan, PRC 652103.

T (0871) 767 1188.

W www.springcityresort.com

DOWNHILL SKIING

Yabuli

100 miles (160 km) east of Harbin, Heilongjiang.

W www.yabuliski.com

TOUR COMPANIES

Abercrombie & Kent

W www.abercrombiekent.com

In the US:

1520 Kensington Road,
Suite 212, Oak Brook,
IL 60523-2156.

T 1-800 554 7016.

In the UK:

Sloane Square House,
Holbein Place, London,
SW1W 8NS.

T (0845) 070 0615.

Mongol Global Tours

4141 Ball Road, no. 187.

Cypress,
California,
USA 90630.

T (714) 220 2579.

FAX (714) 276-6447.

W www.mongolglobaltours.com

Myths & Mountains

976 Tree Court,
Incline Village,
Nevada
USA 89451.

T 1-800 670 MYTH.

FAX (775) 832 4454.

W www.journeystochina.com

Steppes East

51 Castle Street,
Cirencester,
Gloucestershire,
UK GL7 1QD.

T (01285) 651 010.

FAX (01285) 885 888.

W

www.steppeeast.co.uk

SURVIVAL GUIDE

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 610-623
TRAVEL INFORMATION 624-633

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

CHINA IS CURRENTLY going through an explosion in both international and domestic tourism. While there have been gradual improvements in the quality of tourist services, some of the remoter sights can still be difficult to reach independently, and most accessible sights get very crowded, especially during the summer season. Due to the absence of a nationwide non-profit network of tourist information centers, visitors often have to rely on hotels for

Symbol of the China Tourist Board

guidance. In the larger cities the tourist infrastructure, including transportation, hotels, and restaurants, is on a par with international standards. The remoter areas, however, provide fairly basic accommodations and may not be equipped to cater to the needs of the international tourist. Communication also poses difficulties, as English is not spoken widely and its usage is generally restricted to tour groups, four- and five-star hotels, and restaurants catering to tourists.

WHEN TO GO

ALTHOUGH THERE are great climatic disparities within China, spring and fall are generally the best months to travel. The peak tourist season, however, is during summer (June to September), best avoided if you don't like the heat – it is baking hot in North China, steamy in the Yangzi region, and sweltering in South China. Winter is fiercely cold in North China, particularly in the northeast. Winters in South China are more pleasant, especially on the perennially warm Hainan Island and parts of Yunnan province. Climate and rainfall charts are found on pages 48–9. Planning a trip to coincide with the holiday and festival periods (see pp44–7) can lead to a fun and colorful trip experiencing China at its liveliest. However, tickets for air, train, and bus transport can be very difficult to acquire, as half of China will be traveling as well. Tourist sights are swamped with local sightseers, and most hotels and guesthouses raise their rates.

WHAT TO TAKE

THE CLOTHES you need will depend on the time of year that you visit. In northern China, from November until March, you will require a down jacket, gloves, sweater, warm socks, thermal leggings, sturdy footwear, and lip balm. During the same season in the south, you still need a sweater and warm clothes, even as far south as Hong Kong. In summer, across most of China, you only need loose-fitting shirts or t-shirts, and thin trousers. Shorts will also do, though not many Chinese wear them. Bring a first-aid kit (see p618), raincoat, sun hat, deodorant, pocket knife, flashlight, and some good reading material.

ADVANCE BOOKING

ADVANCE BOOKING of hotel rooms is only necessary during the peak holiday periods between May 1 and October 1, and perhaps during the Chinese New Year. Nonetheless, booking in advance using the internet can secure you good deals on accommodations. Unless traveling on short intercity routes, train tickets should be bought a few days before travel, as seats can be in short supply. Train tickets can only be purchased up to five days in advance of the day of travel. Bus and air tickets need not be booked in advance, although airplane tickets can become scarcer during major holiday periods.

VISAS & PASSPORTS

A PASSPORT, valid for at least six months, and a visa are necessary to enter the People's Republic of China. However, most foreign nationals don't require a visa for entering Hong Kong and Macau. Chinese embassies and consulates around the world issue a standard single-entry, 30-day visa, although multiple-entry visas, and 60-day and 90-day visas can also be obtained. In general, visas cannot be issued at the border. When completing the visa application form, you must clearly specify what parts of China you plan to visit. Avoid mentioning Tibet,

Temperate weather at a tea garden in Chengdu or Xinjiang, even if you plan to visit these regions, as you may be questioned about your occupation and intent of visit – the list you provide is non-binding. Always carry your passport, as it is an essential document for checking into hotels, and the Public Security Bureau (see p616) may insist on seeing it. Photocopying the visa page and the personal information page will speed up replacement in case your passport is lost or stolen. Visa extensions are sometimes granted for 30 days by the foreign affairs branch of local PSBs throughout the country. Note that heavy fines are levied if you overstay your permitted period in China.

PERMITS

TRAVELERS WILL FIND that most of China is accessible. However, areas that are either totally or partially off-limits, and may require a permit from the PSB, include Lushun (Liaoning), Xanadu (Inner Mongolia), and parts of Shennongjia (Hubei). It is recommended to check with the PSB before setting out to western Sichuan, where the rules of access are not yet fixed. In Tibet, traveling outside Lhasa prefecture requires a Tibetan Tourism Bureau (TTB) permit as well as a separate travel permit.

EMBASSIES & CONSULATES

MOST COUNTRIES have Embassies in Beijing and consulates in Hong Kong, Shanghai, and Guangzhou, and to a lesser extent, in Chengdu, Chongqing, Qingdao, and Dalian. Consular offices can re-issue passports and assist in case of emergencies, such as theft, imprisonment, and hospitalization. Your hotel can put you in touch with your embassy or consulate, or you can consult the Travel China Guide website (www.travelchinaguide.com).

CUSTOMS INFORMATION

WHEN ENTERING China, visitors are entitled to a duty-free allowance of 70 fluid ounces (2 liters) of wine or spirits, 400 cigarettes, and a certain amount of gold and silver. Foreign currency exceeding US$5000, or its equivalent, must be declared.

Shang-dynasty bronze tripod

Items that are prohibited include fresh fruit, rare animals and plants, and arms and ammunition. Chinese law specifies limits on the export of certain items, such as herbal medicines. Also, objects predating 1795 cannot be taken out of China, while antiques made after that date will need to have an official seal affixed. Although foreign visitors are largely left alone, it is not advisable to take in politically controversial literature, especially to sensitive areas such as Tibet where there have been instances of books being confiscated.

IMMUNIZATION

ENSURE THAT all of your routine vaccinations are up to date, such as tetanus and polio. It is advisable to also get vaccinated against Hepatitis A and B, and typhoid. Only visitors traveling from countries where yellow fever is endemic must provide proof of vaccination against the disease. Malaria medication is a good idea for those visiting rural areas, especially Yunnan and Hainan, as is a Japanese encephalitis vaccination. Try www.mdtravehealth.com for up-to-date travel-health information and more advice on immunization.

INSURANCE

IT IS ADVISABLE to take out an insurance policy for medical emergencies as well as theft before leaving home, checking with your insurance company that it is entirely valid in China. The policy will

DIRECTORY

CHINA INTERNATIONAL TRAVEL SERVICE (CITS)

www.cits.net

Beijing

28 Jianguo Men Wai Jie.

☎ (010) 6515 8587.

Dalian

Central Plaza Hotel,
145 Zhongshan Lu.

☎ (0411) 8368 7843.

Guangzhou

185 Huanshi Xi Lu.

☎ (020) 8666 6889.

Shanghai

1277 Beijing Xi Lu.

☎ (021) 6289 8899.

Suzhou

251 Ganjiang Xi Lu.

☎ (0512) 6515 1369.

Xi'an

50 Chang'an Bei Lu.

☎ (029) 8524 1864.

cover the loss of baggage, tickets, and, to a certain extent, cash and checks. However, before signing an insurance policy, look for one that excludes coverages you will not require during your stay in China. Insurance is also essential to cover any adventure activity or sport that you may undertake during your trip.

Classic tai bu rock formations lining the shore in Yu Yuan (Jade Garden), Shanghai

TOURIST INFORMATION

WITH THE EXCEPTION of the major cities, China has yet to recognize the value of professional Tourist Information Centers, either at home or abroad. Those that exist in Beijing and Shanghai are often under-funded, poorly staffed, and unreliable, although they are useful for obtaining free maps. The state-approved China International Travel Service (CITS) (see p611), originally set up to cater to the needs of foreign visitors, today functions as any other local operator, offering nothing more than tours, tickets, and rented cars. A limited choice of government-run travel agencies abroad promote China tourism. However, they fail to offer professional and unbiased advice, instead steering customers toward group tours and standard hotels.

ADMISSION CHARGES

VIRTUALLY EVERY SIGHT in China carries an admission fee. Most temples and parks, all museums, palaces, historical monuments, sacred mountains, and wildlife reserves can only be entered after paying a fee. While temples charge anything from ¥5 to ¥40, prices of all other entry tickets vary. It is often hard to see where the money goes as many of China's temples and monuments appear severely neglected. Until relatively recently, non-Chinese visitors had to pay a higher charge, and although this practice has been more or less discontinued, you may still encounter a foreign visitor surcharge. Most sights, such as parks and temples, simply have a main ticket for entry (men piao), but further tickets may need to be purchased for access to individual sights within the complex. Alternatively, a "through ticket" (tao piao) can be bought for access to all the sights. Occasionally there are further fees for storing bags. The sale of tickets often ceases half an hour or so before the sight closes for the day. Guides swarm around entrances to major sights and will latch onto you, even if you're not interested. It is advisable to test their English first, as many just repeat fixed lines, parrot fashion, relating to the sight in question, and are unable to answer further queries.

HOLIDAYS & OPENING HOURS

EVEN THOUGH New Year's Day (January 1) is a public holiday in China, the main holiday periods are during the Lunar New Year (Spring Festival), and the May 1 (Labor Day) and October 1 (National Day) holidays. Each holiday period officially lasts three days, although most businesses and banks remain shut for seven days. Accommodation prices rise across the country as domestic tourism peaks. Tourist sights, however, remain open during these times.

LANGUAGE

THE OFFICIAL language of China is Putonghua (literally "common tongue"), based on the dialect spoken in Beijing, and known outside China as Mandarin Chinese. Putonghua doesn't specifically belong to any one region, and is used across the country for communication between speakers of China's numerous dialects. Unlike other dialects, such as Cantonese,

Road sign in both pinyin and Chinese characters

Putonghua can be used throughout China. Since the vast majority of Chinese people do not understand English, it is largely useless for communication outside of hotels. The tonal nature of Putonghua makes it difficult for English speakers to become accustomed to the language. Pinyin, a romanization system, helps in the recognition of sounds and has diacritical marks to indicate tone. A few basic phrases in Putonghua are listed on pages 668–72.

FACILITIES FOR THE DISABLED

IF YOU ARE A wheelchair user, China is not a recommended destination for you. With the exception of Hong Kong and, to some extent, Macau, China offers very basic facilities for the disabled, both in public transport and accommodation. Public buildings and places of interest are rarely fitted with ramps or rails. Many of the pavements in urban areas are littered with obstacles and occasional potholes, and have high curbs, making wheelchair access troublesome.

The scarcity of safe crossing points on urban roads drives pedestrians onto overhead walkways; otherwise they have to join the crowds surging through the traffic. Rooms with services for disabled visitors are only available at the better hotels, although elevators are common in most hotels over three stories high.

Façade of the impressive Shaanxi History Museum, Xi'an

FACILITIES FOR CHILDREN

THE CHINESE love children, and they are usually welcome everywhere in China. Even though baby-changing rooms are extremely rare, and very few restaurants have child seats, traveling with very young children can have its advantages as people will generally go out of their way to accommodate you in most places and situations. Supermarkets in towns are well supplied with diapers, baby wipes, bottles, creams, medicine, clothing, infant milk formula, and baby food. However, the baby food is of a sweeter variety and nearly always processed. The Chinese very rarely give pacifiers to their children, but you can find them in department stores in larger cities. Also bring a set of plastic cutlery for your child, as some restaurants and eating places only have chopsticks.

PHOTOGRAPHY

IT IS AS COMMON to see the Chinese with their cameras as it is to find film-developing stores in all major Chinese cities and towns. While 35mm color print film is available almost everywhere, don't expect to find color slide or high-speed film outside of the large cities. Black-and-white film can only be found in specialty camera shops. Camera batteries are widely available in department stores in big cities, though it is best to bring your own supply. Many photo stores in Hong Kong, Macau, and mainland China provide transferring of images from a digital camera onto a disc.

Photographing people in China is generally not a problem, but it helps to first ask for their permission. Photography is rarely allowed within temple halls and museums, or at archeological sites, and signs indicate where photography is not permitted. In case you don't find a sign with such restrictions marked in English, it is advisable to ask around. Photographing politically-sensitive images may result in the confiscation of your film and it goes without saying that photography of military sites is banned. As far as the regulations go, photography from aircrafts is banned, and so is taking photographs of airports, harbors, and railroads. However, barring the military installations, most of the other restrictions are seldom enforced.

Children with their parents enjoying a meal

ELECTRICITY

THE ELECTRICAL current in China is 220 volts. You will see a variety of plugs in China, including two flat prongs (the same as American plugs), or three flat prongs (the same as Australian ones). The British three square-pin arrangement is rare outside of smart hotels, and it is therefore advisable

Plugs with two and three prongs to carry a travel conversion plug, readily available in most of the larger cities. A power-surge cable will protect laptops against voltage fluctuations, which are common in China. It is best to avoid cheap batteries, as they are very shortlived. Instead, buy a battery charger and rechargeable batteries, which can be easily found in most Chinese stores. Blackouts are not unheard-of in China, so, given the erratic powercuts, it is wise to carry a flashlight.

TIME & CALENDAR

DESPITE ITS SIZE, China occupies only one time zone, and there is no daylight saving time. Midday in Beijing is also midday in far-flung parts of China, including Lhasa and Ürümqi, which are along the same latitude as countries that are two and three hours behind China. China time is seven or eight hours ahead of Greenwich Mean Time (GMT), two or three hours behind Australian Eastern Standard Time, 15 or 16 hours ahead of US Pacific Standard Time, and 12 or 13 hours ahead of US Eastern Standard Time. The Western Gregorian Calendar is used for all official work, although the lunar calendar is still used for calculating the dates of festivals.

MEASUREMENTS & CONVERSION CHARTS

THE METRIC SYSTEM is most commonly used in all parts of China.

Imperial to Metric

1 inch = 2.5 centimeters
 1 foot = 30 centimeters
 1 mile = 1.6 kilometers
 1 ounce = 28 grams
 1 pound = 454 grams
 1 pint (US) = 0.473 liters
 1 gallon (US) = 3.785 liters

Metric to Imperial

1 centimeter = 0.4 inches
 1 meter = 3 feet 3 inches
 1 kilometer = 0.6 miles
 100 gram = 3.53 ounces
 1 kilogram = 2.2 pounds
 1 liter = 2.11 pints (US)

Etiquette

DESPITE RAPID modernization, China remains a traditional society governed by strong family values. Although the cities and towns give the outward impression of Western modernity, their inhabitants retain a deep-seated and family-oriented conservatism. Confucian values promote respect for elders and those in positions of authority, and reinforce notions of conformity. Religious observance is also an important part of people's lives, but is largely separate from mainstream social behavior. The Chinese are, above all, welcoming and generous, and visitors are often amazed at their hospitality. If invited to someone's home, a gift of chocolates, French wine, or a carton of cigarettes will be greatly appreciated.

GREETING PEOPLE

WHILE SHAKING hands is not customary in China, Chinese men may shake your hand or expect their hand to be shaken by foreign visitors. Although the Chinese are not particularly tactile in their greetings, bodily contact is quite common between friends, even of the same sex. It is quite common to see young men walking arm in arm, or with their arm around another's shoulder. The usual Chinese greeting is ni hao (how are you?) or nimen hao in its plural form, to which you reply ni hao or nimen hao – the polite form is nin/nimmen hao. Chinese people can be very direct, and will not blanch at asking you how much you earn, how old you are, or whether you are married. Such questions are seen as nothing more than taking a friendly interest in a new acquaintance. When proffering business cards, the Chinese do so politely, using the fingertips of both hands, and receive cards in the same manner. It is a good idea to take some business cards, with your particulars in Chinese on one side and in English on the reverse, as there will be many occasions to give them away.

BODY LANGUAGE

ONCE THEY REACH the age of 30 or 40, the Chinese tend to dress conservatively, favoring dark and inconspicuous colors such as brown and black. In cities and towns, people wear jeans, t-shirts, and skirts, and many youngsters also dye their hair. Locals expect foreign visitors to dress and behave a little flamboyantly, so don't worry too much about what you wear, but try to avoid looking scruffy. It is also acceptable for both sexes to wear shorts in hot weather.

Advice for burning incense

On the beach, nudity and women sunbathing topless are rarely seen as Chinese beach culture is quite modest.

FACE

RESERVED IN MANNER and expression, the Chinese also harbor strong feelings of personal pride and respect. The maintenance of pride and the avoidance of shame is known as saving face. Loss of face (mianzi) creates great discomfort and embarrassment for the Chinese, so although you may often be frustrated by bureaucratic red-tape and delays, remember that arguing may make matters worse. Instead, try tackling difficult situations by being firm but polite, and use confrontation only as a last resort.

PLACES OF WORSHIP

ALTHOUGH THERE are no dress codes for Buddhist, Daoist, or Confucian temples, visitors to mosques should dress respectfully – avoid wearing shorts or short skirts – and cover their upper arms. Buddhist, Daoist, and Confucian temples are relaxed about visitors wandering about, but do be considerate toward worshippers. Also, check whether you can take photographs within temple halls, as this is often not permitted. Taking photographs in courtyards, however, is usually not a problem. Some Buddhist and Daoist temples are active, and you should show respect towards the resident monks.

DO'S & DON'TS

IF INVITED OUT for dinner, expect to see the diners competing to pay the entire bill, rather than dividing it up between them. It is a good idea to join in the scramble for the bill, or at least make an attempt – your gesture will be appreciated, though almost certainly declined. The Chinese avoid talking about politics, and it is best to follow suit.

The courtyard of the Jade Buddha Temple in Shanghai

ANNOYANCES

THE CHINESE habit of staring, especially in smaller towns and rural areas, can be a little annoying. However, the intent is rarely hostile. Staring was common even in Beijing until the 1990s, and although it is rare in cities today, it helps to remember that China was closed to foreign nationals until the early 1980s.

Another annoyance that visitors face in smaller towns are the constant calls of "Hellooo!" or laowai (foreigner). It is best to either ignore them or smile, as saying hello often results in bursts of laughter. In large cities, people often strike up conversation to practice their English. Sometimes, art students try and coerce you into visiting over-priced art galleries, which you should firmly decline to do.

Although line-ups are beginning to replace the usual mêlée at ticket offices, be prepared for a lot of pushing and shoving.

Since the outbreak of SARS in 2002, public health organizations have made considerable efforts to curb the habit of spitting. It is still widespread, however, especially in rural areas. Spitting is common on buses and trains, and it is not considered rude to spit in mid-conversation, so do not take offense.

SMOKING & ALCOHOL

AS THE WORLD'S largest producer and consumer of cigarettes (xiangyan), China is a smoker's paradise. Despite the appearance of no-smoking zones and rudimentary anti-smoking campaigns, towns and cities remain shrouded in a haze of cigarette smoke. Smoking is now banned on domestic flights and in train carriages (except in the corridors), but rural buses remain fumigated. There are usually non-smoking floors in four- and five-star hotels, but don't expect any at cheaper hotels. Smoking

Bric-à-brac to be haggled over on display at a street market in Tianjin during meals is totally acceptable, especially if there are other smokers present. The Chinese are very generous when it comes to offering cigarettes, so remember to be equally generous in return.

They also enjoy drinking alcohol, and there is no taboo against moderate intoxication. The usual accompaniment during a meal is beer (pijiu), or white spirit (baijiu). People rarely drink wine (putaojiu), although it is available at restaurants serving Western cuisine. If someone raises a toast to you (ganbei!), it is good form to toast the person back at a later stage.

A popular white spirit, or baijiu

BARGAINING

AS A FOREIGN NATIONAL in China, it is essential to bargain (jiangjia). You may often be overcharged – sometimes by large amounts – in markets and anywhere else where prices are not indicated. In some restaurants, the English menu has more expensive rates than the Chinese one. You may be able to bargain to reduce your hotel room-rate, especially during the low season. When bargaining, there is no need to be aggressive. Instead, firmly state your price – which should never be unrealistic – and walk away if the vendor doesn't agree. Shopkeepers will often agree to the price once they realize they're losing a potential sale. The prices in large shops and government emporia (guoying shangdian) are usually fixed.

TIPPING

TIPPING IS VERY rare in China, Hong Kong, and Macau, so there is no obligation to leave a tip (xiaofei) and people don't usually expect one. Some smarter restaurants include a service charge on the bill.

BEGGING

CHINA'S imbalanced economic progress and huge population of rural poor have resulted in large numbers of beggars all over the country, especially in cities. Foreign visitors naturally attract their attention, and groups of children are often sent by their parents to extract money. The best strategy is to ignore them and walk away.

A beggar in Lhasa with colorful Buddhist regalia

Personal Security & Health

THE POLICE FORCE IN CHINA is called the Public Security Bureau (gonganju), abbreviated to PSB. Foreign nationals are unlikely to encounter the PSB, unless extending their visa, applying for a permit to a restricted area, or reporting loss or theft. China is a police state, so the PSB is riddled with corruption and overwhelming bureaucracy. Not all police stations (paichusuo) have English-speaking staff, so try to take along an interpreter if reporting a crime, although it is best to contact your embassy or consulate first for guidance. Throughout mainland China, call 110 for the Police. Protect your valuables and important documents at all times, stay and eat in clean places, and drink only mineral water. For medical attention, it is better to opt for a private clinic rather than one of the many government hospitals.

Crowds in the busy shopping district of Causeway Bay, Hong Kong

GENERAL PRECAUTIONS

TRAVELING IN China is generally safe. Even though crime has burgeoned since the 1980s economic liberalization, with millions of unemployed migrants flocking to the cities, foreign visitors are unlikely to be the victims of crime, apart from petty theft. Tourists on buses and trains, particularly those in the hard-seat class (see p629) and on overnight journeys, are tempting targets for thieves. Guard your camera and valuables, wear a money belt at all times, and secure your luggage to the rack on overnight train journeys.

Hotels are, more or less, a lot more secure than dormitories, even though it is not unusual for things to go missing from hotel rooms. You could use the safes or storage areas that most hotels offer, but do insist on a receipt. If staying in a dormitory, never leave your essentials and important documents lying around, and be cautious about giving too many details to fellow travelers.

When walking in crowded streets, avoid wearing anything expensive or eye-catching, and keep your wallet in the bottom of your bag, but never in a backpack. Be discreet when taking out your wallet; it is best to carry only as much cash as you need for the day. Keep an eye on your belongings while visiting public washrooms, as quite a few travelers have had very unpleasant experiences.

Keep cash, traveler's checks, passport, and visa documents in a money belt – ones that lie flat and are meant to be worn under clothing are best. Also, remember to make photocopies of the personal information and China visa pages of your passport and any other important documents and store them separately from the originals.

Beijing PSB officer

SECURITY

EVER SINCE THE 2001 terrorist attacks in New York City, security has been tightened throughout China, especially at airports and railway stations. At certain sights, you will be asked to deposit your bag before making a visit. Always carry your passport with you for identification.

WOMEN TRAVELERS

CHINA IS USUALLY regarded as a very safe destination for women. In general, Chinese men are respectful toward women, and it is unlikely for them to experience any serious form of sexual harassment. That said, never take your safety for granted, and though independent travel is safer in China than in many other countries, traveling in a group is always wiser, as lone travelers are more likely to be mugged or assaulted. However, if you do travel alone, stay on your guard when visiting rural and far-flung areas, and avoid wandering about alone in quiet and deserted places, especially after dark.

As far as clothing goes, it is best to observe the clothing and behavior of local women, and adapt as closely as possible. It helps to dress modestly, especially in Muslim regions and rural areas.

If possible, avoid hotel dormitories and opt for single rooms in hotels located near the center of town on well-lit streets. To avert an undesirable encounter, carry a whistle or learn a few basic self-defense moves.

GAY AND LESBIAN TRAVELERS

THE GAY AND lesbian scenes in China's main cities, in particular Shanghai and Hong Kong, are growing. However, China is still a highly conventional society, and homosexuality is largely disapproved of and misunderstood. In 2001, the Chinese Psychiatric Society finally deleted homosexuality from its list of mental disorders. Homosexuality is legal, but there are no laws to protect gays, and police periodically crack down on meeting places. Even in cities, it is inadvisable for gays and lesbians to be open with their sexuality, despite the tactile relationship many Chinese have with friends of the same sex.

HOSPITALS & MEDICAL FACILITIES

IT IS IMPORTANT to take out comprehensive medical insurance before arriving in China. China's state hospitals vary considerably in quality; the better-equipped hospitals (jiyuan) can be found in the cities and large towns, but even at the best, communication can be problematic. Cities with large expatriate communities have private hospitals, where there are exclusive clinics with English-speaking staff to attend to non-Chinese visitors. Consider contacting your embassy for a list of approved hospitals. In general, medical services are reasonably cheap throughout China, but many hospitals may levy a certain amount of "foreigner surcharge" that could ensure better care. Whatever the type of institution, you will be expected to pay cash at the time of being admitted.

Distinctive green cross of a pharmacy

Pharmacies (yaodian), identified by green crosses, are found all over China. Many of them stock both Western medicine (xi yao) and Chinese medicine (zhong yao), and can treat you for minor injuries or ailments. Take adequate supplies of any prescription drugs you require, and also remember to take the chemical – not brand – name of all prescriptions, in case you need to restock. In large cities such as Beijing and Shanghai, prescriptions may not be required for a range of medicines, including antibiotics and sleeping pills.

Some large hotels have in-house clinics to help guests with diagnosis, medical assistance, and prescriptions. Large modern hotels may also be able to provide a Chinese speaker to accompany you to the hospital.

Those interested in traditional Chinese medicine (see p232) for treating chronic ailments can visit the traditional institutes attached to local hospitals and medical colleges. Some hotels, too, offer traditional Chinese treatments.

PUBLIC BATHROOMS

PUBLIC BATHROOMS are typically of the squat variety and are squalid, filthy, and rarely cleaned, unless watched over by an attendant. There is little privacy – doorless cubicles, separated by low walls, are the norm. Toilet paper is a rarity – don't forget to carry your own supply. Toilet paper should be put in the receptacle, if provided, rather than down the toilet, as septic systems are often unable to handle paper products. You will be expected to pay a few jiao for using the facilities. Use hotel and fast-food restaurant bathrooms whenever you get the opportunity.

Sign pointing the way to the facilities

HYGIENE TIPS

THE RIGORS of travel require a few extra hygiene considerations. Carry a small bar of handsoap or a tube of concentrated camping soap with you all the time. A packet of wet wipes always comes in handy.

Warts are easily picked up from poorly cleaned shower stalls. You will often find a pair of flipflops under your hotel bed. These are meant to be worn in the shower, but you might consider packing a pair of your own.

DIRECTORY

IN AN EMERGENCY

- ☎ Police 110.
- ☎ Fire 119.
- ☎ Ambulance 120.

HOSPITAL & MEDICAL FACILITIES

Beijing

Hong Kong International Medical Clinic, 9th floor, Office Tower, Hong Kong Macau Center, Swisshotel, 2 Chaoyang Men Bei Dajie.
☎ (010) 6501 4260.
www.hkclinic.com

International SOS, Building C, BITIC Ying Yi Building, 1 Xingfu Sancun Bei Jie, Chaoyang.
Clinic/dental appointments:
☎ (010) 6462 9112.
☎ (010) 6462 9100 (24-hr).

Guangzhou

Can-Am International Medical Center, 5th fl, Garden Tower, Garden Hotel, 368 Huanshi Dong Lu.
☎ (020) 8387 9057.

Hong Kong

Queen Elizabeth Hospital, 30 Gascoigne Rd, Yau Ma Tei.
☎ (0852) 2958 8888.

Shanghai

New Pioneer International Medical Center (24-hrs), 2nd floor, Geru Building, 910 Hengshan Lu.
☎ (021) 6469 3898.

EMBASSIES IN BEIJING

Australia

21 Dongzhi Men Wai Dajie.
☎ (010) 6532 2331.

Canada

19 Dongzhi Men Wai Dajie.
☎ (010) 6532 3536.

Ireland

3 Ritan Dong Lu.
☎ (010) 6532 2691.

United Kingdom

11 Guanghua Lu.
☎ (010) 6532 1961.

USA

3 Xiushui Bei Jie.
☎ (010) 6532 3831.

TRAVEL HEALTH MASTA

☎ (0113) 238 7575.
www.masta.org

MD Travel Health

www.mdtravelhealth.com

Sitting in the shade at the Botanical Gardens, Hangzhou, Zhejiang

HEAT, HUMIDITY & POLLUTION

DURING SUMMER, IT IS HOT all across China. If you're traveling during this time drink plenty of fluids to prevent dehydration, and increase your intake of salt to compensate its loss through sweating. Wear loose-fitting cotton clothing and sandals, remember to bring a sunhat and sunglasses, and use plenty of sunscreen. Most hotels, except the very cheapest, have rooms equipped with air conditioning, and virtually all restaurants are air conditioned as well. Prolonged exposure to the sun can cause heat stroke, a serious condition with high body temperature, severe headaches, and disorientation. To avoid heat rashes and fungal infections caused by humidity, wear clean, loose clothes made of natural fibers, and open sandals.

Many of China's cities, including Beijing, experience chronic levels of atmospheric pollution. This aggravates chest infections, and asthmatic travelers should always carry their own medication.

COLD & HYPOTHERMIA

WINTER CAN BE severe through most of north China. High-altitude travel in particular can expose you to extreme cold, and travelers to Tibet and other mountainous regions must be prepared for sudden changes in temperature. A waterproof and windproof layer is vital in cold conditions, as is adequate warm clothing, including thick socks, boots, jacket, gloves, and most importantly, a hat. The symptoms of hypothermia, which include shivering, dizziness,

A motorcyclist wrapped up against pollution exhaustion, and irrational behavior, are brought on by prolonged exposure to the cold. Be aware of fingers and toes going white or numb, the first indications of frost bite, and rub them vigorously if they do.

FIRST-AID KIT

ORGANIZE A BASIC first-aid kit, which should include all personal medication, aspirin or painkillers for fevers and minor aches and pains, tablets for nausea and movement sickness, antiseptic cream for cuts and bites, an anti-fungal ointment, Band-Aids, gauze and tensor bandages, a pair of scissors, insect repellent, and tweezers. Also carry antihistamines for allergies, anti-diarrhea tablets, water purification tablets, disposable syringes, oral rehydration solution, and a thermometer. Taking a supply of antibiotics is a good idea. Most of these items are readily available at Chinese pharmacies.

STOMACH UPSETS & DIARRHEA

USUALLY CAUSED by a change of diet, water, and climate, diarrhea is common among visitors. Chinese food, which can be quite oily and spicy, does require some getting used to for many people. If the change of diet is affecting you, stick to Western food and simple boiled food, such as plain rice, until the diarrhea subsides. Most importantly, drink lots of fluids, as diarrhea quickly leads to dehydration – oral rehydration solution (ORS) is an effective remedy. If you do not have any ORS, stir half a teaspoon of salt and three teaspoons of honey or sugar into a mug of boiled water.

To decrease your chances of stomach upset, avoid raw salads, cut fruit, cold cuts, roadside kabobs, fresh juice, and yogurt. It is important to avoid drinking tap water even in big cities, apart from Hong Kong. Drink boiled water, or bottled mineral water after checking that the seal is intact. Most international brands of carbonated drinks are widely available. Although street food can look tempting, it is safer to abstain unless it is hot and freshly cooked in front of you.

A good pharmacist can recommend standard diarrhea medication, such as Imodium, though if the attack is severe, it is best to consult a doctor. A popular and effective Chinese medicine for upset stomachs is Huanghiansu.

SARS & BIRD FLU

IN SPRING 2003, severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) spread throughout China and then to Toronto, Canada. China managed to contain the disease with a strict identification and quarantine program. Since then, there have only been minor, localized outbreaks of the disease. A previously unknown virus, SARS attacks the upper respiratory system and results in fever, followed by a dry cough and difficulty in breathing. Another SARS outbreak is unlikely, but should one occur, do not travel to the affected area. If you develop symptoms of pneumonia or flu after your trip, see your physician immediately.

A food stall with a tempting but risky display

Bird flu, or avian influenza, is a serious problem in east Asia, but unlikely to affect travelers. Almost all of the people who contracted the disease in 2004 were in close contact with poultry. Do not visit any poultry farms, avoid birds at outdoor markets, and eat only poultry and eggs that have been thoroughly cooked.

SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED & OTHER INFECTIOUS DISEASES

AFTER YEARS OF denial, Chinese authorities have begun to publicly admit to the alarming spread of HIV – the virus that causes Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) – via unprotected sex, drug use, and infected blood banks. Experts are predicting 10 million AIDS cases in China by the year 2010. Nonetheless, considerable ignorance about the disease and its prevention still exists in rural areas. Long-term visitors to China are screened for HIV infection.

Hepatitis B, also transmitted through contact with infected blood, is spread through sexual contact, unsterilized needles, tattoos, and shaves from roadside barbers. However, it can be prevented with a vaccine.

When visiting a clinic, ensure that the doctor opens a new syringe in front of you. You may even want to bring your own disposable syringe for the doctor to use. Any procedure using needles, such as tattooing or ear-piercing, is best avoided.

WATER-BORNE DISEASES

VISITORS MUST be on their guard against dysentery. Bacillary dysentery is accompanied by severe stomach pains, vomiting and fever, whereas amoebic dysentery has similar symptoms but takes longer to manifest. Vaccination against Hepatitis A is advisable before leaving home, especially if you plan to visit rural areas. Other water-borne diseases, such as cholera and typhoid, can also be prevented with vaccines. Schistosomiasis (bilharzia), a disease caused by a water-borne parasitic worm found in south and central China, can be avoided by not swimming in fresh water.

Bottled mineral water

Drink bottled mineral water at all times, and avoid ice cubes.

RABIES

THE DEADLY RABIES virus is spread via the bite of an infected animal. If you are bitten, clean the bite with an antiseptic solution, and seek medical help at once. Treatment involves a course of injections. A rabies vaccine is only necessary if you are visiting high-risk areas for a long period and likely to come into contact with animals. Do not have this vaccine, unless advised by your doctor.

INSECT-BORNE DISEASES

MOSQUITOS ARE RIFE during the summer in China. In the southern part of the country, mosquitos can carry a number of diseases. If you are visiting an area with a high risk of malaria, take preventive anti-malarial drugs before, during, and after your trip. Contact MASTA (Medical Advisory Services for Travellers Abroad) and check the MD Travel Health website (see p617) for information on malaria medication. Dengue fever and Japanese B encephalitis are also carried by mosquitos. To guard against mosquito bites, apply mosquito repellent, and wear clothes that cover as much of your arms and legs as possible.

ALTITUDE SICKNESS

ALACK OF SUFFICIENT oxygen at altitudes higher than 8,000 ft (2,500 m) can cause attacks of Acute Mountain Sickness (AMS) – severe headaches, dizziness, and loss of appetite. These symptoms subside within a day or two, but if they persist beyond 48 hours, you must descend to a lower altitude immediately and seek medical help. To avoid altitude sickness ascend slowly, drink plenty of fluids, and avoid alcohol and sedatives.

Trekking at high altitudes on Chomolungma (Mount Everest)

Banking & Local Currency

24-hr
banking sign

CHINA PROVIDES A WIDE RANGE of banking facilities and money exchange services, which are available in large cities, international airports, major banks, and top-end hotels. Traveler's checks are the safest way to carry large sums of money, but always keep some cash to hand for transport, restaurants, and purchases, as traveler's checks and credit cards cannot be used everywhere, especially in rural areas. ATMs that accept international cards can still be hard to find outside Hong Kong, Macau, and some of the larger cities.

BANKS & BANKING HOURS

THE BANK OF CHINA has the most extensive network in the country. Several other major banks operate nationwide, including the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China, the China Construction Bank, and China Merchants Bank. Banks are normally open 9am–noon and 2pm–4:30pm or 5pm Monday to Friday, but there are variations between places, and some banks are open on Saturdays. All banks remain closed for the first three days of the Chinese New Year, with reduced hours during other Chinese holidays.

AUTOMATED TELLERS

AUTOMATED TELLER Machines (ATMs) that accept foreign cards are common in Hong Kong and Macau, but scarce in mainland China, so it is best not to rely on them. ATMs attached to international networks such as PLUS, CIRRUS, and MAESTRO can be found in larger cities such as Beijing, Shanghai, Guangzhou, and Shenzhen, often at airports, major branches of the Bank of China, and five-star hotels. Some ATMs also dispense cash against credit cards. Cash withdrawn from ATMs is subject to the same exchange rate as credit cards, and there may be a limit to how much you can withdraw per day.

Hong Kong & Shanghai Banking Corporation (HSBC) ATMs

CHANGING MONEY

CHINESE CURRENCY is non-convertible; it is not widely available internationally and cannot be used outside the country. You will have to exchange your money in China (most major currencies are accepted), and then convert any left-over renminbi back before you leave. You can exchange currency at banks and international airports and most decent hotels will change money for guests. All exchange operations are linked to the Bank of China so rates do not vary between them. Keep exchange receipts so that you can re-convert any surplus renminbi before leaving China. The Chinese "black market" for exchanging foreign currency offers only marginally better rates than banks. Dealing with the shady characters involved is not worth the hassle or risk, and you may end up with counterfeit renminbi.

Hong Kong dollars are convertible and available outside the country. They are accepted in Macau and most southern Special Economic Zones.

CREDIT CARDS

CREDIT CARDS are widely accepted in upmarket restaurants and hotels and in large tourist shops, but always check before attempting to make a purchase that your foreign card is accepted. The accepted cards are MasterCard, Visa, Japan Credit Bureau (JCB), Diners Club, and American Express. Air tickets

DIRECTORY

BANK OF CHINA

Beijing

Asia Pacific Building,
8 Yabao Lu, Chaoyang
District, 100020.
1 Fuxing Men Nei Dajie,
100818.

24-hr ATMs

Arrivals Hall, Capital Airport.
Corner of Sundongan Plaza,
Wangfujing Dajie.
Corner of Oriental Plaza,
1 Dongchang'an Jie.

Shanghai

39/F, Bank of China
Tower, 200 Yincheng Rd,
Central, Pudong, 200120.

Hong Kong

2A Des Voeux Road,
Central.
24–28 Carnarvon Road,
Tsim Sha Tsui.

HSBC

Beijing

Block A, Beijing COFCO
Plaza 8,
Jianguo Men Nei Dajie,

Dong Cheng District,
100005.

Shanghai

HSBC Tower,
101 Ying Cheng East Rd,
Pudong, 200120.

24-hr ATMs
Shanghai Center, 1376
Nanjing Xi Lu.

CITIBANK

Shanghai

Marine Tower,
1 Pudong Avenue,
Pudong, 200120.

24-hr ATMs

Adjacent to the Peace
Hotel, Zhongshan Dong Lu.

AMERICAN EXPRESS

Beijing

Room 2101,
China World Tower One,
China World Trade Center,
1 Jianguo Men Wai Dajie,
100004.

Shanghai

Room 206, Retail Plaza,
Shanghai Center, 200040.

can be bought by credit card from the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) offices, but train tickets have to be paid for in cash. Cash advances can be made on credit cards at the Bank of China.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

TRAVELER'S CHECKS are safer to carry than cash and offer a better exchange rate, but you will have to pay a commission. All major brands are accepted in China, and American Express and Visa are the most widely used. They can be encashed at major branches of the Bank of China, and at larger hotels, but are not accepted at most hotels and restaurants. Keep the proof of purchase slips and a record of the serial numbers in case of loss or theft. Hold on to encashment slips, so you can convert spare renminbi to another currency before leaving the country.

CURRENCY

CHINA'S CURRENCY is called yuan, also known as renminbi, literally People's Currency. One yuan divides into 10 jiao, which divides into 10 almost worthless fen. In colloquial Chinese, jiao is called mao, and yuan is kuai. The most common coins include 1 yuan, 5 jiao, and 1 jiao, while the bills in circulation are 1, 2, and 5 jiao, and 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50, and 100 yuan. There are also some fen coins and notes, but this tiny denomination is rarely accepted. Try not to acquire too many damaged notes, as they may be difficult to get rid of. Counterfeiting is widespread, and shopkeepers regularly scrutinize large denominations. Hong Kong dollars divide into 100 cents, and Macanese patacas into 100 avos.

Bank Notes

The more recently minted bills have Mao Zedong on one side and a well-known heritage sight on the other. The older bills depict the traditional dress of various ethnic minorities.

5-yuan note

20-yuan note

100-yuan note

1-yuan note

10-yuan note

50-yuan note

Coins

Chinese coins are not widely circulated. There is a 1 yuan coin, some jiao denominations, as well as tiny and lightweight fen.

5 jiao

1 jiao

1 yuan

Communications

公用电话

Sign for a public telephone

CHINA HAS AN EFFICIENT postal network with a variety of services, including registered post and express mail. Telecommunication systems are reasonably advanced and international telephone calls can be made from all but the cheapest hotels. The internet is hugely popular, and cafés with access are widespread. The government, however, polices the net, and websites that it considers controversial may be blocked. Foreign newspapers and magazines are sold in five-star hotel bookstores, but these may be censored as well.

Wheelchair-accessible phone booth, Beijing

INTERNATIONAL & LOCAL TELEPHONE CALLS

INTERNATIONAL PHONE calls can be made from most hotels, telephone boxes, and offices of China Telecom. Card phones that accept a wide variety of phonecards are available in large cities, and are the cheapest way of making domestic and international calls. IC (Integrated Circuit) cards come in denominations of ¥20, ¥50, and ¥100, and are largely used for domestic calls. They can also be used for international calls, though the rates are not very good. IP (Internet Phone) cards come in denominations of ¥100 and offer the cheapest rates for international calls.

If the local cellphone network is compatible with your own phone, you can continue to use it in China. It can be cheaper, however, to buy a phone and SIM card while you are in the country.

Renting a cell phone is an expensive option and tricky to arrange in China. Rent one from a company at home and take it with you.

E-MAIL & INTERNET FACILITIES

PERSONAL COMPUTER ownership is still very limited in China, so internet cafés (wangba) are found just about everywhere. Many are no more than hole-in-the-walls, and the numbers have dwindled somewhat since licensing regulations became stricter following a spate of fires. You will find the greatest number of cafés clustered around university campuses and in residential neighborhoods. You can also get online at China Telecom offices. Unless you need to get online urgently, avoid using hotel business centers or internet cafés aimed at tourists, as they are generally over-priced. China polices the internet, so access to certain sites and content is prohibited. The government has banned access to many supposedly politically sensitive sites, although newspaper sites are generally available.

POSTAL SERVICES

THE POSTAL SERVICE in China is, for the most part, reliable, and the domestic service is reasonably fast. It takes less than a day for mail to reach local destinations, two or more days to inland destinations, while the international postal service takes up to 10 days to send airmail and postcards overseas. Visitors can send mail by standard or registered post (guabaoxin), while EMS (Express Mail Service) is a reliable way to send packages and documents abroad and within the country.

Main post offices are open seven days a week, from 8am to 8pm, while smaller ones usually close earlier or for lunch, and remain shut on the weekends. Large hotels usually have post desks.

Take your mail to the post office, rather than dropping it in a mailbox. It will help postal staff sort your letter if you write the country's name in Chinese characters. Aerograms and packaging materials for parcels are available at post offices.

Reliable poste restante services are available all over China. You will need some form of identification – preferably your passport – to retrieve your mail. Envelopes should be addressed with the surname underlined and in

Aztec, one of the largest cyber cafés in Shanghai

A choice of Chinese newspapers on display at a newsstand capitals. Chinese addresses always start with the country, then the province, city, street, house number, and name of recipient. The post code should be written at the end.

COURIER SERVICES

COURIER SERVICES are widely available, but less so in small towns and remote areas. While it is preferable to send large, bulky items by regular land, sea, or air cargo, important letters, documents, and smaller parcels are best sent through a courier agency, even though it may be more expensive. United Parcel Service (UPS), Federal Express, and DHL Worldwide Express are international courier agencies with a wide network.

NEWSPAPERS & MAGAZINES

THE DRY as dust China Daily is China's official English language newspaper, but it is very short on substance. A selection of international newspapers and magazines can be found at tourist hotel bookstores including the International Herald Tribune, the Financial Times, Time, Newsweek, and the Economist. Imported English-language newspapers still come under the censor's knife, with the odd page missing. Online newspapers are not usually blocked, but online news organizations such as the BBC are. In Beijing, Shanghai, Tianjin, Guangzhou, and other large cities, look out for expat entertainment and culture magazines, which offer the best news on local events.

Mail box, Beijing

TELEVISION & RADIO

THE STATE-RUN television network, Chinese Central Television (CCTV), has two English-language channels. CCTV9 is tolerable despite its biased news and bland program content. Some English programs are also broadcast on CCTV4. Cable and satellite television is only available in top-end hotels and diplomatic compounds, so you will not find BBC News 24 or CNN everywhere. Chinese programs

DIRECTORY

DHL Worldwide Express
☎ (010) 6466 2211 or 800 810 8000, Beijing.
☎ (021) 6536 2900 or 800 810 8000, Shanghai.

Federal Express
☎ (010) 6561 2003 or 800 810 2338, Beijing.
☎ (021) 6237 5134, Shanghai.

General Post Office
 134 Changjiang Lu, Dalian.
 Near Bell Tower, Bei Dajie, Xi'an.

International Post Office
 Jianguo Men Bei Dajie, Beijing.
 Sichuan Bei Lu, Shanghai.

United Parcel Service
☎ (010) 6593 2932, Beijing.
☎ (021) 6391 5555, Shanghai.

range from historical costume dramas and tepid soaps to domestic travel, wildlife programs, war films, and heavily biased news programs.

There is also a wide Chinese-language radio network, but only a few local English-language programs. You will need a shortwave radio to pick up the BBC World Service, Voice of America, and other international programs. Bad reception of BBC World Service programs in Chinese, however, suggests some kind of artificial disruption of the radio signal.

USEFUL DIALING CODES & NUMBERS

- To call China from abroad, dial your international access code, China's country code (86), the area code omitting the first 0, followed by the local number.
- Neither Hong Kong nor Macau have area codes; they only have country codes – 852 and 853 respectively.
- To make an inter-city call, dial the area code of that city and the local number. For Beijing, dial 010; Shanghai, 021; Guangzhou, 020; Chongqing, 023; Kunming 0871.
- To make a local call, omit the area code.
- To make an international call from China, dial 00, the country code, the area code omitting any initial 0, and the local number.
- Country codes: UK 44; France 33; USA & Canada 1; Australia 61; Ireland 353; New Zealand 64; South Africa 27; Japan 81.
- Dial 115 for international directory assistance.
- Dial 114 for local directory enquiries in Chinese; dial the area code followed by 114 for numbers in another town.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

MOST VISITORS to China arrive by air, though overland routes exist with train links to neighboring Russia, Mongolia, Kazakhstan, and Vietnam, and a bus link to Pakistan. It is also possible to arrive by sea; there are regular ferries from Japan and South Korea to China. Traveling within the country – even to remote areas – is possible by air, train, road, and, on a few routes, by boat. China has a huge rail network, although tickets – especially for sleeping berths – can be rare during the holiday periods. Bus travel is improving, with buses covering the entire country, and an increasing number of “luxury” buses that offer reasonable comfort. Mired in bureaucracy, renting a car is not recommended; foreigners are restricted from driving in many areas and the condition of many roads is very poor.

Arriving in China with luggage

ARRIVING BY AIR

ALL MAJOR international airlines fly to China. Air China, the country’s international carrier, has quite basic service and facilities, but has a near-spotless safety record and its flights, to most of the world’s major airports, are competitively priced. North American and European carriers such as United Airlines, British Airways, Virgin, Lufthansa, KLM, and Air France, have regular flights to some, or all, of China’s three main – and most sophisticated – airports at Hong Kong, Shanghai, and Beijing. Flights to the other parts of the Far East, Australia, and New Zealand are offered by Singapore Airlines, Japan Airlines, All Nippon Airways, Korean Air, Qantas, Cathay Pacific, Air New Zealand, and others. Cheap flights to China are also available via Air China, China Eastern, Aeroflot (via Moscow), and Malaysia Airlines (via Kuala Lumpur). Virgin currently only flies to Shanghai, while British Airways is planning to add Shanghai to its Beijing and Hong Kong routes.

INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS & AIRPORTS

CHINA’S THREE main international airports are at Hong Kong, Beijing, and Shanghai. The Chinese government is investing a considerable amount of money to provide its international airports with state-of-the-art features. While there are already two impressive terminals at Beijing Capital Airport, a third one is under way, scheduled to be ready before 2008, in time for the Beijing Olympics. In 1999, Pudong Airport was built in Shanghai, making it the first city in China to have two international airports. Macau, too, has a swanky international airport on Taipa Island, although most visitors arrive via boat from Hong Kong. Other international airports offering flights to overseas destinations include Changchun (Tokyo), Dalian (Seoul and Tokyo), Guangzhou (Kuala Lumpur, Los Angeles, Sydney, Singapore, Paris, and other destinations), Guilin (Seoul, Fukuoka, Kuala Lumpur, and Singapore), Harbin (Los Angeles, Seoul, Khabarovsk, and Vladivostok), Kunming (Bangkok), Lhasa (Kathmandu), Qingdao (Osaka, Seoul, and Singapore), Shenyang (Khabarovsk, Osaka, and Seoul), Tianjin (Nagoya, Osaka, and Seoul), Xi’an (Fukuoka, Hiroshima, Niigata, Nagoya, and Seoul), Xiamen (Kuala Lumpur, Manila, Singapore, and Osaka), and Ürümqi (Almaty, Bishkek, Islamabad, Moscow, Novosibirsk, and Tashkent).

AIR FARES

AIR FARES VARY according to the airline and the season. The peak season for international flights to China is between June and September, when ticket prices are most expensive. It can also be harder to find reasonably priced tickets during the holidays: Chinese New Year, the first week of May, and the first week of October. While flying indirectly to China via another country is cheaper than flying direct, traveling by a Chinese airline such as Air China or China Eastern will be cheaper than flying by any other international airline. Plenty of discount tickets are available for long-term travel, which are valid for 12 months with multiple stopovers and open dates. Search on the internet for the best deals. Numerous travel agencies across the world have websites, making it easy to compare prices. However, if you're planning to bid for last-minute tickets online, you need to be sure that you can travel on the dates specified.

Buses dropping off travelers at Departures, Beijing Airport

ON ARRIVAL

ON THE AIRPLANE, visitors are given two forms to complete: an immigration form and a health form, both of which have to be submitted along with their passport at the airport immigration counter.

International airports in China offer a limited range of facilities, but you will find foreign exchange counters, ATMs, public telephones, left-luggage services, restaurants (though rather over-priced), shops, and toilets. Airport tourist information centers in China are of varying degrees of usefulness, and are often manned by staff who speak poor English.

GETTING FROM THE AIRPORT

AIRPORTS ARE LINKED TO the city by express train or by bus routes which make several stops in town. Avoid the overpriced taxi touts who try and force their services on foreign visitors. Instead, head for the taxi rank where trips into town are charged by the meter. Four- and five-star hotels usually run shuttle buses to their hotels and the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) runs buses to their office in town.

CHECK-IN

THE CHECK-IN time for international flights is officially two hours before departure. Most passengers are allowed 40 pounds (20 kg) of baggage, while first-class passengers

International departure tax receipt for 90 yuan may be allowed 66 pounds (30 kg). One additional item of hand luggage weighing up to 11 pounds (5 kg) is also usually permitted. Baggage allowance depends on the destination, and travelers to North America are generally allowed more luggage. If you are carrying heavy luggage, check with your airline to make sure that your luggage is within the weight limit, as excess baggage charges can be very high.

DEPARTURE TAX

UNTIL RECENTLY, departure taxes from Beijing and Shanghai had to be paid in cash at the airport (90 and 50 yuan respectively). Check with your travel agent whether your ticket includes departure tax, and be prepared to pay at the airport if not.

DIRECTORY

AIRLINE OFFICES

Air China

T (010) 6601 7755, Beijing.
F (021) 6269 2999, Shanghai.
W www.airchina.com.cn

Air France

T (010) 6588 1388, Beijing.
W www.airfrance.com

All Nippon Airways

T (010) 6505 3311, Beijing.
W www.anaskyweb.com

British Airways

T (010) 8511 5599, Beijing.
F (0852) 2822 9000, Hong Kong.
W www.britishairways.com

Cathay Pacific

T (0852) 2747 1888, Hong Kong.
W www.cathaypacific.com

KLM

T (010) 6505 3505, Beijing.
W www.klm.com

Lufthansa

T (010) 6465 4488, Beijing.
W www.lufthansa.com

Northwest Airlines

T (010) 6505 3505, Beijing.
W www.nwa.com

Qantas

T (010) 6467 4794, Beijing.
F (0852) 2822 9000, Hong Kong.
W www.qantas.com.au

United Airlines

F (0852) 2810 8616, Hong Kong.
W www.united.com

Virgin Atlantic

F (0852) 2532 6060, Hong Kong.
W www.virgin-atlantic.com

AIRPORT	INFORMATION	DISTANCE TO CITY CENTER	AVERAGE JOURNEY TIME
Beijing Capital Airport	(010) 6457 1666	16 miles (25 km) northeast	40 mins (taxi)
Hongqiao Airport (Shanghai)	(021) 6268 8899	12 miles (19 km) west	30 mins (taxi)
Pudong Airport (Shanghai)	(021) 6834 1000	28 miles (45 km) east	45 mins (taxi)
Hong Kong International Airport	(0852) 2181 0000	20 miles (32 km) west	25 mins (train)
Macau International Airport	(0853) 861 111	3 miles (5 km) northwest	15 mins (taxi)

Domestic Air Travel

ALTHOUGH TRAVELING BY AIR is more expensive than traveling by train, it is often the most convenient and comfortable way of covering the long distances involved in Chinese travel. In fact, if you need to get quickly from one end of the country to the other, there is often no alternative. The extensive domestic flight network involves numerous regional airlines flying to over 150 airports. The main cities of Beijing, Hong Kong, Shanghai, Dalian, Guangzhou, and Xi'an are particularly well connected to airports throughout the country. Domestic air tickets are straight-forward to buy, so wait until you arrive and then shop around for discounts. Flight cancellations and delays due to bad weather are common, especially in winter and on less traveled routes in the more remote provinces, so remember to reconfirm your ticket and the time of your flight.

DOMESTIC AIRLINES

A FEW PRIVATE AIRLINES operate from Hong Kong and Macau, but most other airlines in China are administered by the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC). There are currently about ten domestic carriers operating in China. (The initials in parentheses are the airline code or flight-number prefix.) Some of the domestic airlines, such as China Southern (CZ), and China Eastern (MU), also fly international routes. You can buy domestic flights from these airlines overseas, but rates are far better when booked in China. Other domestic airlines include Sichuan Airlines (3U), Shanghai Airlines (FM), Shenzhen Airlines (4G), Hainan Airlines (HU), and Xiamen Airlines (MF).

Lack of competition in the industry has given the airlines little impetus to improve standards or customer service. Meals on board are sometimes served hot, but are often limited to a sandwich. Announcements are both in Chinese and English if there are foreign nationals on board. In-flight service remains brusque, and foreign visitors sometimes feel neglected, but standards are slowly improving.

Air China's international flying safety record is good, but the safety record of domestic airlines remains below that of developed countries.

Older aircraft are sometimes used in China's peripheral regions. Before you choose to book with a particular airline, you may wish to ask what kind of plane you will be boarding. The baggage allowance is 44 pounds (20 kg) for economy class and 66 pounds (30 kg) for first and business class. You are also allowed up to 11 pounds (5 kg) of hand luggage, although airlines almost never weigh it. The charge for excess baggage is 1 percent of the full fare per 2.2 pounds (1 kg).

DOMESTIC AIRPORTS

AIR TRAVEL IS BECOMING much more convenient in China as new airports are being built and old ones renovated and expanded. State-of-the-art facilities are now available at Beijing Capital Airport, Shanghai's Pudong International Airport, and the Hong Kong International Airport at Chek Lap Kok. These modern airports easily compare with the best airports in the world. Airports at some major tourist cities, such as Xi'an, also sport up-to-date facilities. Despite the burgeoning air industry, some airports are badly in need of modernization, due to regional gaps in investment.

GETTING TO & FROM THE AIRPORT

THE DISTANCE from airports to city centers varies considerably in China, so factor this into your journey time. Also, always allow time for unforeseen delays en route. In many large cities and towns, you can reach the airport or travel from the airport into town on a CAAC bus, which departs from and arrives at the CAAC office in town. In larger cities, such as Beijing, Shanghai, and Hong Kong, dedicated bus and train services run from town to the airport. The Hong Kong International Airport has a state-of-the-art Airport Express rail link to both Kowloon and Central, while

Flight attendants aboard Sichuan Airlines en route to Chengdu

Beijing Capital Airport has only bus and taxi links, although a rail link is currently under construction. Shanghai's Pudong Airport is connected to the metro system by a high-speed Maglev train.

Taxis wait for passengers outside the arrivals hall. Make sure you head for the taxi rank and avoid the numerous touts who will try to direct you towards their own car. Insist on the driver using the meter. If you have booked accommodation, check whether your hotel offers transport to and from the airport.

CHECK-IN

FOR MOST domestic flights, the check-in time is at least an hour and a half before departure, although very few passengers arrive that early. Make sure all your bags are tagged, and do not pack sharp objects, such as scissors, tweezers, nail files, or knitting needles, in your hand luggage. The airport tax for domestic flights is usually ¥50, and is paid at the time of purchasing the ticket.

Domestic departure tax receipt for 50 yuan

TICKETS, RESERVATIONS & CANCELLATIONS

EACH DOMESTIC airline has a booking office in most cities, as well as a reservation counter at each airport. Tickets can be booked through ticket offices, travel agents, or the travel desks of some of the better hotels – you should not be charged a booking fee. Travel agents tend to offer the best discounts. Credit cards are accepted by many travel agents and CAAC offices. Visitors are required to show their passports when purchasing tickets. There is generally no shortage of tickets unless you are flying between Hong Kong and a mainland destination, except in the run up to and during the Chinese New Year, and the week-long holiday periods after May 1 and October 1, when it is advisable to book well in advance.

A combined international and domestic timetable is published by CAAC in both English and Chinese. These publications can be bought at most airline offices and CAAC outlets. Individual airlines also print their own timetables, available at booking offices throughout the country. Flight schedules are revised in April and October each year.

Ticket prices are calculated according to a one-way fare, and a return ticket is simply double the single fare. Discounts on official fares are the norm, so it is best to get with travel agents for good deals. You are likely to get a better deal on a flight if you buy your ticket from an agent in the city you are departing from. Business class tickets cost 25 percent more than economy, while first class tickets cost 60 percent more. Children over the age of 12 are charged adult fares, while there are special discounted fares for younger children and infants.

If you wish to return or change your air ticket, you can get a refund as long as you cancel at least 24 hours before departure, and return your ticket to the same agent who sold it to you. Even if you miss your flight, you are entitled to a refund of 50 percent of the full fare. You may be asked to buy travel insurance from your ticketing agent. It is generally not worthwhile, as the claim amount is very low.

Road signs to the airport, Hong Kong

DIRECTORY

CAAC OFFICES

Beijing

☎ (010) 6256 7811.

Lhasa

☎ (0891) 633 3446.

Luoyang

☎ (0379) 393 1120.

Zhengzhou

☎ (0371) 599 1111.

CHINA EASTERN AIRLINES

www.ce-air.com

Beijing

☎ (010) 6456 5368.

Hong Kong

☎ (0852) 2861 0322.

Shanghai

☎ (021) 6247 5953 (domestic).

Suzhou

☎ (0512) 6522 2788.

CHINA SOUTHERN AIRLINES

www.cs-air.com

Beijing

☎ (010) 6567 2203.

Guangzhou

☎ (020) 8668 2000.

Haikou

☎ (0898) 6534 9433.

Hong Kong

☎ (0852) 2861 0322.

DRAGONAIR

www.dragonair.com

Beijing

☎ (010) 6518 2533.

Haikou

☎ (0898) 6855 0312.

Hong Kong

☎ (0852) 3193 3888.

Shanghai

☎ (021) 6375 6375.

Xi'an

☎ (029) 8426 9288.

SICHUAN AIRLINES

www.scal.com.cn

Beijing

☎ (010) 6606 8763.

Chengdu

☎ (028) 8888 8888.

Toll free

☎ 800 86699.

Traveling by Train

CHINA IS A VAST COUNTRY and, for many travelers, train journeys are an excellent way to see the countryside and get to know the people. The Chinese rail network is extensive, with tracks running over 32,300 miles (52,000 km). Trains in China are punctual, fast, and relatively safe, and are a reliable transport option. Buying reserved tickets, however, can often be problematic, and since trains are usually crowded, it is advisable to either buy your ticket well in advance, or ask your hotel or travel agent to arrange your bookings.

THE RAILWAY NETWORK

SINCE THE COST of air travel is beyond the reach of most Chinese, traveling by train is the preferred alternative, especially over long distances. China has an efficient and extensive rail network that covers every province, barring two – Hainan Island, where a very limited rail network without passenger services exists, and Tibet, which will soon be connected to Qinghai by the railway line currently under construction, and due for completion in 2007. Hong Kong is also connected to mainland China by rail. Depending on which type of ticket you purchase, Chinese trains can be quite comfortable, and there are fast services running between most large towns and cities.

TRAINS & TIMETABLES

ALTHOUGH TRAINS in China are commendably punctual, trying to decipher a Chinese timetable is an impossible task, unless you can read Chinese. Timetables are published in April and October each year, and are available at railway station

Platform food stall, Yinchuan train station ticket offices. Stations can be frustrating places, and visitors will need patience to deal with them. Trying to locate English-speaking staff on platforms is difficult, even in large cities such as Beijing and Shanghai. Telephoning stations with enquiries is pointless unless you speak Chinese.

Each train is identified by a train number, written on the outside of each carriage, that indicates its route and destination. As a rule, incoming and outgoing trains running between two destinations are numbered sequentially. For example, train K79 travels from Shanghai to Kunming, while train K80 runs from Kunming to Shanghai.

Trains are of three types: those with numbers prefixed by the letter "T" or "K" are express (te kuai) or fast (kuai) trains, and those whose numbers have no prefix are ordinary (pu kuai) trains, with frequent stops. Express trains have carriages of all classes, and are the most modern and comfortable, with few stops and superior services. Double-decker trains with soft-seat carriages run on a few short intercity routes such as Beijing–Tianjin or Shanghai–Hangzhou. All long-distance trains are equipped with sleepers.

There is no smoking permitted within compartments, except in hard-seat carriages, although most trains allow passengers to smoke in the corridors. Most trains have dining cars, and staff will continuously push trolleys through the carriages selling noodles, snacks, mineral water, coffee, and newspapers. The noise level in carriages is often very high, as music and announcements are regularly broadcast over the speakers. China's modern fleet of trains are much cleaner than the old ones and have air conditioning. The older trains can be very dingy indeed; prepare yourself for sordid and filthy bathrooms.

CLASSES

CHINESE TRAINS have four classes. The most luxurious class is Soft Sleeper (ruan wo), with four comfortable berths per compartment. Offering more privacy, security, and cleanliness than

Grand Soviet-style Taiyuan train station

Modern glass and steel train station, Changzhou less-expensive classes, soft sleeper tickets are very pricey, and are not much cheaper than air tickets on certain routes.

For long journeys lasting over six hours, Hard Sleeper (ying wo) is the best way to travel. Consequently, these tickets are the hardest to procure, and you'd be lucky to get one on short notice. Hard sleeper can be an economical choice when traveling between cities overnight, as it saves the cost of a night in a hotel.

Carriages consist of doorless compartments, each with six bunks. Tickets are of three types – upper berth (shang pu), middle berth (zhong pu), and lower berth (xia pu), with a small price difference between each. The lowest berth is the most expensive, while the top one is the cheapest. The best berth, however, is the middle one. The upper bunk has little head-room and is closest to the speakers. During the day, the lower bunk acts as seating and fills with fellow passengers. Pillows, sheets, and blankets are provided by the railways, as are two thermos flasks of boiling water, which you can replenish yourself from the massive boiler at the end of each carriage. Once aboard the train, the inspector will exchange your ticket for a metal token, and return the ticket at the end of the journey.

The cheapest class is Hard Seat (ying zuo), which seats three people side-by-side on lightly cushioned seats. Although fine for short journeys, spending more than four hours in a hard-seat carriage can be quite unpleasant. Carriages are usually crowded and dirty, the speakers blare endlessly, lights remain on at night, and compartments are filled with smoke. It is possible to upgrade (bu piao) once aboard the train, if there are seats available in the class of your choice. Note that hard-seat tickets bought on the same day are usually unreserved.

Available only on certain routes, Soft Seat (ruan zuo) carriages are much more comfortable and spacious than hard seat, and seat two people side-by-side in numbered seats. Tickets cost about as much as hard sleeper.

TRAIN TICKETS, FARES & RESERVATIONS

WHEN BUYING TICKETS, it is essential to plan in advance. On most routes, it is vital to buy tickets at least two or three days before you travel, although tickets are available about five days before departure. On short routes, you may be able to secure a ticket just before departure, but it is safest to buy in advance. Tickets on longer routes are certain to sell out, especially those for hard sleepers.

Train fares are calculated according to the class and the distance traveled. All tickets are one-way, so you will need to buy another ticket for the return journey. Joining the crowds at station ticket counters can be very trying, so unless the station has a separate ticket office for foreign visitors, which is the case at Beijing train station, consider asking your hotel, tourist office, or travel agent to buy tickets for you – they should be more than happy to do so for a small fee.

Black-market operators buy tickets in bulk, and then resell them at a mark-up outside railway stations. If you're buying tickets on the black-market, check the dates of travel, destination, and class printed on the ticket carefully.

Before boarding the train, visitors wait in a hall before filing past ticket-checkers to the platform. Retain your ticket as inspectors will ask to see it again, just before you reach your destination. Note that getting hold of tickets during the Chinese New Year (Spring Festival), and the May and October holiday periods can be very difficult, and it is inadvisable to travel during these times.

Booking office sign, Zhenjiang train station,

A uniformed platform guard minding a double-decker train, Dalian

Traveling by Bus & Ferry

CHINA'S EXTENSIVE NETWORK of road transport connects most cities, as well as distant, rural areas. Bus travel is essential for reaching places that are not served by train. Tickets are both easier to procure and are cheaper than train tickets, and there is a wider choice of departure times, stops, and itineraries. The absence of a national operator, however, means that numerous competing businesses exist, coupled with minimal regulation. Furthermore, driving is often rash, vehicles are poorly maintained, and road conditions can be bad, especially in the more remote areas. A small network of passenger ferries serves ports along China's coastline and some of the inland waterways.

LONG-DISTANCE BUSES

THERE ARE STILL many parts of China that are not accessible by train, making it necessary to make the long haul by road. In Fujian, where rail services exist, but are infuriatingly indirect, bus travel makes a lot of sense. In Guizhou and Guangxi, the more interesting areas inhabited by ethnic minorities are only accessible by bus and the tropical area of Xishuangbanna in Yunnan is best explored by bus or taxi. You will also need to take a bus (unless you are flying) to reach Lijiang in northern Yunnan and all of western Sichuan. Getting around Tibet will require long bus journeys, as will exploring the northwestern frontier of China if you want to get beyond the towns on the main train line. Numerous sights throughout China are off rail lines.

Many smooth, wide highways now link some of the major cities, making some bus travel, particularly on the east coast, reasonably comfortable. In some cases, the bus is now a faster way to reach your destination than the train.

All cities and most large towns have at least one long-distance bus station (changtu qiche zhan) where state-run buses arrive and depart.

Private bus firms may have set up a few of their own bus stations in town; often, one of these is located next to the train station. Other stations may be located on the edges of town – the North or East Bus Station will usually serve destinations to the north or east. Determining which of these stations serves the place you are trying to reach can be tricky, so you will need to do plenty of asking around. Destinations are displayed in Chinese characters on the front of buses.

Long-distance buses vary enormously in quality, age, and comfort. You may find that several buses are running along the same route, so make sure you are sold a ticket for the fastest, most comfortable bus, or cheapest bus, if you prefer. Note that in general, long-haul bus journeys are taxing. Road conditions are often poor and road works are common, slowing the journey considerably. Drivers can be reckless and bus crashes are distressingly frequent. The noise level can be deafening, with music blaring and the driver leaning on the horn, so take earplugs. Most buses are choked with cigarette smoke.

Ordinary buses (putong che) are the cheapest and have basic wooden, or lightly padded, seats. These buses stop often, so progress can be slow. They provide little space for baggage – there's no room under the seats and the luggage racks are minuscule. Suitcases and backpacks are usually stacked next to the driver, and you may be charged.

Sleeper buses (wopu che) speed through the night making few stops, so reach their destination in good time. They usually have two tiers of bunks, or seats that recline almost flat. The older models can be quite dirty. Lower bunks (xia pu) cost more than the upper bunks (shang pu), but are worth the extra cost as you are less likely to be thrown from your bed when the driver takes a corner at speed.

Shorter routes are served by rattling minibuses (xiao ba), which depart only when every spare space has been filled by a paying passenger. Crammed to the roof, minibus trips can be quite uncomfortable.

Express buses (kuai che) are the best way to travel. Some are luxury (hao hua), have air conditioning, and enforce a no-smoking policy. Luggage is stowed in a hold, which is fairly safe, given the few stops that are made en route.

In certain parts of China – in Gansu and Sichuan, for instance – you may be required to purchase insurance from the People's Insurance Company of China (PICC) before being allowed on a bus. Usually, however, it is included in the price of the ticket. This insurance waives

Bus stop, Hong Kong

A basic long-distance bus (putong che) awaiting passengers, Qinghai

A ferry on the Huangpu River, sailing through Shanghai any responsibility of the government bus company should you be injured in a bus crash; it does not cover you in the event of an accident.

BUS TICKETS & FARES

TRAVELING by road is generally much cheaper than traveling by train. Tickets are sold at long-distance bus stations and, unless you are hoping for a seat at the front of a luxury bus, do not need to be bought in advance. Tickets for private buses and minibuses are either purchased on board the bus or from touts nearby. Main bus stations invariably have computerized ticket offices, and the queues are much shorter than those at train stations.

Promotional river cruise sign outside tourist office

Canal between Suzhou and Hangzhou, and Wuxi and Hangzhou (see p217).

Popular coastal ferry routes include boats to Hainan Island from ports in the province of Guangdong (including Guangzhou) and Beihai in Guangxi. A large number of vessels ply between Hong Kong and Macau, many of which are high-speed and operate round the clock. Macau is also connected to ports in Guangdong, while Hong Kong is linked to Zhuhai and several ports on the Pearl River delta. Within Hong Kong, a medley of craft run to the outlying islands. There are quite a few vessels connecting Hong Kong with the rest of China, although services are becoming less frequent.

Shanghai is currently linked to various towns and cities along the Yangzi River, including Nanjing and Wuhan. Because of the prohibitively long overland routes, ferries link the booming northeastern city of Dalian with Yantai and Tianjin. Yantai and Weihai on the eastern tip of Shandong peninsula are accessible from Shanghai, Dalian, and Tianjin. Note that ferry timetables change frequently and services may have been added or terminated.

Several international sea routes link China to other countries. From Japan, Kobe is connected to both Tianjin and Shanghai on the east coast, while ferries also link Osaka with Shanghai. From South Korea, the port of Incheon is connected to the Chinese ports of Dalian, Weihai, Qingdao, and Tianjin.

FERRIES & BOATS

A SMALL NETWORK of coastal routes survives in China, and vessels still ply the Yangzi River, but the increased convenience of traveling by air, road, and rail has reduced the variety and frequency of sea- and river-ferry sailings in China.

The most popular river route is the trip along the Yangzi between Chongqing and Yichang, through the Three Gorges (see pp352-4). An overnight ferry service for tourists runs along the Grand

Tourist boats docked on the vast Qinghai Lake

Local Transport in Cities

Hong Kong's
MTR logo

TRANSPORT OPTIONS vary greatly between cities in China. Many of the largest metropolises have complex networks with subway systems, which, in many cases, are in the process of being extensively expanded. In Beijing and Shanghai, the subway (ditie) is the best way to get around, while in Hong Kong, the transport system is well integrated, and subways, trains, and buses are all convenient options. In most cities, buses are slow and usually packed, but are very cheap. Taxis (chuzu qiche) are a necessity for most travelers, and, despite the language barrier and misunderstandings with drivers, are the most convenient way to get around. Bicycles once ruled the roads of China's cities and although not as popular today, they are still one of the best ways to explore.

BEIJING'S SUBWAY

THE SUBWAY SYSTEM in Beijing is undergoing major development in preparation for the 2008 Olympic Games. Four lines are already built, numerous lines are planned, and lines to Beijing Capital Airport are under construction.

The subway is a swift way to get around this spread-out city. The system is easy to use, although walks between lines at interchange stations can be long. Currently there are two different fares: one ticket for ¥3 covers trips on lines 1 and 2; the ¥5 ticket covers lines 2 and 13. Buy your paper ticket at the ticket booth near the entrance. Tickets are undated, so, if you are in Beijing for a few days and you plan to keep using lines 1 and 2, it makes sense to buy a few. Show your ticket to the attendants at the entrance to the platform. Line 13 has automated ticket gates, as will any other lines that open up in the next few years.

SHANGHAI'S SUBWAY

THE SMALL, yet efficient, Shanghai subway system is clean and new, with the first line built in 1995. Lines 1 and 2 are most useful to the tourist; the raised Line 3, or Pearl Line, travels the western outskirts of the city. Fares for Lines 1 and

2 range between ¥2 and ¥4, depending on the number of stops traveled. Check the map to determine your fare and then buy a ticket from the booth or machine. You can also buy ¥50 pre-paid tickets. Put your ticket into the slot at the electronic barrier and the gates will open. Retrieve your ticket on the other side of the gate and hold on to it – you will need it to exit at your destination.

The much touted Maglev (magnetic levitation) runs between Pudong Airport and the eastern end of Line 2 and reaches speeds of 270 miles per hour (430 km/h). It may still be faster to take a taxi from the airport because the Maglev is not running very frequently. Check the times of departure.

HONG KONG'S MTR & KCR

INTEGRATED AND efficient, Hong Kong has the best public transportation system in the country. The city is easy to get around using all of its forms of transport – MTR (subway), KCR (overland train), buses, trams, and ferries – and most signage is in English. You can buy single tickets for your journeys, but each type of transit requires a separate ticket. Alternatively, you can buy an Octopus card, an electronic card that allows you to hop on and off most of the system. You can buy these for a minimum of HK$150 including a HK$50 deposit, which is refunded when you return the card. Touch the card to the electronic reader at each ticket collection point and the fare will be deducted from your card. You can easily add credit at MTR and KCR stations.

The underground Mass Transit Railway (MTR) currently has seven lines, with many more planned. The fare increases with distance traveled, except on the Airport Express Line where a higher fee is charged. If you buy a single ticket, insert it into the turnstile and retrieve it on the other side. Hold on to your ticket as you will need it to exit the system. If you have an Octopus card simply touch the card to the yellow reader on the turnstile.

The Kowloon-Canton Railway (KCR) now has three lines that comprehensively cover the New Territories. KCR East Rail was the original line and heads north into mainland China. Do not go past Sheung Shui (the second last stop), if you do not have documentation to enter the mainland.

BUSES & TRAMS

CITY BUS networks are extensive and cheap. The buses (gonggong qiche), however, are almost always overcrowded – so much so that you are unlikely to be able to see out of the windows. These conditions are perfect for thieves, so stay

Motor-rickshaw for hire, Harbin

Bicycles and motor scooters at an intersection, Guangzhou well-aware of your belongings. Consider using buses only for short straight-forward journeys. Avoid them if you are trying to get from one end of town to the other – you are likely to get stuck in traffic.

Bus routes can be tricky to navigate, particularly as most routes and destinations are listed in Chinese only. Hong Kong has the most comfortable and easy to use bus system, although traffic can be as bad here as anywhere else. Hong Kong also has an old tram line that runs from Sheung Wan to Causeway Bay on Hong Kong Island. Dalian has a few trams as well. Maps of bus and tram routes are widely available, especially in and around train stations.

TAXIS

THE BEST WAY to get about in cities that don't have subway systems is by taxi (chuzu qiche). Taxis are found in large numbers in all Chinese cities – often congregating near train stations – and can be hailed easily in the street. Guests staying at hotels can also ask the reception desk to summon a taxi. When arriving at airports, avoid the touts who immediately surround you, and head instead to the taxi rank outside where you are less likely to be overcharged. Also, make sure the driver uses the meter (dabiao) or negotiate a flat rate in advance. Taxis rarely have rear seat belts (anquan dai), so sit in front if you are traveling alone. Few taxi drivers speak English, so it is wise to have your destination written down in Chinese, which the staff at your hotel will gladly do for you.

Fares vary slightly from city to city, but taxis generally offer both good value and convenience. In many cities, different models of cars will have different rates. Tipping the driver is not necessary.

Taxis can also be hired for the day – a convenient way to see sights just out of town.

Agree on a price beforehand, and make sure your driver is clear on the extent of your itinerary.

In Tibet, you may find that hiring a jeep and driver is the only way to get to some sights. It is customary to pay for the driver's lunch.

In smaller towns, motorcycle rickshaws (sanlun motuochu) and bicycle rickshaws (sanlun che) are a convenient and entertaining way to get around town. Do not take these in major cities – they cost about the same as a taxi. In some small towns, they are the only form of transport. Agree on the fare before climbing aboard.

Motorcycle taxis are a very quick way to cover longer distances, although they are really only practical if you are traveling alone with little luggage. Insist on the driver providing you with a helmet.

CYCLING

HIRING A BICYCLE is one of the best ways to explore towns and their environs. Bike lanes are common (although not always respected by drivers) and roadside repair stalls are everywhere. Beijing, with its spread-out sights and flat terrain, is the most cycle-able of the big cities, but if you are not used to cycling in heavy traffic, you may find it an intimidating experience. Make sure that any bike you rent has a lock provided. Handy bike stands are found in big cities and have an attendant to watch the bikes for a nominal fee.

ROAD NAMES

MAIN STREETS, avenues, and thoroughfares are often divided into different sections based on the four cardinal points. For example, Zhongshan Lu (Zhongshan Road) may be divided into Zhongshan Xi Lu (East Road) and Zhongshan Dong Lu (West Road). Similarly, you may also see Zhongshan Bei Lu (North Road) and Zhongshan Nan Lu (South Road). Road names in large cities such as Beijing and Shanghai also display the pinyin translation, but in smaller towns and remote destinations, only Chinese is used. Apart from lu (road), other key words to look out for are jie (street), dajie (avenue, literally “big street”), butong and xiang (lane or historic alleyway).

Officer directing traffic

Taxis and buses on a busy street in the center of Macau

General Index

Page numbers in bold type refer to main entries.

A

Aba Grasslands 343
 Aba Khoja Mausoleum (Kashgar) 512–13
 Abahai 62, 432, 438
 tomb of 439
 Abdur Rahman 491
 Abercrombie and Kent 605, 607
 Aberdeen 322
 Aberdeen, Earl of 322
 Abu Waqas 299, 301
 Acrobats 113
 Acupressure 32
 Acute Mountain Sickness (AMS) 619
 Admission charges 612
 Afghanistan 491
 Agriculture
 desertification 463
 inventions 36
 rice 280–81
 tea plantations 293
 Aidi emperor (Tang dynasty) 52
 Aidi emperor (Western Han dynasty) 52
 AIDS 619
 Air China 625
 Air France 625
 Air pollution 18, 618
 Air travel 624–7
 advance booking 610
 domestic airports 626
 international airports 624, 625
 Ake people 384–5
 Alcohol 615
 Alexander the Great 491
 All Nippon Airways 625
 Alligators 233
 Altai 508
 Altitude sickness 619
 Altyn Mosque (Yarkand) 515
 Alvares, Jorge 327
 Aman Isa Khan
 tomb of 515
 Ambulances 617
 Amdo 479
 American Express 620
Amethyst 218
 Amherst, Lord 63
 Amoy see Xiamen
 Amur river 474
 An Lushan, General 57
 An Lushan rebellion 57, 58
 Ancient Observatory (Beijing) 94–5
 Ancient Pottery Factory (Jingdezhen) 255
 Andi emperor 52
 Anhui province 177, 203
 food and drink 181
 hotels 561

Anhui province (cont.)
 Huizhou architecture 235
 map 203
 restaurants 588–9
 Ani Tsankhung Nunnery (Lhasa) 529
 Animals
 astrology 43 bites 619
 see also Wildlife; Zoos
 Anjue Lamasery (Kangding) 371
 Annoyances 615
 Anping Lu (Shantou) 296
 Anshun 400
 batik 400
 Antique Carpets (Beijing) 112, 113
 Antiques shops 599
 Beijing 112, 113
 customs information 611
 Hong Kong and Macau 330, 331
 Shanghai 200, 201
 Anyang 72, 141, 152
 Aquariums
 Beijing Zoo 99
 Sun Asia Ocean World (Dalian) 444–5
 Archeology
 Peking Man site 111
 Race for the Silk Road Oases 495
 Architecture 34–5
 Beijing's courtyard houses 91
 Dong architecture 421
 earthen dwellings of Yongding 290
 Huizhou architecture 235
 pagodas 165
 Army Day 46, 47
 Arrow Tower (Jian Lou, Beijing) 84
 Street-by-Street map 82
 Arrow Towers (Forbidden City) 89
 Arrow War (1856–58) 63
 Art Museum (Guangzhou) 301
 Arts and crafts
 bamboo 411
 calligraphy 219
 cave paintings of Dunhuang 496–7
 jade 515
 lacquerware 292
 Miao people 406–7
 modern arts 40–41
 porcelain 254–5
 Shanghai 200, 201
 silk 208–9
 traditional arts 38–9
 What to Buy in China 601
 Arts venues
 Beijing 113
 Hong Kong 332, 333
 Ashoka 170
 Astana 505
 Astrology 43

Astronomy
 Ancient Observatory (Beijing) 94–5
 Australian Embassy 617
 Automated teller machines (ATMs) 598, 620
 Autumn in China 46–7
 Avian influenza 619
 Ayurbarwada 52

B

Ba culture 343
 Chongqing 350
 Sanxingdui Museum 360
 tombs 352
 Badaguan (Qingdao) 147
 Badaling 108
 Baggage allowances 625
 Bai Causeway (Hangzhou) 243
 Bai Juyi 28, 243
 Bai Long Dong (Wu Da Lian Chi) 454
 Bai people 24, 343, 373
 Dali 386
 hanging coffins 354
 Nanzhao Kingdom 388
 Bai Ta (Anshun) 400
 Bai Ta (Fuzhou) 292
 Bai Ta (Hohhot) 469
 Bailuzhou Park (Nanjing) 222
 Baima Si (Luoyang) 152
 Baima Ta (Dunhuang) 494
 Baisha 392
 Baishui Tai 395
 Baishikou Shuang Ta 476
 Baisui Gong (Jiuhua Shan) 234
 Baita Shan Gongyuan (Lanzhou) 484
 Baiyi Si (Lanzhou) 485
 Baiyu Hill (Dalian) 445
 Ballet 41
 Bamboo 21, 411
 Bangchuidao Scenic Area 444
 Bank of China 620
 Bank of China (Hong Kong) 310
 Bank of China (Shanghai) 187
 Bank notes 621
 Banking 620–21
 Banla Village 382
 Banquets 578–9
 Banruo Temple (Changchun) 446
 Baoding Shan 357
 carvings of Dazu 356–7
 Baofeng Hu (Wulingyuan) 265
 Baoguang Si 360
 Baoguo Si (Emei Shan) 362
 Baoguo Si (Ningbo) 246
 Baopu Daoist Temple (Hangzhou) 240
 Baoshan 388–9
 Baoshu Ta (Hangzhou) 240
 Baotou 470
 "Barbarians" 72
 Bargaining 598, 615

- Barkhor (Lhasa) 530–31
 Bars 603
 Beijing 113
 Hong Kong 332, 333
 Shanghai 201
 Basketball 604, 607
 Batik
 Anshun 400
 Bayi Park (Nanchang) 250
 Bazaar (Turpan) 504
 Bazi Qiao (Shaoxing) 246
 Beaches 604–5
 Beidaihe 128
 Dalian 444
 Deep Water and Repulse Bays 323
 Gangzaihou Beach (Gulang Yu) 287
 Hainan Island 305
 Qian Bu Sha (Putuo Shan) 249
 Qingdao 147
 Sai Kung Town and Peninsula Beaches (Hong Kong) 320–21
 Stanley 323
 Weihai 149
 Yantai 148
 Yin Tan (Silver Beach) 425
 Beer
 Tsingtao 146
 What to Drink in China 581
 Begging 615
 Bei river 454
 Bei Shan 357
 Bei Shan Si (Xining) 498
 Beidaihe 128, 604
 Beihu Shan (Zhenjiang) 218
 Beihai 425, 604
 Beihai Park (Beijing) 90
 Beijing 73, 79–119
 air travel 625, 627
 banks 620
 city walls 84
 climate 49
 courtyard houses 91
 embassies 617
 entertainment 112–13
 Forbidden City 34, 86–9, 432–3
 hospitals 617
 hotels 554–6
 map 80–81
 in Ming dynasty 61
 Ming Tombs: Chang Ling 104–5
 Olympic Games 604
 Public Security Bureau (PSB) 611
 restaurants 582
 shopping 112–13
 skiing 605
 Street Finder 114–19
 subway 632
 Summer Palace 100–102
 Temple of Heaven 96–7
 Tian'an Men Square: Street-by-Street map 82–3
 Beijing and the North 69–171
 food and drink 76–7
 Great Wall of China 106–8
 Hebei, Tianjin, and Shanxi 121–39
 hotels 554–9
 map 70–71
 Portrait of Beijing and the North 72–3
 restaurants 582–6
 Shaanxi 161–71
 Shandong and Henan 141–59
 Beijing Botanical Gardens 103
 Beijing Curio City 112, 113
 Beijing Natural History Museum 95
 Beijing Opera 74–5, 113, 602
 Beijing Silk Store 112, 113
 Beijing Zoo 99
 Beishan Park (Jilin) 447
 Beisi Ta (Suzhou) 204
 Beiyue Si (Yulong) 392
 Bell Tower (Beijing) 92
 Bell Tower (Nanjing) 226–7
 Bell Tower (Pingyao) 139
 Bell Tower (Wuwei) 490
 Bell Tower (Xi'an) 163
 Bendiwán 394
 Bertolucci, Bernardo 431, 446
 Bethune, Norman 130
 Bezeklik Caves 495, 505
 Bhrikuti, Princess 528, 532, 533
 Bicycles 606, 633
 Big Buddha (Lantau Island) 325
 Big Dragon Pool Falls (Yandang Shan) 247
 Bijia Shan 440
 Bike China Adventures 606, 607
 Bilian Feng (Yangshuo) 418
 Bing Di emperor 53
 Bingling Si 458, 486
 Bingyu Valley 437, 441
 Binyang San Dong (Longmen Caves) 155
 Bird flu 619
 Birds
 Bird and Flower Market (Kunming) 374
 Bird Market (Hong Kong) 317
 Cao Hai 402
 cormorant fishing 418
 cranes 403
 Edward Youde Aviary (Hong Kong) 333
 Mai Po Marshes 321
 Ocean Park (Hong Kong) 323
 Qinghai Hu 499
 specialist holidays 607
 Yingxiong Shan (Gulang Yu) 287
 Zhalong Nature Reserve 452
 see also Wildlife
 Birthday of Tin Hau (Hong Kong) 333
 Bishan Si (Wutai Shan) 136
 Bishu Shanzhuang (Chengde) 123
 Bitá Hai 395
 Bixia Si (Tai Shan) 144
 Biyun Temple (Beijing) 103
 Black Dragon Pool (Lijiang) 380–81, 392
 Black Dragon Pool (Lu Shan) 253
 Black Tiger Spring (Ji'nan) 142
 Bo Gu 257
 Bo Hai (Bo Sea) 72
 Bo Ya 267
 Boats
 ferries 631
 Grand Canal 217
 Li river cruise 416–17
 Yangzi cruise 352–4
 Bodhidharma
 Baoguang Si 360
 Forest of Stelae Museum (Xi'an) 162
 Guangzhou 298, 299
 Shaoguan 303
 Shaolin Boxing 158, 159
 Bon religion 520, 522
 Book shops
 Beijing 112, 113
 Borjigit, Empress 439
 Bourbon Street (Shanghai) 201
 Boutiques 599
 Bouyi people 399, 400
 Boxer Rebellion (1900) 63, 433
 Drum Tower (Beijing) 92
 Empress Cixi and 101
 Qian Men (Beijing) 84
 South Cathedral (Beijing) 85
 Southeast Corner Watchtower (Beijing) 95
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 100
 Bozhou 233
 Braun, Otto 410
 Britain
 The "Great Game" 491, 543
 in Hong Kong 307
 invasion of Tibet 543
 Opium Wars 63, 278
 and Shanghai 183
 tea trade 293
 British Airways 625
 Bronze Age 51
 Bronze Pavilion (Summer Palace, Beijing) 100, 102
 Buddha 30, 31
 Buddha Bar (Shanghai) 201
 Buddha's Birthday 45
 Buddhism 30, 31, 487
 Bezeklik Caves 505, 522–3
 Bingling Si 486
 Buddhist Grottoes (Gongyi) 158
 carvings of Dazu 356–7
 cave paintings of Dunhuang 496–7
 Caves of the Three Immortals (Kashgar) 511
 Chan (Zen) Buddhism 159, 358, 487

- Buddhism (cont.)
 Da Zhao (Hohhot) 469
 Dafo (Le Shan) 364-7
 Eight Auspicious Symbols 542
 Emei Shan 362-3
 Famen Temple (Xi'an) 170
 Fayuan Temple (Beijing) 98
 Fulu Buddhist Nunnery (Sanjiang) 420
 Great Bell Temple (Beijing) 103
 Han dynasty 54, 55
 Hualin Si (Guangzhou) 298
 108 Dagobas 477
 Jade Buddha Temple (Shanghai) 196
 Jing'an Temple (Shanghai) 196
 Jiuhua Shan 234
 Labrang Monastery 482, 483
 Lama Temple (Beijing) 92-3
 Liu Rong Si (Guangzhou) 299
 Longmen Caves 154-7
 Luohan Si (Chongqing) 350
 Maiji Shan 480-81
 Manfeilong Ta 385
 Manjusri 135
 Puning Si (Chengde) 124-5
 Putuo Shan 248-9
 Qixia Si (Nanjing) 231
 Shaolin Temple 158
 10,000 Buddhas Monastery (Hong Kong) 320
 Thousand Buddha Cliffs (Nanjing) 231
 Thousand Buddha Mountain (Ji'nan) 142
 Tianlong Shan Grottoes (Taiyuan) 137
 Tiantai Buddhist sect 247
 Water Curtain Thousand Buddha Caves (Luomen) 482
 Xumi Shan Caves 476
 Yuantong Si (Kunming) 374
 Yungang Caves 132-3
see also Tibetan Buddhism
- Budget hotels 550
 Bulang Shan 385
 Bund (Shanghai) 176, 183, 186-7, 195, 197
 Bunu people 397
 Bupan Aerial Walkway (Mengla) 384
 Burma see Myanmar
 Burma Road 377
 Buses 630-31
 airport 625, 626-7
 city buses 632-3
 long-distance 630-31
 Business cards 614
 Bykal, Lake 435
- C
 C Bar (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 C Club (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 Cafés, internet 622
 Cai Lun 26
- Calendar 44, 613
 California Club (Shanghai) 201
 Calligraphy 27, 219
 What to Buy in China 600
 Camera shops
 Hong Kong and Macau 330, 331
 Camões, Luis Vaz de 326
 Camping 550-51
 trekking and camping holidays 607
 Canadian Embassy 617
 Cang Jie 26
 Cang Xin 40
 Canglang Ting (Suzhou) 210-11
 Cangyan Shan 130
 Canidrome (Macau) 332, 333
 Canton see Guangzhou
 Cantonese cuisine 282
 Cantonese language 279
 Cao Hai 397, 402
 Cao shu calligraphy 27
 Cao Xueqin 90
 Card phones 622
 Cards, business 614
 Carpets
 Beijing shops 112, 113
 Gang Gyen Carpet Factory (Shigatse) 544
 Carvings
 Bingling Si 486
 Dazu 356-7
 Maiji Shan 480-81
 Cathay Pacific 625
 Cathedrals
 Our Lady of China (Shanghai) 199
 Ruinas de São Paulo (Macau) 326
 South Cathedral (Beijing) 85
 Wang Hai Lou Cathedral (Tianjin) 129
 Xi Kai Cathedral (Tianjin) 129
 Xujiahui Catholic Cathedral (Shanghai) 199
see also Churches
 Catholic Church
 Catholic Church (Jilin) 447
 Our Lady of Lourdes (Shamian Island) 301
 Sacred Heart Church (Guangzhou) 298
 South Cathedral (Beijing) 85
 Xujiahui Catholic Cathedral (Shanghai) 199
 Causeway Bay (Hong Kong) 311
 Caves
 Bei Shan 357
 Bezeklik Caves 495, 505
 Bingling Si 486
 carvings of Dazu 356-7
 cave paintings of Dunhuang 487, 496-7
 Caves of the Three Immortals (Kashgar) 511
- Caves (cont.)
 Dragon Gate Grotto (Western Hills) 377
 Dripping Water Cave (Shao Shan) 260
 Guangxi 607
 Huanglong Dong (Wulingyuan) 265
 Kamikaze Caves (Lamma Island) 324
 Karst Caves (Yixing County) 218
 karst landscape 412-13
 Longgong Dong 400-401
 Longmen Caves 141, 154-7
 Ludi Yan (Guilin) 415
 Mahao Cave Tombs (Le Shan) 365
 Maiji Shan 480-81
 Mogao Caves 461, 495, 497
 Shizi Yan 303
 Thousand Buddha Caves (Kizil) 509
 Tianlong Shan Grottoes (Taiyuan) 137
 Tianxing 401
 Water Curtain Thousand Buddha Caves (Luomen) 482
 Wu Da Lian Chi 454
 Xumi Shan Caves 467, 476
 Yangshuo 418-19, 607
 Yungang Caves 131, 132-3
 Zhijin Dong 401
 Caving 607
 Cemeteries see Tombs and cemeteries
 Central China 173-273
 food and drink 180-81
 hotels 559
 Hunan and Hubei 259-73
 Jiangsu and Anhui 203-37
 map 174-5
 peoples 25
 Portrait of Central China 176-7
 restaurants 586-90
 Shanghai 183-201
 traditional Chinese gardens 178-9
 Zhejiang and Jiangxi 239-57
 Central Highlands (Hainan Island) 304
 Central, Hong Kong 310
 Central Plaza (Hong Kong) 310
 Ceramics
 Ancient Pottery Factory (Jingdezhen) 255
 Ciqi Kou (Chongqing) 351
 Foshan 302
 inventions 36, 37
 Museum of Ceramic History (Jingdezhen) 255
 porcelain 37, 254-5
 Porcelain Museum (Jingdezhen) 255

- Ceramics (cont.)
 Terracotta Army 54, 73, 161, 168-9
 traditional arts 38
 What to Buy in China 600
- Chain hotels 553
- Chan, Jackie 41, 159
- Chan (W.W.) & Sons Tailor Ltd (Shanghai) 200, 201
- Chan (Zen) Buddhism 159, 358, 487
- Chang Ling (Beijing) 104-5
- Chang Tang 524, 527
- Chang'an see Xi'an
- Changbai Shan 437, 448-9
- Changbai Waterfall 448
- Changchun 431, 437, 446
 hotels 570
 restaurants 595
- Changchun Guan (Wuhan) 266
- Changjiao Miao people 406
- Changsha 259, 260
 hotels 563
 restaurants 590
- Changzhou 218
- Chaotian Gong (Nanjing) 223
- Chaotian Men (Chongqing) 350
- Chaoyang Theater (Beijing) 113
- Chaozhou 296
 food and drink 283
- Chapel of the Three Ages (Lhasa) 536
- Charles V, King of France 465
- Chatwin, Bruce 392
- Chen clan 300
- Chen Jia Ci (Guangzhou) 300
- Chen Kaige 41
- Chen Yi
 statue of (Shanghai) 187
- Chengde 121, 122-5
 hotels 556
 Puning Si 123, 124-5
 restaurants 584
- Chengdi emperor 52
- Chengdu 343, 349, 358-9
 climate 48
 hotels 567
 map 359
 restaurants 593-4
- Chenghua emperor 52
- Chenghuang Miao (Zhengzhou) 152
- Chengyang 421
- Cheung Ah Tse 314-15
- Cheung Chau Bun Festival 333
- Cheung Chau Island 324
- Cheung Po-Tsai 324
- Cheung Sha 325
- Chiang Kai Shek 198, 199, 297, 304
 Chongqing 351
 flees to Taiwan 66-7
 and Guandong Communist uprising 298
 Jिंगgang Shan 257
- Chiang Kai Shek (cont.)
 Linggu Pagoda (Nanjing) 229, 230
 Lu Shan 252, 253
 Nanjing 177, 223
- Children 613
 entertainment in Hong Kong and Macau 332-3
 in hotels 553
- Children's Day 45
- Children's Palace (Shanghai) 194
- China Eastern Airlines 627
- China Information Travel Service (CITS) 612
- China National Museum (Beijing)
 Street-by-Street map 83
- China Northwest Airlines 627
- China Southern Airlines 627
- China Super League 604, 607
- Chinese Medicine Museum (Hangzhou) 240
- Chinese Military History Museum (Beijing) 99
- Chinese New Year 42, 47, 333
- Chinnery, George 326
- Chishui 410
- Chong'an 409
- Chongdi emperor 52
- Chongqing 343, 349, 350-51
 hotels 568
 map 349, 351
 pollution of Yangzi river 268
 restaurants 594
- Chongqing Museum (Chongqing) 350
- Chongqing Si (Lanzhou) 485
- Chongshan Si (Taiyuan) 73, 137
- Chongwu 285, 291
- Chongxi Ta (Zhaoqing) 302
- Chongyang (Double-ninth)
 Festival 47
- Chongzhen emperor 52
 Forbidden City 88
 Jing Shan Park (Beijing) 90
- Chongzheng Hall (Shenyang) 438
- Chopsticks 579
- Christianity
 Nestorian Christianity 162
see also Cathedrals; Churches
- Christmas Day 47
- Chuandixia 111
- Chunhuan Park (Jinghong) 382
- Churches
 Catholic Church (Jilin) 447
 Church of St. Sofia (Harbin) 450
 Mu'en Tang (Shanghai) 188
 Our Lady of Lourdes (Shamian Island) 301
 Protestant Church (Qingdao) 146
 Russian Orthodox Church (Shanghai) 196
 Sacred Heart Church (Guangzhou) 298
 St. Joseph's Church (Beijing) 94
- Churches (cont.)
 St. Michael's Church (Qingdao) 146
see also Cathedrals
- Ci'an, Empress 109
- Cinema see Film
- Ciping 257
- Ciqi Kou (Chongqing) 351
- Circuses 602-3
- Cishi Ta (Wulingyuan) 261
- Citibank 620
- City God Temple (Shanghai) 192
- City Museum (Kunming) 375
- City walls 35
 Chaozhou 296
 Nanjing 224-5
 Pingyao 35, 138
 Xi'an 162
 Zhaoqing 302
- Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) 626, 627
- Civil War 66
- Cixi, Empress Dowager 63, 101, 433
 Beijing Opera 74
 Boxer Rebellion 433
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 100-102
 tomb of 109
 Xi'an 164
- Climate 48-9
 cold weather 618
 heat and humidity 618
 when to go 610
- Climbing 606-7
- Clothes
 in cold weather 618
 etiquette 614
 Hong Kong and Macau shops 331
 in hot weather 618
 Shanghai shops 200, 201
 what to take 610
 women travelers 616
- Cloud Dispelling Gate (Summer Palace, Beijing) 102
- Club 64 (Hong Kong) 332
- Club 97 (Hong Kong) 332, 333
- Le Club at La Maison (Shanghai) 201
- Clubs
 Beijing 113
 Hong Kong 332, 333
 Shanghai 201
- Coasts, landscape and wildlife 23
- Coins 621
- Cold weather 618
- Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 474
- Communications 622-3
- Communist Party 16-17, 66
 cult of Mao 262-3
 Cultural Revolution 64-5
 festivals 44, 46
 and Guandong Communist uprising 298

- Communist Party (cont.)
 Hongyuan Cun (Chongqing) 351
 Jinggong Shan 257
 and literature 29
 Long March 66, 256–7, 371
 Longhua Cemetery of Martyrs (Shanghai) 199
 People's Republic of China founded 66–7
 Shanghai 177
 Site of the First National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party (Shanghai) 194
 Zunyi Conference 410
 Computer shops
 Hong Kong and Macau 330, 331
 Confucian Temple (Suzhou) 211
 Confucianism 30, 51
 Fuzi Miao (Nanjing) 222
 Han dynasty 54
 literature 28
 Wenchang Ge (Yangzhou) 221
 Confucius 28, 30, 54, 141, 143, 578–9
 birthplace 73, 142–3
 Confucius' Birthday 46
 Tai Shan 145
 and the Yijing 33
 Confucius Forest (Qufu) 143
 Confucius Mansion (Qufu) 142–3
 Confucius Temple (Beijing) 93
 Confucius Temple (Jilin) 447
 Confucius Temple (Qufu) 143
 Confucius Temple (Tianjin) 129
 Consulates 611
 Convention & Exhibition Centre (Hong Kong) 310–11, 332, 333
 Conversion charts 613
 Corban Festival 47
 Cormorant fishing 418
 Cotton Club (Shanghai) 200, 201
 County Yamen (Pingyao) 138
 Courier services 623
 Courtyard houses, Beijing 91
 Cow Street Mosque (Beijing) 98
 Coward, Noel 311
 Craft shops
 Beijing 112, 113
 Hong Kong and Macau 330–31
 Crafts see Arts and crafts
 Cranes (birds) 403
 Zhalong Nature Reserve 452
 Credit cards 598, 620–21
 Crescent Moon Lake 460
 Crime 616
 Crowne Plaza 553
 Cruises
 Li river cruise 416–17
 Yangzi cruise 352–4
 Crystal Palace (Wu Da Lian Chi) 454
 Cui Hu Gongyuan (Kunming) 374
 Cui Jian 41
 Cuiheng 302
 Cuiwei Yuan (Guiyang) 398
 Cultural Centre (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 Cultural Revolution 64–5, 67
 arts and 40
 Chuandixia 111
 cult of Mao 262–3
 and literature 29
 and religion 30
 Shanghai 177
 in Tibet 521
 Culture Club (Macau) 331
 Currency 620–21
 currency exchange 620
 duty-free allowances 611
 Customs see etiquette
 Customs House (Shanghai) 186
 Customs House (Wuhan) 267
 Customs information 611
 Cycle China 606
 Cycling 633
 Cynical Realism school 40
- D
 Da Hua Miao people 402, 406
 Da Wang Feng 292
 Da Xiangguo Si (Kaifeng) 150
 Da Zhao (Hohhot) 469
 Dabei Monastery (Tianjin) 129
 Dacheng Lamo Kerti Gompa (Langmusi) 482
 Dadonghai 305
 Dadu river 256, 371
 Dafo (Le Shan) 364–7
 Dafo Si (Shijiazhuang) 130
 Dafo Si (Zhangye) 490
 Dagobas, 108 (Ningxia) 477
 Dagan Pavilion (Lake Dian) 377
 Dai Miao (Tai Shan) 145
 Dai people 24, 341, 383
 Dai Minority Park 382
 Xishuangbanna 383, 384
 Daizong emperor 52
 Dakong Shan 389
 Dalai Hu 474
 Dalai Lamas 520
 Beihai Park (Beijing) 90
 exile in India 521
 Ganden Palace (Lhasa) 536
 Lukhang (Lhasa) 528
 Norbulingka (Lhasa) 529
 Pelkor Chode Monastery (Gyantse) 543
 Potala Palace (Lhasa) 534–5
 Samye Monastery 541
 Summer Palace (Lhasa) 529
 Tashilunpo Monastery (Shigatse) 544–5
 Tibetan Oracle 536–7
 Yellow Hat Sect 134
 Dali 343, 373, 386–8
 hotels 568
 map 387
 Dali (cont.)
 pagodas 165, 386–7
 restaurants 594
 Dali Museum (Dali) 386
 Dali Sutra Pillar (Kunming) 375
 Dalian 431, 437, 444–5
 hotels 570
 map 445
 Public Security Bureau (PSB) 611
 restaurants 595–6
 Daluo 385
 Damenglong 385
 Daming Hu (Ji'nan) 142
 Daming Si (Yangzhou) 220
 Dance, traditional 603
 Dandong 431, 437, 440–41
 hotels 570
 restaurants 596
 Daning river 353
 Danxia Shan 303
 Daode Guan (Zhangye) 490
 Daoguang emperor 53
 Daoism 30, 31, 51
 Dong Yue Miao (Beijing) 93
 Eight Immortals 149
 Eight Immortals Temple (Xi'an) 161, 164
 Empress of Heaven 149
 Fung Ying Sin Koon (New Territories) 321
 Han dynasty 54, 55
 Heng Shan 261
 Hua Shan 171
 literature 28
qi 32
 Qingcheng Shan 368
 Qingyang Gong (Chengdu) 358
 Songsan 158
tai ji quan (Tai Chi) 273
 Tai Shan 144–5
 traditional Chinese gardens 178
 traditional medicine 232
 White Clouds Temple (Beijing) 98–9
 Wudang Shan 272
 Xuanmiao Guan (Suzhou) 205
 The Dar (Shanghai) 201
 Datong 121, 131
 hotels 556
 restaurants 584
 Daur people 454
 David's Shirts (Hong Kong) 331
 Daxu
 Li river cruise 416
 Daxue Shan
 Long March 256
 Dazhalan (Beijing) 85
 Dazhen 382
 Dazheng Hall (Shenyang) 438
 Dazu, carvings of 349, 356–7
 Deep Water Bay 323
 Dehydration 618
 Deities, Buddhist 523
 Democracy movement 67

- Deng Xiaoping 15, 67, 296
 Deng Yingchao 351
 Dengfeng 158
 Department stores 599
 Beijing 112, 113
 Hong Kong 330, 331
 Departure tax, air travel 625
 Deserts
 Chang Tang 527
 desertification 463
 Gobi Desert 73, 470
 landscape and wildlife 21
 Taklamakan Desert 461, 494, 503, 515
 Detian Falls 397, 425
 Dezong emperor 52
 DHL Worldwide Express 623
 Di Tan Park (Beijing) 93
 Dialects 612
 Dialling codes 623
 Dian, Kingdom of 342, 373
 Dian, Lake 377
 Diaoshuilou Pubu (Jingpo Hu) 452
 Diarrhea 618
 Ding Ling (Beijing) 105
 Ding Shan 218
 Dinghu Shan 302
 Dinosaur Museum (Zigong) 355
 Dinosaurs see Fossils
 Disabled travelers 553, 612
 Discos 603
 Discounts
 air travel 625, 627
 in hotels 551
 Discovery Bay 325
 Diseases 618–19
 immunization 611, 619
 Disneyland, Hong Kong 325, 332, 333
 Divine Cliffs (Yandang Shan) 177, 247
 Divine Peaks (Yandang Shan) 247
 Dixia Senlin 452
 Doctors 617
 Dog meat 399
 Dong Hu (Shaoxing) 246
 Dong people
 architecture 420, 421
 Guizhou and Guangxi 397
 Dong Yue Miao (Beijing) 93
 Dongba religion 393
 Dongba Research Institute (Lijiang) 392
 Donghai Park (Dalian) 444
 Donghe (Baotou) 470
 Dongjiang cooking 283
 Dongshan Ling 304
 Dongsheng 470
 Dongson drums 423, 424
 Dongting Hu 259, 261
 Dongxiang people 484, 507
 Dormitories 550
 security 616
 Dost Mohammed 491
 Double-ninth (Chongyang) Festival 47
 Doupotang Falls 401
 Dragon Boat Festivals 45, 333, 407
 Dragon Culture (Hong Kong) 330, 331
 Dragon Gate Grotto (Western Hills) 377
 Dragon Head Hill
 Li river cruise 417
 Dragon Head Rock (Wudang Shan) 272
 Dragon I (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 Dragon King Temple (Summer Palace, Beijing) 102
 Dragonair 627
 Dragons 88
 Dragon's Head Cliff (Lu Shan) 252
 Drepung Monastery (Lhasa) 536
 Drinks see Food and drink
 Dripping Water Cave (Shao Shan) 260
 Drop (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 Drugs, prescription 617
 Drum Tower (Beijing) 92
 Drum Tower (Nanjing) 226–7
 Drum Tower (Sanjiang) 420
 Drum Tower (Xi'an) 163
 Drum Tower (Zhongwei) 476
 Drums, Dongson 423, 424
 Du Fu 28, 56, 58
 Du Fu's Thatched Cottage (Chengdu) 358
 Du Ta (Manting) 384
 Du Wen Xiu 386
 Du Wenyu 440
 Du Yuesheng 189
 Duan, Prince 433
 Duanzong emperor 53
 Dujiangyan 368–9
 Dunhuang 494
 cave paintings of Dunhuang 479, 487, 496–7
 hotels 571
 Mogao Caves 461, 495, 497
 restaurants 596
 silk paintings 57
 Dunhuang Gucheng 494
 Duoyun Xuan (Shanghai) 200, 201
 Dutong 421
 Duty-free allowances 611
 Duxiu Feng (Guilin) 415
 Duzong emperor 53
 Dye, D.S. 359
 Dynasties 52–3
 see also individual dynasties
 Dysentery 619
 Dzong (Gyantse) 543
 Dzong (Shigatse) 544
E
 E-mail facilities 622
 E'Ang Zongzhe 483
 Earthen dwellings of Yongding 290
 East China Sea 176
 East Tomb (Shenyang) 439
 Eastern Han dynasty 52, 54–5
 Eastern Palaces (Forbidden City) 88–9
 Eastern Qing Tombs 109
 Eastern Zhou dynasty 51, 53
 Edward Youde Aviary (Hong Kong) 333
 Eight Auspicious Symbols 542
 Eight Banners 430
 Eight Immortals Temple (Xi'an) 161, 164
 18 September Museum (Shenyang) 438
 Electricity 613
 Electronics shops
 Hong Kong and Macau 330, 331
 Elephant Trunk Hill
 Li river cruise 416
 Elephants
 Sanchahe Elephant Reserve 382
 Embassies 611, 617
 Emei Shan 349, 362–3
 hotels 568
 Emergencies 617
 Emin, Prince 504
 Empress of Heaven 149
 Engels, Friedrich 297
 English language 612
 Entertainment 602–3
 Beijing 112–13
 Hong Kong and Macau 332–3
 Shanghai 200–201
 Environmental problems 607
 desertification 463
 Three Gorges Dam 268
 Er Hai 342, 388
 map 387
 Er Hai Park 388
 Er Shi emperor 53
 Erwang Miao (Dujiangyan) 369
 The Escalator (Hong Kong) 314
 Ethnic minorities 18–19, 24–5
 food and drink 577
 River Border 455
 see also individual peoples
 Etiquette 614–15
 food and drink 578–9
 Everest, Mount 527
 base camp 521, 546–7
 Ewenki people 455
 Exchange rates 620
 Exports, customs information 611
F
 Face (Shanghai) 201
 Face saving, etiquette 614
 Famen Temple (Xi'an) 170
 Fan Pagoda (Kaifeng) 151
 Fang Lijun, Series 2 No. 2 40–41
 Fanpai 408
 Fast food 577
 Fayu Si (Putuo Shan) 249

- Fayuan Temple (Beijing) 98
 Federal Express 623
 Feilai 303
 Feixia 303
 Feiyun Dong 409
 Felix (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 Fen river 137
Feng sbui 33
Fengcong karst 413, 417
 Fenghuan Ta (Chaozhou) 296
 Fenghuang Shan 441
 Fenghuang Shan Lu Revolution
 Headquarters Site (Yan'an) 171
 Fenghuang Song (Jiuhua Shan)
 234
Fenglin karst 413
 Fengxian Si (Longmen Caves) 154
 Ferries 631
 Festivals 44–7
 good luck and prosperity 42–3
 Hong Kong 333
 Miao people 406–7, 409
 Fifth Moon Festival 45
 Film 40, 603
 Beijing 112–13
 festivals 45
 Kung Fu film industry 159
 Shanghai 201
 Fire services 617
 Fireworks 42–3
 Firing range 606
 First-aid kit 618
 Fish & Flower Market (Shanghai)
 188–9
 Fisherman's Wharf (Macau) 328
 Fishing, cormorant 418
 Fitzgerald, Lieutenant 326
 Five-colored Pool
 Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
 Five Dynasties 52, 58
 5-Level Double Ship Lock (Three Gorges Dam) 269
 Five Rams Statue (Guangzhou)
 301
 Flaming Mountains (Turpan) 505
 Flood Control Monument
 (Harbin) 450
 Flower Market (Hong Kong)
 317
 Flower Theater (Bozhou) 233
 Flowers see Parks and gardens;
 Plants
 Fo Si (Manting) 384
 Foguang Si (Wutai Shan) 136
 Folk Culture Village (Shenzhen)
 296
 Food and drink 19
 alcohol 615
 Beijing and the North 76–7
 Central China 180–81
 customs and etiquette 578–9
 dog meat 399
 festivals 43
 grapes and wine 506
 "little eats" 577
 Food and drink (cont.)
 Macau 329
 rice 280–81
 Sheung Wan's Markets (Hong Kong) 315
 South China 282–3
 Southwest China 346–7
 stomach upsets 618
 The Story of Tea 293
 street food 576
 symbolism 575
 Tsingtao beer 146
 What to Drink in China 580–81
 see also Restaurants
 Football (soccer) 602, 604
 Forbidden City 34, 61, 86–9,
 432–3
 Visitors' Checklist 87
 Foreign Languages Bookshop
 (Beijing) 94, 112, 113
 Forest of Stelae Museum (Xi'an)
 162
 Forests, Northeast China 22
 Former Headquarters of the Hubei Military Government
 (Wuhan) 266
 Formula One Grand Prix 604, 607
 Forrest, George 344, 345
 Fortaleza do Monte (Macau) 326
 Fortress (Hong Kong) 330, 331
 Foshan 302
 Foshan Folk Art Studio (Foshan)
 302
 Fossils 453
 Dinosaur Museum (Zigong) 355
 Inner Mongolia Museum
 (Hohhot) 468
 Wenya Museum (Jinzhou) 440
 Foster, Sir Norman 310
 Founding of Chinese Communist Party Day 46
 Four Points by Sheraton 553
 Four Seasons 553
 Fragrant Isle (Suzhou) 206
 French Concession (Shanghai)
 194
 French Legation (Kunming) 374
 Friendship Highway 521, 546, 547
 Friendship Stores 599
 Beijing 112, 113
 Shanghai 200, 201
 Fringe Club (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 Frost bite 618
 Fubo Shan (Guilin) 415
 Fuguo Si (Lijiang) 392
 Fujian province 278, 285–93
 hotels 564
 map 285
 restaurants 590–1
 Fujiazhuang Scenic Area 444–5
 Fuli Village 419
 Fulu Buddhist Nunnery
 (Sanjiang) 420
 Fung Ying Sin Koon (New Territories) 321
 Furniture Museum (Pingyao) 138
 Furongzhen 261
 Fuxing Lu (Dali) 386
 Fuxing Park (Shanghai) 194
 Fuzhou 285, 292
 hotels 564
 restaurants 590
 Fuzi Miao (Nanjing) 222
- G
 Galleries see Museums and galleries
 Gallery One (Hong Kong) 330, 331
 Gambling
 Hong Kong 332, 333
 Games, in public parks 602
 Gancha Grasslands 482
 Ganden Monastery (Lhasa) 520,
 527, 537, 538–9
 Ganden Palace (Lhasa) 536
 Gang of Four 65, 67, 177
 Gang Gyen Carpet Factory
 (Shigatse) 544
 Gangzaihou Beach (Gulang Yu)
 287
 Ganlaba 382
 Gansu province 460, 461, 479
 hotels 571
 map 479
 restaurants 596–7
 Gansu Provincial Museum
 (Lanzhou) 485
 Gantong Si (Dali) 387
 Gao Miao (Zhongwei) 476
 Gao Ming, General 375
 Gao Xingjian 28
 Gao Zhishen 377
 Gaochang Gucheng 505
 Gaochang Ruins 495
 Gaodi emperor 52, 54
 Gaoding 421
 Gaozong emperor 52, 53, 57,
 164, 170
 Gaozu emperor 52
 Garden of Harmonious Pleasures
 (Summer Palace, Beijing) 101
 Garden Tomb of Puhaddin
 (Yangzhou) 221
 Garden of Virtue and Harmony
 (Summer Palace, Beijing) 101,
 102
 Gardens see Parks and gardens
 Gasu 385
 Gate of Divine Prowess
 (Forbidden City) 89
 Gate of Heavenly Purity
 (Forbidden City) 34, 88
 Gate of Supreme Harmony
 (Forbidden City) 86
 Gay and lesbian travelers 616–17
 Ge Yuan (Yangzhou) 220
 Gejia Miao people 406, 407, 409
 Gelanghe 384–5
 Gelugpa sect see Yellow Hat Sect

- Genden Drup 544
 General Post Office 623
 Genghis Khan 52, 60, 461, 462–3, 471
 and Beijing 79
 Genghis Khan's Mausoleum (Dongsheng) 470, 471
 Inner Mongolia Museum (Hohhot) 468
 Geology, karst 412–13
 George III, King of England 433
 German Concession (Qingdao) 146
 Ginseng 448
 Giordano (Hong Kong) 331
 Glacier, Hailou Gou 371
 Glamour Bar (Shanghai) 201
 Gobi Desert 73, 470
 G.O.D. (Hong Kong) 331
 Golden Mile (Hong Kong) 316
 Golden Water (Forbidden City) 86
 Golf 604
 Golmud 479, 499
 hotels 572
 Gong, Prince
 Mansion of Prince Gong (Beijing) 90
 Gong Li 139
 Gongdi emperor 53
 Gongqing Forest Park (Shanghai) 195
 Gongtang Pagoda 483
 Gongyi 158
 Gongzong emperor 53
 Good luck and prosperity 42–3
 Goodfellas (Shanghai) 201
 Gorgeous Arts and Crafts (Hong Kong) 330, 331
 Government shops 599
 Governor's Residence (Qingdao) 146
 Grand Canal 217, 218, 220
 map 217
 Grand Dragon Gate (Western Hills) 377
 Grand Hyatt 553
 Grape Valley (Turpan) 505
 Grapes 506
 Grasslands, Inner Mongolia 22, 469
 Great Bell Temple (Beijing) 103
 "Great Game" 491
 Great Goose Pagoda (Xi'an) 161, 164, 487
 Great Hall of the People (Beijing)
 Street-by-Street map 82
 Great Hall of the People (Chongqing) 350–51
 Great Leap Forward 67
 Great Mosque (Hohhot) 468
 Great Mosque (Kuqa) 509
 Great Mosque (Xi'an) 163
 Great Mosque (Xining) 498
 Great Purity Palace (Lao Shan) 147
 Great Wall of China 15, 54, 72, 106–8
 Great Wall Museum (Jiayuguan) 490
 Hexi Corridor 479
 Hushan Great Wall (Dandong) 441
 Jiayuguan Fort 492–3
 map 107
 in Ming dynasty 61, 106–7
 Shanhaiguan 128
 Xuanbi Changcheng 490
 Great World Entertainment Center (Shanghai) 188, 197
 Green Gang 194
 Greeting people 614
 Grünwedel, Albert 505
 Gu Hua 261
 Gu Nan Men (Guilin) 414
 Gu Shan 292
 Guan Yu, General 29, 152, 268, 354
 Guang Wudi emperor 52, 54
 Guangdong Communist uprising 298
 Guangdong province 278, 295
 hotels 565
 map 295
 restaurants 591
 Guanghan Dong 401
 Guanghua Lu (Tengchong) 389
 Guangji Men (Chaozhou) 296
 Guangji Si (Wuhu) 233
 Guangxi province 342, 343, 397
 caving 607
 food and drink 347
 hotels 569
 map 397
 restaurants 595
 Guangxiao Si (Guangzhou) 299
 Guangxu emperor 53, 63, 446
 Beijing Opera 74
 Confucius Temple (Beijing) 93
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 101, 102
 Xi'an 164
 Guangzhou (Canton) 295, 298–301
 air travel 627
 food and drink 282
 hospitals 617
 hotels 565
 map 299
 Public Security Bureau (PSB) 611
 restaurants 591
 Visitors' Checklist 299
 Guangzong emperor 53
 Guanlin (Luoyang) 152
 Guanyin Colossus (Putuo Shan) 248
 Guanyin Si (Dali) 387
 Gui Shan (Wuhan) 267
 Guia Fort and Lighthouse (Macau) 326
 Guilin 343, 397, 413, 414–17
 hotels 569
 Li river cruise 416–17
 map 415
 Visitors' Checklist 415
 Guiping 422–3
 Guiyang 398–9
 hotels 569
 map 399
 restaurants 595
 Guiyuan Si (Wuhan) 267
 Guizhou province 342, 343, 397
 food and drink 347
 hotels 569–70
 map 397
 restaurants 595
 Gulang Yu 286–7
 map 287
 Gulong Si (Huanglong Xi) 368
 Gulou (Yinchuan) 475
 Gulou (Zhangye) 490
 Gunzhong Pass 476
 Guo Xi 220
 Guoqing Si (Tiantai Shan) 247
 Guqin Tai (Wuhan) 267
 Gusong Qiao (Songpan) 369
 Guyuan 467, 476
 Gyantse 543
 hotels 573
- ## H
- Ha Noi Ruins (Kashgar) 511
 Hai Rui 304
 Haibao Ta (Yinchuan) 475
 Haidong 388
 Haigeng Park (Lake Dian) 377
 Haikou (Hainan Island) 295, 304
 air travel 627
 Haila'er 467, 474
 Hailou Gou Glacier 371
 Hainan Coconut Festival 45
 Hainan Ferry Port 425
 Hainan Island 295, 304–5, 604
 air travel 627
 hotels 565
 map 295, 305
 restaurants 591
 Haitong 365
 Hakka people 279, 285
 earthen dwellings of Yongding 290
 Xincun 305
 Hall of Attractive Scenery (Suzhou) 212
 Hall of Benevolence and Longevity (Summer Palace, Beijing) 101, 102
 Hall of Distance Fragrance (Suzhou) 207
 Hall of Four Auspicious Merits (Suzhou) 213
 Hall of Happiness and Longevity (Summer Palace, Beijing) 102

- Hall of Imperial Peace (Forbidden City) 88
- Hall of Jade Ripples (Summer Palace, Beijing) 102
- Hall of Mental Cultivation (Forbidden City) 89
- Hall of Middle Harmony (Forbidden City) 87
- Hall of Supreme Harmony (Forbidden City) 87
- Hall of Union (Forbidden City) 88
- Han Chinese 24
- Han dynasty 52, 54–5
porcelain 255
- Han Jiang estuary 296
- Han Xiangzi 31
- Hanafi School, Islam 507
- Hanas Lake Nature Reserve 508
- Hanging Monastery (Heng Shan) 70
- Hanging Palace (Cangyan Shan) 130
- Hanging Temple (Heng Shan) 121, 131
- Hangzhou 177, 239, 240–45
food and drink 180
hotels 562
map 241
restaurants 589
West Lake 242–5
- Hani people 24, 382, 384–5
- Hankou (Wuhan) 267
- Hanlinyuan Museum (Yangzhou) 220
- Hanshan Si (Suzhou) 211
- Hanwen Gong Ci (Chaozhou) 296
- Hao 161
- Haoshang Bridge (Le Shan) 365
- Happy Valley Racecourse (Hong Kong) 311, 332, 333
- Harbin 276, 430, 431, 437, 450–51
climate 49
hotels 570
map 451
restaurants 596
skiing 605, 607
- Harbin Northern Forest Zoo (Harbin) 451
- Harbour City (Hong Kong) 330, 331
- Harbour Plaza 553
- Hardoon, Silas 196
- He Jingyu
tomb of 267
- He Lu, King of Wu 211
- He Xiangning
tomb of 230
- He Yuan (Yangzhou) 221
- Health care 617
diseases 618–19
immunization 611, 619
stomach upsets and diarrhea 618
- Heat 618
- Heavenly Kingdom Rebellion see Taiping Rebellion
- Hebei province 72, 73, 121
hotels 556–7
map 121
restaurants 584
- Hebei Provincial Museum (Shijiazhuang) 130
- Hedi emperor 52, 55
- Hedin, Sven 495
- Hefei 233
hotels 561
restaurants 588
- Hei Ta 385
- Heihe 454
- Heikong Shan 389
- Heilong Jiang 454
- Heilong Tan Gongyuan (Lijiang) 392
- Heilongjiang province 430, 437
hotels 570
restaurants 595–6
skiing 605, 607
- Helan Shan 467, 476
- Henan province 72, 141
hotels 557
map 141
restaurants 585
- Henan Provincial Museum (Zhengzhou) 152
- Heng river 131
- Heng Shan 70, 131, 259, 261
- Hepatitis 619
- Heritage Museum (Hong Kong) 320
- Heshun 90, 389
- Hetian Cultural Museum (Khotan) 515
- Hetian Silk Factory (Khotan) 515
- Hexi Corridor 479
- Hezhen people 455
- Hilton 553
- Himalayas 349, 527
Everest base camp 521, 546–7
- History 51–67
- HIV 619
- Hmong people see Miao people
- Ho, Dr. (Daoist physician) 392
- Ho, Dr. Stanley 327, 328
- Hohhot 467, 468–9
hotels 571
restaurants 596
- Holiday Inn 553
- Holidays, public 47, 552, 612
- Hollywood Road (Hong Kong) 314
- Home (Hong Kong) 332, 333
- Homosexuality 616–17
- Honeychurch Antiques (Hong Kong) 330, 331
- Hong Kong 307–25
air travel 625, 627
banks 620
climate 49
entertainment 332–3
- Hong Kong (cont.)
film industry 41
food and drink 283
history 278, 307
hospitals 617
hotels 566–7
map 308–9
public transport 632, 633
restaurants 592–3
returned to China 67
shopping 330–31
Street Finder 334–7
Victoria Peak 312–13
visas and passports 610
- Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank (Shanghai) 186
- Hong Kong Academy of the Performing Arts 332, 333
- Hong Kong Arts Centre 44, 332, 333
- Hong Kong Coliseum 332, 333
- Hong Kong Cultural Centre 316
- Hong Kong Disneyland 325, 332, 333
- Hong Kong Life Saving Society 323
- Hong Kong Museum of Art 316
- Hong Kong Museum of History 316–17
- Hong Kong Rugby Football Union 604, 607
- Hong Kong Science Museum 316
- Hong Kong Wetland Park 321
- Hong Kong Zoological & Botanical Gardens 311
- Hong Men Gong (Tai Shan) 145
- Hong Qiao Market (Beijing) 112, 113
- Hong Xiuquan 223, 297, 422, 423
Hongcun 234
- Hongkou Park (Shanghai) 198
- Hongqiao Airport (Shanghai) 625
- Hongshan Park (Ürümqi) 506
- Hongwu emperor 52, 60, 231
Linggu Temple (Nanjing) 229, 230
Ming Palace Ruins (Nanjing) 226
Taiping Heavenly Kingdom History Museum (Nanjing) 222
tomb of 228, 230
Wenchang Ge (Yangzhou) 221
Winning Chess Pavilion (Nanjing) 227
Xi'an 162
Zhonghua Gate (Nanjing) 224
- Hongxi emperor 52
- Hongyuan Cun (Chongqing) 351
- Hongzhi emperor 52, 254
- Horses
Happy Valley Racecourse (Hong Kong) 311, 332, 333 horse racing 46 horse trekking 607
- Hospitality 614

- Hospitals 617
 Hotel Lisboa (Macau) 327, 332
 Hotels 550–73
 advance booking 610
 air conditioning 618
 bargaining 615
 booking 551 children in 553 disabled travelers 553
 hidden costs 551
 hotel chains 553
 restaurants 576
 seasonal demand 552
 security 616
 smoking in 615
 tipping in 553
 House of Blues & Jazz
 (Shanghai) 201
 Houses
 Beijing's courtyard houses 91
 Dai people 383
 Dong architecture 421
 earthen dwellings of Yongding 290
 Huizhou architecture 235
 Howard Johnson 553
 HSBC (Hong Kong & Shanghai
 Banking Corporation) 620
 Headquarters (Hong Kong)
 33, 310
 Hu Jintao 17, 67
 Hu Xueyan 240
 Hua Shan 161, 171, 424
 hotels 558
 Huacheng Si (Jiuhua Shan) 234
 Huading Peak (Tiantai Shan) 247
 Huangang Garden (Hangzhou) 242
 Huai river 203
 Huai Su 190
 Huaisheng Mosque (Guangzhou)
 299
 Huaiyang cuisine 181
 Hualin Si (Guangzhou) 298
 Huandi emperor 52
 Huang Gongwang 39
 Huang Shan 203, 236–7
 Huang Shi Zhai (Wulingyuan) 264
 Huangguoshu Falls 401
 Huanghua Cheng 108
 Huanglong 369
 Huanglong Dong (Wulingyuan)
 265
 Huanglong Dong Park
 (Hangzhou) 240
 Huanglong Xi 368
 Huangpu Park (Shanghai) 195
 Huangpu river 176, 183, 184, 195
 Huashi Lou (Qingdao) 147
 Huating Si (Western Hills) 377
 Huaxi District (Guiyang) 399
 Huayan Si (Datong) 131
 Huayi Classical Furniture
 (Beijing) 112, 113
 Hubao Building Basement
 Market (Shanghai) 200
 Hubei province 177, 259
 hotels 563
 map 259
 restaurants 590
 Hubei Provincial Museum
 (Wuhan) 266
 Huguang Guildhall (Beijing) 113
 Huguo Lu (Dali) 386
 Hui Li 241
 Hui Neng 299
 Hui people 25, 460, 467
 Cow Street Mosque (Beijing) 98
 food and drink 77
 Islam 507
 Weining 402
 Hui'an people 279, 291
 Huizhou emperor 52
 Hui'e, legend of 249
 Huihe 158
 Huiji Si (Putuo Shan) 249
 Huizhou architecture 235
 Huizong emperor 53, 59
 Hukeng 290
 Huli Shan Paotai (Xiamen) 286
 Hulunbuir Grasslands 474
 Humble Administrator's Garden
 (Suzhou) 206–7
 Humidity 618
 Hunan No. 1 Teachers' Training
 College (Changsha) 260
 Hunan province 177, 259
 hotels 563
 map 259
 restaurants 590
 Hunan Provincial Museum
 (Changsha) 260
 108 Dagobas (Ningxia) 477
 Hundred Flowers Movement 67
 Hungry Ghost Festival (Hong Kong) 333
 Huo Qubin, General 485
 Huoshao Shan (Wu Da Lian Chi)
 454
 Hushan Great Wall (Dandong) 441
 Huxingting Teahouse (Shanghai)
 183, 193
 Huxiyan (Xiamen) 286
 Hyatt Regency 553
 Hygiene 617
 Hypothermia 618
I
 Ibis 553
 Ice sculpture 450, 454
 Id Kah Mosque (Kashgar) 510
 Ikarhan 512
 Ili river 508, 509
 Imin Ta (Turpan) 504
 Immunization 611, 619
 Imperial Gardens (Forbidden
 City) 88
 Imperial Palace (Shenyang) 432,
438
 Imperial Zenith Hall (Forbidden
 City) 89
 Incense Burner Peak (Beijing) 103
 Influenza 619
 Inner Mongolia and the Silk
 Roads 456–515
 food and drink 77
 Gansu and Qinghai 479–501
 Genghis Khan 471
 grasslands 22, 469
 hotels 571–3
 Inner Mongolia and Ningxia
467–77
 Jiayuguan Fort 492–3
 Maiji Shan 480–81
 maps 458–9, 467
 Mongols of the Steppe 462–3
 Portrait of Inner Mongolia and
 the Silk Roads 460–61
 Silk Road 464–5
 The Spread of Buddhism 487
 Trans Siberian Express 435
 Xinjiang 503–15
 Inner Mongolia Museum
 (Hohhot) 468
 Inner Mongolia province 466–77
 hotels 571
 map 467
 restaurants 596
 Insect-borne diseases 619
 Insurance 611, 617
 Intercontinental 553
 International Fashion Festival 46
 International Finance Centre 310
 International Labor Day 45
 International Post Office 623
 International Women's Day 44
 Internet facilities 622
 Inventions 36–7
 Irish Embassy 617
 Iron Pagoda (Kaifeng) 150
 Isetan (Shanghai) 200, 201
 Islam see Muslims and Islam
 Islamic Cemetery (Guangzhou)
 300–301
 Island Beverley (Hong Kong)
 330, 331
 Iyer, Pico 307
J
 Jade 515
 Jade Belt Bridge (Summer
 Palace, Beijing) 102
 Jade Buddha Temple (Shanghai)
196
 Jade Dragon Snow Mountain
 380–81, 392, 394, 604
 Jade Market (Hong Kong) 317,
 330, 331
 Jamyang Choje 536
 Japan, occupation of Manchuria
 66, 431, 437
 Japanese Germ Warfare
 Experimental Base (Harbin)
 451
 Japanese-Russian Prison (Dalian)
 445

- Jar Hill Observation Platform (Three Gorges Dam) 269
- Le Jardin (Hong Kong) 332, 333
- Jardine Matheson 197
- Jesuits
astronomy 94
and Ming dynasty 61
and Qing dynasty 62, 63
Ruínas de São Paulo (Macau) 326
Yuanming Yuan (Beijing) 103
- Jet Li 159
- Jewelry shops
Hong Kong and Macau 330, 331
- Jews, in Kaifeng 150, 151
- Jiajing emperor 52, 53
- Jialing river 350
- Jian Lou (Arrow Tower, Beijing) 84
Street-by-Street map 82
- Jian Zhen 220
- Jianfeng Chi (Stone Forest) 379
- Jianfeng Ling Nature Reserve 305
- Jianfu Gong (Qingcheng Shan) 368
- Jiang Qing 65
- Jiang Zemin 67, 221
- Jiangsu province 203
hotels 561
map 203
restaurants 588–9
- Jianxi province 239
hotels 562
map 239
Nanchang Uprising 177
restaurants 589–90
- Jiangxin Park (Wenzhou) 247
- Jianshan Si (Yangshuo) 418–19
- Jianwen emperor 52
- Jiao Shan 128, 218
- Jiaohe Ruins (Turpan) 504
- Jiaxiu Lou (Guiyang) 398
- Jiayin Hall (Tongli) 216
- Jiayuguan 479, 490
hotels 572
restaurants 597
- Jiayuguan Fort 492–3
- Jiazhou Huayuan (Le Shan) 364
- Jile Si (Harbin) 451
- Jilin 447
hotels 570
restaurants 596
- Jilin province 430, 437
hotels 570
restaurants 595–6
- Jimei School Village (Xiamen) 286
- Jin Dian (Kunming) 376
- Jin Ding Si (Emei Shan) 363
- Jin dynasty 52, 58, 59
- Jin Qiaojue 234
- Jin Qu Xi 292
- Jin Shan Park (Zhenjiang) 218
- Ji'nan 142
hotels 557
restaurants 584
- Jinci Si (Taiyuan) 137
- Jindian Gong (Wudang Shan) 272
- Jing Shan Park (Beijing) 90
- Jing'an Temple (Shanghai) 196
- Jingang Palace (Lanzhou) 485
- Jingdezhen 177, 239, 255
hotels 562
- Jingdi emperor 52
- Jinggang Shan 239, 257
Long March 257
- Jinghong 341, 382
- Jingpo Hu 431, 437, 452
- Jingtai emperor 52
- Jingzhen 384
- Jingzhou 268
- Jingzong emperor 52
- Jinjiang Hotel (Shanghai) 194
- Jinjiang Prince's Palace (Guilin) 415
- Jinmao Dasha (Shanghai) 189
- Jinpeng Pass 605
- Jinsha Jiang 394
- Jinsuo Dao 388
- Jintian 422, 423
- Jinzhou 440
- Jitang 421
- Jitong railway 605
- Jiuhua Shan 174, 203, 234
- Jiujiang 252
- Jiulong Bi (Datong) 121
- Jiuzhai Gou 349
- Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
- Jokhang Temple (Lhasa) 521, 530, 532–3
- Joyce (Hong Kong) 331
- Judy's Too (Shanghai) 201
- Jue Yuan (Guiyang) 398
- Juma river 111
- Jumbo Floating Restaurants (Aberdeen) 322
- Jungle 23
Bupan Aerial Walkway (Mengla) 384
Southwest China 345
Xishuangbanna 384, 385
- Junshan Dao 261
- Justinian, Emperor 208
- Juyong Guan 108
- K
- Kaifeng 72, 141, 150–51, 153
hotels 557
map 151
restaurants 585
- Kaili 397, 408
- Kaishu calligraphy 27
- Kaiyuan Si (Chaozhou) 296
- Kaiyuan Si (Fuzhou) 292
- Kaiyuan Si (Quanzhou) 291
- Kamikaze Caves (Lamma Island) 324
- Kang Mei Yuan Chao Zhanzheng (Dandong) 441
- Kangding 371
- Kangxi emperor 53, 62, 122, 432
Baoguang Si 360
Chengde 122
Da Zhao (Hohhot) 469
Eastern Qing Tombs 109
Forbidden City 89
Marco Polo Bridge 110
- Karakoram Highway 514
- Karakoram Mountains 503
- Karaoke 603
- Karghilik 515
- Karma Phuntsok Namgyel 544
- Karmapa (Black Hats) order 542
- Karst 412–13
- Karst Caves (Yixing County) 218
- Kashgar 461, 503, 510–13
Aba Khoja Mausoleum 512–13
hotels 572
map 511
Visitors' Checklist 511
- Kashgaria 491, 503, 508, 510
- Kazakhs 24, 506, 507
- Kazakhstan 503
- Kegong Fang (Lijiang) 390
- Kelsang Potrang (Lhasa) 529
- Khaishan 52
- Khampa people 371
- Khi Vehdu 196
- Khoshila 52
- Khotan 515
hotels 572
- Khunjerab Pass 514
- King of Borneo's Tomb (Nanjing) 231
- King Wah Building (Hong Kong) 331
- Kipling, Rudyard 491
- Kirghiz people 507
- Kite flying 603
festivals 44
- Kizil 509
- KLM 625
- Knives
Yengisar Country Small Knife Factory 514
- Ko Shan Theatre (Hong Kong) 332, 333
- Kodari 547
- Kong family 143
- Kongtong Shan 486
- Kongzhong Tianyuan (Wulingyuan) 264
- Korea 437, 440–41
- Kotnis, Dwarkanath 130
- Kowloon 278, 307
map 309
see also Hong Kong
- Koxinga (Zheng Chenggong) 286, 287
- Koxinga Memorial Hall (Gulang Yu) 287

- Kublai Khan 52, 60, 342, 388, 392
Beijing 73, 84, 90
and Chinese cuisine 76
Dongxiang people 484
Sakya Monastery 546
Xanadu 474
- Kuixing Tower (Pingyao) 139
- Kumarajiva 494, 509
- Kumbum (Gyantse) 543
- Kumbum Monastery see Ta'er Si
- Kundulun (Baotou) 470
- Kung, H.H. 187, 198
- Kung Fu 158, 159, 606
tai ji quan (Tai Chi) 273
- Kunming 373, 374-7
climate 48
hotels 568-9
map 375
Muslim Uprising 342
restaurants 594
- Kunming Lake 79
- Kuomintang (KMT) 66
and the Long March 256
- Kuqa 509
hotels 573
restaurants 597
- Kwan Wan Chung 315
- L
- Labor Park (Dalian) 444
- Labrang Monastery 461, 479,
482, 483, 527
- Labrang Nyingba (Lhasa) 531
- Lacquerware 292
- Laifeng Monastery (Tengchong)
389
- Laifeng Shan Park (Tengchong)
389
- Lama Temple (Beijing) 73, 92-3
- Lamaisam 134
Wudang Zhao 470
- Lamma Island 324
- Lan Kwai Fong (Hong Kong) 314
- Lan Shan Gongyuan (Lanzhou)
485
- Lan Ting (Shaoxing) 246
- The Landmark (Hong Kong) 310, 330, 331
- Landscape 20-23
karst 412-13
- Lang Mei Xian Ci (Wudang Shan) 272
- Langde 408
- Langmusi 482
- Language and script 18, 26-7, 612
Cantonese 279
Zhuang people 424
- Lantau Island 324-5
map 324-5
- Lantau Peak 325
- Lantern Festival 44
- Lanzhou 165, 461, 479, 484-5
hotels 572
map 484-5
restaurants 597
- Lao Hei Shan (Wu Da Lian Chi)
454
- Lao Long Tou 128
- Lao Shan 147
- Lao She Teahouse (Beijing) 113
- Laojun Pavilion (Qingcheng Shan) 368
- Laojun Yan 291
- Laos 373, 384
- Laozi 30, 31
Laojun Yan (Quanzhou) 291
Luoyang 152
Qingyang Gong (Chengdu)
358
- Largo do Senado (Macau) 327
- Later Jin dynasty 62
- Le Coq, Albert von 495, 505, 509
- Le Shan 349
Dafu 364-7
hotels 568
restaurants 594
- Lee, Bruce 159
- Legalism 51, 54
- Legislative Building (Hong Kong) 310
- Lei Shan 408
- Leigong Shan 408
- Leitai Si (Wuwei) 490
- Lenin 99
- Lesbian travelers 616-17
- Lhasa 499, 521, 528-37
air travel 627
Barkhor 530-31
climate 48
hotels 573
Jokhang Temple 521, 530,
532-3
map 528-9
Potala Palace 521, 534-5
restaurants 597
Visitors' Checklist 529
- Li Bai 28, 56, 58
Qutang Gorge 353
tomb of 233
- Li Bing 368
- Li Cang, Marquis of Dai 260
- Li Chun 130
- Li Guangxiu 376
- Li people 25, 279, 295, 304
- Li Qingzhao Memorial Hall
(Ji'nan) 142
- Li river 342, 343
at Guilin 414
karst landscape 412
Li river cruise 416-17
- Li Xiucheng 204
- Li Zhisui 263
- Lianfengshan Park (Beidaihe)
128
- Liangma Antique Market
(Beijing) 112, 113
- Liao Bingxiong 301
- Liao dynasty 52, 58
- Liao Zhongkai
tomb of 230
- Liaoning province 430, 437, 438
hotels 570
restaurants 595-6
- Lidui Park (Duijiangyan) 368-9
- Life (Hong Kong) 332, 333
- Ligong Pagoda (Hangzhou) 241
- Lijiang 343, 373, 390-92, 393
hotels 569
restaurants 595
Street-by-Street map 390-91
Visitors' Checklist 391
- Limestone, karst 412-13
- Lin Biao 65, 67
- Lin Mo 149
- Lin Zexu 292
- Lin Zexu Memorial Hall
(Fuzhou) 292
- Lingdi emperor 52
- Linggu Pagoda (Nanjing) 229,
230
- Linggu Temple (Nanjing) 229, 230
- Lingshui 304-5
- Lingyin Si (Hangzhou) 241
- Lingyun Ting (Zhenjiang) 218
- Linxia 484
- Lishu calligraphy 27
- Literature 28-9
customs information 611
- Little, Edward 252
- "Little eats" 577
- Liu Bei 354
tomb of 359
- Liu Rong Si (Guangzhou) 299
- Liu Shaoqi 65
- Liu Xu
tomb of 220
- Liu Yazhi 216
- Liu Yuan (Suzhou) 211
- Liubiju (Beijing) 85
- Liugong Island 149
- Liulichang (Beijing) 85, 112
- Lizong emperor 53
- Loess plateau 153
- Lok Cha Tea Shop (Hong Kong)
330-31
- Long Corridor (Summer Palace,
Beijing) 101, 102
- Long Lake
Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
- Long March 66, 177, 256-7
Luding Chain Bridge 256, 371
Yunyi Conference 410
- Longevity Hill (Summer Palace,
Beijing) 100, 102
- Longgong Dong 400-401
- Longhua Cemetery of Martyrs
(Shanghai) 199
- Longhua Si (Shanghai) 199
- Longji Titian 404-5, 420
- Longjing Village (Hangzhou) 240
- Longmen Caves 73, 141, 154-7
- Longqing emperor 52
- Longquan Si (Wutai Shan) 136
- Longrui Nature Preserve 424
- Longshan culture 51

- Longsheng 420
 Longtan Village 419
 Longting Park (Kaifeng) 151
 Longwu Si (Tongren) 498
 Lotus Flower Cave (Longmen Caves) 155
 Lovers' Festival 46
 Lowland landscape and wildlife 23
 Lu, Y.C. 230
 Lu Hou emperor 52
 Lu Shan 239, 252-3
 hotels 563
 Long March 256
 Lu Su
 tomb of 267
 Lu Xun 29, 198
 Lu Xun's Former Residence (Shaoxing) 246
 Lu Yu 293
 Luck and prosperity 42-3
 Ludi Yan (Guilin) 415
 Luding 371
 Luding Chain Bridge 256, 371
 Lufthansa 625
 Lukhang (Lhasa) 528
 Lunar calendar 44
 Luo Yue people 424
 Luohan Hall (Baoguang Si) 360
 Luohan Si (Chongqing) 350
 Luohou Si (Wutai Shan) 134
 Luomen 482
 Luoshi Ta (Wuwei) 490
 Luoyang 72, 141, 152
 air travel 627
 hotels 557
 restaurants 585
 Luoyang City Museum (Luoyang) 152
 Lushan 445
 Lyceum Theater (Shanghai) 200, 201
- M
 Macartney, Lord 62, 63, 433
 Macau 326-9
 airport 625
 entertainment 332-3
 food and drink 329
 history 307
 hotels 567
 map 327
 Portuguese colony 278, 307, 326
 restaurants 593
 returned to China 67
 shopping 330-31
 visas and passports 610
 Visitors' Checklist 327
 Macau Cultural Centre 332, 333
 Macau Museum 326
 Macau Tower 328
 Maclehoze Trail (New Territories) 321
 Magazines 623
 Mahao Cave Tombs (Le Shan) 365
- Mahayana Buddhism 31, 487
 see also Buddhism
Mahjong 602
 Mai Po Marshes 321
 Maiji Shan 480-81
 Mail services 622
 Maitreya Buddha 536
 Majestic Theater (Shanghai) 200, 201
 Malaria 619
 Maling Canyon 402
 Malone's American Café (Shanghai) 201
 Man Mo Temple (Hong Kong) 314
 Manchu dynasty 62, 430, 432-3
 Manchukuo 66, 431, 437, 446
 Manchuria 66, 430-31, 437
 Mandalas 536
 Mandarin Chinese 26, 612
 Mandarin Duck Hall (Suzhou) 206
 Manfeilong Ta 385
 Manguanghan 385
 Manguanglong Si (Gasa) 384
 Manjusri 135
 Manjusri Temple (Lhasa) 536
 Manlei Si (Mengzhe) 384
 Manpo 385
 Mansion of Prince Gong (Beijing) 90, 113
 Manting 384
 Manting Wat (Jinghong) 382
 Manzhouli 474
 Mao Ling (Xi'an) 170
 Mao Zedong 99, 250
 birthplace 259, 260, 262
 Changsha 260
 cult of Mao 262-3
 Cultural Revolution 64-5, 67
 death 67
 Dripping Water Cave (Shao Shan) 260
 founds People's Republic of China 66
 Great Leap Forward 67
 Hongyuan Cun (Chongqing) 351
 Hunan 177
 Long March 66, 256-7
 Lu Shan 252, 253
 Mao Ancestral Temple (Shao Shan) 260
 Mao Zedong Exhibition Hall (Shao Shan) 260
 Mao's Family House (Shao Shan) 260
 Mao's Villa (Wuhan) 266
 Mausoleum (Beijing) 82
 Monument to the People's Heroes (Beijing) 83
 and Northeast China 431
 Ode to Plum Blossom (Stone Forest) 378
 Peasant Movement Institute (Guangzhou) 298
- Mao Zedong (cont.)
 Site of the First National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party (Shanghai) 194 statues of 292, 438, 440
 Tai Shan 145
 Tian'an Men (Beijing) 83
 Underground City (Beijing) 84
 Yan'an 171
 Zunyi Conference 410
 Maotai 410
 Maps
 Asia 10
 Beijing 80-81
 Beijing: Street Finder 114-19
 Beijing: Tian'an Men Square 82-3
 Beijing and the North 70-71
 Central China 174-5
 Changbai Shan 448-9
 Chengdu 359
 China 10-11, 12-13
 Chongqing 351
 Dali and Er Hai 387
 Dalian 445
 Emei Shan 362-3
 Fujian 285
 Gansu and Qinghai 479
 Ghenghis Khan's empire 471
 Grand Canal 217
 Great Wall of China 107
 Greater Beijing 80
 Greater Shanghai 185
 Guangdong and Hainan 295
 Guangzhou 299
 Guilin 415
 Guiyang 399
 Guizhou and Guangxi 397
 Hainan Island 305
 Hangzhou 241
 Harbin 451
 Hebei, Tianjin and Shanxi 121
 Hong Kong 308-9
 Hong Kong: Street Finder 334-7
 Huang Shan 236-7
 Huangpu river 195
 Hunan and Hubei 259
 Inner Mongolia and Ningxia 467
 Inner Mongolia and the Silk Roads 458-9
 Jiangsu and Anhui 203
 Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
 Kaifeng 151
 Kashgar 511
 Kowloon 309
 Kunming 375
 Lantau Island 324-5
 Lanzhou 484-5
 Lhasa 528-9
 Li river cruise 416-17
 Lijiang 390-91
 Long March 256-7
 Longmen Caves 155
 Macau 327
 Miao communities 406

- Maps (cont.)
- Miao villages 409
 - Nanchang 251
 - Nanjing 223
 - Northeast China 428–9
 - Qingdao 146–7
 - Shaanshi province 161
 - Shamian Island 300–301
 - Shandong and Henan 141
 - Shanghai 184–5
 - Shenyang 439
 - Shigatse 545
 - Sichuan and Chongqing 349
 - Silk Road 465
 - South China 276–7
 - Southwest China 340–41
 - The Spread of Buddhism 487
 - Suzhou 205
 - Tai Shan 144–5
 - Tianjin 129
 - Tibet 518–19
 - Tiger Leaping Gorge 394–5
 - Trans Siberian Express 435
 - Victoria Peak (Hong Kong) 312–13
 - Wuhan 266–7
 - Wulingyuan 264–5
 - Wutai Shan 134–5, 136
 - Xiamen and Gulang Yu 287
 - Xi'an 163
 - Xinjiang 503
 - Xishuangbanna 385
 - Yangshuo 419
 - Yangzhou 221
 - Yangzi cruise 352–3
 - Yunnan 373
 - Zhejiang and Jiangxi 239
- Marble Boat (Summer Palace, Beijing) 100
- Marble Carriageway (Forbidden City) 87
- Marco Polo Bridge 110
- Marco Polo Hotels 553
- Maritime Museum (Macau) 328
- Markets 599
- Bazaar (Turpan) 504
 - Beijing 94
 - Bird and Flower Market (Kunming) 374
 - Bird and Flower Markets (Hong Kong) 317
 - Dai people 383
 - Hong Kong and Macau 330, 331
 - Jade Market (Hong Kong) 317, 330, 331
 - Medicinal Market (Bozhou) 233
 - Night Market (Shigatse) 544
 - Qingping Market (Guangzhou) 298
 - Shanghai 200
 - Sheung Wan's Markets (Hong Kong) 315
 - Shuijing Xiang Market (Xining) 498
- Markets (cont.)
- Sunday Market (Kashgar) 510
 - Temple Street Market (Hong Kong) 317, 330, 331
 - Tibetan market (Shigatse) 544 see also Shopping
- Marks & Spencer (Hong Kong) 331
- Marriott 553
- Martial arts 32, 606
- festivals 46
 - Kung Fu 158, 159
- Martial Arts School (Wudang Shan) 272
- Martyrs' Memorial (Nanjing) 231
- Martyrs' Memorial Hall (Heng Shan) 261
- Martyrs' Park (Changsha) 260
- Marx, Karl 99, 297
- Mason, Richard 310
- Masta 617
- Matang 409
- Mati Si (Zhangye) 490
- May 7 Cadre Schools 65
- Mazu Miao (Meizhou Island) 291
- MD Travel Health 617
- Measurements 613
- Medical facilities 617
- Medical insurance 611, 617
- Medicine
- Chinese Medicine Museum (Hangzhou) 240
 - Medicinal Market (Bozhou) 233
 - Traditional medicine 232
- "Meet in Beijing" Festival 45
- Mei Lanfang 75
- Mei Yuan (Taihu) 216
- Meilu Villa (Lu Shan) 253
- Meiyuan Xincun (Nanjing) 226
- Meizhou Island 279, 285, 291
- Mekong river 373, 382, 527
- Melikawat 515
- Mencius 141, 143
- Mengda Tian Chi 499
- Menghai 384
- Menghun 385
- Mengla 384
- Menglun 384
- Mengzhe 384
- Menus
- Beijing and the North 77
 - Central China 181
 - South China 283
 - Southwest China 347
- Meridian Gate (Forbidden City) 86
- Meru Nyingba (Lhasa) 531
- Meteorite Shower Museum (Jilin) 447
- Mi Fu 247
- Miao people 340, 342–3, 402
- festivals and crafts 406–7, 409
 - Guizhou and Guangxi 397
 - maps 406, 409
 - villages 408–9
- Miao Rebellion 409
- Miaoying Temple White Dagoba (Beijing) 99
- Mid-Autumn Festival 46, 333
- Military History Museum (Beijing) 99
- Millennium City (Kaifeng) 151
- Min Jiang 368, 369
- Min people 285
- Ming dynasty 52, 60–61
- Great Wall of China 61, 106–7
 - literature 28, 29
 - Ming Tombs (Beijing) 33, 104–5
 - Nanjing 177
 - porcelain 254, 255
 - Xiao Ling Tomb (Nanjing) 230
- Ming Palace Ruins (Nanjing) 226
- Ming Shan 352
- Mingdi emperor 52
- Mingjiao Si (Hefei) 233
- Mingsha Shan 494
- Mini Three Gorges 353
- Minority peoples 18–19, 24–5
- food and drink 577
 - River Border 455
 - see also individual peoples*
- Minsk World (Shenzhen) 296
- Mirror Pools 340
- Mishi Xiang (Lijiang) 391
- Mission Hills 604, 607
- Mo Yan 29
- Mobile phones 622
- Mochou Lake (Nanjing) 227
- Mogao Caves 461, 495, 497
- Mohammed, Prophet 221
- Mohammed Kashgari
- tomb of 511
- Mohe 454
- Monasteries
- accommodation in 551
 - Dabei Monastery (Tianjin) 129
 - Drepung Monastery (Lhasa) 536
 - Ganden Monastery (Lhasa) 520, 527, 537, 538–9
 - Kongtong Shan 486
 - Labrang Monastery 479, 482, 483, 527
 - Meru Nyingba (Lhasa) 531
 - Nechung Monastery (Lhasa) 536–7
 - Pelkor Chode Monastery (Gyantse) 543
 - Po Lin Monastery (Lantau Island) 324–5
 - Rongphu Monastery 546
 - Sakya Monastery 520, 521, 546
 - Samye Monastery 520, 540–41
 - Sera Monastery (Lhasa) 521, 537
 - Shibao Zhai 352
 - Ta'er Si 500–501
 - Tashilunpo Monastery (Shigatse) 544–5

- Monasteries (cont.)
 10,000 Buddhas Monastery (Hong Kong) 320
 Tibetan Buddhism 521, 522
 Tsurphu Monastery 542
 Wudang Zhao 470
- Money 620–21
 currency exchange 620
 duty-free allowances 611
 security 616
- Mongkok Computer Centre (Hong Kong) 330, 331
- Mongol empire 59, 60
- Mongol Global Tours 605, 607
- Mongolia see Inner Mongolia
- Monkey Island 305
- Monument to the People's Heroes (Beijing)
 Street-by-Street map 83
- Monument to the Red Army
 Martyrs (Zunyi) 410
- Mor Pagoda (Ha Noi) 511
- Morrison, Robert 326
- Moscow 435
- Mosques 507
 etiquette 614
 Alтын Mosque (Yarkand) 515
 Cow Street Mosque (Beijing) 98
 Great Mosque (Hohhot) 468
 Great Mosque (Kuqa) 509
 Great Mosque (Xi'an) 163
 Great Mosque (Xining) 498
 Huaisheng Mosque (Guangzhou) 299
 Id Kah Mosque (Kashgar) 510
 Imin Ta (Turpan) 504
 Nangan Mosque (Linxia) 484
 Nangan Mosque (Yinchuan) 475
 Qingjing Mosque (Quanzhou) 291
 Xianhe Mosque (Yangzhou) 221
- Mosquitos 619
- Motorcycle rickshaws 633
- Motorcycle taxis 633
- Mountaineering 606, 607
- Mountains
 Cangyan Shan 130
 Changbai Shan 448–9
 Emei Shan 349, 362–3
 Fenghuang Shan 441
 Flaming Mountains (Turpan) 505
 Helan Shan 476
 Heng Shan 131, 261
 Hua Shan 161, 171
 Huang Shan 203, 236–7
 Jinggang Shan 239, 257
 Jiuhua Shan 203, 234
 Karakoram Highway 514
 Karakoram Mountains 503
 landscape and wildlife 20
 Lao Shan 147
- Mountains (cont.)
 Long March 256–7
 Lu Shan 252–3
 Maiji Shan 480–81
 Ming Shan 352
 Pamir Mountains 491, 503
 Putuo Shan 248–9
 Qilian Shan 490
 Qixia Shan 240
 Southwest China 344
 Tai Shan 72, 73, 141, 144–5
 Tian Shan 503
 Tiantai Shan 247
 Victoria Peak (Hong Kong) 312–13
 Wudang Shan 259, 272
 Wulingyuan 264–5
 Wutai Shan 121, 134–6
 Wuyi Shan 285, 288–9, 292
 Wuzhi Shan 304
 Yandang Shan 239, 247
 Yangshuo 418, 419
 Yulong Xue Shan 392
 Zhuque Shan 447
- Moxi Xiang 371
- Mu Fu (Lijiang) 392
- Mudan river 452
- Mudanjiang 452
 hotels 571
- Mu'en Tang (Shanghai) 188
- Mui Wo 325
- Mukden see Shenyang
- Murphy, Henry 229
- Murray House (Stanley) 323
- Museums and galleries
 admission charges 612
 Ancient Observatory (Beijing) 94–5
 Art Museum (Guangzhou) 301
 Beijing Natural History Museum 95
 China National Museum (Beijing) 83
 Chinese Medicine Museum (Hangzhou) 240
 Chinese Military History Museum (Beijing) 99
 Chongqing Museum (Chongqing) 350
 City Museum (Kunming) 375
 Dali Museum (Dali) 386
 Dinosaur Museum (Zigong) 355
 Du Fu's Thatched Cottage (Chengdu) 358
 Dunhuang County Museum (Dunhuang) 494
 18 September Museum (Shenyang) 438
 Forest of Stelae Museum (Xi'an) 162
 Former Residence of Zhou Enlai (Shanghai) 194
 Foshan Folk Art Studio (Foshan) 302
- Museums (cont.)
 Furniture Museum (Pingyao) 138
 Gansu Provincial Museum (Lanzhou) 485
 Great Wall Museum (Dandong) 441
 Great Wall Museum (Jiayuguan) 490
 Great Wall Museum (Shanhaiguan) 128
 Hanlinyuan Museum (Yangzhou) 220
 Hebei Provincial Museum (Shijiazhuang) 130
 Henan Provincial Museum (Zhengzhou) 152
 Heritage Museum (Hong Kong) 320
 Hetian Cultural Museum (Khotan) 515
 Hong Kong Museum of Art 316
 Hong Kong Museum of History 316–17
 Hong Kong Science Museum 316
 Hubei Provincial Museum (Wuhan) 266
 Hunan Provincial Museum (Changsha) 260
 Inner Mongolia Museum (Hohhot) 468
 Jiazhou Huayuan (Le Shan) 364
 Long March Museum (Zunyi) 410
 Lu Xun's Former Residence (Shanghai) 198
 Luoyang City Museum (Luoyang) 152
 Macau Museum (Macau) 326
 Mao Zedong Exhibition Hall (Shao Shan) 260
 Mao's Family House (Shao Shan) 260
 Maritime Museum (Macau) 328
 Meiyuan Xincun (Nanjing) 226
 Memorial Hall to the Martyrs of the Revolution (Nanchang) 250
 Meteorite Shower Museum (Jilin) 447
 Minorities Museum (Kaili) 408
 Municipal Museum (Guangzhou) 301
 Museum of the 1895 Sino-Japanese War (Weihai) 149
 Museum of Ceramic History (Jingdezhen) 255
 Museum of Dr. Sun Yat Sen (Nanjing) 229, 230
 Museum of Naxi Culture (Lijiang) 392
 Museum of Opera and Theater (Suzhou) 205

Museums (cont.)

- Museum of Overseas Trade (Quanzhou) 291
 Museum to Commemorate Aiding Korea & Resisting America (Dandong) 441
 Museum of Yin Ruins (Anyang) 152
 National Art Museum of China (Beijing) 94
 Nationality Museum (Tongshi) 304
 Ningxia Provincial Museum (Yinchuan) 475
 Overseas Chinese Museum (Xiamen) 286
 Peasant Movement Institute (Guangzhou) 298
 Porcelain Museum (Jingdezhen) 255
 Pottery Exhibition Hall (Yixing) 218
 Provincial Museum (Fuzhou) 292
 Provincial Museum (Guiyang) 398
 Provincial Museum (Harbin) 450
 Provincial Museum (Hefei) 233
 Provincial Museum (Kunming) 374
 Provincial Museum (Nanchang) 251
 Provincial Museum (Nanjing) 226
 Provincial Museum (Nanning) 423 Provincial Museum (Wuwei) 490
 Qingdao Museum 147
 Qingyun Pu (Nanchang) 251
 Red Gate Gallery (Beijing) 95
 Revolutionary Museum (Nanchang) 250
 Rishenchang (Pingyao) 138
 Sanxingdui Museum 360
 Shaanxi History Museum (Xi'an) 161, 166-7
 Shandong Provincial Museum (Ji'nan) 142
 Shanghai History Museum 189
 Shanghai Museum 190-91, 200, 201
 Shanxi Provincial Museum (Taiyuan) 137
 Sichuan University Museum (Chengdu) 359
 Site of the First National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party (Shanghai) 194
 Song Qingling's Former Residence (Shanghai) 198
 Stilwell Museum (Chongqing) 351
 Sun Yat Sen Memorial Residence (Shanghai) 194

Museum (cont.)

- Sun Yat Sen's Residence (Cuiheng) 302
 Suzhou Museum (Suzhou) 204
 Suzhou Silk Museum (Suzhou) 204
 Taiping Heavenly Kingdom History Museum (Nanjing) 222
 Tea Museum (Hangzhou) 240
 Tianjin Fine Art Museum (Tianjin) 129
 Tianjixiang Museum (Pingyao) 139
 Tibet Museum (Lhasa) 529
 Tujia Museum (Furongzhen) 261
 Turpan Museum (Turpan) 504
 Wang Shi Xiao Yuan (Yangzhou) 221
 Wen Miao (Wuwei) 490
 Wenyu Museum (Jinzhou) 440
 Wuxi Museum (Wuxi) 216
 Xianyang City Museum (Xianyang) 170
 Xinjiang Provincial Museum (Ürümqi) 506
 Yan'an Revolutionary Museum (Yan'an) 171
 Yangzhou Museum (Yangzhou) 220
 Yantai Museum (Yantai) 148
 Yong Ling Museum (Chengdu) 358
 Zhenjiang Museum (Zhenjiang) 218
 Zigong Salt Museum (Zigong) 355
- Music 40
 Beijing Opera 74-5, 113
 discs and karaoke 603
 festivals 47
 Hong Kong 332, 333
 rock and pop music 603
 Shanghai 200, 201
 Sichuan opera 360
 traditional music 603
- Music Room Live (Hong Kong) 332, 333
- Muslims and Islam 507
 Aba Khoja Mausoleum (Kashgar) 512-13
 Arab traders 278
 Cow Street Mosque (Beijing) 98
 food and drink 77
 Garden Tomb of Puhaddin (Yangzhou) 221
 Great Mosque (Xi'an) 163
 Huaihseng Mosque (Guangzhou) 299
 Islamic Cemetery (Guangzhou) 300-301
 Muslim Quarter (Kunming) 375
 Muslim Uprising (1856) 342
 in Xinjiang 503
see also Mosques

Mutianyu 108

- Muzong emperor 52
 Myanmar 373, 384-5, 389
 Myths and Mountains 605, 607

N

- Na-Li (Beijing) 112, 113
 Nadam Fair 46
 Nakchu Horse Race Festival 46
 Namtso Lake 519, 542-3
 Nan Putuo Si (Xiamen) 286
 Nan Yue Palace Gardens (Guangzhou) 298
 Nan Yue Tomb (Guangzhou) 300
 Nanchan Si (Wutai Shan) 136
 Nanchang 239, 250-51
 hotels 563
 map 251
 restaurants 589
 Nanchang Uprising (1927) 177
 Nanguan Mosque (Linxia) 484
 Nanguan Mosque (Yinchuan) 475
 Nanhua Si (Shaoguan) 303
 Nanjing 177, 203, 222-31
 hotels 561
 food and drink 180
 map 223
 Purple Mountain 228-30
 restaurants 588
 Visitors' Checklist 223
 Zhonghua Gate 224-5
- Nanjing, Treaty of 63, 183
 Nanjing Lu (Shanghai) 188, 197
 Nanjing Massacre (1937) 227
 Memorial (Purple Mountain) 231
 Nanjing Yangzi River Bridge (Nanjing) 227
 Nanking see Nanjing
 Nanking Road see Nanjing Lu
 Nanning 423
 hotels 569-70
 Nanping 234
 Nanshan Si (Wutai Shan) 136
 Nanwu Chaoxi Si (Huanglong Xi) 368
 Nanyan Gong (Wudang Shan) 272
 Nanyue 261
 Nanyue Damiao (Heng Shan) 261
 Nanzhao Kingdom 342, 374, 388
 Nathan Road (Hong Kong) 316, 330
 National Art Museum of China (Beijing) 94
 National Day 47
 National Theater (Beijing) 41
 Nationalist Party see Kuomintang (KMT)
- Nature preserves
 Changbai Shan Reserve 437, 448-9
 Chishui 410
 Everest Base Camp 546
 Hanas Lake Nature Reserve 508
 Jianfeng Ling Nature Reserve 305

- Nature Preserves (cont.)
 Longrui Nature Preserve 424
 Mengda Nature Reserve 499
 Shennongjia Forest reserve 177, 259, 272
 Wolong Nature Preserve 349, 369
 Wulingyuan Nature Preserve 264-5
 Zhalong Nature Reserve 403, 437, 452
- Naxi people 24, 343, 393
 Dongba Research Institute (Lijiang) 392
- Nechung Monastery (Lhasa) 536-7
- Nengren Si (Jiujiang) 252
- Neolithic period 51, 72
- Nepal border 546, 547
- Nestorian Christianity 162
- New Territories 321
- New Year
 Chinese 42, 47
 Tibetan 44
 Western 47
- Newspapers 623
- Night Market (Beijing) 94
- Night Market (Shigatse) 544
- Nightclubs
 Beijing 113
 Hong Kong 332, 333
 Shanghai 201
- Nine Dragon Screen (Beijing) 90
- Nine Horse Fresco Hill 417
- Ningbo 239, 246
- Ningxia province 460, 461, 467
 hotels 571
 map 467
 restaurants 596
- Ningxia Provincial Museum (Yinchuan) 475
- Ningzong emperor 53
- Ninth Dragon Screen (Forbidden City) 89
- Nixon, Richard 67, 286
- No Name Bar (Beijing) 113
- Nomads 524-5
 Mongols of the Steppe 462-3
 Tibet 521
- Noonday Gun (Hong Kong) 311
- Norbulingka (Lhasa) 529
- North Korea 437, 440-41
- North Pagoda (Shenyang) 438
- North Tomb (Shenyang) 439
- Northeast China 427-55
 Changbai Shan 448-9
 forests 22
 fossils 453
 hotels 570-1
 Liaoning, Jilin and Heilongjiang 437-55
 Manchu dynasty 432-3
 maps 428-9
 peoples 25
 Portrait of Northeast China 430-31
- Northeast China (cont.)
 restaurants 595-6
 River Border minorities 455
 Trans Siberian Express 434-5
see also Beijing and the North
- Northern Dynasties 53, 55
- Northern Song dynasty 53, 59
- Northern Wei dynasty 53, 55, 132
- Northwest Airlines 625
- Northwest Yunnan Ecotourism Association 607
- Novels 29
- Novotel 553
- Nowrojee, Dorabjee 315
- Nu, U 382
- No. 1 Department Store (Shanghai) 200, 201
- Nunneries
 Ani Tsankhung Nunnery (Lhasa) 529
 Fulu Buddha Nunnery (Sanjiang) 420
- Nuorilang Falls 370
- Nuoyu 394
- Nurhachi 62, 432, 438
 tomb of 439
- O
- Observatories
 Ancient Observatory (Beijing) 94-5
 Purple Mountain Observatory (Nanjing) 228, 230
- Ocean Park (Hong Kong) 322-3, 332, 333
- Old Protestant Cemetery (Macau) 326
- Old Racecourse (Shanghai) 189, 197
- Old Summer Palace see Yuanming Yuan
- Old Town (Kashgar) 510
- Olympic Games 604, 607
- 108 Dagobas (Ningxia) 477
- Opal (Kashgar) 511
- Opening hours 612
 banks 620
 restaurants 576 shops 598
- Opera
 Beijing Opera 74-5, 113, 602
 festivals 46
 model operas 65
 Museum of Opera and Theater (Suzhou) 205
 Sichuan opera 360
- Opium Wars 63, 278, 422
- Orange Pavilion (Suzhou) 207
- Orchid Garden (Guangzhou) 300-301
- Oriental Pearl TV Tower (Pudong) 40
- Oriental Pearl TV Tower (Shanghai) 189
- Oroqen people 25, 455
- Otani, Count 495
- Ou Yuan (Suzhou) 204
- Our Lady of China (Shanghai) 199
- Our Lady of Lourdes (Shamian Island) 301
- Overseas Chinese Museum (Xiamen) 286
- Overseas Chinese Tropical Farm (Xinglong) 304
- P
- Pacific Hotel (Shanghai) 188
- Pacific Place (Hong Kong) 330, 331
- Padmasambhava 520
- Pagodas 35, 165
 Bai Ta (Hohhot) 469
 Baisikou Shuang Ta 476
 Beisi Ta (Suzhou) 204
 Big Wild Goose Pagoda (Xi'an) 161, 164, 487
 Fan Pagoda (Kaifeng) 151
 Gongtang Pagoda 483
 Haibao Ta (Yinchuan) 475
 Iron Pagoda (Kaifeng) 150
 Ligong Pagoda (Hangzhou) 241
 Linggu Pagoda (Nanjing) 229, 230
 North Pagoda (Shenyang) 438
 Qianxun Ta (Dali) 373
 Qiji Futu Pagoda (Harbin) 451
 Riming Shuang Ta (Guilin) 414
 Ruigang Pagoda (Suzhou) 213
 San Ta (Dali) 386-7
 Shengjin Ta Pagoda (Nanchang) 251
 Shuang Ta (Suzhou) 210
 Si Men Pagoda (Ji'an) 142
 Six Harmonies Pagoda (Hangzhou) 241
 Small Goose Pagoda (Xi'an) 161, 164
 Songyang Si Pagoda (Songshan) 158
 Wat Ben Pagoda 382
 Wenfeng Pagoda (Anyang) 152
 Wu Ta Si (Hohhot) 469
 Xi Si Ta (Kunming) 375
 Yan'an Bao Pagoda (Yan'an) 171
 Yingxian Pagoda 165
- Paintballing 606
- Paintings see Arts and crafts
- Pak Tai Temple (Cheung Chau Island) 324
- Pak Tam Chung Visitor Centre (Sai Kung Town) 321
- Pakistan 503, 514
- Palace Hotel (Shanghai) 187
- Palace Museum (Forbidden City) 86-9
- Palaces
 Ganden Palace (Lhasa) 536
 Imperial Palace (Shenyang) 432, 438

- Palaces (cont.)
 Jinjiang Prince's Palace (Guilin) 415
 Ming Palace Ruins (Nanjing) 226
 Palace of Abstinence (Forbidden City) 89
 Palace of Earthly Tranquillity (Forbidden City) 88
 Palace of Eternal Harmony (Forbidden City) 88–9
 Palace of Heavenly Purity (Forbidden City) 88
 Palace of Peaceful Longevity (Forbidden City) 89
 Potala Palace 534–5
 Puppet Emperor's Palace (Changchun) 431, 446
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 100–102
 Summer Palace (Lhasa) 529
 Pamir Mountains 461, 503
 The "Great Game" 491
 Karakoram Highway 514
 Pan Men Scenic Area (Suzhou) 212–13
 Panchen Lamas
 Chengde 123
 11th Panchen Lama 544
 Tashilunpo Monastery (Shigatse) 544, 545
 Pandas 361
 Panda Breeding Center 360
 Wolong Nature Preserve 369
 Panjiayuan Market (Beijing) 112, 113
 Panlong 424
 Park Hotel (Shanghai) 188
 Park Hyatt 553
 Parks and gardens (general)
 admission charges 612
 playing games in 602
 traditional Chinese gardens 178–9
 Parks and gardens (individual)
 Bailuzhou Park (Nanjing) 222
 Baita Shan Gongyuan (Lanzhou) 484
 Bayi Park (Nanchang) 250
 Beihai Park (Beijing) 90
 Beijing Botanical Gardens 103
 Botanic Gardens (Menglung) 384
 Botanical Gardens (Nanjing) 230
 Canglang Ting (Suzhou) 210–11
 Cui Hu Gongyuan (Kunming) 374
 Danxia Shan 303
 Di Tan Park (Beijing) 93
 Donghai Park (Dalian) 444
 Fuxing Park (Shanghai) 194
 Ge Yuan (Yangzhou) 220
 Haigeng Park (Lake Dian) 377
 He Yuan (Yangzhou) 221
 Parks and gardens (cont.)
 Heilong Tan Gongyuan (Lijiang) 392
 Hong Kong Zoological & Botanical Gardens 311
 Hongkou Park (Shanghai) 198
 Hongshan Park (Ürümqi) 506
 Huagang Garden (Hangzhou) 242
 Huanglong Dong Park (Hangzhou) 240
 Huangpu Park (Shanghai) 195
 Humble Administrator's Garden (Suzhou) 206–7
 Imperial Gardens (Forbidden City) 88
 Jiangxin Park (Wenzhou) 247
 Jin Shan Park (Zhenjiang) 218
 Jing Shan Park (Beijing) 90
 Jinhua Cha Gardens 423
 Lan Shan Gongyuan (Lanzhou) 485
 Lianfengshan Park (Beidaihe) 128
 Liu Yuan (Suzhou) 211
 Longting Park (Kaifeng) 151
 Mei Yuan (Taihu) 216
 Nan Yue Palace Gardens (Guangzhou) 298
 Norbulingka (Lhasa) 529
 Old Racecourse (Shanghai) 189, 197
 Orchid Garden (Guangzhou) 300–301
 Ou Yuan (Suzhou) 204
 Pan Men Scenic Area (Suzhou) 212–13
 People's Park (Shanghai) 188
 Qianling Shan Park (Guiyang) 399
 Qixing Gongyuan (Guilin) 414
 Renmin Park (Chengdu) 359
 Renmin Park (Nanning) 423
 Shizi Lin (Suzhou) 204
 Shou Xi Hu (Yangzhou) 220
 Shuzhuang Garden (Gulang Yu) 287
 Stalin Park (Harbin) 450
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 100–102
 Sun Island Park (Harbin) 450
 Taibao Shan Park (Baoshan) 388–9
 Tiger Hill (Suzhou) 211
 Tropical Botanical Gardens (Xishuangbanna) 344
 Tropical Flower and Plant Garden (Jinghong) 382
 Tuisi Yuan (Tongli) 216
 Victoria Park (Hong Kong) 311
 Victoria Peak Garden (Hong Kong) 312
 Wangshi Yuan (Suzhou) 210
 Wanshi Botanical Garden (Xiamen) 286
 Parks and gardens (cont.)
 Wucuan Shan Gongyuan (Lanzhou) 485
 Xi Yuan (Suzhou) 211
 Xiang Shan Park (Beijing) 103
 Xihui Park (Wuxi) 216
 Xinglong Tropical Botanical Gardens 304
 Xu Yuan (Nanjing) 223
 Xuanwu Lake (Nanjing) 226
 Yantai Shan Park (Yantai) 148
 Yi Yuan (Suzhou) 210
 Yu Gardens and Bazaar (Shanghai) 192–3
 Yuanming Yuan (Garden of Perfect Brightness, Beijing) 103, 433
 Yuexiu Gongyuan (Guangzhou) 301
 Yuhuandqing Park (Yantai) 148
 Yuhuatai (Nanjing) 231
 Zhaolin Park (Harbin) 450
 Passports 610–11
 security 616
 Pavilion of a Thousand Autumns (Forbidden City) 88
 Peace Hotel (Shanghai) 187
 Peace Hotel Jazz Bar (Shanghai) 200, 201
 Peak Tower (Hong Kong) 313
 Peak Tram (Hong Kong) 313
 Pearl-Beach Falls
 Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
 Pearl river 278, 295
 Mai Po Marshes 321
 Peasant Movement Institute (Guangzhou) 298
 Pedder Building (Hong Kong) 331
 Pegasus (Shanghai) 201
 Pei, I.M. 310
 Peking Man site 111
 Pelkor Chode Monastery (Gyantse) 543
 Pelliot, Paul 495, 509
 Peng Dehui 253
 Penglai Pavilion 149
 Penholder Peak
 Li river cruise 417
 Peninsula Hotels 553
 Penjing 179
 Peoples of China 24–5
see also Ethnic minorities
 People's Hall (Lu Shan) 253
 People's Liberation Army (PLA)
 Cultural Revolution 64, 65
 People's Park and Square (Shanghai) 188
 Period of Disunity 53
 Permits 611
 Personal security 616–17
 Phagpa 546
 Pharmacies 617
 Philosophy 30–31
qi 32–3

- Photography 613
 etiquette 614
- Pileguo 388
- Ping An 420
- Pingdi emperor 52
- Pingliang 486
- Pingxiang 424-5
- Pingyao 35, 121, 138-9
 hotels 556
 restaurants 584
- Pinyin script 27, 612
- Plants 20-3
 bamboo 411
 ginseng 448
 plant hunters 345
 Southwest China 344-5
see also Parks and gardens
- Plum Blossom Hill (Purple Mountain) 230
- Plum Monastery (Zhaoqing) 302
- Po Lin Monastery (Lantau Island) 324-5
- "Pockmarked Huang" 194, 197
- Poetry, Tang 28
- Pok Fu Lam Reservoir (Hong Kong) 312
- Police 616, 617
- Pollution 18, 618
- Polo, Marco 60, 243, 465
 and China's Jews 151
 in Fuzhou 292
 in Hangzhou 240
 Hualin Si (Guangzhou) 298
 Marco Polo Bridge 110
 Yangzi river 176
- Pop music 603
- Porcelain see Ceramics
- Port Arthur see Lushun
- Portugal
 food and drink in Macau 329 and Macau 278, 307, 326
- Postal services 622
- Poste restante 622-3
- Potala Palace (Lhasa) 521, 534-5
- Pottery see Ceramics
- Pottery Exhibition Hall (Yixing) 218
- Pousada São Tiago (Macau) 328
- Poyang, Lake 239
- Praia Grande (Macau) 327
- Precious Clouds Pavilion (Summer Palace, Beijing) 102
- Prescription Cave (Longmen Caves) 155
- Prescription drugs 617
- Printing 37
- Prosperity 42-3
- Protestant Church (Qingdao) 146
- Provincial Museum (Guiyang) 398
- Provincial Museum (Kunming) 374
- Provincial Museum (Nanchang) 251
- Provincial Museum (Nanjing) 226
- Pu Songling 147
- Pu Yi, Emperor 53, 63, 66, 446
 abdication 89
 Beijing Botanical Gardens 103
 and Manchukuo 431, 437, 446
 Puppet Emperor's Palace (Changchun) 431, 446
 tomb of 109
- Public holidays 47, 552, 612
- Public Security Bureau (PSB) 611, 616
- Public toilets 617
- Pubs
 Beijing 113
 Hong Kong 332, 333
- Pudong (Shanghai) 183, 187, 189
- Puhaddin
 Garden Tomb of Puhaddin (Yangzhou) 221
- Puji Si (Putuo Shan) 248
- Pule Si (Chengde) 123, 128
- Puning Si (Chengde) 34, 123, 124-5
- Puntsok Palace 546
- Puppet Emperor's Palace (Changchun) 431, 446
- Puppet theater 603
- Purple Mountain (Nanjing) 228-30
- Pusa Ding (Wutai Shan) 135
- Putonghua (Chinese language) 26, 612
- Putuo Shan 175, 239, 248-9
 hotels 563
 restaurants 589
- Putuo Zongcheng Zhi Miao (Chengde) 122
- Puzhao Si (Tai Shan) 144
- ## Q
- Qantas 625
- Qi* 32-3
 traditional medicine 232
- Qi Fo Si (Wutai Shan) 135
- Qian Bu Sha (Putuo Shan) 249
- Qian Ling (Xi'an) 170
- Qian Men (Beijing) 84
 Street-by-Street map 82
- Qian Men Carpet Company (Beijing) 112, 113
- Qiang people 371
- Qianling Shan Park (Guiyang) 399
- Qianlong emperor 53, 62, 122, 432, 433
 Baoguang Si 360
 Beijing Opera 74
 Chengde 123
 Eastern Qing Tombs 109
 food customs and etiquette 579
 Great Bell Temple (Beijing) 103
 Mansion of Prince Gong (Beijing) 90
 Marco Polo Bridge 110
- Qianlong emperor (cont.)
 Puning Si (Chengde) 124
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 100, 102
 and Xiangfei 512
 Yangzhou 220
 Yuanming Yuan (Beijing) 103, 433
- Qianming Si (Guiyang) 398
- Qiantang river 242
- Qianxun Ta (Dali) 373, 386
- Qiao Guifa 139
- Qiao Jia Dayuan 139
- Qidan people 58
- Qigong 32
- Qiji Futu Pagoda (Harbin) 451
- Qilian Shan 490
- Qin dynasty 53, 54
- Qin Shi Huangdi emperor 53, 54, 145, 161
 and Confucius 143
 Great Wall of China 106
 Heng Shan 131
 Penglai 149
 Terracotta Army 54, 73, 161, 168-9
 tomb of 169
- Qing dynasty 53, 62-3
 Eastern Qing Tombs 109
 literature 28, 29
 porcelain 255
 Manchu dynasty 432-3
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 100
 Taiping Rebellion 222
- Qing Teng Shu Wu (Shaoxing) 246
- Qingcheng Shan 368
- Qingdao 73, 141, 146-7, 604
 hotels 558
 map 146-7
 restaurants 585
- Qingdao International Beer
 Festival 46
- Qingdao Museum (Qingdao) 147
- Qinghai Hu 459, 461, 479, 499
- Qinghai province 460, 461, 479
 hotels 571
 map 479
 restaurants 596-7
- Qingjing Mosque (Quanzhou) 291
- Qingming Festival 45
- Qingning Palace (Shenyang) 438
- Qingping Market (Guangzhou) 298
- Qingshan (Baotou) 470
- Qingyang 399
- Qingyang Gong (Chengdu) 343, 358
- Qingyin Ge (Emei Shan) 363
- Qingyuan 303
- Qingyuan Shan 291
- Qingyun Pu (Nanchang) 251
- Qingzhen Si (Tianjin) 129
- Qinian Dian (Beijing) 97
- Qinzong emperor 53, 59

- Qiongzong 304
 Qiongzhu Si (Kunming) 376
 Qiqiha'er 452, 454
 hotels 571
 Qixia Shan (Hangzhou) 240
 Qixia Si (Nanjing) 231
 Qixing Gongyuan (Guilin) 414
 Qixing Yan 302
 Qu Yuan 45
 Quanzhou 285, 291
 hotels 564
 Qufu 73, 142-3
 hotels 558
 restaurants 585
 Qutang Xia 353
- R
 Rabies 619
 Radio 623
 Radisson 553
 Railways see Trains
 Ramada 553
 Ramoche (Lhasa) 528
 Red (Shanghai) 201
 Red Army
 cult of Mao 262
 Long March 66, 256, 371
 Nanchang Uprising 177
 Zunyi Conference 410
 Red Basin 349
 Red Gate Gallery (Beijing) 95
 Red Guard 64
 Red Palace (Lhasa) 534, 535
 Red Turbans 60
 Reform Movement 63
 Rehai 389
 Religion 19, 30-31
 festivals 44
 see also Buddhism;
 Christianity; Muslims and Islam
 Renmin Park (Chengdu) 359
 Renmin Square (Dalian) 444
 Renmin Square (Nanchang) 250
 Renzong emperor 53
 Repulse Bay 323
 Resonant Sand Gorge 470
 Restaurants 574-97
 etiquette 614
 air conditioning 618
 bargaining 615
 customs and etiquette 578-9
 ethnic food 577
 fast food 577
 in hotels 576
 opening hours 576
 service charges 615
 smoking in 615
 themed restaurants 577
 tipping in 579
 vegetarian food 577
 Western restaurants 577
 see also Food and drink
*Retreat in the Qingbian
 Mountain* (Wang Meng) 191
- Revolutionary Museum
 (Nanchang) 250
 Ricci, Matteo 61
 astronomy 94
 and China's Jews 151
 South Cathedral (Beijing) 85
 Xujiahui Catholic Cathedral
 (Shanghai) 199
 Zhaoqing 302
- Rice 280-81
 terraces 404-5
 Rice wine 581
 Richtofen, Baron von 464
 Rickshaws, motorcycle 633
 Riming Shuang Ta (Guilin)
 414
 Rinpoche, Guru 540, 541
 Ripley's Believe It or Not!
 Odditorium (Hong Kong) 333
 Rishenchang (Pingyao) 138
 River Border 454
 minority peoples 455
 River cruises
 Li river cruise 416-17
 Yangzi cruise 352-4
 River Promenade (Shanghai)
 186
 Road names 633
 Rock, Joseph 345, 390
 Rock and pop music 603
 Rong Hu (Guilin) 414
 Rongphu Monastery 546
 Rongshui river 420
 Room With a View (Shanghai)
 200, 201
 Rua de Felicidade (Macau) 328
 Rugby 604, 607
 Ruifuxiang (Beijing) 85
 Ruigang Pagoda (Suzhou) 213
 Ruijin Guesthouse (Shanghai) 194
 Ruili 389
 Ruinas de São Paulo (Macau) 326
 Ruizong emperor 52
 Russia
 The "Great Game" 491, 543
 and Harbin 431, 437, 450
 Russian Orthodox Church 196,
 450
 Ruzhen (Jurchen) people 58
 Ruzi emperor 52
- S
 Sacred Heart Church
 (Guangzhou) 298
 Safety 616-17
 Sai Kung Town and Peninsula
 Beaches (Hong Kong) 320-21
 St. Joseph's Church (Beijing) 94
 St. Mary's Church (Beijing) 85
 St. Michael's Church (Qingdao)
 146
 St. Regis 553
 Sakya Monastery 520, 521, 546
 Sakya Pandita 546
 Sakya Yeshe 537
- Salt
 mining salt in Sichuan 355
 Zigong 355
 Salween river 373, 527
 Sami people 378
 Sam's Tailor (Hong Kong) 331
 Samye Monastery 520, 540-41
 San Ta (Dali) 386-7
 Sanchahe Elephant Reserve 382
 Sanche river 401
 Sangke 482
 Sanjiang 420-21
 Sanqing Si (Western Hills) 377
 Sanshan Island (Taihu) 216
 Sanxingdui 343
 Sanxingdui Museum 360
 Sanya 305
 Sanyang Feng 292
 SARS (severe acute respiratory syndrome) 618-19
 Sassoon, Sir Victor 187
 Sayram Lake 508
 Schall von Bell, Adam 94, 433
 Schistosomiasis 619
 Science Museum (Hong Kong)
 316
 Scripts 26-7
 calligraphy 27, 219
 Naxi script 393
 Secluded Pavilion of Firmiana
 Simplex and Bamboo
 (Suzhou) 207
 Security 616-17
 Sera Monastery (Lhasa) 521, 537
 Service charges, in hotels 551
 Seventeen-arch Bridge (Summer
 Palace, Beijing) 102
 Sexually transmitted diseases 619
 Sha Tin Racecourse (Hong
 Kong) 332, 333
 Shaanxi History Museum (Xi'an)
 161, 166-7
 Shaanxi province 72, 161-71
 hotels 558-9
 restaurants 585
 Shadow plays 603
 Shamian Island 298, 300-301
 hotels 565
 map 300-301
 Shan Hu (Guilin) 414
 Shandong province 72, 73, 141
 food and drink 76-7
 hotels 557-8
 map 141
 restaurants 585
 Shandong Provincial Museum
 (Ji'nan) 142
 Shang Cai Dong (Wutai Shan)
 135
 Shang City Walls (Zhengzhou)
 152
 Shang dynasty 51, 52, 72
 oracle bones 26, 152
 Shangdi emperor 52

- Shangfeng Si (Heng Shan) 261
 Shanghai 16, 176–7, 183–201
 air travel 625, 627
 banks 620
 Bund 176, 183, 186–7, 195, 197
 climate 49
 entertainment 200–201
 food and drink 180
 hospitals 617
 hotels 559
 Huangpu river 195
 map 184–5
 Old Shanghai 197
 Public Security Bureau (PSB) 611
 restaurants 586–8
 Shanghai Museum 190–91
 shopping 200–201
 skiing 605
 subway 632
 Yu Gardens and Bazaar 192–3
 Shanghai Antique & Curio Shop (Shanghai) 200, 201
 Shanghai Center 188, 200, 201
 Shanghai Dramatic Arts Center 200, 201
 Shanghai Exhibition Center 196
 Shanghai Film Art Center 201
 Shanghai Financial Center 189
 Shanghai Grand Theater 188, 200, 201
 Shanghai History Museum 189
 Shanghai International Film Festival 45
 Shanghai Museum 200, 201
 Shanghai Music Conservatory Auditorium 200, 201
 Shanghai No. 1 Department Store 188
 Shanghai Pearl City (Shanghai) 200, 201
 Shanghai Tang (Hong Kong) 331
 Shangqing Gong (Qingcheng Shan) 368
 Shangri-La Hotels 553
 Shangyong 384
 Shanhaiguan 121, 128
 hotels 556
 Shanhua Si (Datong) 131
 Shanshaan Gan Guild Hall (Kaifeng) 150
 Shantou 296
 Shanxi province 72, 73, 121
 hotels 556
 map 121
 restaurants 584–5
 Shanxi Provincial Museum (Taiyuan) 137
 Shao Shan 259, 260, 262
 Shaoguan 303
 Shaolin International Martial Arts Festival 46
 Shaolin Temple 141, 158, 159, 606
 Shaoxing 239, 246
 Shaping 388
 Shapotou 459, 476
 Shaw, George Bernard 198
 She Shan (Shanghai) 199
 Sheli Ta (Baoguang Si) 360
 Shen Nong emperor 293
 Shengjin Ta Pagoda (Nanchang) 251
 Shennong Xi 353, 354
 Shennongjia 177, 259, 272
 Shenyang 430, 432, 437, 438–9
 hotels 571
 map 439
 restaurants 596
 Shenzhen 295, 296
 hotels 565
 Shenzong emperor 53
 Sher Ali 491
 Sheraton 553
 Sheung Wan's Markets (Hong Kong) 315
 Shexian 203, 234
 Shi De 211
 Shi Lin (Stone Forest) 373, 378–9, 412
 Shi Tao 220
 Shiba Pan (Tai Shan) 144
 Shibao Zhai 352, 354
 Shibing 409
 Shidebala 52
 Shidong 408
 Shidu 111
 Shigatse 544–5
 hotels 573
 map 545
 restaurants 597
 Shijiazhuang 130
 hotels 556
 restaurants 584
 Ship Lifting Tower (Three Gorges Dam) 269
 Shipaotai Gongyuan (Shantou) 296
 Shishao 400
 Shizhang Dong 410
 Shizi Lin (Suzhou) 174, 204
 Shizi Yan 303
 Shizong emperor 58
 Shopping 598–601
 antiques shops 112, 200, 330, 599
 bargaining 598, 615
 Beijing 112–13
 department stores and boutiques 112, 330, 599
 government shops 599
 Hong Kong and Macau 330–31
 how to pay 598
 opening hours 598
 Shanghai 200–201
 What to Buy in China 600–601
 see also Markets
 Shoton (Yoghurt festival) 46
 Shou Ning Si (Wutai Shan) 135
 Shou Xi Hu (Yangzhou) 220
 Shu kingdom 53, 343
 Shuang Ta (Suzhou) 210
 Shuanglin Si 139
 Shuijing Xiang Market (Xining) 498
 Shuilian Dong (Huangguoshu Falls) 401
 Shuilian Dong (Wuyi Shan) 292
 Shundi emperor 52
 Shunzhi emperor 53
 Eastern Qing Tombs 109
 Imperial Palace (Shenyang) 438
 Shunzong emperor 52
 Shuzheng Zhai
 Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
 Shuzhuang Garden (Gulang Yu) 287
 Si Men Pagoda (Ji'nan) 142
 Siberia 454, 458, 467
 Sichuan opera 360
 Sichuan province 343, 349–71
 carvings of Dazu 356–7
 Dafo (Le Shan) 364–7
 Emei Shan 362–3
 food and drink 346
 giant pandas 361
 hotels 567–8
 map 349
 restaurants 593–4
 salt mines 355
 Yangzi cruise 352–4
 Sichuan University Museum (Chengdu) 359
 Sidong Gou 410
 Sifang Jie (Lijiang) 391
 Silk 208–9
 Hetian Silk Factory (Khotan) 515
 Silk Embroidery Research Institute (Suzhou) 210
 Suzhou Silk Museum (Suzhou) 204
 What to Buy in China 601
 Silk Roads 54, 60, 342, 464–5
 Baoshan 388
 Burma Road 377
 Dunhuang 494
 Hexi Corridor 479
 Karakoram Highway 514
 Kashgar 510
 Khotan 515
 Race for the Silk Road Oases 495
 Silk Road 515
 The Spread of Buddhism 487
 Tengchong 389
 Turpan 504
 Xi'an 162
 Xinjiang 503
 Yarkand 515
 Yengisar 514
 see also Inner Mongolia and the Silk Roads

- Sima Qian 28
 Simatai 108
 Simplified script 27
 Sino-Japanese War (1894–5) 63, 148
 Lushun (Port Arthur) 445
 Museum of the 1895 Sino-Japanese War (Weihai) 149
 Site of the First National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party (Shanghai) 194
 Six Harmonies Pagoda (Hangzhou) 241
 Skiing 605
 Sleeping Buddha Temple (Beijing) 103
 Small Wild Goose Pagoda (Xi'an) 161, 164
 Smoking 615
 Snake Repository (Wuzhou) 422
 Soccer 604, 607
 Sofitel 553
 Soft drinks 580
 Sogo (Hong Kong) 330, 331
 Sok Kwu Wan 324
 Song, T.V. 198
 Song Ailing 198
 Song dynasty 53, 58, 59
 Central China 177
 Gongyi 158
 porcelain 255
 Song Jiang 199
 Song Meiling 198, 253, 304
 Song Qingling 297
 Song Qingling's Former Residence (Shanghai) 198
 Sun Yat Sen Memorial Residence (Shanghai) 194
 Wenchang 304
 Song Shan 141
 Songhua Lake 447
 Songhua river 447
 Songpan 349, 369
 Songshan 158
 Songtsen Gampo, King 520
 Jokhang Temple (Lhasa) 532–3
 Potala Palace (Lhasa) 534
 Ramoche (Lhasa) 528
 Songyang Academy (Songshan) 158
 Songyang Si Pagoda (Songshan) 158
 South Cathedral (Beijing) 85
 South China 275–337
 food and drink 282–3
 Fujian 285–93
 Guangdong and Hainan 295–305
 Hong Kong and Macau 307–37
 hotels 564
 map 276–7
 peoples 25
 Portrait of the South 278–9
 restaurants 590–1
 rice 280–1
 South China Sea 295
 South Gate (Yinchuan) 475
 South Lake Island (Summer Palace, Beijing) 102
 Southeast Corner Watchtower (Beijing) 95
 Southern Dynasties 53, 55
 Southern Song dynasty 53, 59
 Hangzhou 240
 Southwest China 339–425
 bamboo 411
 Chinese cranes 403
 flora of Southwest China 344–5
 food and drink 346–7
 Guizhou and Guangxi 397–425
 hotels 567–70
 karst 412–13
 map 340–41
 peoples 24
 Portrait of Southwest China 342–3
 restaurants 593–5
 Sichuan and Chongqing 349–71
 Yunnan 373–95
 Souvenirs 600–601
 Special Economic Zones 67
 Specialist holidays 604–7
 Spectator sports 602, 604
 Spelunking 607
 Splendid China (Shenzhen) 296
 Sports 604–7
 Hong Kong 332, 333
 spectator sports 602, 604
 Spring in China 44–5
 Spring City 604, 607
 Spring Festival (Chin Jie) 42, 44
 Stalin, Joseph 99
 Stalin Park (Harbin) 450
 Stanley 323
 markets 330, 331
 Star Ferry (Hong Kong) 315
 Star House (Hong Kong) 330, 331
 Stein, Sir Aurel 495, 496
 Steppes 469
 grassland 22
 Mongols of the Steppe 462–3
 Steppes East 605, 607
 Steps of China, landscape 21
 Stilwell, General
 Burma Road 377
 Stilwell Museum (Chongqing) 351
 Stomach upsets 618
 Stone Forest (Shi Lin) 373, 378–9, 412
 Stone Sutra Valley (Tai Shan) 145
 Street food 576
 Studio City (Shanghai) 201
 Stupa Forest Temple 110
 Stupas 165
 Su Causeway (Hangzhou) 243
 Su Dongpo 574
 Forest of Stelae Museum (Xi'an) 162
 Su Dongpo (cont.)
 Liu Rong Si (Guangzhou) 299
 Su Causeway (Hangzhou) 243
 Wugong Si (Haikou) 304
 Yizhou Pavilion (Changzhou) 218
 Su Zimei 210
 Subashi Gucheng 509
 Subways
 Beijing 632
 Shanghai 632
 Sui (court official) 268
 Sui dynasty 53, 55, 161
 Sui Wendi emperor 217
 Sui Yandi emperor 217
 Suleiman, Prince 504
 Summer in China 45–6
 weather 48, 618
 Summer Palace (Beijing) 72, 100–102
 Visitors' Checklist 101
 Summer Palace (Lhasa) 529
 Sun Asia Ocean World (Dalian) 444–5
 Sun Dong'an Plaza (Beijing) 112, 113
 Sun Island Park (Harbin) 450
 Sun protection 618
 Sun Yat Sen 63, 198, 297, 304
 at Guilin 415
 birthplace 302
 Hong Kong 314
 Kuomintang 66
 Mausoleum (Nanjing) 228, 229, 230
 Museum of Dr. Sun Yat Sen (Nanjing) 229, 230
 Nanjing 222, 223
 Purple Mountain (Nanjing) 230
 Sun Yat Sen Memorial Hall (Guangzhou) 301
 Sun Yat Sen Memorial Residence (Shanghai) 194
 Wuhan 266
 Xiang Shan Park (Beijing) 103
 Sunday Market (Kashgar) 510
 Sunlight Rock (Gulang Yu) 287
 Sunni Muslims 507
 Suyu Kou 476
 Suzhe cuisine 181
 Suzhou 177, 203, 204–15
 air travel 627
 hotels 561
 Humble Administrator's Garden 206–7
 map 205
 Pan Men Scenic Area (Suzhou) 212–13
 Public Security Bureau (PSB) 611
 restaurants 588–9
 Visitors' Checklist 205
 Suzhou Museum (Suzhou) 204
 Suzhou Silk Museum 204
 Suzong emperor 52

- Swatow see Chaozhou; Shantou
Swimming 604
Symbolism
 dragons 88
 Eight Auspicious Symbols 542
 food 575
- T
Tableware 579
Ta'er Si 460, 461, 479, 500–501
Tai ji quan (Tai Chi) 273
Tai Long Wan 320, 321
Tai Mo Shan 321
Tai O 324, 325
Tai Shan 72, 73, 93, 141, 144–5
 map 144–5
Tai Shan Miao (Wudang Shan) 272
Tai'an
 hotels 558
 restaurants 585
 Tai Shan 144–5
Tai'an Temple (Qingcheng Shan)
 368
Taibao Shan Park (Baoshan)
 388–9
Taichang emperor 52, 61
Taihu 177, 216
Taihua Si (Western Hills) 377
Taihuai 134
 restaurants 584
Tajiang 408
Taiping Rebellion (1851–64) 63,
 259, 342, 422
 Jintian 423
 Suzhou Museum 204
 Taiping Heavenly Kingdom
 History Museum (Nanjing) 222
Taiqing Temple (Lao Shan)
 147
Taiwan, Nationalist government established in 66–7
Taiyuan 137
 hotels 556
Taizong emperor 52, 53, 57
 Fayuan Temple (Beijing) 98
 tomb 170
Taizu emperor 53
Tajiks 507
Taklamakan Desert 461, 494,
 503, 515
Tan Hao 132
Tan Kah Kee 286
Tang An 421
Tang Bo 250
Tang Chung Ling Ancestral Hall
 (New Territories) 321
Tang dynasty 52, 56–8, 161
 Buddhism 487
 poetry 28
 porcelain 255
Tang Wenzong emperor 162
Tango Martini (Hong Kong) 332, 333
Tangyue 234
Tanzhe Temple 110
- Tao Qian 31
Tara Chapel (Lhasa) 536
Tashi Dor 543
Tashilunpo Monastery (Shigatse)
 544–5
Tashkurgan 514
Tatars 507
Taxes, air travel 625
Taxis
 airport 625, 627
 in cities 633
Tayuan Si (Wutai Shan) 134
Tea 279, 293
 Guiping 422–3
 Longjing Village (Hangzhou)
 240
 Tea Museum (Hangzhou) 240
 What to Drink in China 580
Teachers' Day 46
Teahouses, Beijing 113
Telephones 622
 dialling codes 623
Television 623
Temple Street Market (Hong
 Kong) 317, 330, 331
Temples (general)
 admission charges 612
 etiquette 614
Temples (individual)
 Baoguang Si 360
 Confucian Temple (Suzhou)
 211
 Confucius Temple (Beijing) 93
 Dong Yue Miao (Beijing) 93
 Eight Immortals Temple
 (Xi'an) 161, 164
 Fayuan Temple (Beijing) 98
 Great Bell Temple (Beijing) 103
 Hanging Temple 121, 131
 Hanshan Si (Suzhou) 211
 Heng Shan 261
 Jade Buddha Temple
 (Shanghai) 196
 Jing'an Temple (Shanghai) 196
 Jiuhua Shan 234
 Jokhang Temple (Lhasa) 530,
 532–3
 Lama Temple (Beijing) 92–3
 Linggu Temple (Nanjing) 229,
 230
 Man Mo Temple (Hong Kong)
 314
 Puning Si (Chengde) 123,
 124–5
 Shaolin Temple 141, 158, 159
 Shuanglin Si 139
 Ta'er Si 500–501
 Tai Shan 144–5
 Tanzhe Temple 110
 Temple of Heaven (Beijing)
 70, 96–7
 White Clouds Temple (Beijing)
 98–9
 Wong Tai Sin Temple (Hong Kong) 317
- Temples (cont.)
 Wutai Shan 134–6
 see also individual towns and cities
 Temur Oljeitu 52
 Ten Kingdoms 52, 58
 Ten Thousand Buddha Cave
 (Longmen Caves) 155
 10,000 Buddhas Monastery
 (Hong Kong) 320
 Teng Wang Pavilion (Nanchang)
 250–51
 Tengchong 389
 Tengger Desert 476
 Terrace for Watching the Sunrise
 (Heng Shan) 261
 Terracotta Army 54, 73, 161,
 168–9
Textiles
 Beijing shops 112, 113
 Shanghai shops 200, 201
 silk 208–9
 Silk Embroidery Research Institute (Suzhou) 210
 Suzhou Silk Museum (Suzhou)
 204
 tours 605
 What to Buy in China 601
Thangkhas 536
Theater 41
 Beijing 112
 Beijing Opera 74–5, 113, 602
 Museum of Opera and Theater
 (Suzhou) 205
 shadow plays and puppet
 theater 603
 Shanghai 200, 201
 traditional theater 113, 602–3
Theft 616
Theme parks
 Fisherman's Wharf (Macau) 328
 Hong Kong Disneyland 325,
 332, 333
 Ocean Park (Hong Kong)
 322–3
 Shenzhen 296
Themed restaurants 577
Third Moon Fair 45
Thousand Buddha Caves (Kizil)
 509
Thousand Buddha Cliffs
 (Nanjing) 231
Thousand Buddha Mountain
 (Ji'nan) 142
Three Gorges 270–71
 Three Gorges Dam 67, 176,
 259, 268–9, 352–4
 Yangzi cruise 352, 353
Three Pools Reflecting the Moon
 (Hangzhou) 242
Tian Chi 437, 448, 449, 503, 506
Tian Hau Festival 45
Tian Shan 461, 503
Tian Tan (Temple of Heaven,
 Beijing) 70, 96–7

- Tian'an Men (Beijing)
Street-by-Street map 83
- Tian'an Men Square (Beijing) 67
Street-by-Street map 82–3
- Tianchan Yifu Theater
(Shanghai) 200, 201
- Tianchao Gong (Nanjing) 223
- Tianhou (Empress of Heaven) 149
- Tianhou Gong (Shantou) 296
- Tianhou Temple (Tianjin) 129
- Tianjin 73, 129
food and drink 77
map 129
- Tianjin Fine Art Museum
(Tianjin) 129
- Tianjin province 121
hotels 556–7
map 121
restaurants 584–5
- Tianjixiang Museum (Pingyao) 139
- Tianlong Shan Grottoes
(Taiyuan) 137
- Tianqi emperor 52
- Tianqiao Happy Teahouse
(Beijing) 113
- Tianshi Dong (Qingcheng Shan)
368
- Tianshui 461
hotels 572
restaurants 597
- Tianshun emperor 52
- Tiantai Buddhist sect 247
- Tiantai Shan 247, 400
- Tiantai Zhengding (Jiuhua Shan)
234
- Tianxing 401
- Tianya Haijiao 305
- Tianye Ge (Ningbo) 246
- Tianyou Shan 292
- Tianzhu Peak (Wudang Shan) 272
- Tianzi Ge (Wulingyuan) 265
- Tibet 516–47
British invasion 543
customs information 611
frontier 371, 499
The "Great Game" 491, 543
hotels 573
landscape and wildlife 20
Lhasa 528–37
map 518–19
nomadic life 524–5
Portrait of Tibet 520–21
restaurants 597
Tibetan plateau 479, 527
visas and passports 610–11
Zhongdian 395
- Tibet Museum (Lhasa) 529
- Tibetan Buddhism 461, 520, 522–3
Lukhang (Lhasa) 528
Samye Monastery 540–41
Ta'er Si 500–501
thangkhas and mandalas 536
Xilitu Zhao (Hohhot) 468–9
- Tibetan New Year 44
- Tibetan Oracle 536–7
- Tickets
admission charges 612
advance booking 610
air travel 624–5, 627
buses 631
trains 629
- Tiger Beach Scenic Area 444
- Tiger Hill (Suzhou) 211
- Tiger Lair (Longgong Dong) 401
- Tiger Leaping Gorge 373, 394–5
- Tigers
Siberian Tiger Park (Harbin) 450
- Time zones 613
- Timetables, trains 628
- Timur 491
- Tin Hau Temple (Stanley) 323
- Tingri 547
hotels 573
- Tippling 615
in hotels 553
in restaurants 579
- Toba Wei 53, 55
- Toghon Temur 52
- Toilets, public 617
- Tombs and cemeteries
Aba Khoja Mausoleum
(Kashgar) 513
Astana 505
Confucius Forest (Qufu) 143
East Tomb (Shenyang) 439
Eastern Qing Tombs 109
Gongyi 158
Hunan Provincial Museum
(Changsha) 260
Islamic Cemetery (Guangzhou)
300–301
King of Borneo's Tomb
(Nanjing) 231
Longhua Cemetery of Martyrs
(Shanghai) 199
Mahao Cave Tombs (Le Shan)
365
Ming Tombs (Beijing) 104–5
Nan Yue Tomb (Guangzhou)
300
North Tomb (Shenyang) 439
Old Protestant Cemetery
(Macau) 326
Stanley Cemetery 323
Terracotta Army 168–9
Tomb of Yuan Shikai (Anyang)
152
Tomb of Yusup Hazi Hajup
(Kashgar) 511
Xi Xia Wang Ling 476
Xi'an 170
Xiao Ling Tomb (Nanjing) 230
Yue Fei Mu (Hangzhou) 240
- Tongli 177, 216
- Tongmenghui (United League) 63
- Tongren 498
hotels 572
- Tongrentang Pharmacy (Beijing)
85
- Tongshi (Hainan Island) 304
- Tongzhi emperor 53, 101
Eastern Qing Tombs 109
- Tourist information 612
- Tours
Choosing a tour 605, 607
Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
- Tower of the Fragrance of Buddha (Summer Palace,
Beijing) 102
- Trackers, Yangzi river 354
- Trains 628–9
advance booking 610
airport links 626–7
tours 605
train spotting 605
Trans Siberian Express 434–5
- Trams 633
Peak Tram (Hong Kong) 313
- Trans Siberian Express 434–5
- Travel 624–33
air 624–7
Beijing 81
Beijing and the North 70
buses 630–31
Central China 174
ferries and boats 631
Hong Kong 309
Inner Mongolia and the Silk
Roads 458
local transport in cities 632–3
Northeast China 429
Shanghai 184
South China 276
Southwest China 340
Tibet 519
trains 628–9
Trans Siberian Express 434–5
- Travel insurance 611
- Traveler's checks 621
in shops 598
- Tree-planting Day 44
- Trekking 607
- Trisong Detsen 520, 540, 541
- Tromzikhang (Lhasa) 531
- Tropical Botanical Gardens
(Xishuangbanna) 344
- Tropical forests, Southwest China
345
- Tsepak Lhakhang (Lhasa) 528
- Tsetang 541
hotels 573
- Tsim Sha Tsui Waterfront (Hong Kong) 316
- Tsingtao see Qingdao
- Tsingtao beer 146
- Tsogchen (Lhasa) 536, 537
- Tsongkhapa 536
Lama Temple (Beijing) 92
Summer Palace (Lhasa) 529
Ta'er Si 500
Wutai Shan 134
Yellow Hat Sect 520
- Tsurphu Monastery 542
- Tu Ta (Zhangye) 490

- Tugh Temur 52
 Tuisi Yuan (Tongli) 216
 Tujia people 25
 Tung Chung 325
 Tunxi 234
 hotels 562
 Turpan 461, 503, 504-5
 hotels 573
 restaurants 597
 Tushu Dasha (Beijing) 112, 113
 24 Bends (Tiger Leaping Gorge) 394
 Twin Pagoda Temple (Taiyuan) 137
 Two International Finance Centre (IFC, Hong Kong) 310
- U
 Uighur 460-61
 food and drink 77
 Islam 507
 Khotan 515
 Kuqa 509
 Turpan 504
 Yining 508-9
 UK Embassy 617
 UME International Cineplex (Shanghai) 201
 Underground City (Beijing) 84
 Underground Tunnel (Bozhou) 233
 UNESCO Biosphere Reserves
 Changbai Shan 448-9
 UNESCO World Heritage Sites
 Baoding Shan 357
 Dafo (Le Shan) 364-7
 Hongcun 234
 Imperial Palace (Shenyang) 438
 Lijiang 373, 390-91
 Longmen Caves 73
 Peking Man site 111
 Xidi 234
 United Airlines 625
 United Parcel Service 623
 Universal Theater (Beijing) 113
 University accommodation 550
 Upper and Lower Sengeshong (Tongren) 498
 Ürümqi 461, 503, 506
 climate 48
 hotels 573
 restaurants 597
 US Embassy 617
 Uzbeks 507
- V
 Vaccinations 611, 619
 Vegetarian food 577
 Verbiest, Father 94
 Victoria Park (Hong Kong) 311
 Victoria Peak (Hong Kong) 312-13
 Victoria Peak Garden (HK) 312
 Victory Monument (Chongqing) 350
- Vietnam 373, 423, 425
 Virgin Atlantic 625
 Visas 610-11
 Volcanoes
 Heshun 389
 Wu Da Lian Chi 454
- W
 W Hotels 553
 Walking
 Changbai Shan 449
 Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
 Tiger Leaping Gorge 394-5
 trekking 607
 in Xishuangbanna 385
 Walled Villages (New Territories) 321
 Walls see City walls
 Walnut Grove (Tiger Leaping Gorge) 395
 Wan Chai (Hong Kong) 310-11
 Wan Sheng Theater (Beijing) 113
 The Wanch (Hong Kong) 332, 333
 Wang, Abbot 495
 Wang Chongyang 99
 Wang Hai Lou Cathedral (Tianjin) 129
 Wang Hongwen 65
 Wang Jian 358
 Wang Mang 54
 Wang Meng, Retreat in the Qingbian Mountain 191
 Wang Shi Xiao Yuan (Yangzhou) 221
 Wang Wei 28
 Wang Wenhan 210
 Wang Xian Chen 206
 Wang Xizhi 246
 Wang Yuanlu 496
 Wangfeng Ting (Stone Forest) 378
 Wangfujing Street (Beijing) 94
 Wangjiang Lou Park (Chengdu) 359
 Wangjiaping Revolution
 Headquarters Site (Yan'an) 171
 Wangshi Yuan (Suzhou) 210
 Wangu Lou (Lijiang) 392
 Wangyue Lou (Beijing) 98
 Wanli emperor 52, 61, 302
 Ming Tombs (Beijing) 105
 South Cathedral (Beijing) 85
 Wannian Si (Emei Shan) 363
 Wanshi Botanical Garden (Xiamen) 286
 Ward, Frank Kingdon 345
 Warner, Langdon 495
 Warring States Period 51, 54
 Warts, health precautions 617
 Wase 388
 Wat Ben Pagoda 382
 Water, drinking 618, 619
 Water-borne diseases 619
 Water Curtain Thousand Buddha Caves (Luomen) 482
 Water Splashing Festival 383
- Water Sprinkling Festival 44
 Water wheels (Lijiang) 390
 Waterfalls
 Baihua Shan (Qiongzong) 304
 Big Dragon Pool Falls (Yandang Shan) 247
 Changbai Waterfall 448
 Detian Falls 397, 425
 Diaoshuilou Pubu (Jingpo Hu) 452
 Doupotang Falls 401
 Huangguoshu Falls 401
 Maling Canyon 402
 Nuorilang Falls 370
 Pearl-Beach Falls 370
- Weather 48-9
 cold weather 618
 heat and humidity 618
 when to go 610
 Wei Gao 365
 Wei Ken 196
 Wei kingdom 53
 Wei Wei 41
 Weidong 385
 Weifang International Kite Festival 44
 Weihai 148-9
 hotels 558
 Weining 402
 Wen Miao (Anshun) 400
 Wen Miao (Wuwei) 490
 Wenchang 304
 Wenchang Ge (Guiyang) 398
 Wenchang Ge (Yangzhou) 221
 Wencheng, Princess 528, 532, 533
 Wende, Empress 164
 Wendi emperor 52, 53
 Wenfeng Pagoda (Anyang) 152
 Wenshu (Manjusri) 135
 Wenshu Yuan (Chengdu) 358
 Wenyu Museum (Jinzhou) 440
 Wenzhou 247
 hotels 563
 restaurants 590
 Wenzong emperor 52
 West Lake (Hangzhou) 177, 242-5
 Western Han dynasty 52, 54
 Western Hills (Kunming) 377
 Western Jin dynasty 53
 Western Liao dynasty 58
 Western Market (Hong Kong) 330, 331
 Western Palaces (Forbidden City) 89
 Western restaurants 577
 Western Xia Empire 52, 58, 59, 477
 Xi Xia Wang Ling (Helan Shan) 476
 Yinchuan 475
 Western Zhou dynasty 51, 53, 161
 Westin 553
 Wetlands, landscape & wildlife 23

- Wheelchair access see Disabled travelers
- White Clouds Temple (Beijing) 98–9
- White Dagoba (Beijing) 90
- White Lotus Rebellion (1796–1805) 60, 63
- White Pagoda (Lanzhou) 165
- White Palace (Lhasa) 534, 535
- Whitewater rafting 607
- Wife Waiting for Husband (Stone Forest) 379
- Wild China 605, 607
- Wild Man 177, 259, 272
- Wildlife 20–23
Cao Hai 402
cranes 403
Emei Shan 362
giant pandas 361
Hong Kong Wetland Park 321
Jianfeng Ling Nature Reserve 305
Mai Po Marshes 321
Qinghai Hu 499
Sanhahe Elephant Reserve 382
Shennongjia 272
Snake Repository (Wuzhou) 422
specialist holidays 607
Wolong Nature Preserve 369
Wulingyuan 264
Xiamen Seaworld (Gulang Yu) 287
Yingxiong Shan (Gulang Yu) 287
Zhalong Nature Reserve 452
see also Zoos
- Wilhelm II, Kaiser 146
- Wilson, Ernest 272, 345
- Window on the World (Shenzhen) 296
- Wine 506
- Winter in China 47
weather 48, 618
- Winter Solstice 47
- Wolong Nature Preserve 349, 369
- Women travelers 616
- Wong Tai Sin Temple (Hong Kong) 317
- World of Suzie Wong (Beijing) 113
- World Trade Organisation 67
- World War II 66
Burma Road 377
Hongyuan Cun (Chongqing) 351
Nanjing Massacre (1937) 227
- Writing 26–7
calligraphy 27, 219
Naxi script 393
- Wu Da Lian Chi 437, 454
- Wu kingdom 53
- Wu Laiqing 377
- Wu Men Bridge (Suzhou) 212
- Wu Sangui, General 376
- Wu Ta (Fuzhou) 292
- Wu Ta Si (Hohhot) 469
- Wu Xia 234
- Wu Zetian, Empress 52, 57, 58, 101
Longmen Caves 154
Luoyang 152
tomb of 170
- Wudang Shan 259, 272, 606
- Wudang Zhao 470
- Wudi emperor 52, 464
Mao Ling (Xi'an) 170
Songyang Academy (Songshan) 158
Wuyi Shan 292
- Wugong Ci (Haikou) 304
- Wuhan 176, 259, 266–7
hotels 563–4
map 266–7
restaurants 590
- Wuhou Ci (Chengdu) 359
- Wuhou Si (Baoshan) 389
- Wuhu 233
- Wulingyuan 177, 259, 264–5
hotels 564
- Wuquan Shan Gongyuan (Lanzhou) 485
- Wusong Fort (Shanghai) 195
- Wusutu Zhao (Hohhot) 469
- Wuta Si (Hohhot) 472–3
- Wutai Shan 121, 134–6
hotels 557
map 136
restaurants 584–5
Visitors' Checklist 135
- Wuwei 490
- Wuwei Si (Dali) 387
- Wuxi 216
- Wuxi Museum (Wuxi) 216
- Wuyi Shan 285, 288–9, 292
hotels 564
- Wuyou Hill (Le Shan) 365
- Wuzhi Shan 304
- Wuzhou 422
- Wuzong emperor 52
- X
- Xanadu 474
- Xi Jiang 422
- Xi Jie (Yangshuo) 418
- Xi Kai Cathedral (Tianjin) 129
- Xi Ling, Empress 208
- Xi Shan (Guiping) 422
- Xi Si Ta (Kunming) 375
- Xi Xia Wang Ling (Helan Shan) 476
- Xi Yuan (Suzhou) 211
- Xia dynasty 51
- Xia Putao 388
- Xiahe 461, 479, 482
hotels 572
- Xiamen 285, 286–7
hotels 564–5
map 287
restaurants 590–1
- Xiamen Seaworld (Gulang Yu) 287
- Xi'an 72–3, 161, 162–70
air travel 627
climate 49
hotels 559
map 163
Public Security Bureau 611
restaurants 585–6
Shaanxi History Museum 161, 166–7
in Tang dynasty 56
Terracotta Army 54, 73, 161, 168–9
- Xian Tong Si (Wutai Shan) 135
- Xiangdi emperor 52
- Xianfeng emperor 53, 101
Eastern Qing Tombs 109
Mansion of Prince Gong (Beijing) 90
- Xiang river 257
- Xiang Shan Park (Beijing) 103
- Xiangbi Shan (Guilin) 414
- Xiangfei 512
Xiangfei's Tomb (Kashgar) 512
- Xianglu Shan 409
- Xiangyang Lu Clothes Market (Shanghai) 200, 201
- Xianhe Mosque (Yangzhou) 221
- Xianren Qiao (Wulingyuan) 264
- Xianyang City Museum (Xianyang) 170
- Xianzong emperor 52
- Xiao Ling Tomb (Nanjing) 230
- Xiao Shi Lin (Stone Forest) 378
- Xiaolong Tan 272
- Xiaoyajin Park (Hefei) 233
- Xiaoying Island (Hangzhou) 242
- Xiaozhai 412
- Xiaozong emperor 53
- Xibo people 509
- Xidi 234
- Xiding 384
- Xihui Park (Wuxi) 216
- Xijiang 340, 408
- Xilinhot 467, 474
- Xilitu Zhao (Hohhot) 468–9
- Ximao Zhou Island 305
- Xincun 305
- Xinglong Tropical Botanical Gardens 304
- Xingning Lu (Nanning) 423
- Xingping 413
Li river cruise 417
- Xingshu calligraphy 27
- Xingyi 402
- Xinhai Well (Zigong) 355
- Xining 479, 498
hotels 572
restaurants 597
- Xinjiang province 460, 461, 503–15
hotels 572
map 503
restaurants 597
- Xinjiang Provincial Museum (Ürümqi) 506

- Xishuangbanna 343, 344, 373, 382, 384-5
 Dai people 383, 384
 Xiuqing, Prince 223
 Xiuyang (Haikou) 304
 Xixiang Chi (Emei Shan) 363
 Xizhou 388
 Xizong emperor 52
 Baoguang Si 360
 Xu Da, General 222
 Xu Guangqi 199
 Xu Wei 246
 Xu Yuan (Nanjing) 223
 Xuan Jian 377
 Xuanbi Changcheng 490
 Xuancheng 233
 Xuande emperor 52, 61
 Xuandi emperor 52
 Xuandu Si (Heng Shan) 261
 Xuanmiao Guan (Suzhou) 205
 Xuanwu Lake (Nanjing) 226
 Xuanzang
 Big Wild Goose Pagoda (Xi'an) 164, 487
 Flaming Mountains (Turpan) 505
 Kuqa 509
 Lingu Temple (Purple Mountain) 230
 Mor Pagoda (Kashgar) 511 pilgrimage to India 29
 Xuanzong emperor 52, 57
 Xue Tao 359
 Xujiahui Catholic Cathedral (Shanghai) 199
 Xumi Shan Caves 467, 476
 Xumifushou Zhi Miao (Chengde) 123
 Xun river 422
 Xunyang Lou (Jiujiang) 252
- Y
 Yabuli 604, 607
 Yakub Beg 508, 510
 tomb of 513
 Yalong Bay 305
 Yalu Jiang Duan Qiao (Yalu River Bridge) 440-41
 Yan Yanzhi 415
 Yan'an 171
 hotels 559
 Long March 256
 Yan'an Bao Pagoda (Yan'an) 171
 Yan'an Revolutionary Museum (Yan'an) 171
 Yandang Shan 177, 239, 247
 Yang Can Mu 410
 Yang Guan 494
 Yang Guifei 57
 Yang Jian 55
 Yang Zengxin 506
 Yangdi
 Li river cruise 417
 Yangdi emperor 53, 55
 Yangpu Bridge (Shanghai) 195
 Yangshao culture 51
 Yangshuo 343, 397, 418-19
 hotels 570
 Li river cruise 417
 restaurants 595
 rock climbing 606
 Yangshuo Gongyuan 418
 Yangzhou 176, 203, 220-21
 map 221
 Yangzhou Museum 220
 Yangzi Bridge (Wuhan) 266
 Yangzi river 174, 176
 at Nanjing 222, 227
 at Shanghai 195
 at Chongqing 350
 delta 220
 Grand Canal 217
 in Hunan and Hubei 259
 in Jiangsu 203
 Three Gorges 270-71
 Three Gorges Dam 176, 268-9, 352-4
 in Tibet 527
 Yangzi cruise 352-4
 at Yueyang 261
 in Yunnan 373
 Yanqing Guan (Kaifeng) 150
 Yantai 148
 hotels 558
 Yantai Museum (Yantai) 148
 Yantai Shan Park (Yantai) 148
 Yao people 384, 420
 Yao Wenyuan 65
 Yaoqu 384
 Yarkand 515
 Yarlung Tsangpo river 527
 Yaxiu Clothing Market (Beijing) 112, 113
 Yehenala 439
 Yellow Cloth Shoal
 Li river cruise 417
 Yellow Crane Pavilion (Wuhan) 34, 266
 Yellow Emperor 162
 Yellow Hat (Gelugpa) Sect 520, 522
 Drepung Monastery (Lhasa) 536
 Labrang Monastery 482, 483
 Lama Temple (Beijing) 92
 Longwu Si (Tongren) 498
 Sera Monastery (Lhasa) 537
 Ta'er Si 500
 Wudang Zhao 470
 Wutai Shan 134
 Yellow River 72, 153, 171
 at Baotou 470
 at Ji'nan 142
 at Kaifeng 150
 at Lanzhou 484
 at Yinchuan 475
 Grand Canal 217
 in Inner Mongolia 459, 461
 in Lanzhou 479
 Mengda Tian Chi 499
 Shaanxi province 161
 Yellow River (cont.)
 Shandong and Henan 141
 Shanxi province 121
 at Zhongwei 476
 Yellow River Park (Zhengzhou) 152
 Yellow Sea 431
 Yengisar 514
 Yesun Temur 52
 Yi, Marquis of Henan 266
 Yi De, Prince
 tomb of 170
 Yi people 378, 402
 Yi Yin 574
 Yi Yuan (Suzhou) 210
 Yichang 259, 268
Yijing (Book of Changes) 33
 Yin and Yang
 food and drink 574-5
 Forbidden City 87
 traditional medicine 232
 Yin Tan (Silver Beach) 425
 Yinchang Canyon 369
 Yinchuan 467, 475
 hotels 571
 Ying, Prince of Chu 54
 Yingxian Pagoda 165
 Yingxiong Canyon 369
 Yingxiong Shan (Gulang Yu) 287
 Yingzong emperor 53
 Yining 508-9
 hotels 573
 Yixian 203, 234
 Yixing County 218
 Yizhou Pavilion (Changzhou) 218
 Yizong emperor 52
 Yong Ling Museum (Chengdu) 358
 Yong river 246
 Yongan Si (Beijing) 90
 Yongding 285
 earthen dwellings of Yongding 290
 Yongding river 110
 Yongle emperor 52, 61, 73
 Drum Tower (Beijing) 92
 Jing Shan Park (Beijing) 90
 Ming Tombs (Beijing) 104, 105
 Nanjing 223
 Yongzheng emperor 53, 62, 109, 122
 Forbidden City 89
 Youguo Si (Wutai Shan) 136
 Youmin Si (Nanchang) 250
 Youngusband, Colonel Francis 491, 543
 Youth Day 45, 47
 Youth hostels 550
 Youyi Guan 425
 Yu Gardens and Bazaar (Shanghai) 192-3, 200
 Yu the Great 246
 Yu Ling (Shaoxing) 246
 Yu Men Guan 494
 Yu river 422

- Yuan Douguang 375
 Yuan Empire 52, 60
 horse-riding skills 462
 porcelain 255
 Yuan Shikai, General 63, 297
 Tomb of Yuan Shikai (Anyang) 152
 Yuandi emperor 52
 Yuanlong Silk Corporation (Beijing) 112, 113
 Yuanming Yuan (Garden of Perfect Brightness, Beijing) 103, 433
 Yuantong Si (Kunming) 374
 Yuantou Zhu (Taihu) 216
 Yue Fei Mu (Hangzhou) 240
 Yue people 285
 Yueliang Shan (Yangshuo) 419
 Yuexiu Gongyuan (Guangzhou) 301
 Yueya Quan (Dunhuang) 494
 Yueyang 261
 Yueyang Tower (Yueyang) 261
 Yufeng Si 392
 Yufo Si (Baoshan) 389
 Yuhuang Ge (Yinchuan) 475
 Yuhuang Miao (Tai Shan) 144
 Yuhuang Pavilion (Baoshan) 388
 Yuhuangding Park (Yantai) 148
 Yuhuatai (Nanjing) 231
 Yulong Xue Shan 392
 Yung Shue Wan 324
 Yungang Caves 121, 131, 132-3
 Yunnan province 342, 343, 373-95
 Dai people 383
 flowers 344
 food and drink 347
 hotels 568-9
 maps 373
 Naxi people 393
 restaurants 594
 Stone Forest 378-9
 Tiger Leaping Gorge 373, 394-5
 Yunshan 400
 Yupi Feng (Wulingyuan) 265
 Yusup Hazi Hajup 511
- Z
- Zen Buddhism see Chan Buddhism
 Zhalong Nature Reserve 403, 437, 452
 Zhan Qian 54
 Zhan Wang
 Torso 40
 Zhang Chunqiao 65
 Zhang Daolin 368
 Zhang Fei Miao 353, 354
 Zhang Guotao 256
 Zhang Huai, Prince 170
 Zhang Ji 211
 Zhang Qian, General 54, 464
 Zhang Sanfeng 272, 273
- Zhang Xiumei 409
 Zhang Yimou 41, 139, 603
 Zhangdi emperor 52
 Zhangmu 547
 Zhangye 490
 Zhangyiyuan Chazhuang (Beijing) 85
 Zhanqiao Pier (Qingdao) 146
 Zhao Kuangyin 58
 Zhao Ling (Xi'an) 170
 Zhao Mo
 Nan Yue Tomb (Guangzhou) 300
 Zhao Tuo 298, 300
 Zhao Zhifeng 357
 Zhaodi emperor 52
 Zhaolin Park (Harbin) 450
 Zhaoqing 302
 Zhaoxing 397, 421
 Zhaozhou Bridge 130
 Zhaozong emperor 52
 Zharu Temple
 Jiuzhai Gou tour 370
 Zhe Pagoda (Wuhu) 233
 Zhejiang province 239
 hotels 562
 map 239
 restaurants 589-90
 Zhen Wu emperor 272
 Zheng Chenggong (Koxinga) 286, 287
 Zheng He, Admiral 61, 278
 Zhengde emperor 52, 53
 Zhengding 130
 Zhengtong emperor 52
 Zhengyang Men (Beijing) 79, 84
 Street-by-Street map 82
 Zhengyici Theater (Beijing) 113
 Zhengzhou 152
 air travel 627
 hotels 558
 Zhenhai Si (Wutai Shan) 136
 Zhenjiang 218
 Zhenjiang Si (Huanglong Xi) 368
 Zhenjue Si (Tiantai Shan) 247
 Zhenning County 400
 Zhenzhan 399
 Zhenyuan 408, 409
 Zhenzong emperor 53
 Tai Shan 145
 Zhepuo river 371
 Zhezong emperor 53
 Zhidi emperor 52
 Zhijin Dong 401
 Zhiyi 247
 Zhiyuan Si (Jiuhua Shan) 234
 Zhong Qiu (Mid-Autumn Festival) 46
 Zhongdian 395
 Zhonghe Si (Dali) 387
 Zhonghua Gate (Nanjing) 224-5
 Zhongshan Square (Dalian) 444
 Zhongwei 458, 461, 476
 Zhongyuan (Hungry Ghost Festival) 46
- Zhongyue Miao (Songshan) 158
 Zhongzhou Island 292
 Zhongzong emperor 52
 Zhou dynasty 51, 53, 58
 Zhou Enlai 67, 250
 Former Residence of Zhou Enlai (Shanghai) 194
 Hongyuan Cun (Chongqing) 351
 Jinghong 382
 Lingyin Si (Hangzhou) 241
 Long March 257
 Monument to the People's Heroes (Beijing) 83
 Nanchang 250, 251
 Nanjing 226
 Peasant Movement Institute (Guangzhou) 298
 Zunyi Conference 410
 Zhou Shouqian 415
 Zhoucheng 388
 Zhouzhuang 216
 Zhu Da 251
 Zhu De 66
 Long March 257
 Zhu De's Former Residence (Nanchang) 250
 Zhu Jiang
 Li river cruise 416
 Zhu Yuanzhang, General see Hongwu emperor
 Zhuang people 424
 Dongson drums 423
 Guizhou and Guangxi 397
 Longsheng 420
 Zhuang Qiao 342
 Zhuang Song Festival 47
 Zhuanshu calligraphy 27
 Zhuge Liang 359, 389
 Zhuhai 295
 Zhuque Shan 447
 Zhurong Gong (Heng Shan) 261
 Zhusheng Si (Heng Shan) 261
 Zigong 355
 hotels 568
 Zixiao Gong (Wudang Shan) 272
 Zoos
 Beijing Zoo 99
 Harbin Northern Forest Zoo (Harbin) 451
 Hong Kong Zoological & Botanical Gardens 311
 Panda Breeding Center (Chengdu) 360
 see also Wildlife
 Zoucheng 143
 Zuci Miao (Foshan) 302
 Zunyi 410
 Long March 256
 Zuo Jiang 424

Acknowledgments

DORLING KINDERSLEY would like to thank the following people whose contributions have made the preparation of this book possible.

PUBLISHING MANAGER

Kate Poole

MANAGING EDITORS

Vicki Ingle, Anna Streiffert

PUBLISHER

Douglas Amrine

PRODUCTION CO-ORDINATOR

Linda Dare

ADDITIONAL CONTRIBUTORS

Calum Macleod, Helen Glaister,
Sarah Waldram, Martin Walters

EDITORIAL ASSISTANTS

Katherine Haw, Alka Thakur

CARTOGRAPHIC DESIGNER

Alok Pathak

CARTOGRAPHIC PROOFREADER

Tony Chambers

ARTWORK REFERENCE

Other Shore Arts Inc.

FACT CHECKERS

Jennifer Atepolikhin, Natasha Dragun, Xu
Fang, Gao Hang, Ian Ransom, Minnie Yang

PROOFREADER

Stewart Wild

PROOFREADER, CHINESE

Jiewei Cheng

INDEXER

Hilary Bird

DESIGN AND EDITORIAL ASSISTANCE

Sonal Bhatt, Caroline Evans, Anna Freiburger,
Olivia King, Neil Lockley, Rosie Mayer,
Sangita Patel, Supriya Sahai, Janis Utton,
Conrad Van Dyk, Ros Walford, Gui Zhiping
Jacket Design: Tessa Bindloss

DTP COORDINATOR

Shailesh Sharma

DTP DESIGNER

Vinod Harish

DIGITAL MEDIA TEAM

Nishi Bhasin, Manjari Rathi Hooda,
Pranod Pant, Mahesh Singh

ADDITIONAL PHOTOGRAPHY

Max Alexander, Geoff Brightling, Andy
Crawford, Gadi Farfour, Steve Gorton, Colin
Keates, Dave King, Stephen Lam, Ian O'Leary, Jane Miller, Hugh Thompson, Walia BPS,
Paul Williams

PHOTOGRAPHY PERMISSIONS

The Publishers thank all the temples, monasteries, museums, hotels, restaurants,
shops, and other sights for their assistance and kind permission to photograph their establishments.

PICTURE CREDITS

tl=top left; tcl=top center left; tc=top center;
tcr=top center right; tr=top right; cal=center above left; ca=center above; car=center above right; cfl=center far left; cl=center left; c=center;
cr=center right; cfr=center far right; cbl=center
below left; cb=center below; cbr=center below right; bl=bottom left; bcl=bottom center left;
bc=bottom center; bcr=bottom center right;
br=bottom right; d=detail.

AKG-IMAGES: Archives CDA/St-Genes 254tr; Han
Kan 208cfl; Laurent Lacat 53tr; VISIOARS
462cfl.

ALAMY IMAGES: 524tl; Pat Behnke 74br, 613tr;
Tibor Bogнар br left front endpaper, 306c;
Peter Bowater 33cr; Jon Bower 307bc;
China Span/Keren Su 352cal; David Crausby
620cb, 630cr; Nick Dawson 44bc; Eagle
Visions/Craig Lovell 524tl; Robert Harding World Imagery 153cl; Dallas & John Heaton cal left front endpaper, 182; Iain Masterton
623tl; Colin Monteath 510br; Jake Norton
619br; Panorama Stock cbr right front endpaper, 103bc, 128br, 132bc, 160, 288-9,
462br; /Li Jiangshu 110br; /Ru Suichu 102bc;
/Zhang Zhenguang 206tr; Rochaphoto 507car;
David Sanger 464tr; Sami Sarkis tr right front endpaper, 120; Snap 2000 Images/David
Robinson 89c; Valery Rizzo 42bl; View Stock
China 122c, 153cbl; Matthew Wellings 45bc;
Ron Yue 44c, 46c.

ANCIENT ART & ARCHITECTURE COLLECTION: 477bc.

ARDEA.COM: Chris Martin Bahr 22tl; Mary Clay
23cbr; David Dixon 20cbr, 344cfl; Kenneth W.
Fink 22bl; Nick Gordon 23cal; Pascal
Goetgheluck 411cal; Joanna Van Grulsen
20cbl, 20cbl; C Clem Haagner 22cbl; Keith &
Liz Laid 344car; Tom & Pat Leeson 21br;
Adrian Warren 361car; M. Watson 22cbl, 23br, 403br.

THE ART ARCHIVE: Bibliotheque Nationale de
Paris 53car, 217cal, 464-5, /Marc Charmet 28tr;

British Library 26br, 28bl, 57tr; British Museum/Eileen Tweedy 74tr; Freer Gallery of Art 38–9c, 57cr, 280ca; Genius of China Exhibition 38tr, 51bc, 54bl, 464bl, 464cfl; Musée Thomas Dobrée Nantes/Dagli Orti 63tl; National Palace Museum of Taiwan 30cfl; Palace Museum Beijing 432–3; Private Collection Paris/Dagli Orti 135bc; School of Oriental & African Studies/Ellen Tweedy 422bl; William Sewell 263tr.

STEVEN BAIGEL: 533br.

BENOY BEHL: 523bc.

BIBLIOTECA NAZIONALE CENTRALE – ROMA: 232cbl.

BIBLIOTHÈQUE NATIONALE DE FRANCE, PARIS: 26tr, 36ca.

WWW.BRIDGEMAN.CO.UK: 30cfr, 31car, 31cfl, 36tr, 36cbl, 37cal, 37cbl, 43tr, 262tr, 434bl, 62cbr, 433bl; Bibliothèque des Arts Décoratifs, Paris 293tc, 433cbr; Bibliothèque Municipal, Poitiers 209car; Bibliothèque Nationale Paris 4tr, 8–9, 28cfl, 31tr, 60bcl, 62cbr, 143bc, 471cb; British Museum 487br; Giraudon 54cbr; James Gray (1757–1815) 433cfr; Miss E. M. Gregson 345br; Hermitage 495cb; Illustrated London News 434cfl; National Palace Museum, Taipei, Taiwan 471car; Private Collection 209tl, 262cl; Société Asiatique, Collège de France, Paris 293cal; V & A Museum 432bl; Yu Zhiding (1647 – p.1709) The Depiction of the Poet Wang Yuang (1634–1711) watercolor 178tr (d).

BRITISH LIBRARY, LONDON: 57tl.

© THE BRITISH MUSEUM: 29trc, 38cbr, 38bc, 38cbl, 39tr, 39cb, 39bl, 39br, 39car, 56–7c, 522bc.

CHINA STOCK: bcr right front endpaper, 53bl, 59c, 59bcl, 64cbl, 65car, 256br, 294, 416br; Dennis Cox tl right front endpaper, 436; Liu Liqun 36cb, 36br, 353tl, 353car, 403car.

CHINAPIX: 186tr; Zhang Chaoyin 534cl, 534bc.

CHINA SPAN: Keren Su 179cl, 217cr.

CORBIS: 63c, 66bl, 67tc, 86c, 101tl; Archivio Iconografico, S.A. 433car; Asian Art & Archaeology Inc. 51ca, 52cbl, 54ca, 56cbl, 58bc, 58tc, 464cbr; Tiziana and Gianni Baldizzone 29car, 546tc; Dave Bartruff 262bl, 575br, 578cal; Bettman 37tr, 65tl, 65br, 66tl, 159bl, 197br, 250bc, 257tl, 297cbr, 297car, 377br, 491tc; Bohemian Nomad Picturemakers cbl left front endpaper, 238, 575tl; Bohemian

Nomad Picturemakers/Kevin R Morris 217cbr; Bowers Museum of Cultural Art 153tc; Burstein Collection 30br, 50c, 53cbl, 55tc, 60bcl, 208bc, 495br, 502c; China features 544bl, /Li Gang 19tr; Christie's Images 52tr; ChromoSohmINC/Joseph Sohm 106bc; Stephanie Colasanti 5tr, 414cal; Pierre Colombel 156–7, 487cbr, 496tr, 496cal, 496ca, 496cbl, 496bl, 496cbr, 496cfr, 497tl, 497cal, 497cbl, 497bl; Dean Conger 135car, 243br, 507cfl, 579ca; The Cover Story 463tl; Ric Ergenbright 217bl; Macduff Everton 67bl, 67cfr, 193tc; Eye Ubiquitous/Bennett Dean 395tr, 540bc; /Julia Waterlow 28br, 462cbl, 510tl; Free Agents Limited 34tr, 435car; Alain Le Garsmeur 608–9; Lowell Georgia car right front endpaper, 140; Christel Gerstenberg 208cbl; Philip Gould 280tr; Peter Guttman 513tl, 513car; Historical Picture Archive 293cbl, 433tr; Angelo Hornak 495bl; Dave G. Houser 43bl; Hulton Collection 243bl, 434cal, 543tr; Hanan Isachar 24bc; Langevin Jacques 442–3c; Robbie Jack 41bl; Wolfgang Kaehler 133bl, 154tr, 434tr, 434br, 434–5c, 435cbr; Kelly–Mooney Photography 97tc; Christine Kolisch 532tr; Earl & Nazima Kowall 25tr, 33tl, 45tc, 454br, 455car, 455cbl, 455cbr, 455br, 455cfl, 515cl, 462bl, 579bc; Daniel Lainé 393cbr; Charles & Josette Lenars 59tr, 145cal; Paul W. Liebhardt 407bl; Liu Liqun 16tc, 25br, 109tc, 193cbl, 305tc, 353cbl, 463bl; Chris Lisle 533c; Craig Lovell 525br, 535br, 540tr; Ludovic Maisant 393cfl; Lawrence Manning 263bl; Tom Nebbia 412bcr; Papilio/John R. Jones 504tl; Louie Psihoyos 453bl; Carl & Ann Purcell 24tr, 31cbr, 505br; Reuters 32bl, 42br, 47c, 269br, 574bl, 626bl; Roger Ressmeyer 94c, 94cr; David Samuel Robbins 535bl; Galen Rowell 514tc, 524c, 524–5, 524bc, 525c, 533tc; Royal Ontario Museum 38bl, 39cfr, 56ca, 60ca, 254bcr, 255tl, 411cfr; Royalty–Free 43cb; Sean Sexton Collection 197bl; Stapleton Collection 75tl; Keren Su 1c, 24cbl, 42cal, 235cl, 235br, 236cal, 237br, 268bl, 354br, 406br, 406br, 406cbl, 407tl, 407cfr, 413tl, 462–3c, 506cl, 510cfl, 512cbl; Vince Streato 423bl; Swim Ink 263tl; Robert van der Hilst 180cfl, 495cal; Ron Watts cal left front endpaper, 202; Reza Webistan 515br; Nevada Weir tcl left front endpaper, 463cfr, 502, 509tl; Nick Wheeler 232cbr; Janet Wishnetsky 465br; Alison Wright 456–7, 491cbl, 514br; Michael S. Yamashita 179br, 411br; Liang Zhuoming 504bc; Xinhua Photo 453br.

CPA MEDIA: 62ca, 64tr, 197tc, 197cfl, 297tc, 432cbl, 433tl; David Henley 189bc, 225car, 229cbr; Meng Qingbiao/Chinese Government (1961) 65cbr; Oliver Hagreave 297cbl; Oliver Hagreave/Bibliothèque Nationale Paris 60cbl.

DK IMAGES: British Library 37ca; British Museum 37tcl, 38cal, 219bl, /David Gower 208tr, /Alan Hills 38tl, 219cbl, 219cr, 232car; Glasgow Museum/Ellen Howdon 523car; The Jazz Club 581br; MTR (Mass Transit Railways) 632tl; Judith Miller Archive 255bl, 255cal, /Sloan's 254bl, 487bl; courtesy National Maritime Museum/David Spence 149bc, /James Stevenson 37cbr; courtesy of Pitt Rivers Museum/ Geoff Brightling 36tl; private collection 339ca, 457ca, 515tc; courtesy of Science Museum 37bl, /Dave King 37bc; Yorkshire Museum/Harry Taylor 453cbr.

TIM DRAPER: 404-5, 421br.

RAY DUNNING: 219c.

EYE UBIQUITOUS: Bennett Dean bl left front endpaper, 396.

FOTOE: 30tr, 297cb; A Chun 352bc; An Ge 21car; Wang Yizhong 383cbl; Wu Dongjun 406-7c; Yang Xingbin 376tl; Ying Ge 352car; Zhang Weiqing 30cbl.

GETTY IMAGES: AFP 42-3c; Walter Bibikow tcr right front endpaper, 78; Robert Harding tr left front endpaper, 466; Hulton 446br; Image Bank bcl left front endpaper, cbl left front endpaper, 68-9, 183bc, 244-5, 258, 270-1, 348; 426-7; National Geographic 52cal, /Louis Mazzatenta 453car; Photographer's Choice/John Warden 107tc; Photographer's Choice/Nikolay Zurek 263cl; Stone 2-3, 274-5.

SALLY & RICHARD GREENHILL: S.A.C.U. 64tl, 65tr 64bcr, 64cfl.

NIGEL HICKS: 168-9, 278bc; 338-9, 344cbl, 344cbr, 344bcl, 344bcr, 371tc, 452br, 504c, 505tl, 506tr, 506bl, 508tl.

HONG KONG TOURISM BOARD: 311tc, 313c, 320bc, 324tc.

IMAGINECHINA: 66cbr, 109bc, 122bc, 262-3; Adrian Bradshaw 193cal, 453cal; Chen Shuyi 95b; Chen Yun 491br; CNS 75cr; Dong Jinlin 264tr; Fan Chongzhi 281tl, 281tr, 281car; Fang Zhonglin 194cbl; Gong Weizhi 87cr; Guo Guangyao 178cr; Hu Qingming 153br; Huang Jinguo 179cr; Huang Shaoyi 280bc; Huang Yizhu 356cal; Jia Guorong 219cbr; Jiang Chao 33car; Jiang Guohong 40bcr; Jiang Ren 159car; Jin Baoyuan 179tr; Kan Kan 30cb; Lang Congliu 229tc; Li Jiangsong 29cbr; Li Wei 254cal, 254cbr, 281cbr; Liang Weijie 440tl, 440bc; Lin Weijian 178bl, 186cl, 186cr; Ling Long 46br; Liu Jianming 376br; Liu ling 253br;

Liu Liqun 128tl, 264cl, 264bl, 354cal; Liu Quanju 46tl; Liu Zhaoming 474br, 474tc; Long Hai 74bc, 75bcr, 189tc, 219br; Luoxiaoyun 454tl; Lu Baohe 293bl; Ma Kang 511tl, 512tr; Olivia Savoure 512cal, 513cbr, 522tr; Pan Guoji 363cfr; Run Cang 268car; Shen Yu 178br, 187tl, 198bc, 280tl, 622bl; Shui Xiaojie 272br, 412car; Tang Jianwei 272tl; Wang Jianxin 75bcl, 360tl; Wang Mengxiang 424cfr, 425br; Wei Hui 41cbr; Wu Changqing 104tr, 297cal; Wu Hong 41br, 85br; Xiong Yijun 23car; Xu Ruikang 179tc; Yan Shi 145bcr; Yang Xi 228c, 281cr; Yi Zhou 187tl; Yin Zi 26-7c; Yuan Yanwu 32-3c, 273tc; Yue Sheng 525tl; Zeng Yun 280cbl; Zhan Xiadong 525tr; Zhang Fenquan 441br; Zhang Guosheng 91bl; Zhang Jie 297bl; Zhang Xing 281br; Zhang Xinmin_Xinjiang 505c, 508bl, 509br; Zhang Yongzhe 209cbr; Zhou Kang 97c, 190tr; Zhou Lixin 353br; Zhu Xuesong 265tl, 265cr, 265br; Zhuge Ming 447bl, 524tr; Zou Xian 32br; Zuo Shan 383br.

INSTITUTE OF HISTORY & PHILOLOGY: Academia Sinica 26cbl.

KOBAL COLLECTION: Columbia 41tr; Tomson films 41cal.

DAVID LEFFMAN: 424tl.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS, WASHINGTON, D.C.: 393bl.

MAGNUM: Rene Burri 256tr; Steve McCurry tl left front endpaper, 526.

MARY EVANS PICTURE LIBRARY: 33cbr, 275ca, 491cbr, 491car; Kieou King 232cb.

NASA: 153cfr.

NATIONAL TRUST PHOTOGRAPHIC LIBRARY: John Hammond 293cr.

NATURE PICTURE LIBRARY: Bernard Castelein 20cbr; G & H Denzau 21cal, 460bc; Elio Delia Ferrera 403bl; Martha Holmes 22cal; Pete Oxford 20bcr, 23bl, 411tc; David Pike 403cal; Jose B. Ruiz 22bcr, 22cbr; Warwick Sloss 22cbr; Lynn Stone 20car, 20bl; Solvin Zankl 23cbl; Xi Zhinong 403cb.

NATURAL VISIONS: Heather Angel 345cbr, 361cbr.

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC IMAGE COLLECTION: Doug Stern 168bc; Joseph Rock 390bc.

N.H.P.A.: 20cal; James Warwick 361bl.

OSF/PHOTOLIBRARY.COM: 21bl; Deni Bown 21cbl; Irvine Cushing 21cbr; Robert A. Lubeck

23cbr; Richard Packwood 403tc; George Reszeter 23cbl; Konrad Wothe 21cbl.

PANOS PICTURES: 27car.

MARIANNE PETROU: 522cl.

PHOTO12.COM: OIPS 109c, 111tcl; Panorama Stock 22car, 98bc, 105tl, 106c, 425tc, 432cbr; Panorama Stock/Zhao Guangtian 464tl, 464cbl.

PHOTOLIBRARY.COM: Jiangshu Li 25cr; James Montgomery 14c; Keren Su 43c, 44cal; Ming Li 424bl; Panorama 463br; Xin Li 463tr.

PHOTO SCALA, FLORENCE: British Museum 522tl.

POPPERFOTO.COM: 64–5c, 197car, 197cb.

POWERSTOCK: age fotostock 126–7, 72–3; Digital Vision Royalty Free 280–1.

By permission of THE RANDOM HOUSE GROUP LTD: 263br.

RED GATE GALLERY: 95tc.

THE RED MANSION LTD: Cang Xin “The Unification of Heaven and Men (Ice)” 40cal; Fang Lijun “Series 2 no 2” 40–1c; Zhan Wang “Torso” 40cbl.

ROBERT HARDING PICTURE LIBRARY: 199tc, 513bl; Nigel Blythe 512bc; Gina Corrigan tr left front endpaper, 478; Oriental Touch 318–9; Panorama Stock 61tc, 488–9, 516–7; A.C. Waltham 524bl.

SCIENCE & SOCIETY PICTURE LIBRARY: 27cbl.

SHAANXI HISTORY MUSEUM: 56br, 56cfl, 166cb, 167car, 167cbr.

SHANGHAI MUSEUM: 190tl, 190cal, 190c, 190cbl, 191cl, 191cr, 191tc.

SINOPIX PHOTO AGENCY: Lou Linwei 42tr, 168br; Saigo-Jones 361tc.

TERRACOTTA ARMY MUSEUM: 168tl, 168cbl, 169tl, 169car, 169br, 169cfr.

TERRA GALLERIA PHOTOGRAPHY: Quang Tuan Luong 362tr, 362car, 363br, 363tcl, 364tr, 366–7, 378–9.

THAMES & HUDSON LTD: Photo Eileen Tweedy 28–9.

TIBET IMAGES: 522c.

TIBET HERITAGE FUND: Andre Alexander 531tc; Yutaka Hirako 531ca.

TOPFOTO.CO.UK: 256cal, 256cbl; British Museum 31bc, 63bl; Sven Hedin Foundation 495cfr; The Museum of East Asian Art/HIP 61cbr, 465cr.

COURTESY OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE V&A: 209bcr, 464br; Ian Thomas 208–9, 209cal, 209cbl, 209cfl.

THE WELLCOME INSTITUTE LIBRARY, LONDON: 32cbl, 55cbr.

WERNER FORMAN ARCHIVE: Forest of Stelae Museum, Xi’an 465cfr; P’yongyang Gallery, North Korea 31cal; Peking Palace Museum 58cbr; Private Collection 53br, 61c, 63br; Private Collection/Sotheby’s 1986 57br; Tanzania National Museum 465bc; Victoria & Albert Museum 55cb; Yang-Tzu-Shaw 54cbr.

WWW.KUNGFUMAGAZINE.COM 2005: 159tc, 159cbr, 159cbl.

Jacket – Front – ALAMY IMAGES: Snap 2000 Images/David Robinson c; EYE UBIQUITOUS: Mike Powles main; CORBIS: Asian Art and Archaeology br; Bob Krist bl.
Back – ALAMY IMAGES: Dallas and John Heaton b; DK IMAGES: Colin Sinclair tl.
Spine - EYE UBIQUITOUS: Mike Powles.

All other images © Dorling Kindersley.
For further information see:
www.dkimages.com

DORLING KINDERSLEY SPECIAL EDITIONS

Dorling Kindersley books can be purchased in bulk quantities at discounted prices for use in promotions or as premiums. We are also able to offer special editions and personalized jackets, corporate imprints, and excerpts from all of our books, tailored specifically to meet your own needs.

To find out more, please contact: (in the United Kingdom) – Sarah.Burgess@dk.com or SPECIAL SALES, DORLING KINDERSLEY LIMITED, 80 STRAND, LONDON WC2R 0RL;

(in the United States) – SPECIAL MARKETS DEPARTMENT, DK PUBLISHING, INC., 375 HUDSON STREET, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10014.

Glossary

ARCHITECTURE

cheng city; also means city wall chorten or stupa, a Buddhist tower containing sacred objects dian pavilion
dougong elaborate bracket attaching column to beam ge storied pavilion
gompa Tibetan monastery gong palace; usually denotes a Daoist temple gulou drum tower hutong alleyway ling tomb
lou storied building men city gate
miao temple, usually Confucian mu tomb
nanmu cedar with much-valued straight trunk used for columns paifang ornamental gateway pailou ornamental gateway qiao bridge
si temple, usually Buddhist siheyuan courtyard house
Spirit Tower pavilion at entrance to an imperial tomb Spirit Way straight road leading to an imperial tomb and lined with guardian statues stele free-standing stone slab or pillar engraved with text stupa a Buddhist tower containing sacred objects ta pagoda tang hall zhan garden
zhanglou bell tower

CULTURE

celadon pottery with greenish glaze cloisonné enamelling, in which the enamel is raised and separated by fine pieces of wire erhu two-stringed fiddle huaju spoken theater
jingju Beijing Opera lacquer wood glazed with sap from the lac tree which is carved before completely dry (see p292) lusheng bamboo instrument with numerous pipes model opera operas based on a proletarian heroic model, promoted by Mao's wife Jiang Qing during the Cultural Revolution pipa lute-like instrument porcelain translucent ceramic ware made from clay containing kaolin and feldspar, and fired at high temperatures (see p254) sancai tri-glazed pottery, usually yellow, green, and white, prevalent during Tang dynasty sanxian three-stringed lute sheng modern instrument based on the lusheng with 17 to 37 pipes suona double-reeded wind instrument, similar to an oboe taotie pattern on Shang bronze; possibly representing a mythical man-eating beast xiao bamboo flute

xun rounded clay wind instrument zheng many-stringed zither

HISTORY & POLITICS

cadre Communist party bureaucrat canton a small territory where foreign traders were required to reside during 18th and 19th century Communist Party ruling party in China since 1949 concession an area of land ceded to a foreign government
Cultural Revolution radical attempt to socialize China's culture, 1966-76 (see pp64-5)
Gang of Four high-profile group responsible for some of the Cultural Revolution's worst excesses (see p65)
Great Leap Forward Mao's disastrous policy to force the collectivism of agriculture (1958-60), resulting in widespread famine
Kuomintang (KMT) founded by Sun Yat Sen; fought the Communists for 25 years under Chiang Kai Shek; moved to Taiwan where it is still a major party
Legalism fascistic political philosophy dominant during the Qin dynasty based on the idea that man is undisciplined and must be controlled through fear
Little Red Book Mao's sayings compiled by Lin Biao, head of the PLA, in 1966 as a treatise for Red Guards and the PLA
Long March Epic tactical retreat of the Communist Party from Nationalist forces in 1935 (see p256)
Nationalist Party the Kuomintang
People's Liberation Army (PLA) Communist military forces
Red Guard unruly movement approved by Mao during the Cultural Revolution to weed out counter-revolutionaries and destroy evidence of the past soviet regional Communist base, e.g. Jiangxi Soviet Special Administrative Region (SAR) Regions, such as Hong Kong and Macau, provided with a high degree of autonomy and a capitalist economy

Special Economic Zone (SEZ)

areas, such as Shenzhen, set aside in the 1980s for a capitalist test of a freer economy and to attract foreign investment triad a secret society, especially one involved in organized crime

NATURAL FEATURES

chi lake or pool dao island dong cave feng peak gongyuan park gou gully hai sea haitan beach he river hu lake jiang river
karst limestone landscape with irregular peaks, underground streams, caves, and sinkholes (see pp412-13) pubu waterfall shan mountain shui water shuiku reservoir tan pool xi stream xia gorge

RELIGION & PHILOSOPHY

A-Ma Macau's Goddess of the Sea; see Tianhou
Amitabha Buddha Buddha of boundless light
Analects (Lunyu) major work compiled by Confucius's followers of his sayings arhat or luohan; one of the Buddha's 18 disciples Avalokitesvara bodhisattva of compassion
bagua eight trigrams ranged around a yin-yang symbol; a codification of qi (see pp30-31)
Bodhidharma Indian monk who traveled to China in the 6th century and started the Chan (Zen) sect of Buddhism bodhisattva Buddhist deities who have postponed nirvana to help others
Bon indigenous animistic faith of Tibet (see p522)
Buddha the awakened one, originally the Indian Gautama Buddha; in Chinese and Tibetan schools the Buddha has numerous forms (see pp30, 487, 522-3)
Buddhism religion based on the teachings of the 6th-century BC Indian teacher Gautama Buddha

Chan School of Buddhism spread by Bodhidharma; popular in Japan as Zen Buddhism

Chenresig Tibetan name for bodhisattva Avalokitesvara

Confucius or Kong Fuzi (551–479 BC); developed the philosophy of Confucianism, which was then spread by his followers

Confucianism dominant philosophy prescribing a structured society based on filial relationships (see p30)

Dafo Great Buddha

Damo Chinese name for Bodhidharma

Dao in Daoism the way that permeates reality; a single cosmic force

Daode Jing Daoist The Way and Power Classic attributed to Laozi

Daoism philosophy expounding non-action and living in harmony with the Dao or Way; became a pantheistic religion (see p31)

dharmapala protector deities of Tibetan Buddhism

Dipamkara in Tibetan Buddhism, the past Buddha

Eight Immortals Daoist adepts each with a superhuman power

feng shui a form of geomancy that determines the flow of qi through a physical place (see p31)

fo a Buddha in Putonghua

Gelugpa Most powerful Tibetan Buddhist sect, headed by the Dalai Lama; also called the Yellow Hat sect

Guanyin bodhisattva of compassion in Chinese Buddhism

Guardian Kings four protective deities of the cardinal directions; often stationed at the entrance of a temple

Guru Rinpoche spreader of Buddhism through Tibet

Jampa the future or Maitreya Buddha in the Tibetan pantheon

Jampalyang bodhisattva of wisdom in Tibetan Buddhism

Jowo Sakyamuni in Tibetan Buddhism, the present Buddha karma in Buddhism, the merit accrued by a person's actions, determining their destiny

kora circuits of holy sites made by Tibetan Buddhists to accrue merit

Laozi first Daoist who may have lived during the 6th century BC and produced the Daode Jing

Laughing Buddha Milefo, the future Buddha

luohan or arhat; one of the Buddha's 18 disciples

Lunyu Confucian writings, the Analects

Mahayana, Greater Vehicle, dominant form of Buddhism in China and Japan with ritual and devotional practices, and worship of bodhisattvas

Maitreya the future Buddha; the Buddha that has yet to come mandala an esoteric diagram of circles and squares around a central focal point used as a meditation aid and forming an important part of Tibetan Buddhist iconography

Manjusri bodhisattva of wisdom

Marmedze the past or Gautama Buddha

Mazu Goddess of the Sea; see Tianhou

Milefo the future or Maitreya Buddha represented as the plump Laughing Buddha nirvana in Buddhism, having broken from the cycle of rebirth; attained via the extinction of desire and individual consciousness

Nyingma oldest Tibetan Buddhist sect founded by Guru Rinpoche

Padmasambhava Guru Rinpoche

Puxian bodhisattva of universal benevolence; rides an elephant qi concept of vital force and cosmic energy (see pp32–3)

Sakyamuni the past Buddha; Gautama Buddha sutra sacred Buddhist writing; a discourse of the Buddha

thangka Buddhist painting on silk, originally used as objects of meditation and portable teaching tools

Theravada (Hinayana, Lesser Vehicle) school of Buddhism practiced in Southeast Asia and India emphasizing the importance of an ascetic way of life

Tianhou Daoist Empress of Heaven and Goddess of the Sea, equal to Buddhist Guanyin (see p149)

Tinhau Tianhou in Hong Kong; see Tianhou

trigram one of the eight sets of three broken (yin) and unbroken (yang) lines combined in pairs to make hexagrams for divination using the Yijing

Wenshu bodhisattva of wisdom yang masculine, sun, positive; interacts with the complementary opposing force of yin

Yijing classic ancient text, The Book of Changes, made up of oracles consulted for divination; source of Daoist and Confucian philosophies (see p33)

yan feminine, moon, negative; interacts with the complementary opposing force of yang

MISCELLANEOUS

bei north

binguan tourist hotel

bowuguan museum

CAAC Civil Aviation Administration Authority

canting restaurant

Cantonese dialect of Chinese spoken in the south

cheongsam a tight-fitting dress with a high collar and slit skirt

CITS China International Travel Service; organization for international tourists, whose main interest is selling tours and tickets

CTS China Travel Service; organization similar to CITS

cun village da big

dadao wide street or boulevard

dajie avenue (literally “big road”)

dong east

fandian hotel or restaurant

fen smallest denomination; there are 100 fen to a yuan

ger round tent used by nomads of the steppe; a yurt jiao there are 10 fen to one jiao; and 10 jiao to one yuan; also called miao

jie street

jinguan hotel

kuai colloquial word for yuan

laowai foreigner

lokbar traditional heavy wool Tibetan robe

lu road

mahjong popular rummy-like game played with small tiles mao colloquial term for jiao

nan south

Pinyin a standardized system for transliterating Chinese characters into the roman alphabet

PSB Public Security Bureau; branch of the police force that deals with foreigners

PRC People's Republic of China

Putonghua Mandarin; the form of Chinese that is the official language of China qigong martial art concentrating on the control of breath and qi renminbi currency; literally “the people's money”

sheng province

shi city or municipality

tai ji quan (supreme ultimate fist) martial art made up of slow, flowing movements (see p273)

xi west

yuan China's currency; divided into 10 jiao and 100 fen; also called kuai

zhong middle

Phrase Book

THE CHINESE LANGUAGE belongs to the Sino-Tibetan family of languages and uses characters which are ideographic – a symbol is used to represent an idea or an object. Mandarin Chinese, known as Putonghua in mainland China, is fairly straightforward as each character is monosyllabic. Traditionally, Chinese is written in vertical columns from top right to bottom left, however the Western style is widely used. There are several romanization systems; the Pinyin system used here is the official system in mainland China. This phrase book gives the English word or phrase, followed by the Chinese script, then the Pinyin for pronunciation.

GUIDELINES FOR PRONUNCIATION

Pronounce vowels as in these English words:

a	as in "father"
e	as in "lurch"
i	as in "see"
o	as in "solid"
u	as in "pooH"
ü	as the French u or German ü (place your lips to say oo and try to say ee)

Most of the consonants are pronounced as in English. As a rough guide, pronounce the following consonants as in these English words:

c	as ts in "hats"
q	as ch in "cheat"
x	as sh in "sheet"
z	as ds in "heads"
zh	as j in "Joe"

Mandarin Chinese is a tonal language with four tones, represented in Pinyin by one of the following marks – ˊ ˋ ˊˊ ˋˋ above each vowel – the symbol shows whether the tone is flat, rising, falling and rising, or falling. The Chinese characters do not convey this information: tones are learnt when the character is learnt. Teaching tones is beyond the scope of this small phrasebook, but a language course book with a cassette or CD will help those who wish to take the language further.

DIALECTS

There are many Chinese dialects in use. It is hard to guess exactly how many, but they can be roughly classified into one of seven large groups (Mandarin, Cantonese, Hakka, Hui etc.), each group containing a large number of more minor dialects. Although all these dialects are quite different – Cantonese uses six tones instead of four – Mandarin or Putonghua, which is mainly based on the Beijing dialect, is the official language. Despite these differences all Chinese people are more or less able to use the same formal written language so they can understand each other's writing, if not each other's speech.

IN AN EMERGENCY

Help!	请帮忙!	Qing bangmang
Stop!	停止!	Ting zhu
Call a doctor!	叫医生!	Jiao yisheng
Call an ambulance!	叫救护车!	Jiao jiuheche
Call the police!	叫警察!	Jiao jingcha
Fire!	火!	Huo
Where is the hospital/police station?	医院/警察局在哪里?	Yiyuan/jingcha fenju zai nali?

COMMUNICATION ESSENTIALS

Hello	你好	Nihao
Goodbye	再见	Zaijian
Yes/no	是 不是	shi/bushi
... not ...	不是	bushi
I'm from...	我是...人	Wo shi ...ren
I understand	我明白	Wo mingbai
I don't know	我不知道	Wo bu zhidao
Thank you	谢谢	Xiexie ni
Thank you very much	多谢	Duo xie
Thanks (casual)	谢谢	Xiexie
You're welcome	不用谢	Bu yong xie
No, thank you	不, 谢谢	Bu, xiexie ni
Please (offering)	请	Qing
Please (asking)	请问	Qing wen
I don't understand	我不明白	Wo bu mingbai
Do you speak English?	你会讲英语吗?	Ni hui jiang yingyu ma?
I can't speak Chinese	我不会讲汉语	Wo buhui jiang hanyu
Please speak more slowly	请讲慢一点	Qing jiang man yidian
Sorry/Excuse me!	抱歉/对不起	Baoqian/duibuqi
Could you help me please? (not emergency)	你能帮助我吗?	Ni neng bang zhu wo ma?

USEFUL PHRASES

My name is ...	我叫...	Wo jiao ...
How do you do, pleased to meet you	你好, 很高兴见到你	Ni hao, hen gaoxing jian dao ni
How are you?	你好吗?	Ni hao ma?
Good morning	早上好	Zaoshang hao
Good afternoon/good day	下午好/你好	Xiawu hao/ Ni hao
Good evening	晚上好	Wanshang hao
Good night	晚安	Wan an
Goodbye	再见	Zaijian
Take care	保重	Bao zhong
Keep well (casual)	注意身体	Zhuyi shenti
The same to you	你也是	Ni yeshi
What is (this)?	(这)是什么?	(zhe) shi shenme?
How do you use this?	你怎样用这个东西?	Ni zenyang yong zhege dongxi?
Could I possibly have ...? (very polite)	能不能请你给我...?	Neng buneng qing ni gei wo ...
Is there ... here?	这儿有...吗?	Zhe'r you ... ma?

Where can I get ...? 我在哪里可以得到...?
 How much is it? 它要多少钱?
 What time is ...? ... 什么时间?
 Cheers! (toast) 干杯
 Where is the restroom/toilet? 卫生间 / 洗手间在哪里?
 Here's my business card. 这是我的名片

Wo zai na li keyi de dao ...?
 Ta yao duoshao qian?
 ...shenme shijian
 Ganbei
 Weishengjian/
 Xishoujian zai nali?
 Zhe shi wo de mingpian.

cash 现金 credit card 信用卡 currency exchange office 外汇兑换处 dollars 美元 pounds 英镑 yuan 元

xianjin xinyongka waihui duihuananchu meiyuan yingbang
 yuan

USEFUL WORDS

I 我 woman 女人 man 男人 wife 妻子 husband 丈夫 daughter 女儿 son 儿子 child 小孩 children 儿童 businessman/ woman 商人 / 女商人 student 学生
 Mr./Mrs./Ms. ... 先生 / 太太 / 女士 big/small 大 / 小 hot/cold 热 / 凉 cold (to touch) 冷 warm 暖 good/not good/bad 好 / 不好 / 坏 enough 够了
 free (no charge) 免费 here 这里
 there 那里 this 这个 that (nearby) 那个 that (far away) 那个
 what? 什么?
 when? 什么时候?
 why? 为什么?
 where? 在哪里?
 who? 谁?
 which way? 哪个方向?

wo nüren nanren qizi zhangfu nü'er er'zi xiaohai er'tong shangren/nüshangren xuesheng xiانشeng/taitai/nüshi da/xiao re/liang leng nuan hao/buhao/huai goule mianfei zhele nali zhege na nage Shenme?
 Shenme shihou?
 Wei shenme?
 Zai nali?
 Shui?
 Nage fangxiang?

SIGNS

open 开 closed 关 entrance 入口 exit 出口 danger 危险 emergency exit 安全门 information 信息 restroom/toilet (men) (women) 卫生间 / 洗手间 (男士) (女士) occupied 占用
 free (vacant) 空闲 men 男士 women 女士 kai guan

 rukou chukou weixian anquanmen xinxi
 Weishengjian/
 Xishoujian (nanshi) (nüshi) zhangyong kongxian nanshi
 nüshi

MONEY

Could you change this into? please. 请你把它换成...好吗?
 I'd like to cash these travelers' checks. 我想把旅行支票换成现金。
 Do you take credit cards/travelers' checks? 你收信用卡 / 旅行支票吗?
 bank 银行

Qing ni ba ta huancheng ... hao ma?
 Wo xiang ba lüxing zhipiao huancheng xianjin.
 Ni shou xinyongka/ lüxing zhipiao ma?
 yinhang

KEEPING IN TOUCH

Where is a telephone? 电话在哪里?
 May I use your phone? 我可以用你的电话吗?
 Mobile phone 手机
 sim card sim 卡
 Hello, this is ... 你好, 我是...
 I'd like to make an international call 我想打个国际长途电话
 Where can I get online? 我可以在哪里上网? airmail 航空
 e-mail 电子邮件 fax 传真 internet 互联网 postcard 明信片 post office 邮局 stamp 邮票 telephone booth 电话亭
 telephone card 电话卡

Dianhua zai nali?
 Wo keyi yong nide dianhua ma?
 shouji sim ka
 Nihao, wo shi
 Wo xiang da ge guoji changtu dianhua.
 Wo keyi zai nali shangwang?
 hangkong dianzi youjian chuanzhen huliانwang mingxinpian youju youpiao dianhua ting dianhua ka

SHOPPING

Where can I buy ...? 我可以在哪里买到...?
 How much does this cost? 这些东西多少钱?
 Too much! 太贵了!
 I'm just looking 我只是看看。
 Do you have ...? 你有...吗?
 May I try this on? 我可以试穿吗?
 My size? 我的尺寸?
 Please show me that. 请给我看看那个。
 Does it come in other colors? 有没有其它颜色?
 black 黑色 blue 蓝色 brown 棕色 green 绿色 purple 紫色 red 红色 white 白色 yellow 黄色
 cheap/expensive 便宜 / 贵 audio equipment 音响设备 bookstore 书店 boutique 时装商店 clothes 衣服 department store 百货商店 electrical store 电器商店 fish market 鱼市 folk crafts 民间工艺品 ladies' wear 女士服装
 local specialty market 地方特产市场 men's wear 男士服装 newsstand 报摊 pharmacist 药剂师 picture postcard sale 图片明信片出售 souvenir shop 纪念品店 supermarket 超市 travel agent 旅行社

Wo keyi zai nali maidaio ...?
 Zhe yao duoshao qian?
 Tai gui le!
 Wo zhishi kankan.
 Ni you ... ma?
 Wo keyi shi chuan ma?
 Wo de chichu?
 Qing gei wo kankan na ge.
 You meiyou qita yanse?
 heise lanse zongse lüse zise hongse baise huangse pianyi/gui yinxiang shebei shudian shizhuangshang-dian yifu baihuo shangdian dianqi shangdian yu shi minjian gongyipin nüshi fuzhuang difang techan shichang nanshi fuzhuang baotan yaojishi tupian mingxinpian lianjiachushou jiniانpin dian chaoshi lüxing she

SIGHTSEEING

Where is ...?	... 在哪里?	... zai nali?
How do I get to ...?	我怎么到 ...?	Wo zenme dao ...?
Is it far?	远不远?	Yuan bu yuan?
art gallery	美术馆	meishu guan reservations desk	订票台	dingpiao tai bridge	桥	qiao
city	城市	chengshi
city center	市中心	shi zhongxin
free entry	免费入场	mianfei ruchang
gardens	花园	huayuan
hot spring	温泉	wen quan
tourist information office	旅游信息处	lüyou xinxi chu island	岛	dao
monastery	寺院	siyuan
mountain	山	shan
museum	博物馆	bowuguan
palace	宫堡	gongdian
park	公园	gongyuan
port	港口	gangkou
river	江、河	jiang, he
ruins	废墟	feixu
shopping area	购物区	gouwu qu
shrine	神像	shendian
street	街	jie
temple	寺庙	si/miao
tour, travel	旅行	lüxing
town	镇	zhen
village	村	cun
province/county	省、县	sheng/xian
zoo	动物园	dongwuyuan
north	北	bei
south	南	nan
east	东	dong
west	西	xi
left/right	左、右	zuo/you straight ahead	一直向前	yizhi xiangqian
between	在...之间	zai ... zhijian
near/far	近、远	jin/yuan
up/down	上、下	shang/xia
new	新	xin
old/former	旧	jiu
upper/lower	更高、更低	genggao/gengdi
middle/inner	中间	zhongjian
in	在...里	zai ... li
in front of	在...前面	zai ... qianmian

GETTING AROUND

airport	机场	ji chang
bicycle	自行车	zixingche
rickshaw	人力车	renliche
I want to rent a bicycle	我想租一辆自行车	Wo xiang zu yiliang zixingche.
Ordinary bus	公共汽车	gonggong qiche
Express bus	特快公共汽车	tekuai gonggong qiche
Minibus	面包车	mianbaoche
Main bus station	公共汽车总站	gonggong qiche zong zhan
Which bus goes to ...?	哪一路公共汽车到...去?	Nayilu gonggong qiche dao ... qu?
When is the next bus?	下一辆公共汽车是什么时候?	Xiayiliang gonggong qiche shi shenme shihou?
Please tell me where to get off?	请告诉我在哪里下车?	Qing gaosu wo zai nali xia che.
car	小汽车	xiaoqiche
ferry	渡船	duchuan
ferry dock	渡口	du kou
baggage room	行李室	xingli shi
motorcycle	摩托车	motuochē
one-way ticket	单程票	dancheng piao
return ticket	往返票	wangfan piao

taxi	出租车	chuzuche
ticket	票	piao
ticket office	售票处	shoupiào chū
timetable	时刻表	shikebiao

TRAINS

What is the fare to ...?	去...的票价是多少?	Qu ... de piaojia shi duoshao?
When does the train for ... leave?	去...的火车什么时候开?	Qu ... de huochē shenme shihou kai?
How long does it take to get to ...?	去...要多少时间?	Qu ... yao duoshao shijian?
A ticket to ..., please	买一张去...的票	Mai yizhang qu ... de piao
Do I have to change?	我要不要换车?	Wo yao buyao huanche?
I'd like to reserve a seat, please	我想预定一个座位	Wo xiang yuding yige zuowei
Which platform for the train to ...?	去...的火车在哪个站台?	Qu ... de huochē zai nage zhan tai?
Which station is this?	这是什么车站?	Zhe shi shenme che zhan?
Is this the right train for ...?	这火车是不是去...?	Zhe huochē shi bushi qu ...?
train station	火车站	huochē zhan
express train	直达快车	zhida kuai che fast train	快车	kuai che
ordinary train	普通列车	putong lieche
local train	地方列车	difang lieche platform	站台	zhan tai reserved seat	预定座位	yuding zuowei
subway	地铁	ditie
train	火车	huochē
unreserved seat	未预定的座位	wei yuding de zuowei
hard seat	硬座	yingzuo
soft seat	软座	ruanzuo
hard sleeper	硬卧	yingwo
soft sleeper	软卧	ruanwo
upgrade ticket	升级车票	shengji chepiao

ACCOMMODATIONS

Do you have any vacancies?	你们有没有空房间?	Nimen you meiyou kong fang jian?
I have a reservation	我有预定的房间	Wo you yuding de fangjian
I'd like a room with a bathroom	我想要一个有卫生间的套间	Wo xiang yao yige you weishengjian de taojian
What is the charge per night?	每晚的收费是多少?	Mei wan de shoufei shi duoshao?
Are the taxes included in the price?	价格有没有包括税?	Jiage you meiyou baokuo shui?
Can I leave my luggage here for a little while?	我可以把行李放在这里一会儿吗?	Wo keyi ba xingli fang zai zhe li yihui 'er ma?
Can I have a look at the room?	我可以看一看房间吗?	Wo keyi kan yi kan fangjian ma?
air-conditioning	空调	Kongtiao
bath	洗澡	xizao
check-out	退房	tui fang
deposit	定金	dingjin
double bed	双人床	shuangren chuang
hair drier	吹风机	chuifeng ji hot (boiled) water	热(开)水	re (kai) shui
hotel (upscale)	饭店	fangdian
hotel (downscale)	旅馆	lüguan
hostel	招待所	zhaodaisuo
room	房间	fangjian
economy room	经济房	jingji fang
key	钥匙	yaoshi
front desk	前台	qiantai

single/twin room 单人/双人房 single beds 单人床 shower 淋浴 standard room 标准房间 deluxe suite 豪华套房

danren/shuangren
fang danren chuang linyu biaozhun fangjian haohua taofang

beef 牛肉 beer 啤酒 bread 面包 butter 黄油 cabbage 卷心菜 cake 蛋糕 chicken 鸡 candies 糖果 crab 蟹 duck 鸭 eel 鳗 egg 蛋 eggplant 茄子
fermented soybean paste 鱼

牛肉 啤酒 面包 黄油
卷心菜 蛋糕 鸡 糖果 蟹 鸭 鳗 蛋 茄子 鱼 niurou pijiu mianbao huangyou juanxincai dangao ji tangguo xie ya man dan qiezi jiang

EATING OUT

A table for one/two/three, please 请给我一/两/三个人的桌子。
May I see the menu? 请让我看看菜单。
Is there a set menu? 有没有套餐?
I'd like 我想要...
May I have one of those? 请给我一个...
I am a vegetarian 我是素食者
Waiter/waitress! 服务员!
What would you recommend? 你推荐哪几个?
How do you eat this? 这个怎么吃?
May I have a fork/knife/spoon 请给我一把叉/刀/汤匙
May we have the check please. 请把账单开给我们。
May we have some more ... 请再给我们一些...
The meal was very good, thank you 饭菜很好吃。 assortment 混合餐 packed lunch 盒装午餐 breakfast 早餐 buffet 自助餐 chopsticks 筷子 delicious 好吃 dinner 晚餐 to drink 喝 a drink 一杯饮料 to eat 吃 food 食品 full (stomach) 饱 hot/cold 热/冷 hungry 饿 lunch 午餐 set menu 套餐 spicy 辣 hot (spicy) 辣 sweet 甜 mild 淡
Western food 西餐

Qing gei wo yi/liang/san ge ren de zhuozi
Qing gei wo kankan caidan
You meiyou taocan?
Wo xiang yao ...
Qing gei wo zhege
Wo shi sushizhe.
Fuwu yuan!
Ni tuijian na jige?
Zhege zenme chi?
Qing gei wo yiba cha/dao/tangshi
Qing ba zhangdan kaigei women
Qing zai gei women yixie ...
Fancai hen hao chi, xiexie hunhe can hezhuang wucan zaocan zizhucan kuaizi haochi wancan he yibei yinliao chi shipin bao re/leng
c wucan taocan suan la la tian dan xi can fish 鱼 fried egg 炒蛋 fried tofu 油豆腐 fruit 水果 fruit juice 果汁 ginger 姜 ham 火腿 hamburger 汉堡包 haute cuisine 美味佳肴 hors d'oeuvres 冷盘 ice cream 冰淇淋 jam 果酱 lobster 龙虾 mackerel 鲭鱼

mandarin orange 柑桔 meat 肉 melon 瓜 mountain vegetables 山地蔬菜 noodles 面 egg noodles 鸡蛋面 wheat flour 面粉 noodles 面条 rice flour 米粉 noodles 米粉面 octopus 章鱼 omelet 煎蛋饼 onion 洋葱 oyster 牡蛎 peach 桃子 pepper 胡椒粉 pickles 泡菜 pork 猪肉 potato 土豆 rice 米饭
rice crackers 大米花饼干 rice wine 米酒 roast beef 烤牛肉 salad 色拉 green salad 绿色色拉 mixed salad 混拌色拉
salmon 鲑鱼

鱼 炒蛋 油豆腐 水果 果汁 姜
火腿 汉堡包 美味佳肴 冷盘 冰淇淋 果酱 龙虾 鲭鱼 柑桔
肉 瓜 山地蔬菜 面 鸡蛋面 面粉 面条 米粉 米粉面 章鱼 煎蛋饼 洋葱 牡蛎 桃子 胡椒粉
绿椒 泡菜 猪肉 土豆 米饭 大米花饼干 米酒
烤牛肉 色拉 绿色色拉 混拌色拉 鲑鱼 yu chao dan you doufu shuiguo guo zhi jiang huotui hanbaobao meiwei jiyao leng pen bingqilin guojiang longxia qingyu gan ju rou gu shandi shucai mian jidan mian mianfen mian mifen mian zhangyu jiandanbing yangcong muli taozi hujiaofen, lajiao paocai zhurou

tudou mifan baomihua bing'gan mi jiu kao niurou sela lucaila hunban sela
guiyu, damahayu

PLACES TO EAT

cafeteria/canteen 自助餐厅/餐厅 coffee shop 咖啡店
Internet café 网吧 local bar 当地酒吧 noodle stall 面摊 restaurant 餐馆 restaurant (upscale) 饭店 tea garden 茶室 vegetarian restaurant 素食馆

zizhucanguan/cating kafei dian wang ba dangdi jiuba mianpu canguan fangdian chashi sucai guan

salt 盐 sandwich 三明治 sausage 香肠 scallion 韭葱 seaweed 海带 shrimp 虾 snapper (fish) 鲷 soup 汤 soy sauce 酱油 squid 鱿鱼 steak 牛排 sugar 糖 toast 烤面包 trout 鳟鱼 vegetables 蔬菜 watermelon 西瓜 yoghurt 酸奶

盐 三明治 香肠 韭葱 海带
虾 鲷 汤 酱油 鱿鱼
牛排 糖 烤面包 鳟鱼 蔬菜 西瓜 酸奶 yan sanmingzhi xiangchang jiucong haidai xia didiao tang jiangyou youyu niupai

tang kao mianbao zhuyu shucai xigua suannaai

FOOD

apple 苹果 bacon 咸肉 bamboo shoots 笋 beancurd 豆腐 bean sprouts 豆芽 beans 豆

pingguo xianrou sun doufu dou ya
dou

DRINKS

beer	啤酒	píjiu
black tea	红茶	hóng chá
coffee (hot)	(热)咖啡	(re) kǎfēi
black	不加牛奶	bù jiā niú nǎi
coffee with milk	加牛奶	jiā niú nǎi
filter	过滤	guòlǜ
cappuccino	卡普契诺咖啡	kǎpūqīnuó kǎfēi
cola	可乐	kele
green tea	绿茶	lǜ chá
iced coffee	冰咖啡	bīng kǎfēi
lemon tea	柠檬茶	níngméng chá
milk	牛奶	niú nǎi
mineral water	矿泉水	kuàng quánshuǐ
orange juice	橙汁	chéng zhī
soya drink (milk)	豆浆	dòu jiāng
tea (Western-style)	茶(西式)	chá (xī shì)
tea with milk	加牛奶的茶	jiā niú nǎi de chá
water	水	shuǐ
whiskey	威士忌	wēishìjī
wine	葡萄酒	pútāojiu
yoghurt drink	酸奶饮料	suānnǎi yǐnliào

HEALTH

I don't feel well	我感觉不舒服	Wo gǎnjué bù shūfú
	我...疼	shǒu fū
I have a pain in ...	我...疼	Wo ... téng.
I'm allergic to ...	我对...过敏	Wo duì ... guòmǐn
acetaminophen	扑热息痛	pūrèxītòng (paracetamol)
aspirin	阿司匹林	asipilin
asthma	哮喘	xiǎochuān
cold	感冒	gǎn mǎo
condom	避孕套	bìyǔntào cough	咳嗽	kesou
dentist	牙医	yāyī
diabetes	糖尿病	tángniǎobìng
diarrhea	腹泻	fúxié
doctor	医生	yīshēng
fever	发烧	fāshāo
flu	流感	liúgǎn
headache	头疼	tóutēng
hospital	医院	yīyuàn
medicine	药品	yǎopin
mosquito coil	蚊香	wénxiāng
mosquito netting	蚊帐	wénzhāng
traditional	传统	chuántǒng
Chinese medicine	中医	zhōngyī
pharmacy	药店	yàodiǎn
prescription	处方	chūfāng
sanitary pads	卫生巾	wēishēngjīn stomach ache	胃痛	wèitōng
tissues	纸巾	zhǐjīn
toothache	牙疼	yá téng

NUMBERS

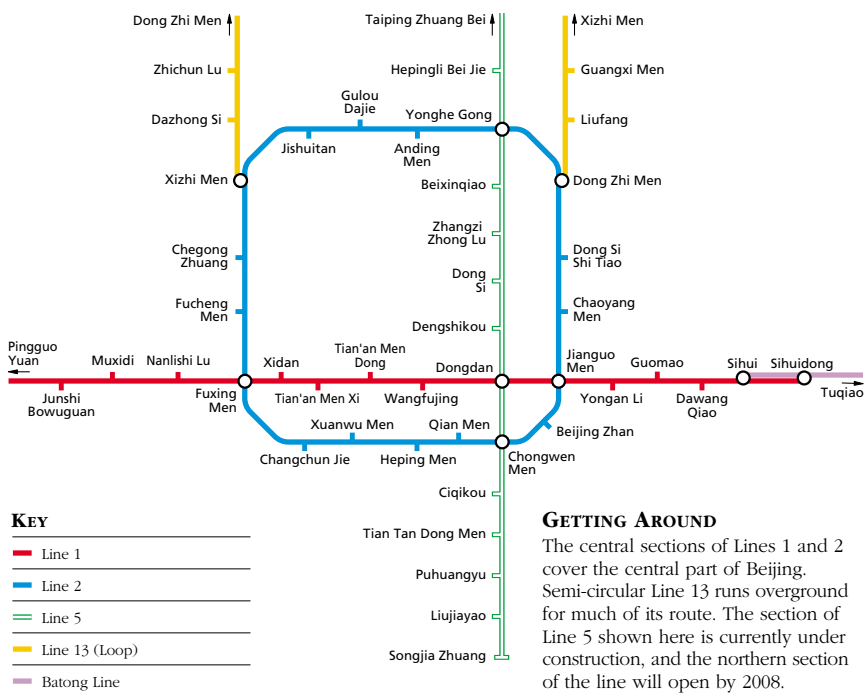

0	零	líng
1	一	yī
2	二	èr
3	三	sān
4	四	sì
5	五	wǔ
6	六	liù
7	七	qī
8	八	bā
9	九	jiǔ
10	十	shí
11	十一	shíyī
12	十二	shíèr
20	二十	èrshí

21	二十一	èrshíyī
22	二十二	èrshíèr
30	三十	sānshí
40	四十	sìshí
100	一百	yībǎi
101	一百零一	yībǎi líng yī
200	二百	èrbǎi
300	三百	sānbǎi
400	四百	sìbǎi
500	五百	wǔbǎi
600	六百	liùbǎi
700	七百	qībǎi
800	八百	bābǎi
900	九百	jiǔbǎi
1,000	一千	yīqiān
1,001	一千零一	yīqiān líng yī
2,000	两千	èrqiān
10,000	一万	yīwàn
20,000	两万	èrwàn
100,000	十万	shíwàn
1,000,000	一百万	yībǎi wàn
123,456	十二万三千四百五十六	shíèr wàn sān qiān sì bǎi wǔshí liù

TIME

Monday	星期一	xīngqīyī
Tuesday	星期二	xīngqī'èr
Wednesday	星期三	xīngqīsān
Thursday	星期四	xīngqīsì
Friday	星期五	xīngqīwǔ
Saturday	星期六	xīngqīliù
Sunday	星期日	xīngqītiān
January	一月	yī yuè
February	二月	èr yuè
March	三月	sān yuè
April	四月	sì yuè
May	五月	wǔ yuè
June	六月	liù yuè
July	七月	qī yuè
August	八月	bā yuè
September	九月	jiǔ yuè
October	十月	shí yuè
November	十一月	shíyī yuè
December	十二月	shíèr yuè
Spring	春	chūn
Summer	夏	xià
fall/autumn	秋	qiū
winter	冬	dōng
noon	中午	zhōngwǔ
midnight	午夜	wúyè
today	今天	jīntiān
yesterday	昨天	zútiān
tomorrow	明天	míngtiān
this morning	今天上午	jīntiān shàngwǔ
this afternoon	今天下午	jīntiān xiàwǔ
this evening	今天晚上	jīntiān wǎnshàng
for the whole day	一整天	yī zhèng tiān (continuous) every day	每天	měi tiān
month	月	yuè
hour	小时	xiǎoshí
time/hour	时间	shíjiān
(duration) minute	分钟	fēnzhōng
this year	今年	jīn nián
last year	去年	qù nián
next year	明年	míng nián
one year	一年	yī nián
late	晚	wǎn
early	早	zǎo
soon	很快	hěn kuài
now	现在	xiànzài

BEIJING SUBWAY

HONG KONG MTR & KCR

The MTR subway system covers Kowloon, northern Hong Kong Island, and the east end of Lantau Island, and has interchanges to the KCR train system. The KCR serves the New Territories, with the East Rail running north to mainland China.

SHANGHAI SUBWAY

HONG KONG MTR

Systematic information on more than 2,000 sights, shops, restaurants, hotels, and entertainment venues

KEY TO MAIN SYMBOLS

 Museum, gallery	 Population	 Open
 Historical building, street, area	 International airport	 Closed
 Temple, monastery	 Domestic airport	 Telephone number
 Pagoda	 Taxi	 Tourist information
 Mosque	 Train station/service	 Admission charge
 Church	 Long distance bus	 Photography allowed
 Tomb	 Bus station/service	 Photography not allowed
 Cave	 Subway station	 Guided tours available
 Fort	 Streetcar	 Audio tours available
 Park, garden	 Ferry port/service	 Elevator
 Wildlife preserve, zoo	 River boat/jetty or pier	 Coat check
 Area of natural beauty	 Restaurant	 Wheelchair access (phone to check details)
 Theater, opera house	 Café	 Website
 Market	 Shop	 Men's restroom
 Festival	 Theme park	 Women's restroom

ADDITIONAL SYMBOLS FOR HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS

 Price category (Chinese renminbi)	 Health/fitness facilities	 Swimming pool
 Bar	 Spa, beauty treatments	 Internet access
 Credit cards not accepted	 Wine list	 Serves vegetarian food
 Business facilities	 24-hour room service	 Serves non-Chinese food

ADDITIONAL SYMBOLS FOR MAPS

 Tourist information	 Post office	 Church, cathedral
 Police station	 Subway/MTR station	 Mosque
 Hospital	 Temple, monastery	 Cable car

There are DK Eyewitness Travel Guides to nearly 100 of the world's most fascinating destinations. Visit www.dk.com to browse our catalog and sign up for our free travel newsletter.

CHINA

OVER 2,000 PHOTOGRAPHS,
ILLUSTRATIONS, AND MAPS
•
CUTAWAYS AND FLOOR PLANS OF ALL THE MAJOR SIGHTS
•
WALKS, SCENIC ROUTES, AND THEMATIC TOURS
•
WHERE TO EAT, WHERE TO STAY, AND HOW TO GET AROUND

"Eyewitness Travel Guides are marvels of writing, color photography, and illustration"

New York Times Syndicate

*"These pocket-sized guides are like a Michelangelo fresco:
deliciously rich in detail"*

People Magazine

"Lavishly illustrated . . . gorgeous, entertaining, and enlightening"

Chicago Tribune

"The best travel guides ever"

Delta Airlines' Sky Magazine

Discover more at www.dk.com

ISBN 0-7566-0919-4

9 780756 609191

53000

Printed in China